YED.
sure of the subscriber,
1840, one RED YEAR-stripes running up arns.—Also, one RED with a slanting crop off the quested to prove property, n away. 51w3
eb. 10, 1841.
JACOB HOLMES.

den Seeds.
of FRESH GARDEN
ived, and for sale at this
eb. 19, 1841.

oing for Boots.
hand a large assortment
HOES, of every descrip-trade, where families can best terms, at the sign
GEO. W. SUTTON.
840. 29tf

ARNESS &
MAKING.
h gratified with the gen-is former customers, and to them and the public that usiness in all its various d in De Ruyter village, tly on hand and offers for ble terms, Saddles, Bridles, lices, Traveling Bags, and ption; all of which are very best materials.—
il themselves of the oppor-
an do so by calling on
B. G. STILLMAN.
good beach or maple wood
above articles. B. G. S.

Shoe Store.
OOTS AND SHOES for n of the Mammoth Boot.
GEO. W. SUTTON.
1840.

KS!! BOOKS!!!
BLY,
inform the citizens of De blic generally, that he has nds and descriptions usual-Store. The following are metry, do. Surveying, do.
do. First Lessons in Arith-
kinds of Latin, Greek and y & Atlas, Burnet's Geoge supplied with Books for

BINDING
le manner, and as cheap as place, at the sign of the Albany St., De Ruyter.
1st, 1840. 35tf

GOODS.
N TOWN.
& AYER, are now re-
Stock of GOODS, compriver offered in this County.
purchased principally for ey-times, which will enaas the cheapest—and per-ic are respectfully invited esmen are always in ats, and Customers are nev-purchase. 26tf

Ware-House.
URDICK, inform the inhabitants of surrounding country, that on the Cabinet Business, s, at his shop directly opstitute. He is prepared to in his line with neatness, such as Bureaus, Secreta-
-cases, Bedsteds, Tables, kinds of Lumber and proange for work, and even d.
rriage, and Sign Painting,
&c. will be executed on 1840 21tf.

omas & Ayer, is place for the sale of
WINDOW SASH.
nting Bliss' Sash will see
mped "L. & W. BLISS, other are genuin

THIS!!!
SPECIFIC,
RING BONE, SPAVIN,
c. &c. A certain cure ertificates can be shown, and e this inestimable specific a doubt. Also,
DER OINTMENT,
ered horses, split-hoofs, or all wounds or bruises in racked heals occasioned by other horse, Scratches, &c. r has been appointed sole
47m6
S. D. DELLAY.

Baptist Register
ED WEEKLY,
MADISON Co. N. Y
BY
EY, & BURDICK.
subscribers who have the s, $2 25, in advance, or of the year.
cribers, $2 if paid in ad-
ent is delayed six months,
ptions will be considered to the publishers or to any s within three months from mber, will be considered involving facts and intend-per must be accompanied ceived for a less term than do not give express notice considered as wishing to
, and their paper will be
No paper will be discon-
re paid except at the dis-ommunications to ensure at-
to the publishers free

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 1.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 53.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, MARCH 5, 1841. [$2.50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

UNION SPRINGS, FEB. 21, 1841.

DEAR SIR,—Your letter of Feb. 5 was duly received, for which I thank you. I was not disappointed in regard to your answer to my main inquiry. I supposed that in this section, the Churches of the Seventh-day Baptists generally consider a belief in the Trinity indispensable to church fellowship. Therefore, as I am a conscientious believer in the proper unity of God, I can have no prospect of a particular connection with them. Nevertheless, I cannot help entertaining a high respect for these Churches as advocates for the unchangeable law of God and the Sabbath which it enjoins. Consequently, I shall be happy to read the Register; and I regard your proposal as kind and liberal; and if I can furnish any thing which the editors shall deem subservient to the interests of religion, I shall be willing to do so, as far as my health and circumstances shall permit, and the nature of the case may appear to demand. I was not able to determine, with certainty, from your letter, how far articles on controverted subjects would be admissible, even provided they should be written with "a spirit of kindness, and without censoriousness." Probably, it would not be deemed consistent fully to answer my wishes in that respect. Nevertheless, I I may be heard on many subjects in regard to which there is no essential disagreement, on which it may be generally thought advantageous to discuss: and I expect no other indulgence than what may be deemed reasonable. I shall endeavor to write for general edification and profit; and shall be glad to interchange views with others who may contribute to your columns; and to learn the success which you meet with in the cause of the Redeemer, especially as it regards the Sabbath.

In regard to this item of Christian practice, I can most cordially co-operate with the Sabbatarians. It is a matter of great consolation to me, that there is a remnant who "keep the commandments of God" entire—that with them the Decalogue, "written with God's own finger," has undergone no supervision by men—and that for keeping the seventh-day of the week as a day of holy rest, they are able to bring the sanction of a divine positive precept; and hence have the enlightened and peculiar satisfaction, arising from the consciousness that in so doing they are obeying the will of God. I tender to you therefore, Dear Sir, and all the brethren in your connection, the sympathies of my heart, and the effusions of my pen, together with my example and influence:—believing, that notwithstanding the gigantic power of custom and prejudice, combined with ministerial talent and effort in favor of a supposed First-day institution—the great self-denial required to effect a general reformation in the Churches—and the numerous obstacles which are to be met and overcome; our labor will not be in vain in the Lord. This, my confidence, is based, supremely, in the truth of God, and the energy of his spirit; and, subordinately, in the enlightened, faithful and persevering efforts of those whom he is raising, and will raise up, in these last days, to advocate the cause. As sure as anti-christ must fall; the partial and obstinate blindness of the Jews be removed; and "the fulness of the Gentiles come in," the day which God has designated for his special service, and the rest of his people, will be generally observed. If we should not live to see a great advance in this cause, others will come after us that will see it. Yea, I am not without strong expectation, that even we of this generation will yet witness mighty results in this holy enterprize. The work before us is confessedly arduous and difficult, and comparatively but few are engaged in it; and we may have frequent occasion to imitate the faith of that enviable "friend of God, who against hope believed in hope." Nevertheless, the victory will eventually turn on our side. Already, some encouraging things may be discovered. The subject of a weekly Sabbath is receiving more attention, of late, than formerly; and many reflecting christians are beginning to discover the want of a Divine warrant for a first-day institution—and although some are passing to the extreme, of "no Sabbath," there is encouragement derived from this increased attention to the subject. Further investigation will cure this evil, and candid christians will eventually settle on the true ground. There are some who would make us believe that in the present state of things, we must either have a first-day Sabbath, or no Sabbath, and [illegible] would repress investigation into the real merits of the case. This is strange philosophy for Christians! What! shall we give up a Divine institution, and adhere to one based on human certainty only, for fear that both will be neglected? Nay; let us rather "speak God's words unto men, whether they will hear, or forbear." When the baselessness of a first-day Sabbath is discovered, it is not strange that some should run to the opposite extreme of "no Sabbath." But this is not the case with all. There are, and will be those who will search deep into the merits of this subject, and hence will not stop, till they have discovered the true seventh-day rest—the Sabbath which is based upon the high and unchanged appointment of the living God. Hence, let us be thankful and courageous, and persevere with everlasting ardor.

Respectfully, yours in Christ,
JABEZ CHADWICK.

Mother's Department.

THE MOTHER'S EXAMPLE.

An Address delivered before the United Maternal Associations of Boston, in Park street Church, Oct. 20, 1840, by J. S. C. Abbott, Pastor of the Elliott church, Roxbury, Mass.

The question which every Christian mother deems more important than almost every other is, "How may I best promote the moral and spiritual welfare of my children?" This question I shall now very briefly endeavor to answer:

It is by endeavoring to be ourselves precisely what we wish our children to be.

We must cultivate most assiduously ourselves the same traits of character we wish them to possess. We transmit far more surely to them our moral than our physical image. Would you have the features of your children tranquil, smiling, expressive of a peaceful, a benevolent, and a cheerful heart? Let such, invariably be the expression of your own countenance. Would you have your children cultivate pleasing manners, refined and gentle movements?—Study ever to exhibit before them the model you wish them to imitate. Do you desire that they should avoid all those coarse and vulgar tones which grate harshly upon the ear? At all times let your voice be attuned to those soft and placid notes, with which you wish them to speak in concert. Let your children never, under any circumstances, hear from your lips an expression or a sound, which you would not be happy to hear from theirs. Do you wish your children to have their passions under control; to be able to govern their feelings under provocations; never to be angry, or peevish, or irritable? Show them, by your own practice, how to control their passions.—Let them see that none of the annoyances of life can ruffle the disciplined equanimity of your feelings; that when a careless servant spoils the dinner, or you hear the crash of the falling china, you can conquer your own spirit. It requires no greater effort for us to meet calmly our annoyances, than it does for our children to meet theirs. Do you wish your children to love God, to manifest a cheerful and grateful trust in his goodness? Then let it shine forth in your countenance, in your expressions, in all your demeanor; in your cheerful acquiescence in the divine will, continually, on every bright as well as every dark day.—Would you have your children endeavor to promote the happiness of the family of brothers and sisters, by good nature, by an obliging disposition, by a willingness to relinquish their own wishes to gratify others? Show them how. Let the first accents of your voice in the morning, and the last in the evening, be those of cheerfulness and affection. Let no frown cloud your brow. Be yourself, amid troubles and trials of life, the angel of harmony and joy in your family. Do you desire that your children should in all respects possess the spirit of Christ; that they should love their Savior, imitate his character, receive the impress of his image, and be educated for a happy immortality? Let your children see the image of Christ reflected brightly from your heart; and continually endeavor to adorn your own character by all the graces of a Christian spirit, and all the sympathies of heaven.—Thus endeavor, in all respects, to be yourself precisely what you wish your children to be. Make yourself, if possible, the pattern which you wish them to imitate.

This is the way, efficacious above all others, to influence the human heart. And now permit me to introduce a few thoughts to impress this truth upon the mind.

1. This influence is of great avail, because it is incessantly operating. We cannot always be talking to our children; and if we could, we should only weary and deaden their sensibilities. But the influence of example is continually operating and continually delighting. It never wearies and is never inopportune. In the morning, at noon-tide, and in the evening; in sickness and in health; in duty and in pleasure; when happy and when sorrowful, it is ever winning the love, and moulding the characters of all the inmates of our dwellings. The constancy of this influence does but increase its welcomeness and its efficacy. And there are few children who under such an example, from the cradle to the time they leave the parental roof, can fail to become amiable and lovely.

2. This influence is all important, because impressions conveyed through the eye, are always more deep and lasting than those conveyed through the ear.

We hear a battle described in the most glowing language of eloquence. How faint the impression, compared with what it would be to witness the horrible scene of carnage and agony! And so it is with more placid events. What description of a sunrise or a sunset among the Alps, can convey those emotions which overwhelm the beholder of this scene of grandeur and of loveliness? We may urge upon our children, in the most forcible language, all the duties of life, and describe with glowing eloquence those virtues which are lovely and of good report, but the impression is feebleness itself compared with what it would be, were we to present before their eyes a living example of these virtues.—They may forget our words, but they cannot forget our conduct. Can one of you forget the habitual character of your parents? Is not the impress of your mother's character now before your eyes? We easily forget what we hear, but memory is tenacious of what we see. Instruct your children through their eyes, and your instructions will be remembered.

3. The influence of your example will greatly enforce the instruction of your lips. If we carefully avoid those practices against which we caution our children—if we are the exemplars of those virtues which we enjoin upon them, our instruction is invested with the greatest power. We then sway the sceptre of resistless dignity and authority. But if we teach one thing and do another, we may be sure that our doings will be imitated, rather than our teachings obeyed. The tendency of depraved human nature is downward. If our precept and practice be discordant, there is no question which influence our children will follow. But if we illustrate by our lives the teachings of our lips—if we form an indissoluble union between precept and practice, we have the perfection of human influence; and we may with great confidence anticipate God's accompanying blessing. Inconsistency here has brought down the grey hairs of many parents in sorrow to the grave.

4. The [illegible] influence of [illegible] shows the importance of [illegible] our own hearts. With the [illegible] of this influence we are all familiar. Often we see a group of children playing pleasantly together, when a peevish, irascible child enters, and in a few moments the ill-nature of the invader [illegible] like contagion to every heart. There is a mysterious influence by which the emotions of our hearts are transmitted to others, awakening the same emotions there. As all nature reflects the rays of the [illegible] sun, the most distant world catch and throw back his effulgence; thus, if our hearts beam brightly and warmly with affection and cheerfulness, the hearts of those around us will imbibe the warmth, and transfuse and reflect the beloved influence. The simple possession of an estimable character, is a power which, like the [illegible] rays, never sleeps and never dies. It must shine. Its beauty must be seen. Its mild, resistless power must foster the growth of every virtue.

5. Example alone can prove the sincerity of our instructions. A mother urges upon her child the feelings and the character she wishes her to cultivate. And yet she herself cultivates a different character, and cherishes different feelings. She says to her child, 'If your brother or sister does wrong, you should not be angry or speak harshly, you should forgive.' And yet when an ignorant servant does wrong, the same child hears from a mother's lips expressions which are significant of any thing but an amiable, serene, and forgiving spirit. Now, any child is enough of a logician to say, "It is as important that mother should take care of her heart, as it is that I should take care of mine. If her annoyances justify her conduct, my annoyances justify mine."

It is no more difficult for us to bear patiently our trials, than it is for our children to bear theirs. We have our playthings as well as they. It is true, they are of a little higher order, but they are our playthings still. And when the alabaster vase is broken, or the rich dress spoiled by the carelessness of others, our patience is tried precisely in the same manner, and probably not in a greater degree than is that of my son when one breaks his hoop, or of my daughter when one tears the frock of her doll. We smile over the playthings of our children. Are there not loftier intelligences who may smile at ours? Let me not then expect that my children will bear their annoyances with a Christian spirit, unless I show them that thus I bear my own. The moment I frame an excuse for myself, I frame the same for my child.

6. The importance of this mode of domestic culture is enforced by the example of our Savior. Christ came not merely to tell how to live, but by his own life to show us how. This one important object he had in view in his assumption of human nature.—He illustrated every precept by his practice. He confirmed all his instructions by his example. If it was necessary for the Savior to add to the power of his teaching by the example of his conduct, how much more important it is for us. If his words would be of no avail unless illustrated by his practices, of what avail can ours be?—Though offering himself a propitiatory sacrifice was the prominent object of his mission, yet the illustration of a holy life, by his example, was an essential part of it. It is only learning of him, and by imbibing his spirit, and walking in his steps, that we can expect his blessing.

7. It is as important that we should take care of our own hearts, as that we should take care of our children. God is as desirous of seeing us sanctified as of seeing them. Our souls are as valuable in his eyes as theirs. We are a little in danger of allowing our children to monopolize all the improvement which is made; and of imagining that we make some atonement for our own remissness, by our efforts and prayers for them. It is as important that our moral feelings should be under healthy discipline, as theirs should be. It is as necessary that we should be habitually devout, cheerful, gentle, kind and forgiving, as that they should possess these traits. Therefore, let us all be careful while we are endeavoring to take the motes out of our children's eyes, not to leave the beam unmoved from our own.

For these reasons I conclude, and you will all doubtless unite with me in conclusion, that the best way to promote the spiritual welfare of our children is, to endeavor to become ourselves, in all moral qualities, precisely what we wish our children to be.

Parent's Department.

From the Christian Witness.

FAMILY PRAYER IN THE MORNING BY MEN OF BUSINESS.

In this busy and bustling age, [illegible] to wonder if secular duties are allowed to crowd out those of a higher order. Indeed, I am myself acquainted with some, "who profess and call themselves Christians,"—men of business—who seldom or never attend morning devotion with their families.—They think that they have a sufficient excuse in the supposition, that their business would materially suffer by delay; and [illegible] were there a will, the family could not be brought together sufficiently early to [illegible] this fancied objection. What means [illegible] Christians appear to me [illegible] God's word [illegible] kingdom of God and his [illegible] all other things shall be added unto you."

The following deeply interesting [illegible] of the blessedness of family prayer, before entering upon business [illegible] by many with profit [illegible] and all his blessing.

"Still a [illegible] clergyman [illegible] news for myself [illegible] grace, [illegible] particularly conscientious in respect to family prayer.

"Accordingly, I persevered for many years in the [illegible] practice of [illegible] Morning and evening every member of my family was [illegible] always to be present; nor would I allow my [illegible] to be absent on any [illegible] a few years the [illegible] of [illegible] the blessings of the [illegible] followed [illegible] happiness attend my family, and prosperity my business. At length, such was my rapid increase in trade, and the necessity of [illegible] that I began to think whether family prayer did not occupy too much of our time in the morning.

"[illegible] scruples [illegible] discontinuing my [illegible] this part of my duty; but, at length, worldly interests prevailed so far, as to [illegible] with my wife, when [illegible] Notwithstanding [illegible] conscience [illegible] and commanding, that I [illegible] excuse for this fatal evil [illegible] not omit prayer altogether. My conscience was now almost seared with a hot iron; when it pleased the Lord to awaken me by a singular providence.

"One day I received a letter from a young man who had formerly been my apprentice previous to my omitting family prayer.—Not doubting but I continued domestic worship, his letter was chiefly on this subject: it was couched in the most affectionate and respectful terms; but judge of my surprise and confusion when I read these words:—"O, my dear master, never, never shall I be able sufficiently to thank you for the precious privilege with which you indulged me in your family devotions. O, sir, eternity will be too short to praise my God for what I have learnt there. It was there I first beheld my lost and wretched state as a sinner, it was there that I first knew the way of salvation, and there I first experienced the preciousness of "Christ in me the hope of glory." O, sir! permit me to say, never, never neglect those precious engagements; you have yet a family and more apprentices; may your house be the birth-place of their souls!" I could read no further; every line flashed condemnation in my face. I trembled—I shuddered—I was alarmed at the blood of my children and apprentices, that I apprehended was soon to be demanded at my soul-murdering hands!

"Filled with confusion, and bathed in tears, I fled for refuge in secret. I spread the letter before God. I agonized, and—but you can better conceive, than I describe my feelings, suffice it to say, that light broke in upon my disconsolate soul, a sense of blood-bought pardon was obtained, &c. I immediately flew to my family, presented them before the Lord, and from that day to the present, I have been faithful, and am determined through grace, that whenever business becomes too large to interfere with family prayer, I will give up the superfluous part of my business, and retain my devotion: [illegible]

"My dear Mr. [illegible] [illegible] What [illegible] for God. What a [illegible] support and comfort it would be [illegible]

Religious Department.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

[illegible]

But it is this very habit of omitting a [illegible] survey of our own character, and casting all the burden of guilt on others, that is one of the principle causes of the low state of religion. This screening one's own soul from all responsibility, by encouraging the comforting conclusion that little or no blame rests on himself, but all rests elsewhere, sustains a state of mind utterly delusive in itself, and eminently dangerous to true piety. Such a soul would not approach God with truth, humility, and brokenness of heart for the effusions of his Spirit. Its temper can hardly be other than this; "I thank the Lord, that I am not as other men." Personal repentance—grief over the state of this person's own heart is out of the question in the nature of the case. He who has laid the burden of Zion's depression on others, can have little to do with confession and brokenness of heart. And most feeble will His agency be in promoting the revival of true religion.

Who is to blame? Let the individual who is conscious of religious declension around him, knock first of all at the door of his own heart. Let him summon up and review his own religious career, as month after month has developed it. What kind of intercourse has he been maintaining with God? What kind of influence has he been exerting around him upon his fellow men? Let him not inquire what others have done or omitted. Be it there may have been great wrong elsewhere—Has there not been also in his own heart? His chief concern is with himself. He is responsible for no other man's sins. He is best prepared to set about correcting the evils around him, who has done the work of correction most thoroughly in his own heart.—Herald.

SYMPATHY IN RELIGION.

Extract from the Rev. Mr. Barnes' Sermons in the National Preacher, for January, 1841.

There are no sympathies so deep on any [illegible] on the subject of religion. [illegible] sympathies of the human heart are [illegible] met and satisfied, till they are met by [illegible] The hopes, the fears, the joys of [illegible] never find a corresponding object till [illegible] looks away from time, and is filled with [illegible] heaven. That aged man, once full of hope in the cheerful visions of early life, now sits down and weeps that in all [illegible] ambition, its honors, and its joys, he has never realized what he anticipated.—The [illegible] tear rolls down his cheek, worn with [illegible] and care, when he remembers how the world has flattered and betrayed him; and there he sits at the close of life, on the borders of a boundless ocean, waiting to be borne to some land of bliss which he has never yet found. He has had sympathies, hopes, fears, anticipations, which have never been satisfied by this world, which nothing now can satisfy, until the [illegible] dwell on immortality, and he can [illegible] to a heaven of boundless glory as his home. That family so tender, so amiable, so lovely, so united in sorrows and in joys, has sympathetic emotions which can never be met but by the united hope of heaven. Never will they know the richness of pure [illegible] to each other, until they are united in the service of God, and can look forward to the same heaven as their home. Never will their sorrows produce what they should produce, nor their joys be followed by the [illegible] which they should continue [illegible] their sympathies are sanctified [illegible] and parents and children unite [illegible] together the [illegible] of praise in heaven. [illegible] every [illegible] anticipations, sympathies [illegible] never fully met [illegible] of religious feeling flows over [illegible] community, melting many hearts simultaneously in the hope of heaven.

[illegible]

[illegible] IN GOD.—By confidence [illegible] faith in him, which leads the child of God to rely entirely upon [illegible] and feel that "all things work together for good to those who love God." Sometimes [illegible] providences, the [illegible] all these things are against [illegible] afflict his people willingly, but for their profit. His love to them, moves his hand to inflict the wounds that [illegible] their hearts. God's love to his children is infinitely greater than our love can be to our nearest earthly relative; and nothing short of this confidence in his love can make us happy in God. The reason why so many Christians never seem to enjoy the overwhelming presence and love of God is, they do not place that confidence in Him they ought to, and are not willing to put themselves unreservedly in his hands, where he can bless them. O there is often a monstrous unwillingness to let the will of God be done, lest we suffer by it. [illegible] was willing to suffer shame, pain and death, when the will of God required it; and every Christian should have confidence enough in God, to say to him, "Take [illegible] take away my child.—[illegible] all my earthly enjoyments [illegible] from me, and let this body [illegible] in the grave, if the will requires it. Not my will, but thine be done." The [illegible] is like the waves of the [illegible]

M. W. A.

THE [illegible] OF CHRIST.—Lord, the condemnation was thine, that justification might be mine; the agony thine, that the victory might be mine; the pain was thine, and the ease mine; the stripes thine, and the healing balm issuing from them mine; the vinegar and the gall were thine, that the honey and sweet might be mine; the curse was thine, that the blessing might be mine; the crown of thorns was thine, that the crown of glory might be mine; the death was thine, the life purchased by it mine; thou paid'st the price, that I might enjoy the inheritance.—Flavel's Fountain of Life.

A GOOD THOUGHT.—Man is but a reed, and the weakness of nature; but then he is a reed that thinks. It does not need the universe to crush him: a breath of air, a drop of water, will kill him. But even if the material universe should overwhelm him, man would be more noble than that which destroys him: because he knows that he dies, while the universe knows nothing of the advantage which it obtains over him.

Our true dignity then, consists in thought. From thence, we must derive our elevation, not from space or duration. Let us endeavor then to think well; this is the principle of morals."—Pascal.

PREVARICATION.—To put on the name of Christ, and not to walk in the ways of Christ, what is it else than to prevaricate with the divine name? Titus i. 16.—Cyprian.

Quick believers need broad shoulders.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, March 5, 1841.

PROSPECTIVE.

We this week issue to our readers the first number of the second volume of the Register, and with it, our admonition to be prepared for whatever contingencies another year may present. The past, as an index of the future, admonishes us that changes affecting the well being of souls may happen to any, or all of us. Who can refer to the close of another year, and divine what will be the condition of any now living? Who can say whether another year will find him in time or eternity? It is true, beyond a doubt, that many who are now in the bloom of health, will fall victims to death before another year has run its round. The condition of multitudes, now enjoying a probationary state, will be unalterably fixed in weal, or woe, and all that can be said of them will be, here they lie, turned to dust again! Who can inform us how many of those will be found at the right hand of God in heaven? Alas for sinners who disregard the voice of God, and wantonly sport away the day of grace, if they shall be called to their last account! Who, among the saints that now wait and pray for the triumph of Zion's king, shall be called to their reward in heaven? Multitudes doubtless will, but their names are with God; and it remains for all to have their work done, and well done, to ensure a triumphant release from their labor here. Two of the watchmen on the walls of our beloved Zion, during the past year, have finished their labors and received their reward. Shall the coming year witness the departure of others? Let the words they speak sink deep into the heart, for their labors must soon end, and as swift witnesses, they must appear at the bar of God against those who would not heed the messages of love and grace sent to them from God. Perhaps, too, our pen may fall as did our brother Campbell's, and our weekly messages cease to greet those we love. We, therefore, address you in the language of the Prophets of the Lord, "Prepare to meet thy God." We ask especial attention to the interests of the soul during the ensuing year, & exhort all to seek first the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness, that whether in life or death, all will be well. All the invitations and promises of the gospel are limited to the present time. The future is with God.

The Register is set for the defense of the gospel, and things more important than earthly interests, and civil or social relations. The church of the living God is suffering under its degeneracy. Its beauty is marred by the innovations of the man of sin, and error of almost every kind and degree is sanctioned by religious dignitaries. Human speculations have superseded gospel truths, and the commands of God are set aside as non-essentials. Against these evils, so far as light is possessed, shall we contend. That spirit that will trifle with holy things is inconsistent with the spirit of the Gospel, as also that bigotry and pride of opinion which refuses to be instructed. That this is the spirit that governs multitudes of professed religionists, is too palpable to be denied. And it can not be doubted that the prime cause of the divided state of the church, is the exercise of principles like these. Our object shall be to promote the exercise of right principles, and to persuade men to receive the unadulterated truths of the Bible, as the correct rule of faith and practice, and to exhort all to contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the saints.

The time will come when that religion, which teaches supreme love to God, and unaffected benevolence to men, shall be divested of its earthly trappings, and show its original excellency and purity. The divisions in the church militant, must cease before Christ shall reign triumphantly in all our hearts. These things will take place when a worldly policy shall cease to influence the conduct of professed christians, and not till then. Notwithstanding the rapid advance that the Christian religion has made in these last days, it is manifestly true that it has made but little progress towards its pristine purity. Sectarian zeal must give place—the Bible must be received in its literal, obvious sense, without any forced constructions. The spirit of the gospel must be exercised under all circumstances, and a strife for the ascendancy cease, ere the glorious appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ. For these objects, we intend to devote our energies, trusting that the time is not far distant when truth in all its excellence shall shine forth gloriously. When we look at the Church of God in its present divided and degenerate state, our inquiry is, How long must the enemy have dominion, and the beauteous temple of God be defiled? How long shall God's holy altars be desecrated, and his holy precepts be rejected? Let the children of the kingdom lift up their voices together, against all abominations, and let them inscribe holiness to the Lord on their brows, and on the tablets of their hearts.

Those who are out of Christ we hope to benefit during our future labors. May we not successfully use our pen in showing the deformities of sin, and the excellencies of the Gospel? May we not be permitted to show the fallacy of all hopes of happiness that are not founded on the sovereign grace of the gospel, and the unhappy and dangerous case of those who are unreconciled to God? It is a service for which we aspire, and in which we have the assurance we may be of everlasting benefit to some, if not to many.

NEW ARRANGEMENT.

It will be seen by the present number, that different arrangements have been made from what was anticipated in the Publishing and Editorial departments. We do not, however, intend to alter the character of the Register. Br. Greene felt it necessary for him to retire, consequently we are left to serve alone. Since the paper is left in our hands, we shall venture to assume the responsibility of issuing it, and assure our patrons that all our energies shall be devoted to making the paper as interesting and profitable as possible. The experience of about six months in editing, has convinced us that the labor will be arduous and responsible. Our fondest hopes do not promise us the approbation of all our readers. It shall be our aim, however, to labor for the edification and instruction of all; and while we shall strive to please some, we shall endeavor not to displease others. The truths of the Bible shall be sacredly regarded, and considered the highest authority on any subject that may come under our inspection.

We are happy to inform our readers that we have secured the correspondence of several individuals who, we doubt not, will be capable of interesting and profiting those who read. We hope, also, to receive communications from those who have been accustomed to write, and who are capable of giving instruction. It will be seen that we have made some alterations in the mechanical execution of the Register. These, we trust, will be acceptable to our readers. We send the paper to you as it is; if it suits you, we shall have our fondest hopes realized; if not, we trust those who are friendly to us will suggest any thing which would add to the interest of the paper, whether in its mechanical execution, or in the editorial department.

EXPLANATION.

In answer to those who inquire, "how shall we remit money to the Register office," we answer, hand it to the Agent if there is one near, if not, to the Post Master, who is authorized by a decision of the Post Master General, to remit money, free of postage, to the publishers of papers.

On the last page may be found the names of persons authorized to act as Agents for the Register. We shall, likewise, be happy to receive the assistance of others who are disposed to aid us in extending our circulation, &c. Those who thus assist us, may rest assured of receiving our gratitude, and a reasonable compensation for their services.

Those to whom we send this number, who do not intend to take the paper the ensuing year, are requested to return it to this office; being careful to name the post-office from which they received it. We trust, however, it will be the good pleasure of all who have heretofore patronized us, to continue their subscription. We can just as well supply several hundred more with the Register, as the number we now do. Our Agents are requested to have an eye to this matter. We hope, by our efforts, to merit a patronage sufficient to ensure the long continuance of a religious paper in our denomination.

"Rev."—The Editor of the New York Evangelist recommends a free use of the above title, and thinks that religious Editors, from the nature of their employment, should receive it. For ourself, we have no ambition of this kind, and have no anxiety to receive it as a Minister of the Gospel. The word, in the abstract, is like any other; but if it is used to designate the holy office of the ministry, it seems like arrogating too much, since the term was applied originally to the Divine Being. For this reason, with others, many ministers of the Gospel have declined the use of the title.

Discontinuances.—Notices to discontinue the Register have been received from several subscribers. If the expectations of our subscribers have not been met, we can not object to this course. We wish them, however, to bear in mind, that according to our terms, no paper is discontinued till all arrearages are paid.

Rev. Eli S. Bailey has accepted an invitation from the church in Adams, Jefferson Co., to labor with them for one year.—His correspondents are requested to address him accordingly. He is also Agent for the Register in that place.

Extract of a letter from brother Lucius Crandall, dated

Plainfield, N. J., Feb. 18, 1841.

I feel anxious for the prosperity of the publishing interests in our denomination.— Such a thing, I suppose, may happen as that we may want some Book Printing done, and if so, I hope we shall be able to have it executed in an acceptable manner.

While I am on this subject, I wish to express a desire that some individual, or individuals, would venture to give us a good History of our denomination at their own price and risk, making up their minds to meet LOSS OR PROFIT with equal calmness and resignation, contenting themselves in view of the good done by, and the honor arising out of, the performance. I would like to say more on this point, but must leave it for the present, by only adding, that we very much need a new Hymn Book, or a revision and enlargement of the one we now have; for though it is probably as good as the generality of Hymn Books of its size, yet, in my opinion, it is too small by more than its own dimensions. It lacks both VARIETY and QUANTITY. And if the "Question Book" subject were not identified with so many gloomy reflections, I would say let us have another on the remaining parts of the New Testament.

[Relative to the History mentioned in the above extract, we remark, that it has been in the mind of some to furnish such a work to the denomination. And it will probably be undertaken, if suitable encouragement shall be given. Such a work would be of great service to us as a people.

It has also been in contemplation, by a brother well qualified for the task, to publish a "Seventh-day Baptist Manual," exhibiting the sentiments of the denomination, and showing from the scriptures that those sentiments are the doctrines of the Bible.—Ed.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Boston Atlas.

ARRIVAL OF THE BRITANNIA.

TWENTY-EIGHT DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The Steamer Britannia, Capt. Cleland, arrived yesterday morning at her berth at East Boston, at 7 o'clock, after a very boisterous passage of 17 1-2 days, having encountered westerly gales during the whole time. She brings dates from Liverpool to February 4th, London, February 3d, evening, and Paris, February 1st, all inclusive. The news from China is confirmed. The papers speak of the probable adjustment of all the difficulties. The paragraph in the Queen's speech is to the same effect.

RELATIONS WITH THIS COUNTRY.

The London Spectator has the following passage on the subject of the North Eastern Boundary, which is all we can find in regard to it.

The most interesting passage in the President's message relates to the disputed boundaries; it informs us, from the other side of the Atlantic, what our Government is doing. It seems that the mode of settling the matter is still under discussion in Downing street. The President, judging from the desire evinced by both Governments to bring the dispute respecting the North Eastern Boundary to a settlement, and from the nature of the points still under discussion, anticipates a speedy conclusion. Mr. Van Buren is not much versed in "open questions," and their value—or at least not so well as those of Downing street.

The American Government have also made a proposition for referring the Lake of the Woods boundary to arbitration, before it becomes quite so urgent and complicated a question as the Maine boundary.— That proposition also is under consideration in England.

Rumors had reached the United States of the arrival of British troops within the disputed territory. They were sent, according to the report, by Lord Sydenham, without the knowledge of Sir John Harvey; and it is said that they were only passing through, on their way to New Brunswick. If there is any foundation for this story, it certainly seems indiscreet to have thus risked collisions and further complications of so embarrassing a question.

We quote the following from the proceedings of Parliament on the 2d inst.

THE CANADAS.

Sir R. Peel asked whether the noble lord would give the house any information relative to the present state of Canada.— Was it the noble lord's intention to lay upon the table of the house, the despatches of the Governor General, bringing down the information respecting the colony to the present time?

Lord J. Russell thought that there were no despatches from the Governor General since the close of the last session of Parliament which he could lay before the House. Upon that point, however, he was not prepared to give a positive answer.

Sir R. Peel—Has any day been fixed for giving to the act of union between the two provinces?

Lord J. Russell said it was the intention of the Governor General to proclaim the union at the end of January, or the beginning of the present month, or, at all events, in sufficient time to render it unnecessary to issue writs for the assemblage of the Legislature of Upper Canada.

State of Parties in the House of Commons. —After the last general election (observes the Liverpool Mercury) we gave a tabular statement, calculating the majority of ministers at twenty-two, the test being, where applicated, the votes of members on the Irish Church and Corporation questions.— We find that since then there have been 94 vacancies or changes occasioned in the following manner:—19 by the death of members, 25 by resignation, 12 by accessions to the peerage and creations, 25 by acceptance of office, and 12 by the decisions of committees. We find, moreover, that in ten instances, Tories have been succeeded by Reformers—in fifteen, Reformers by Tories—thus reducing the ministerial majority to 17. How this may be effected by the coming elections, it would be idle at present to speculate.

America and England have each 800 steam vessels, but in the year 1838, the accidents to English steamers were 465, and eighty lives lost; while during the same year in America, the accidents were 272, and the loss of lives 1,921.

The London and Dublin Company's steamer Thames, on her voyage from Dublin to London, was wrecked on the Southwest rocks of the Sicilly Islands; and all on board, consisting of from sixty to seventy persons, drowned, with the exception of a lady passenger, two stewardesses, and one man. When the vessel was discovered in her perilous situation by the islanders, their boats were aground; but with great efforts they succeeded in launching a whale-boat through the breakers, and getting her under the stern of the Thames.— The commander, Captain Gray, insisted on the females being first hoisted therein, and, unfortunately, as soon as a lady and two stewardesses had been placed there, the boat broke adrift, and drove to the land. This was perceived by a sailing boat, which took her in tow, and succeeded, with great risk, in towing her to the shore in safety. By this time the wind increased almost to a hurricane, which rendered it impossible for any other boat to approach the vessel. Captain Gray then formed a raft, on which a great many of the crew got; but it was almost immediately dashed against the rocks, and all the poor fellows on it were lost, with the exception of one man, who was thrown on a perpendicular rock, and remained there till the following day, when he was rescued. The vessel became a complete wreck, and the remainder of the crew perished.

DEBATES AND PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT.

Opening of the Session.—The Queen opened Parliament in person on Tuesday. She reached the House of Lords about 2 o'clock; and was there received by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Melbourne, and the other Great Officers of the crown.

After robing, her Majesty took her seat on the throne; and Prince Albert occupied a chair of state, placed for him at the Queen's left hand.

The House of Commons was summoned; and in considerable numbers, headed by the Speaker, appeared below the bar.— Then the Lord Chancellor, kneeling at the foot of the throne, presented a copy of the following Speech; which was read by the Queen in a distinct voice:

"My Lords and Gentlemen—I have the satisfaction to receive from Foreign Powers assurances of their friendly disposition, and of their earnest desire to maintain peace.

"The posture of affairs in the Levant had long been a cause of uneasiness and a source of danger to the general tranquility. With a view to avert the evils which a continuance of that state of things was calculated to occasion, I concluded with the Emperor of Austria, the King of Prussia, the Emperor of Russia, and the Sultan, a convention intended to effect a pacification of the Levant; to maintain the integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire; and thereby to afford additional security to the peace of Europe.

"I have given directions that this convention shall be laid before you.

"I rejoice to be able to inform you, that the measures which have been adopted in execution of these engagements, have been attended with signal success; and I trust that the objects which the contracting parties had in view, are on the eve of being completely accomplished.

"In the course of these transactions, my naval forces have co-operated with those of the Emperor of Austria, and with the land and sea forces of the Sultan, and have displayed on all occasions their accustomed gallantry and skill.

"Having deemed it necessary to send to the coast of China a naval and military force, to demand reparation and redress for injuries inflicted upon some of my subjects by the officers of the Emperor of China, and for indignities offered to an agent of my Crown. I at the same time appointed plenipotentiaries to treat upon these matters with the Chinese Government.

"The plenipotentiaries were by the last accounts in negotiation with the Government of China; and it will be a source of much gratification to me if that Government shall be induced by its own sense of justice to bring these matters to a speedy settlement by an amicable arrangement.

"Serious differences have arisen between Spain and Portugal, about the execution of a treaty concluded by those Powers in 1835, for regulating the navigation of the Douro. But both parties have accepted my mediation, and I hope to be able to effect a reconciliation between them upon terms honorable to both.

"I have concluded with the Argentine Republic, and with the Republic of Hayti, treaties for the suppression of the slave-trade, which I have directed to be laid before you.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons —I have directed the estimates of the year to be laid before you.

"However sensible of the importance of adhering to the principles of economy, I feel it to be my duty to recommend that adequate provision be made for the exigencies of the public service.

"My Lords and Gentlemen—Measures will be submitted to you without delay, which have for their object the more speedy and effectual administration of justice.— The vital importance of this subject is sufficient to ensure for it your early and most serious consideration.

"The powers of the Commissioners appointed under the Act for the Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor expire at the termination of the present year. I feel assured that you will earnestly direct your attention to enactments which so deeply concern the interests of the community.

"It is always with entire confidence that I recur to the advice and assistance of my Parliament. I place my reliance upon your wisdom, loyalty, and patriotism; and I humbly implore of Divine Providence, that all your councils may be so directed as to advance the great interests of morality and religion, to preserve peace, and to promote by enlightened legislation the welfare and happiness of all classes of my subjects."

As soon as the Queen had concluded the Speech, her Majesty was handed from the Throne; and, accompanied by [illegible] Albert, she left the House.

The House of Lords re-[illegible] five o'clock. Lord Ducie mo[illegible] Address; which, with the [illegible] paragraph congratulating [illegible] the birth of the Prince[illegible] mere echo of the Speec[illegible] took a review of the stat[illegible] and at home, and was [illegible] tions at their prosperous [illegible]

The Brighton Gazett[illegible] to be increased to the ex[illegible] and that an addition is to [illegible] marines. At Portsmouth [illegible] 84, and Tweed 20 guns, [illegible] There is the same activity [illegible] tablishments as heretofore, [illegible] ships are rapidly approachin[illegible] for commission.

Gore's Liverpool Advertiser [illegible] ult. says, "the improvement in the [illegible] can trade continues, and the packet s[illegible] leave every week with excellent freights. On Thursday last, the Roscius sailed for New York with a freight amounting, in the aggregate, to little less than £1800."

Sir Astley Cooper was severely ill, and the most serious apprehensions respecting his recovery were entertained by his friends.

It is whispered among the echoes of the mountains of Lebanon, that the son-in-law of the gallant Commodore Napier is about to be spliced to one of the houries of the east, a daughter of the Prince of Lebanon. This toward event will consolidate the Anglo Turkish alliance.—Malta Times.

We are happy to hear that Mr. Charles Kemble's health is nearly re-established. He is now residing with his daughter, Mrs. Butler, and daily drives out.—Standard.

Christening of the Princess.—It is strongly rumored at the castle, that the christening of the Princess Royal will be postponed for a few days beyond the 10th inst. in consequence, as it is stated, of the uncertainty of the King of the Belgians being able to leave Brussels until a day or two after that period. As her Majesty is most anxious that her royal uncle should be present at the ceremony, to act as one of the sponsers in person, there is no doubt that a delay of a few days, if rendered necessary by the engagements of his Majesty at Brussels, will take place, in order to suit his convenience, of which due notice will be given.

News of the Day.

TWENTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

Fortifications.—In Senate Feb. 15.—Mr. Buchanan presented a memorial signed by a number of respetable persons of Pennsylvania, which stated in strong terms the defenceless condition of our maritime cities on the sea-board, and the impending danger of a foreign war and urged on Congress to make appropriations for the armament of our fortifications, the building of floating batteries for the defence of our harbors, and the construction of twenty of the first class steam frigates, and as many more smaller steam vessels. The memorial was ordered to be printed, and referred to the committee on naval affairs.

Mr. Merrick presented a similiar memorial for Baltimore, and the interesting debate sprung up in reference to the defence of the country generally.

The Pension Bill.—The Senate then took up the Pension Bill, for 1841, and a long discussion took place on the Florida War, brought out by the provision in the bill to appropriate $100,000 to close the contest. A motion to strike this out was lost, and the bill was passed.

In the House.—The day was spent in debating the general appropriation bill.

Resolution Offered.—Mr. Hubbard, appointed Thursday for the election of a public printer; by Mr. Norvell, that ladies introduced by Senators, may for the residue of the session, be admitted to the privilege of seats within the Senate; and from Mr. Walker, that the map of the country West of the Mississippi, made under the direction of the War Department, by J. N. Nicollet, and the report in reference to the same, be printed for the use of Congress, under the direction of the Chief of Topographical Engineers. Mr. W. accompanied the resolution with some appropriate remarks, expressive of the value of the map; after which the resolution was adopted.

The Bankrupt Bill.—The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy, which terminated without a definite action.

Fortifications and Defences.—In the House.—Mr. Fillmore offered a resolution, that the committee on military affairs be instructed to report a bill making the necessary appropriations for fortifications, naval armaments, and other necessary appropriations, to place the country in a proper state of defence. After a short debate the resolution was adopted.

General Appropriation Bill.—On motion of Mr. Jones, the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year 1841; but after an unimportant debate, which occupied the time up to 4 o'clock, the House adjourned.

The Canadian Patriots.—In Senate— Feb. 17.—The Vice President laid before the Senate a memorial from Rome, N. Y., relative to the captive patriots now held in durance at Van Diemen's Land; praying that Congress will, by the resolution of their body, declare it to be the opinion of the people that the British Government, by reducing our citizens whom they captured in arms in Canada, to the condition of common felons, have departed from that humane course towards prisoners which they have professed to be in accordance with their principles, and have violated the best policy of civilized nations; and that it is regarded a severity not necessary in the case, and the exercise [illegible]ly uncalled for. On motion of Mr. [illegible] the memorial was laid upon the [illegible]

[illegible]land Road,—Mr. Smith, of [illegible]ted a report and joint reso[illegible]slature of that State, on the [illegible]tinuation of the Cumber[illegible] were, on Mr. S.'s motion, and ordered to be printed.

[illegible]tion Bill.--In the House [illegible]solved itself into a com[illegible] and resumed the con[illegible]e bill. Mr. Bell being [illegible] pending was on [illegible], to strike out all the [illegible] having reference to [illegible] North Carolina, Georgia [illegible] the expenditures con[illegible] which on being put, was [illegible] noes 73.

[illegible]—Feb. 18.—Mr. Norvell call[illegible] the resolution offered by him on the [illegible] relative to admitting ladies to the privileged seats in the Senate; but on motion of Mr. Benton, the resolution was laid upon the table, ayes 21, nays 20.

General Appropriation Bill.--In the House. The day and evening were spent in discussing this bill, in which many members participated; but the House adjourned without taking any question.

Public Printer.—In Senate.—Feb. 19.— A fruitless debate on the subject of public printer occupied the Senate up to 4 o'clock, when on motion of Mr. Clay it adjourned.

Pensions to W[illegible].—In the House.— On motion of Mr. Eastman, the bill to extend for five years, the pensions of the widows of revolutionary soldiers, was called up, and many amendments offered; but no decisive question taken upon it.

Election of Public Printers.—In Senate. Feb. 20.—The Senate, after the reception of the usual number of petitions, proceeded to the election of a printer for the next session.

The ballots having been counted, the Vice President announced the result as follows:

For Blair and Rives..............26
F. P. Blair..........................1

So Messrs. Blair and Rives were declared duly elected.

The Sub-Treasury Bill.—The resolution submitted by Mr. Clay, for the repeal of the sub-treasury law was then taken up and debated by Messrs. Clay, Allen, Williams and others, after which the question was taken on laying the resolution on the table, and decided in the affirmative, ayes 27, noes 25.

The Appropriation Bill.—In the House.— The civil and diplomatic appropriation bill was discussed at length, by Messrs. Underwood, and Sergeant, but the House adjourned without any final action.

Shipwreck and Loss of Lives.—A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce writes under date of Ocracoke, N. C, Feb. 16th, 1841: "A severe snow storm commenced here on Sunday morning the 14th inst., wind from E. N. E., blowing very hard--the schr. Bounty, of New-York, Totten, Master, is totally lost, together with her cargo, consisting of Cotton and Naval Stores;—and I regret sincerely to inform you there can be no doubt that every soul on board perished. [It will be seen by the postscript, that four were saved.] This vessel went out in company with the schr. Maria, Smith, master, and several others, bound to New-York, on the 13th and attempted to come back over the Bar, after being at sea one night. She was seen by several persons from the shore, as by the crew of a vessel at anchor inside of the Bar, near what is called the South Breaker. It coming on very thick about this time, it is presumed the Master (there being no Pilot on board,) lost sight of the marks and got into the Breakers, when the vessel bilged immediately. Every exertion that could be made to save the crew was made. It was an awful sight to see, as I did distinctly four human beings in the shrouds of a vessel, lashed, no doubt, to prevent them from being thrown off by the constant motion of the vessel, waving their hats and a small flag, to the crews of the boats, urging them to save their lives, the boats being within 100 of 150 yards.

Feb. 17.—The Master, Totten, Mate, and two of the crew of the Bounty, are saved and at my house—badly frost-bitten however. Three perished. You can form no idea of their suffering—they can barely talk at present—2 days and nights on the wreck. They finally came ashore on the beach on part of the deck.

Discovery of a Numerous Gang of Thieves. The Wayne Standard, which has just come to hand, brings intelligence of the recent discovery of a gang of thieves, in the town of Manchester, Ontario county, which have for a long time been committing depredations upon the people of the adjacent country to an enormous extent, and shielded themselves from justice by visiting every one who made an attempt to expose them, with some signal vengeance. Fourteen of them were arrested at one haul, large amounts of stolen property found, and arrests were still made of people before unsuspected.

The Disputed Territory.—The Portland Advertiser of Friday says: "We understand by private advices from Augusta, that the Land Agent has decided to take off the "civil posse" from the disputed territory, and to leave an agent of the State to look after the trespasser—the Land Agent of Massachusetts agreeing to pay half of the expenses of the agent who is to be kept there. Mr. Hamlin will go to Fort Fairfield in a few days, to discharge the men that have been kept there by Gov. Fairfield. These men have been doing no good to the state, and have been supported at an expense of probably $50,000 for the past year.

On Thursday, last week, in Washington, the horses attached to the carriage of John Quincy Adams, were frightened by the firing of one of Colt's rifles, just after the carriage left the Capitol, and started off, demolishing the carriage and seriously injuring the coachman. The correspondent of the N. Y. Courier says "It was really an affecting sight to see the venerable ex-President assisting to bear into the Capitol the bleeding, and apparently lifeless body of his servant, and the anxious and tender assiduity with which he administered to him."

Dreadful Accident.—The Troy Whig states that a young lady of Petersburgh, N. Y. while riding, in company with several others, on Tuesday last, was thrown from the sleigh against a fence, and injured so severely that she died soon after. The tongue of the sleigh dropped and the neck-yoke while descending a hill, and the sleigh was overturned, throwing the young lady against the sharp point of one of the rails of the fence, by which she was completely transfixed; it having entered her body on one side and passed through the other.

Four men in Exeter, Scott co., Illinois, on the 11th ult. became intoxicated while playing cards, and quarrelled about a handkerchief. Three of them took sides against the other, shot him through the heart, and then beat his head into a perfect jelly.—The murderers were arrested immediately; the murdered man is an Irishman, and the three others Englishmen.

Cruelty.—The editor of the Kennebec Journal says:—' Since the Temperance Reform in Ireland, it is said that large quantities of whiskey have been shipped to the United States for a market. Instead of drinking it here, would it not be a good plan to send it among the Florida Indians? Can there be a cheaper or more effectual way of subduing them?'

A man of well disciplined mind and highly cultivated moral feelings, can hardly be placed in a situation where he will not find contentment. Like the bee, he will extract sweets even from the poisoned flower.

Snags in the Mississippi.—Captain Lee, U. S. Engineer writes to the chief engineer, Col. Totton, that the river Mississippi was never so clear of snags as at the close of 1839, 'and, indeed, the few that remain scattered over its great length, can hardly be said to offer any obstruction. The whole number that have been removed the past year, amounts to 5,085, and the number of trees felled from the falling banks to 1,183. Of these, 4,097 snags and 167 trees have been taken from the Mississippi, and 950 snags and trees from the Ohio river.

National Defenses.—The bill reported in the House of Representatives on Monday last, by the committee on Military Affairs makes appropriations for fortification of the United States generally, for the year 1841, and for armament of fortifications; also for raising a company of sapper, and pontoniers, and appropriating $500,000 for steam ships of war.—The amount proposed by the bill to be appropriated for fortifications is $1,678,000.

A Brute.—A fellow on the night of the 22d rode a horse into the middle of a bonfire, at Chew's Landing, New Jersey, and kept him there until the animal's legs were shockingly burnt. Because the horse would not stand still under the torture, the owner dismounted and cut his throat. Is such a brute fit to live in society?

Military Board.—A Board will convene at Philadelphia on the 25th May, or as soon therefore as practicable, for the purpose of examining the Assistant Surgeon who may be ordered to appear before it, and such applicants for appointment in the medical staff of the army, as may be invited to attend.

The Board will consist of Surgeons Mower, Finley, and McDougall.

Important Decision.—In a case recently before the Court of Common Pleas, in Dauphin county, Pa., Judge Parsons decided "the true rule of policy, and of law, to be—That when bank notes are current at the place in which they are paid, and they are received without objection, and paid in good faith, without any knowledge that the bank had failed; or where from the facts, it could not be inferred that it had although at the time the notes in the place where the bank is located, are not current but utterly worthless, still, in law, it is a valid payment of a pre-existing debt, and when so received, and the debt or judgment satisfied, it is a payment, and the original debt is relinquished."

The case has been removed to the Supreme Court for revision.

The Boston Atlas says it is proposed to construct a depot in that city for the purpose of building steam vessels of war.

American Carpeting.—There is in this village a manufactory of ingrain carpeting, established some four years ago, which turns out annually of threeply, superfine, fine and common ingrain carpeting, plain and twilled Venetian stair carpeting, 100,000 yards, and 1,000,000 yards of carpet binding. It consumes 95,000 lbs. of wool, 720 gallons of oil, 34,000 lbs. of worsted yarn, besides large quantities of dyestuffs. There are about sixty-four operatives, chiefly experienced men, employed. The goods are said to be of excellent quality. The establishment belongs to the firm of Henry Winfield & Co. Agents, Smith, Hewitt & Co. 454 Pearl street, New-York.—Poughkeepsie Journal.

Extraordinary Conduct of a Fanatic.—The coroner received information yesterday that a child had died suddenly at 125 Third avenue, and that an inquest was required to be held on the body. Dr. Archer accordingly proceeded to the place, and passing through the entry, knocked at the door of the apartment in which the child was said to have died. The door was partially opened by a middle aged man, who replied to the inquiry of the coroner, that "he thought there was no dead child there." Dr. Archer then asked him if he were the only occupant of the house and he answered in the affirmative, "Well then," said Dr. Archer, "I am the coroner, and I desire to know positively whether there be a child lying dead here or not." Scarcely had Dr. Archer ceased speaking when the door was shut in his face and locked. Dr. Archer immediately went to the police office, and the magistrates ordered officers to go and effect an entrance. The officers proceeded to the house, and entered the apartment, wher they encountered the man who was now armed with a sword-cane, and threatened to eject the officers as unceremoniously as he had refused admission to Dr. Archer. A female, who seemed recovering from severe sickness informed the coroner that the man was her husband, and that her infant, which was born on Monday last had died that morning, and it was now found beside her. After a most obstinate resistance, the officers succeeded in conveying the man to the upper police office, where he was committed until the result of the inquest on the body of the child should be known. At the office he gave the name as Joseph Ackland, but offered no explanation of his extraordinary behaviour. Dr. Perry stated that Ackley was laboring under the religious frenzy—that he had repeatedly asserted that he would restore the child to life, and it was while engaged in his vain attempt that he refused the coroner admission.—N. Y. Sun.

Temperance.—At St. Mary's Church in Endicot-street, Boston, last Sunday afternoon, Dr. O'Flaherty, after delivering an eloquent and impassioned sermon—in which he vividly portrayed the blessings flowing from temperance, and the miseries which follow in the train of intemperance—administered the pledge to over eight hundred persons.

Father Matthew, in one of his recent addresses, stated that the number of teetotallers in Ireland had increased to 3,300,000.

William Bartlett, the oldest, richest and most honored citizen of Newburyport, Mass. died on the 8th inst., at the age of 93 years, worth about half a million of dollars. It is said he has bequeathed fifty thousand dollars to the Theological seminary at Andover, making more than two hundred thousand dollars as the total amount of his donations to that institution.—Most of his estate, except the bequest to Andover, is given to the grandchildren of the deceased.

Fatal Epidemic.—We are sorry to learn, from the Knoxville Register of 6th February, that the fatal epidemic which lately made its appearance in West Tennessee, is gradually extending itself, and has created much alarm in the vicinity of Henry County. It is supposed to be the disease known some years since in that section of country as the "Cold Plague." Its ravages are well remembered in several of the upper counties of East Tennessee, and western counties of N. Carolina.

Accident.—The last Galena Gazette says on the 30th ult. a two horse mail stage, which run between that place and Dubuque, while on the Mississippi, broke through the ice, and the mail, horses carriage, and a passenger named Taylor, all went to the bottom.

From the New Orleans Bulletin, of Feb. 15.

From Mexico.—By the schooner Creole arrived yesterday, we have received advices from Matamoras to the 27th ult. In that port and its vicinity, perfect tranquility reigned. In the neighborhood of Saltillo, however, the inhabitants had been troubled by incursions of the Cumanche Indians who had stolen large amounts of property. It is stated that 10,000 horses and mules were driven away by the barbarians. The Indians, it appears, made a simultaneous attack on various sections of the interior, apparently with their whole force. This irruption had caused Gen. Arista to take measures for the general defense. All the states and departments invaded had been called on to furnish their quotas for the army.

It was announced that 600 artillery, and as many cavalry were already in the field. Every town and village was required to send out its proportion of troops, who were ordered to spread themselves over the country, to counteract the policy of the Cumanches, who had divided into small bands, and appeared to be almost omnipresent. The whole number of volunteers or drafted militia called for by Gen. Arista is 2,000; they are to assemble at the different rendezvous on or before the 1st of March, and it is believed that in one or two months, the whole of the savages can be driven out of the inhabited part of Mexico.

President's Message.—On the 1st of January, President Bustamente transmitted to Congress his annual message. He congratulates the Congress on the continued existence of Republican institutions in Mexico, and upon the signal failure of all attempts, through revolutionary movements, to overthrow the same. He congratulates them that the relations between Mexico and the European and the American States, continue to be those of peace and amity. The claims of some of the citizens of the United States upon Mexico, are now about to be adjusted by the Commissioners of the two Governments assembled in Washington; or otherwise by the arbitration of the King of Prussia.

A new treaty is to be made with the Government of the British Queen for the suppression of the slave trade.

The President believes that the return of the Federal leaders to their duty as Mexican citizens, will tend to hasten that period when the department of Texas shall become again an integral part of the Republic.

It is announced in the Vera Cruz Censor of the 15th of December, that Gen. Gaudalope Victoria, who had been extremely ill from an apoplectic attack, was so far recovered as to be pronounced out of immediate danger, though it was believed one leg and arm would remain useless.

A proposition has been made to establish Tampico as a free port. The Vera Cruz merchants warmly oppose this plan, and it will probably fail. It is stated in one of the papers that since the first of January, 1840, forty-four vessels, exclusive of the English packets, have arrived at the port of Tampico, which have paid nearly two millions of dollars to Government on imports.

A letter from Matamoras, of the latest date, says:—"Our news here is of little moment. Capt. Wright, Mr. Thompson, and another gentleman, arrived here a few days ago, as commissioners to receive the money due to some forty Texian Federalists who were at Comargo; likewise to receive the steamboat and brig in the name of this Government from the American Consul at Galveston, in whose hands it is said they remain. The commissioners have received a part of the sum stipulated in the agreement between General Arista and Licentiate Canales.

Correspondence of the Savannah Republican.

Florida, Feb. 10.

The mercury in the thermometer of our last hopes is still rising, and I now have the pleasure of stating that the band of Catsah Tustennuggee, (Tiger Warrior) has faithfully come in and gone to Tampa.—This is the party surprised by Col. Riley, it numbers 72. As I understand Col. Worth is co-operating with Col. Harney in the everglades, I think from the efforts of such brave and energetic spirits we have much to hope—besides they seem to have adopted the proper mode of fighting the Indians. You will probably hear of their operations via. St. Augustine soon. Yours, truly.

P. S.—I shall write again by next express.

The North Eastern Boundary.—The Commissioners for surveying the Boundary line between the States of Maine and New Hampshire, and the British Provinces, in the report of their operations the past season, state that the survey has proceeded far enough to establish the fact that the line running north from the monument at the source of the St. Croix, will pass about one mile east of the eastern extremity of the base of the northeasternmost peak of Mars hill. A permanent station was also erected at the position established on the Aroostook heights, and a measurement made from it due west to the experimental or exploring line of 1817, by which the party found itself 2,400 feet to the east of that line.

State of Dacotah.—The St. Louis Gazette mentions the probability that sometime within the next fifteen years, another star will be added to our constellation, with the title of the State of DACOTAH. It will extend, according to that paper, over the prairie region north of Iowa, stretching probably from the Missouri to the Mississippi river, embracing the country watered by the St. Peters, the Sioux and Jaques rivers, and include a part of the Corteau de Prairie. Its latitude will be the same as Michigan, northern New York, Vermont and New Hampshire, with the soil far superior to the average of those states taken together.

Wonderful Discovery.—Mr. Lorenzo Sibert, one of the firm of L. & G. W. Sibert, Iron Masters, in this country, has lately discovered a mountain of Iron Ore, near the works owned by the firm. The ore covers the mountain for several miles, projecting on every side like huge rocks putting forth from the body of the earth, and, upon actual experiment, proves to be very valuable, yielding 70 per cent., after being fused. The mountain alluded to has gone heretofore by the name of Paddy Mountain. We learned the above particulars from a gentleman of undoubted veracity, and a near relative of the fortunate discoverer. It is not only our impression that not only that mountain, but all the mountains of the valley are full of iron ore or coal. We rejoice with the discoverer aforementioned at the advantages secured to him by so noble a discovery as that he has made.—Woodstock, Va., Sentinel.

The Old School Presbyterians number in the United States, 126,583.

Peter G. Stuyvesant, Esq., has offered to the New York Historical Society, two lots of ground on Stuyvesant street, New-York, between the Bowery and Third Avenue, on condition that the Society raise, between this time and May next, eighteen thousand dollars, for the erection of a fire-proof building, for the preservation of its important library and relics.

The planet Venus, now the evening star, is uncommonly brilliant. The light which she sheds upon the earth is so strong, that it causes a very perceptible shadow. Venus may be seen in the west soon after sunset, at an altitude of about 30 degrees above the horizon.

Printer's Morals.—The Printers of the city of Savannah have held a meeting on the subject of being compelled to work on Sundays, to the deprivation of that rest and those privileges which other citizens enjoy; and appointed a committee to wait on the Editors of the daily papers, to request that they may hereafter be released from labor on the Sabbath. This is a very reasonable request, and we think should be considered by the press in New York.

Some workmen engaged in digging away an embankment in Jackson street, Brooklyn, near the Navy Yard, on Thursday, dug up a quantity of human bones.—Among the rest were the remains of a skeleton with iron manacles still on the wrists. It is highly probable that the mouldering bones are the remains of some of the victims of oppression on board the notorious Jersey prison ship.

Oregon Mission.—The ship Lausanne, Capt. Spalding, arrived in Columbia river, May 21st, 23 days from the Sandwich Islands, and landed the whole Missionary family and their freight and effects in safety. The Lausanne left Columbia river, July 4th, and was at the Sandwich Islands, Sept. 14th.

The Maryland, Couch, from Newburyport, had arrived in Columbia River prior to July 4th.

From the Sandwich Islands.—A number of "The Polynesian," published at Oanu, Sandwich Islands, September 5th, says:

The all engrossing topic discussed in its columns, is the French Treaty forced upon the Sandwich island government, by which the latter agreed to admit Property free of duty, and brandy at a duty not exceeding 5 per cent. ad valorem.

The burden of complaint is, that the subjects of his Hawaian Majesty are guaranteed no rights or privileges in France at all commensurate with those granted to French subjects at the Sandwich Islands, and that such exclusive benefits no generous or magnanimous nation would require. One writer undertakes to vindicate the Treaty, while others warmly oppose it.—The discussion had elicited an explanation from the French Consul, that according to his understanding of the Treaty, it does not interdict the Sandwich Island government from laying any impost they please, upon all French merchandizes, brandy and wine excepted, which must not pay over 5 per cent. ad valorem.

"This interpretation," says a writer in the Polynesian, "is so directly at war with the plain letter of the Treaty, that no man could ever put such a construction upon it without manifest violence to the meaning, if this is to be judged of at all from the language. If there are no other French merchandizes, and no other French produce, known to be such, except wine and brandy, then, indeed, this is the meaning, and there is no obscurity; but, if there is any other article, known as French merchandize, then this cannot be prohibited, or a duty exceeding 5 per cent. imposed upon it, any more than upon wine and brandy, this is meant, or nothing."

The mulberry appears to thrive wonderfully in the Islands. In Mr. C. Titcomb's mulberry plantation at Waioli, some of the leaves are stated to be nearly as large as a whole page of the Polynesian, which is about 16 inches by 13.

Oahu, Sept. 5.—Theives and topers are becoming as plentiful in Honolulu, as swine in the streets. Several attempts at house-breaking have occurred recently, and in two instances successfully. Catch the robbers, and if you can't catch, shoot them. As for the drunkards, a season's employment on the reef, at stone cutting, would keep them out of mischief, and effectually cure the last symptom of hydrophobia.

Supreme Court of the United States.—Extract of a letter, dated "Washington, Feb. 15th. I can form no judgment whatever of the length of the argument in the Amistad case. Most of the arguments here run to a prodigious length. Mr. Gilpin, the Attorney General, argued four days, four hours each day, in the case of Gen. Gratiot; and Walter Jones, Esq., took three days in reply. Senator Walker, of Miss., has been arguing three days in opening the great constitutional case about the legality of the importation of slaves against the prohibition in the State Constitution. Mr. Jones, Mr. Clay, and Mr. Gilpin are to follow, and all this before the Amistad case will be reached. Such is the order of the court. They will not suspend the hearing of a case to take up the Amistad case. The case referred to, is on an endorsed note given to a negro trader, and the endorsers contest it on the ground that the consideration was illegal and void. It is a regular course of Anti-Slavery lectures, by Southern Senators and Southern lawyers."—Jour. of Com.

We find the following paragrph in the Pittsburgh Intelligencer of Saturday:—

OUR WAGON BUSINESS.—About 150 wagon loads of Foreign and Domestic Goods from New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, have arrived in our city during the past week, and we may look for a large increase to this important business for a month to come; and it will fill our warehouses and wagon yards, and scatter a great deal of money all along the Pennsylvania turnpike. The carriage is $1,25 per 100 pounds from Philadelphia and Baltimore. 120 wagon loads at 6000 lbs. each, on an average, is 6000,000 lbs., making good freights for our steamboats, as many of these goods are for the West and South.

Anual Report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.—This report includes the operations of the Land Office for parts of the years 1839 and 1840. The sales of public lands during the year 1839, to $4,976,382.87, and the nett proceeds from this source paid into the United States Treasury, during the same period were $6,076,447.55. The following table shows the number of acres sold and the nett receipts, in each of the States and Territories, in 1339:

	Acres.	Receipts
Ohio,	242,444.76	358,380.51
Indiana,	618,748.31	805,309.00
Illinois,	1,132,876.31	1,460,525.65
Missouri,	1,038,075.83	1,562,541.36
Alabama,	121,935.81	187,279.97
Mississippi,	18,787.23	55,482.81
Louisiana,	509,307.11	455,154.22
Michigan,	134,084.02	182,261.15
Arkansas,	154,858.74	258,181.06
Wisconsin,	560,722.82	802,201.09
Iowa,	2a8,152.31	612,522.14
Florida,	56,199,62	94,617.12
Grand total,	4,976,382,87	$7,076,447.35

The sales for the first three quarters of the year 1840, in the same States and Territories, amounted to 1,696,619.12 acres, and the payments into the Treasury, to $2,630,216.25. The largest amount of sales for this year, was in Missouri, 468,389 acres; the next largest, in Iowa Territory, 372,274 acres.

The expenses of the different Land Offices, in 1839, were $209,739.10: in 1840, for three quarters, $110,593.59.

During eight years, from 1833 to 1840 both inclusive, there were sold in the above named States and Territories, 56,842,806 acres, and the receipts therefore, paid into the Treasury, were $72,269,749.58. The largest sales were in Illinois, 9,245,506 acres; the next largest in Indiana, 8,622,856 acres; in Michigan and Mississippi, a fraction short of 8,000,000 each.

There was proclaimed for sale at the different Land Offices in 1840, upwards of thirteen millions and a half of acres, and the quantity prepared for market, but not yet proclaimed, will make an aggregate of nearly twenty three millions and three quarters of acres. It is estimated that the quantity now in preparation for market, and which will be ready during the ensuing eighteen months, together with that already prepared, and that proclaimed, will amount to thirty-one millions and a half of acres.

VESSEL CAPSIZED AND ALL ON BOARD LOST.—The schooner Evelina, Capt. Ashley which left here on Friday last for York River was capsized on that afternoon in a squall which struck her about the mouth of York River and all hands were lost. Norfolk Beacon 23rd inst.

The number of arrivals and clearances at Buffalo, during the year 1840, was 2834, and at Oswego during the same period, was 2631.

The friends of temperance in Baltimore contemplate erecting a large and substantial Hall in that city, in which to hold their meetings.

The annual consumption of sugar in the U. States, is estimated at 80,000,000 lbs.

FRAGRANT ODOR FOR SICK ROOMS.—A few drops of oil of sandal wood, which, though not in general use, may be easily obtained in town, when dropped on a hot shovel, will diffuse a most agreeable balsamic perfume throughout the atmosphere of sick rooms, or other confined apartments.

The Sunday School Journal says, "On a late Sunday morning, an infidel in Philadelphia was heard to deny in the boldest terms, the existence of a God, and to declare he had no fear of such a being. In the afternoon of the same day he received a fatal wound as he was expelled from a tavern, and was then heard to exclaim, "Oh God! have mercy upon my poor soul!"

LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION.—Three Indians in the vicinity of Green Bay became converts to the temperance cause, although previously given to "put the enemy in their mouth that stole away their brains." Three white men formed the charitable resolution of trying their Indian sincerity. Placing a canteen of whiskey in their path, they hid themselves in the bushes to observe the motions of the red men.—The first one recognized his old acquaintance with an "uh", and making a high step, he passed on. The second laughed, saying, "me know you!" and walked round. The last one drew his tomahawk, and dashing it to pieces, said, "ugh, you conquer me, now I conquer you."

IMPORTANT TO NEWSPAPER EDITORS.—It has recently been decided in Philadelphia, that if a person allows a paper to be left on his premises and reads it, he is liable for the subscription, notwithstanding he may have called at the office and expressly ordered it stopped. If a person does not intend to pay for a paper, he must not receive nor read it.

A FREE STATE.—There is not a distillery in the state of Delaware; at least we see it so stated in one of our exchange papers. If this be true, our little neighbor may hold up her head.

POPULATION OF BUENOS AYRES.—This city, which, fifteen years ago, contained 60,000 inhabitants, is said to have been reduced to 20,000, of whom three-fourths are females.

MISSIONARIES TO THE NESTORIANS.—Rev. Abel K. Hinsdale and Colby C. Mitchell sailed with their wives from Boston on the 10th inst., as missionaries of the American Board to the independent Nestorians. Rev. G. C. Hunter and wife accompanied them, destined for Syria.

Labor as much to cure thyself of a fault, as thou wouldst of a fever.

MARRIED,

In Traxton, on the 28th ult., by Eld. S. M. Burdick, Mr. ALBERT MUNCY, and Miss PRUDENCE ANN MOONEY, both of Traxton.

DIED,

In Otselic, on the 9th ult., FREEMAN, son of Henry and Glyceera Tallett, aged 1 year.

In Berlin, in January last, Mr. JAMES MAIN, one of the oldest citizens of the place, aged 104.

In the same place, in February, Mrs. RHODA FULLER, relict of Daniel Fuller, aged 77.

In the same place, on the 6th of February, Mr. JOHN RICHER, aged 76.

In the same place, on the 19th of February, Mrs. AUSTIN, wife of Capt. Rufus Austin, aged 79.

In Monroe, Michigan, on the 24th of Sept. last, Mrs. ESTHER, wife of Ezra W. Carpenter, aged about 40. Mrs. Carpenter embraced religion in her younger days, and united with the Seventh-Day Baptist church at Berlin. Since which time, she has maintained her standing in the church, and we humbly hope has now gone to enjoy that rest which remains for the people of God. COMM.

LIST OF LETTERS.

George Stevens, P. M., S. Talcott, P. M., G. T. Maxson, Erastus Berry, P. M., E. K. Crandall, (we have sent you a written answer; we are of the same mind now.) Mrs. Phillip A. Fenner, (thank you.) Henry H. Willcox, (we will do as you request.) S. S. Streeter, P. M. (your suggestion shall be attended to.) C. C. Gray, P. M. (you may send them back now.) J. R. Irish, (we have made the desired alteration.) Samuel Russell, P. M., (it is done.) Lucius Crandall, (we are willing to make a reasonable allowance to local agents in proportion to their services.) S. Greenman, Ephraim Maxson, (thank you.) J. A. Potter, (you have our thanks.)

LIST OF RECEIPTS

Of Lucius Crandall, $9, cr. T. S. Alberti, S. F. Randolph, William Dunn, Isaac V. Titsworth, each $2.25, vol. 1. S. S. Streeter, $1.25, cr. Philander Carpenter, vol. 1 & 2. Ezekiel G. Potter, $8.75, cr. Jesse Clarke, $2.25, vol. 1. Luman Mattison, $2, vol. 1. [illegible] Wells, $2.25, vol. 1, and .25 vol. 2. [illegible] Fisher, $2, vol. 2. Joseph W. Sexton, $2.25, vol. 1. George Burdick, $2.12, vol. 1. Ebenezer Merchant, $1, vol. 1. Jeremiah Gage, $1.31, vol. 1. H. H. Willcox, $2.25, vol. 1. J. R. Irish, $9, cr. J. R. Hartshorn, Luke Green, Lorenzo D. Worden, each $2.25, vol. 1, Isaiah Crandall, $2, vol. 1. Thomas E. Babcock, $4.75, cr. Hiram Sherman, .25, vol. 1. Wells K. Greene, Charles West, each $2.25, vol. 1. H. Talcott, $1-50, cr. J. Kelsey, $1, vol. 1. Z. Sprague, .50 vol. 1, Ephraim Maxson, 3.50, cr. Ezra Whitford $2, vol. 2, Abram Coon, $1.50 vol. 1. Joseph A. Potter $12, cr. Wm. Satterlee, Stephen R. Burdick, T. W. Saunders, each $2.25, Joshua Williams, $1,50, Asa C. Potter, Nelson Greene, each $2, vol. 1, .25 retained.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

VOLUM II.

EDITED BY AN ASSOCIATION OF MINISTERS.

The SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER will be published weekly, at De Ruyter, Madison Co., N. Y., on an Imperial sheet, at $2 per annum, in advance; $2,25, after six months; or $2,50 at the end of the year. To village subscribers, $2,25, in advance; or $2,50, at the end of the year.

It will continue to be the organ of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, and contend for the truths of the Bible, as held by them. In advocating the sentiments of this people, it will not be censorious or illiberal to those of different denominations. It will embrace in its object the whole range of christian doctrines and duties, and advocate with a becoming zeal the various moral and benevolent enterprizes of the day. In its columns may be found things interesting and profitable to all.

The REGISTER will be what it has been with such alterations only, as will make it more interesting to its readers. While we are grateful for the indulgence and approbation of our readers, during the first year of our labors, we would respectfully invite their cooperation, assuring them it will be our chief effort to make the REGISTER what it should be, and well worthy of their patronage.

We assure those of all denominations, who patronize us, that it will be our object to furnish them with an evangelical paper, which shall "contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." In all of our labors, we shall strive to cultivate the spirit of the Gospel, and labor for the promotion of practical religion, as well as to defend its theory.

We wish our agents to renew their efforts to supply each family in our denomination with a copy of the Register.

A portion of our columns will be devoted to Literature, Science, Agriculture, and General Intelligence. Party Politics will have no place in the REGISTER.

Those who will aid us in procuring new subscribers, and in remitting money, shall receive both our gratitude and a liberal compensation

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DISSOLUTION.

THE co-partnership heretofore existing under the firm of Greene, Bailey, & Burdick, is this dissolved by mutual consent. The business of the firm will be settled by James Bailey, who is duly authorized to settle the same.

JOEL GREENE,
JAMES BAILEY,
ROWLAND S. BURDICK.

De Ruyter, Feb. 25th. 1841.

NOTICE.

THE Subscriber respectfully solicits those who are indebted to him on Book account of six months standing to call and settle the same, if possible, without delay, as he is very much in want of the avails of his labor. De Ruyter, March 3. 1841.
1w3 HALSEY STILLMAN

Medicines! Medicines!!

TO FAMILIES.

S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public; for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s
MOTHER'S RELIEF.
JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT—
DR. McMUN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—
MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—

De Ruyter, Dec. 5, 1840. 1m3

POETRY.

Thy Will be Done.

BY LADY FLORA HASTINGS.

In every place, in every hour,
Whate'er my wayward lot may be,
In joy or grief, in sun or shower,
Father and Lord! I turn to thee.

Thee, when the incense-breathing flowers
Pour forth the worship of the spring,
With the glad tenants of the bowers
My trembling accents strive to sing.

Thee, when upon the frozen strand
Winter, begirt with storms, descends;
Thee, Lord, I hail, whose gracious hand
O'er all a guardian care extend.

Thee, when the golden harvests yield
Their treasures to increase our store;
Thee, when through ether's gloomy field
The lightnings flash, the thunders roar!

Thee, when athwart the azure sky
Thy starry hosts their mazes lead,
And when thou sheddest from on high
Thy dew drops on the flowery mead,

Thee, when my cup of bliss o'erflows;
Thee, when my heart's best joys are fled
Thee, when my breast exulting glows;
Thee, when I bend beside the dead.

Alike in joy and in distress,
Oh, let me trace thy hand divine!
Righteous in chastening, prompt to bless,
Still, Father, may THY will be mine!

The World beyond the Grave.

A gentle voice ye cannot hear,
Falls sweetly on my weary ear,
And whispers me away;
It tells of springs that ever bloom,
In that fair land beyond the tomb,
Where living waters play.

'Mid fields of soft unfading green.
And death and sin come not between
The spirit and its God:
A glorious, happy world on high,
Whose beauties cheer no mortal eye,
Nor foot of man hath trod.

Where all is pleasant, bright, and fair,
For peace hath fixed her dwelling there,
And there, on downy wing,
Unnumbered cherubs sport along,
And angels swell the blissful throng,
Whose songs seraphic ring.

Oh! 'tis a world supremely blest,
A Sabbath of eternal rest,
From every danger free;
Sickness and death no more shall reign,
Nor fear shall come, or sorrow pain—
All 'cares' forever flee.

The voice is hushed, its music still,
Yet hope and joy my bosom fill—
I in that world shall shine;
My harp shall wake the heavenly strains
That breathe—'mid those celestial plains
Immortal pleasures shine.

[Chambers' Edinburgh Jour.

Literature and Science.

From Southwick's Family Newspaper.

ADVANTAGES OF THE STUDY OF MATHEMATICS TO FEMALES.

BY MISS MARY E. BLANCHARD OF CORTLAND CO., N. Y.

To know what benefits are to be derived from the knowledge of any science, we must first ascertain its nature and fundamental principles, its object and effect; for it is plain, that we cannot judge correctly of that with which we are imperfectly acquainted, and the more we know of any subject, the better competent are we decided upon its merits.

Few sciences are regarded as more important or are more extensively studied in all institutions for the education of men, than mathematics, and a knowledge of them has ever been made a fundamental part of his education. But it was not until the sun of science had reached its present height that females were taught these branches. Notwithstanding their importance, they were considered unnecessary for woman, and even now, there are some who strenuously oppose their introduction into female seminaries. It is said, woman has heretofore fulfilled the design of her being without this knowledge, and she needs it not now; all the duties of her station can be performed with integrity and affection, without his knowledge—and why, it is asked, engage her time and energies with that which is of no benefit to her; why teach her that, without which she has so long lived in happiness and usefulness.

But let us ascertain what are the benefits of mathematical science to any class of persons and what entitles them to hold so high a rank in the scientific world. There would seem to be a magic power in numbers, in triangles, parallelograms and arbitrary signs, so as to engage and interest the learned and cultivated mind. There must surely be some beauty, some worth in that science, which can so enthral the greatest intellect. And is there not beauty, is there not worth in truth? Can the study of those principles which are simple but conclusive, abstruce but certain, and upon which depend the most important results, those principles that regulate the universe, that control the farthest worlds, and will control them forever, the investigation of those fixed and eternal truths, that have operated upon all matter from the "beginning or ever the world was," be otherwise than attractive? Can we fail to be interested in the study of those laws, which: while exhibited in the attenuated web of the spider, in the perfect cell of the bee, and the beautiful forms of the diamond and chrystal, are operating upon the vast worlds in the wide regions of space, and are the same by which their formation is guided.

Can any thing be more sublime than truths so exalted and so simple? But these are the objects of mathematical investigation, this is indeed the science of mathematics. It is a knowledge of this that has enabled us to explain the varied and mysterious phenomena of the heavenly bodies; to measure the distance and magnitude, ascertain the motions, and calculate the velocities of the far off worlds. It has enabled man, an inhabitant of this small sphere, to stretch forth his feeble arm and weigh the farthest planet of our system. It has disrobed the comet of its terrors, robbed the Aurora Borealis of its threatening aspect, and clothed the whole heavens with a new and attractive garb. It is a knowledge of mathematical principles that has made known to us the beautiful theory of light, and aided us in unfolding the many mysteries of our own world; and it is an application of them that has enabled the mariner to guide his frail barque in safety o'er the pathless ocean. Can there be a science more beautiful and more exalted, or more worthy the pursuit of mind, than the investigation of those laws that are forever operating upon the vast worlds in the blue vault of heaven, ever to be developing before them? Will not every faculty be expanded to its utmost by a knowledge of such truths? Can a contemplation of the works of Deity in their grandest and most imposing forms have any effect other than to enlarge and ennoble, to chasten and purify? And is this of no benefit to the female mind? Is not the soul of woman as capable of those nobler and more exalted feelings of the human heart, as man's? Must she never taste the purer, higher pleasures of intellect? Must she never engage in those pursuits that of all others tend most to elevate and strengthen? Must her every thought and feeling be confined to the light and trivial occurrences of the world? Must she never enter the field of refined and exalted thought, but always dwell amid the flowry lands of romance and of song? Must her burning thirst for something hither be ever unquenched, and her ardent aspirations be still unsatisfied? Must all the energies of an immortal spirit be dissipated in the trifling objects of a day?

Let us follow the Astronomer with his glass as he gazes at the heavens above him, and first applying it to the beautiful "queen of even," he finds her guided by such impulses, obeying such laws, and controlled by such principles as our earth. He finds her diversified by hills and vales, probably fitted to support beings of intelligence, possessing faculties to worship and adore that Being who guides and governs all things. Now turning to the planets that compose the Solar System, he finds them moving in their orbits in perfect order and harmony, receiving the genial influence of the same sun that enlivens our world, each attended by its satellites, and from their transits he calculates the distance of the sun, the velocity of light, and applying the knowledge thus gained to principles already known, he forms the chart by which the seaman can steer with unerring certainty to the wished for heaven. He sees the beautiful belts and resplendent rings of the more remote planets, so admirably adapted to the situation of their respective inhabitants: And now turning to the countless millions of fixed stars, he beholds systems within systems, constellations within constellations, all in perfect harmony, and through openings, such as Orion's window, he catches a glimpse of those bright regions beyond, that are perhaps but the portals to others still more brilliant. His thoughts are exalted, his heart expanded, he feels that it is vain to attempt the conception of immensity, that he cannot comprehend infinity, but his whole soul glows with a warm and fervent piety, and he feels that the Being who created and who governs this vast universe must be omnipotent and eternal, and with feelings like an inspired writer, he can say: "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained, what is man that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that thou visitest him."

But, let us go with him to his silent chamber, where, applying the knowledge thus gained, he endeavors to elucidate some mystery; with patient toil he studies, compares, reasons, and carefully examines all its darkness: But see, his countenance beams with delight as the truth gleams upon him, still and still more clearly does it shine until the whole is made plain, the long tried problem solved, and with a thrill of pleasure he involuntarily exclaims, Eureka, Eureka! Can investigation requiring such persevering effort, such long continued energy of thought, fail to impart strength and vigor of intellect? Can they fail to enlarge and extend the operations of the mind?

He who can at once take into survey the whole starry heavens, trace the motions of every orb, follow the comet in its far off aphelion, and calculate to a certainty the time of its return, travel the wide galaxy, and feel at home in every constellation, cannot but have his every faculty exerted to its utmost, and his whole soul expanded with wonder, with gratitude and with awe. He cannot but adore the Creator of all this grandeur, and his own character will shrink into its true insignificance, and his heart be humbled at its ignorance; but he is invigorated to new effort, and inspired to more diligent exertion. But we are told that this knowledge of the distant worlds, and the brilliant heavens, is not necessary for woman. She does not need this expansion of intellect, the vigor and energy of thought. She is never called upon to enter into such abstract calculations as man, and has no faculties for it; but while the memory of Caroline Hershel lives upon the page of history, it needs not to be shown that woman has faculties, which enable her to soar into the heavens and expatiate in the fields of exalted inquiry, and though she may never apply a knowledge of mathematics to the practical purposes of life, may not the fervency of her devotion be increased by a contemplation of the nobler and brighter creation of her God? And may not her piety receive a warmer glow, her heart be purified and chastened by such exercise? Will she be rendered more arrogant, will her vanity be increased, by such exalted, but humbling considerations? Will she be less interesting, less faithful in the discharge of the duties of her station, if her mind be thus cultivated, her feelings thus refined, and subdued? Will she assume an undue eminence when she has surveyed the illimitable field of knowledge, and is made conscious of the littleness of her own attainments? Will the woman whose mind has been trained to habits of fixed attention, who can follow out the perfect and lucid demonstrations of mathematics, be a "light and trifling thing?" will her spirit be a "weak and wondering one?" will she shrink with timidity from the sterner duties of life, like the fancy fed being of the chivalric ages? Would she who had acquired the firmness and deliberation that mathematical studies always impart, sink under the weight of the fictitious sorrows of her own imagination? The mind thus cultivated will acquire a decided tone, will set with calmness and deliberation in every emergency, will judge with coolness and candor upon all matters of life and rise above its slighter cares and evils with a firmness that nothing can shake. It has been objected that woman is rarely called upon to use her knowledge of the mathematical sciences, but this is equally applicable to most classes of men. The physician never applies his knowledge of fluxions to administer relief to his suffering patient. The lawyer never issues a writ, never files a declaration by logarithmatic numbers. The clergyman needs not a knowledge of conic sections, to send home the solemn and impressive truths of scripture to the hearts and consciences of his hearers. Why, then, are mathematics ever taught? Why is such an amount of time devoted to that which is of no practical benefit? Why are they not banished from our halls of learning, and reserved, as anciently, for the cloister and monastery? It is because there are no sciences so well adapted for disciplining and strengthening the mind, none that will impart such vigor of intellect, such acuteness of perception, and accuracy of judgment, and none that will so invigorate the understanding, elevate the feelings, and fit men to discharge the duties of life.

If the minds of females are to be cultivated at all, if they are to be refined and strengthened, there is no reason why they should be cultivated differently from those of men. The same general principles operate upon all minds, the same laws regulate all, and if the mathematical sciences are best adapted to discipline and cultivate the intellectual powers, best calculated to fit an inidividual for the duties of his station, there are, then, none that can be more important. If they strengthen & ennoble the mind of man, they will strengthen and ennoble the mind of woman; if they invigorate the one they will invigorate the other; if they give to the one firmness, they will have a like effect upon the other. Woman has the same need for decision and firmness in her sphere, as if she were to fill the higher stations, assigned only to man. She as much needs firmness and strength of intellect, as if called upon to preside over the congress of nations. She presides over the feelings and destinies of the family circle, and there rules more effectively than does the emperor over his subjects; her influence is less extensive, but more efficient, less ostentatious, but more enduring.

If woman is weak and vascillating, if vanity and indecision are her prominent faults, if she is an unthinking being, with no resources for the present, and no hopes for the future, if the present system of accomplished education, tends to unfit her for the social and domestic duties of life, and, as was said by a gifted authoress, induce her "to look upon this world as only a stage for the display of those superficial and shining talents, which her education has cultivated;" and if the mathematical sciences are best calculated to remove these defects of character, if they, of all others, tend most to rouse the whole energies of the soul, and teach the mind to think, to reason, and to judge, there is then a double necessity for her to study them. If these sciences are adapted to fit an individual for discharging the many important duties of life; if they enable the mind to look upon the world as it is by studying them and acquiring this discipline, she will learn in the language of the author just quoted—"That human life is not a splendid romance, spangled over with brilliant adventures, enriched with extraordinary occurrences, and diversified with wonderful incidents; but a true history, many pages of which, are dull, obscure, and uninteresting, some, perhaps, tragical, but, that whatever gay incidents may be interspersed in the progress of the piece; yet finally, one event happeneth to all—to all there is one awful and infallible catastrophe," and she will rouse from her summer dreams, and with all the energy, all the dignity of her nature, she will so fulfil her destiny, that when the final summons comes, her "work will be done—and well done."

Children's Department.

THE DESERTED CHILDREN.

"I will record in this place," says Mr. Flint in his Travels in America, "a narrative that impressses me deeply. It was a fair example of the case of extreme misery and desolation that are often witnessed on the Mississippi river.

"In the Sabbath School at New Madrid, we received three children who were introduced to that place under the following circumstances. A man was descending the river with three children in his piroge. He and his children had landed on a desert island on a bitter snowy evening in December. There were but two houses near, and these at a little prairie opposite the island. He wanted more whiskey, although he had been drinking too freely. Against the persuasions of the children he left them, to cross over to the houses and renew his supply. The wind blew high, & the river was rough.

Nothing could dissuade him from his dangerous attempt. He told them he should return that night. He left them in tears and exposed to the pitiless peltings of the storm, and started for his carous. The children saw the boat sink before he had half crossed the passage—the man was drowned.

"These forlorn beings were left without any other covering than their own scanty-ragged dresses, for he had taken his blankets with him. They neither had fire or shelter, and no other food than uncookd pork and corn. It snowed fast and the night closed over them in this situation. The oldest was a girl of six years, but remarkably shrewd and acute for her age. The next was a girl of four; and the youngest a boy of two.

"It was affecting to hear the oldest girl describe her desolation of heart, as she set herself to examine her resources.—She made her brother and sister creep together, and draw their feet under their clothes. She covered them with leaves and branches, and thus they passed the night. In the morning the younger child wept bitterly with cold and hunger. The pork she cut into small pieces She then persuaded them to run about, setting them an example. Then she made them return to chewing corn and pork. It would seem as if Providence had a special eye to these children, for in the course of the day some Indians landed on the Island and found them, and as they were coming up to New Madrid, took them with them."

Friends of humanity, wake up—why sleep ye at your posts! An enemy—one possessing wonderful potency—is now, and has been from time immemorial, among you, "going about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour"—yea, in open day he stalks fearlessly forth corroding every thing he touches, corrupting the heart, paralizing the mind, enervating the body, and casting the immortal part of man, that must live "amid the wreck of matter and the crush of worlds," into endless hopelessness and grief. To arms? To arms! marshal your forces, and let your watchwords be "onward," until you shall have banished Drunkenness from among you. This done, the white flag of temperance shall wave over the "land of the free and the home of the brave," and peace and prosperity will lie down at your doors. The mother will no longer "forget her sucking child"—children will cease their piteous wailing, and earth a "little heaven below" become! Youth's Cab.

A KISS FOR A BLOW.—A visiter once went into a school at Boston, where he saw a boy and a girl on one seat, who were brother and sister. In a moment of thoughtless passion, the little boy struck his sister. The little girl was provoked, and raised her hand to return the blow. Her face showed that rage was working within, and her clenched fist was aimed at her brother, when her teacher caught her eye. "Stop, my dear" said she, "you had better kiss your brother than strike him." The look and the word reached her heart. Her hand dropped. She threw her arms round his neck and kissed him. The boy was moved. He could have stood against the blow, but he could not withstand a sister's kiss. He compared the provocation he had given her, with the return she had made, and the tears rolled down his cheeks. This affected the sister, and with her little handkerchief she wiped away his tears. But the sight of her kindness only made him cry the faster; he was completely subdued. Her teacher then told the children always to return a kiss for a blow, and they would never get any more blows. If men and women, families and communities and nations, would act upon this principle, this world would almost cease to be a vale of tears. "Nation would not lift up the sword against nation, neither would they learn war any more."—Youth's Cabinet.

Miscellaneous Department.

ART OF BEING HAPPY.—The happiness of families; consequently by a regular gradation the happiness of the whole world, depends much upon women.—Women ought, therefore, to consider this life as a short passage to another, which is both permanent, happy and glorious.

Let a husband be the partner of your joy and be you the sharer of his troubles. Consult him and confide in him. Upon all occasions do him honor. Treat him with kindness and tenderness. By softened dignity, united with a delicacy, endeavor to keep alive in his breast, a pure, a fervent affection, and use the power which this conduct will give you over his heart, to draw him to the sense and practice of that duty, which will not only render indissoluble, but will likewise perpetuate your union through ages of unceasing bliss.

To your children—to your friends—to your servants—to your neighbors—to the world—be affectionate—be faithful—be kind—be useful—be exemplary.—Then shall you please him whose pleasure is life, then shall you be happy, here and forever.

SNOW.

Flakes of snow examined by a microscope appear to be regular crystals. Ninety-six varieties have been noted. The air contained in snow prevents it from being transparent as is the case with other crystalized substance. Snow has been seen near the north pole of a red or a salmon color, and when falling has sometimes a luminous appearance. Accumulating in mountains, snow feeds the streams by gradually melting and running into the valleys. The air from snow-capped mountains cools the excessive heat of southern latitudes, while farther north the snow preserves vegetation from destructive frost.

THE FUTURE.—I would have you look well to your future course. I would have you early mark out such a path to follow in coming years, as will secure for you as much of happiness and prosperity, as it is possible for man to enjoy. Endeavor, then, as you meet with little trials and perplexities, or something to cross the fond, high feelings of the soul, to possess a spirit that will not easily yield to despondency—looking to the bright goal where success is sure to crown persevering merit and industry.

USEFUL EXAMPLE.—Read often the histories of those who have accomplished a large amount of labor in a short time, and been eminently useful to the world, and take a portion from their example. And be assured, when you come to be engaged in the more active business of life, you will bring with you a jewel more rare, than ever graced the diadem of a king. It will be your ornament and your strength, and joy and your glory, and your crown of rejoicing to the latest period of life.

Temperance Department.

From the New-York Evangelist.

WINE FOR COMMUNION.

WATERVILLE, Jan. 29th 1841.

Four or five years since I sent a communicatiion to the Evangelist, the object of which was to recommend the use of wine for the communion table made of the dried fruit of the vine, the best box raisins, instead of the alcoholic wine in common use. Since that period, unfermented wine has been advertised, and to some extent introduced. But it is difficult for most churches in the country to procure this; and probably nine-tenths of the churches still use the alcoholic wines for sale at the most convenient store. To these, many of those communicants who have adopted the tee-total principle, have conscientious objections, and some refuse to partake. Surely the time has come when alcoholic drinks should be banished from the Lord's table. No one who has read extracts from Bacchus, and Anti-Bacchus, published in the Evangelist, can suppose that alcoholic wine is essential to an acceptable observance of the Lord's Supper. Before the communion at the commencement of the present year, the Presbyterian church in this place held a meeting for the purpose of discussing the question, whether alcoholic wine should not be dispensed with; and wine made from dried grapes substituted.

The subject was fully and freely discussed. In addition to the objection to alcoholic wine, it was stated by one of our physicians, and by some of the most intelligent members of the church, that there was most satisfactory evidence that nineteen-twentieths of what was sold for wines was manufactured in the country: that these wines were made of diluted spirits sweetened, of sour cider and wine, into which was put sugar of lead, logwood, and other drugs some of which were of a poisonous and unhealthy nature. It was remarked, that were the materials of which most of the wine used in our churches were made, [illegible] at the communion table, and prepared in the presence of the communicants, they would be shocked at such a desecration of the ordinance, and would refuse to partake of the base mixture. It was further stated, that by using such liquors under the name of wine, our churches were encouraging their manufacture. After a full discussion, all the members of the church, male and female, who were in favor of substituting wine made from the dried "fruit of the vine," instead of that heretofore used, were requested to rise, when every member present rose.

Four pounds of the best box raisins were procured, and put in a jar with one gallon of water, and kept in a warm place for two or three days. The liquor was then strained, and poured off after settling.

This was found a delicious beverage. It was used at our communion, and so far as I know, every member was gratified with the change. I have been thus particular, hoping that it may have some influence to induce churches which use the [illegible] mixtures above named, to abandon them, and substitute this or some other unfermented wine.

There are now in this vicinity eight or ten churches, which use wine made from the raisin.—The labor of preparing this wine is little, and the expense no more than that of the alcoholic mixtures used.

Some have stigmatized this wine as raisin water. But every minister and private member who has to my knowledge spoken lightly of it, is an opposer of the tee-total principle.

There is certainly something suspicious about the man who can speak contemptuously of unfermented wine, made from the dried grape, and who makes no scruple in receiving an alcoholic liquor in which there is probably not a particle of "the fruit of the vine." Nothing can be procured by the church generally, that approximates nearer to the pure juice of the grape, than wine made of the dried grape. The grape loses little or nothing of its nutritive properties. The aqueous part only is lost. The same is true of inspissated wine. In using either, the loss is restored by adding a suitable quantity of water.

The Presbyterian church in this place is now thoroughly divorced from alcohol.—No one of its members either makes, vends, or uses it. No one furnishes materials for making it. It has now banished it from the communion table. May the Lord hasten the time when it shall be banished from every church in the land. Then the church will no longer stand in the way of the temperance reform, which in its glorious and triumphant march under the gracious Providence of God, seems destined to bless our country and world. JOHN FROST.

The following anecdote is from an old German paper, and thinking it too good to be lost, I have translated and send it to you.

THE UNFORTUNHTE ASCENSION.

The Prince of Wales traveled in Spain in 1723. To ridicule the protestant religion for his amusement, a comedy was got up, in which a sick Catholic a Protestant were represented. The former received all the sacraments, but the latter did not, and hence he was carried away by the devil. When the Catholic was to be raised up to heaven, the angels let him fall, and he broke his leg. The prince laughed heartily, and when asked the reason, he said, "I am not laughing at the accident, but at this, that the devils should take care of the Protestant, better than the angel did the Catholic."—Luth Obs.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Cabinet Ware-House.

D. R. BURDICK,

WOULD respectfully inform the inhabitants of this town and the surrounding conutry, that he still continues to carry on the Cabinet Business, in all its various branches, at his shop directly opposite the De Ruyter Institute. He is prepared to execute all kinds of work in his line with neatness, promptness, and dispatch, such as Bureaus, Secretaries, Lockers, Sofas, Book-cases, Bedsteds, Tables, Stands, &c. &c. Most kinds of Lumber and produce will be taken in exchange for work, and even CASH will not be refused.

All kinds of House, Carriage, and Sign Painting, Glazing, Bronzing, &c. &c. will be executed on short notice.

SADDLE, HARNESS & TRUNK-MAKING.

THE subscriber is much gratified with the generous patronage of his former customers, and with pleasure announces to them and the public that he still continues his business in all its various branches at his old stand in De Ruyter village, where he keeps constantly on hand and offers for sale, on the most reasonable terms, Saddles, Bridles, Martingals, Trunks, Valices, Traveling Bags, and Harness of every description; all of which are well manufactured of the very best materials.—Those who wish to avail themselves of the opportunity of buying cheap, can do so by calling on

B. G. STILLMAN.

N. B. Any quantity of good beach or maple wood taken in exchange for the above articles. B. G. S.

STRAYED.

CAME into the enclosure of the subscriber, about the 25th May, 1840, one RED YEARLING STEER, with white stripes running up across his face to the horns. Also, one RED YEARLING HEIFER, with a slanting crop off the left ear. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges, and take them away. 51w3

Truxton, (lot No. 35,) Feb. 10, 1841.

JACOB HOLMES.

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

GEO. W. SUTTON.

De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c. neatly executed at this office.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

[illegible]—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
[illegible]—[illegible] Maxson Greene, Samuel [illegible], P. M.
[illegible], P. M.
[illegible]—[illegible] Babcock, Silas Bailey, Alfin [illegible]
[illegible] Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Tru-[illegible]
[illegible] H. H. James H. Cochran.
[illegible] Saunders
[illegible] Joseph Potter.
[illegible], P. M.
[illegible] Maxson.
[illegible] Campbell, Samuel E. [illegible]
[illegible]—[illegible] A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M.
[illegible] Greene.
[illegible] P. Livermore, P. M., Still-[illegible]
[illegible]—Dennis Hardin, P. M.
[illegible]—Paul Stillman.
Newport—[illegible] Truman.
[illegible]—[illegible] Lewis.
[illegible] Crandall.
[illegible] Rogers
[illegible] Whitford
[illegible], St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
[illegible] G. Potter.
[illegible]—Abel Ward.
[illegible] Forks—[illegible] Stillman.
[illegible]—Oscar Williams.
[illegible] Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Hopkinton—Joseph Spicer, jun., P. M.
Westerly—Jonathan Maxson.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh—Dr. George Tomlinson
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydren, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jephtha F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Salem—Elias [illegible], Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISCONSIN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 2.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 54.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, MARCH 12, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

ESSAY ON HUMAN HAPPINESS.

Read before the Qæsitor Scientiæ Society of De Ruyter Institute.

BY DOCT. A. L. SAUNDERS.

NO. I.

From the earliest periods of recorded time, the prime object pursued by the human family has been happiness. All have sought this inestimable boon; and numerous and long have been the directions of philosophers and sages, in their respective periods, for obtaining this object of strong desire. Though the wisest, and with few exceptions, the best of mankind have essayed to instruct in the path to happiness; yet absurdity and visions mark their precepts, and we find them foundered from too daring a spirit of adventure amid rocks and shoals which laugh at the experience of the pilot.

For myself, I freely confess that my own hopes of success are but humble. I have done my best, however, to render the subject intelligible; and, if in the progress of it I should have betrayed dreams and absurdities, I have only to entreat that they may be visited with the candor which I have endeavored to extend to others, fully aware that the best arguments I have been able to submit are not fitted, if I may adopt the words of the eloquent Mr. Burke, "to abide the test of a captious controversy, but of a sober and even forgiving examination; that they are not armed at all points for battle, but dressed to visit those who are willing to give a peaceful entrance to truth."

There is one point, however, and the most important point we have contemplated, in which all the different schools seem to be agreed—I mean that of moral distinctions. Whatever may be the roads the different travelers may take, whether short or circuitous, smooth or entangled, they all, at last, find themselves, in this respect, arrived at the same central spot; and coincide in prescribing the same rules of duty, enjoining the same conduct, and with few exceptions, delivering the same determinations. No philosopher in the world has ever dreamed of confounding virtue with vice, or of writing a treatise on the benefit of committing crimes. Let us search where we will, we shall find there is something in human nature, when once emerged from the barbarism of savage life, that leads the learned & unlearned, to approve the one and condemn the other, even where their own conduct is involved in the condemnation.

And what is this something in human nature that conducts to so general a conclusion? A set or system of innate ideas and first principles, replies one class of philosophers; a moral instinct or impulse of common sense, replies another class; the intrinsic value and loveliness of virtue itself, replies a third; because the attributes of virtue are useful and agreeable, either to ourselves or to others, replies a fourth; because it conducts to human happiness, replies a fifth; and because it is the will of God, replies a sixth.

But while all thus agree in the conclusion, the question that leads to it still returns upon us: What proof have we of the existence of innate ideas or instinctive impulse? of the intrinsic beauty of virtue? that it is useful to us, productive of our happiness, or that it is the will of God, it should be cultivated? or, rather, What proof have we that the original position is true, and that there is a something in human nature, in general, which induces us to prefer virtue to vice?

The original position may be true, but the reasons urged in support of it are neither equally true, nor equally adequate, even where they are true. It is not true, that we have either innate ideas or moral instincts that impel us to a love of virtue, for, in such cases, the most savage tribes among mankind would be the most virtuous. Their innate ideas being but little disturbed by foreign ones, acquired by education and commerce with the world, and their moral instincts as little disturbed by foreign habits acquired from the same causes.

There has often arisen in the mind an unaccountable whim of supposing that a savage life, or state of nature, is the best and purest mode of human existence; and novelists, and poets, and sometimes even philosophers, have equally ranted upon the paucity of its wants, the simplicity of its pursuits, the solidity of its enjoyments, and the strength and constancy of its attachments. It is here we have been told that the human soul developes its proper energies, and displays itself in all its native benevolence and dignity; here all things belong equally to every one; the only law, is the will of the individual, the only feeling, a sublime unselfish philanthropy. This whim became epidemic in France about the beginning of the French Revolution, and was, in fact, the monster mania that led to it. And the contagion, not long after, began to show itself among many individuals in our own country, who, in the height of their phrenzy, labored earnestly to promote the same kind of trials among ourselves.—The history is fresh in the minds of every one who has looked into the affairs of modern times, and it is not necessary to pursue it. It is sufficient to observe, that it led in a short time to consequences so mischievous as to work their own cure, and to afford a living proof of the fact that barbarism, vice, and misery, are, by an immutable law of nature, inseparable associates.

Cast your eyes to whatever part of the globe, or to whatever history of mankind you please, and you will find it so without exception. Other animals have instincts that control their appetities, and lead them, insensibly, to the perfection of their respective kinds; that inculcate constancy, where constancy is necessary, and compel them to provide for, and take the charge of their young. Man has no such instincts whatever; he has reason, indeed, a more ennobling and efficient faculty, but it must be called forth, for it is almost a dormant principle in savage life. And hence, destitute of the one, and uninfluenced by the other, he is the perpetual slave of his ungoverned, and ungovernable passions, and is the only animal in the world that has been known to kill, or abandon its own offspring in a state of destitute and helpless infancy, and to murder its own kind for the purpose of feeding upon it: a fact too well established to be doubted; and which, instead of being confined to a single climate, or a single people, has, apparently, been common to all countries when under the influence of barbarism, which still exists among various tribes in Africa, South America, and Australia, and particularly among the islands of the South Sea; and which, according to the concurrent testimony of the best Greek and Roman writers, as we are informed, as Herodotus, Pliny, Strabo, and Pomponius Mela, was formerly to be traced among the Scythians, Tartars, and Massagatæ, of Asia, and the Lestrigons, of Europe. Strabo, indeed, ascribes the same practice even to the Irish, in his day, and Cealeius Rhodriginus, to their neighbors, of Scotland, while Thevenot asserts that while he was India, in 1665, human flesh was publicly sold in the market of Debca, about forty leagues from Baroche.

Agreeable to this view of the subject, are the following remarks of one of the most intelligent circumnavigators of later times, M. Von. Langsdorff, which he gives as the result of a personal and comprehensive survey of different climates and countries:—"There is no creature upon the earth, in any climate or zone, that bears auch an enmity to its own species as man. Let us only," says he, "cast our eyes over the history of the globe, in the most barren wastes, and in the most fertile countries, in the smallest islands, or on the most extensive continents, among the most savage, as well as the most cultivated nations, in short, in every part of the world where man exists, and we shall find him seeking to destroy his own species; he is everywhere, by nature, harsh and cruel. The observations we made upon these newly discovered islands, (the Polynesian,) which never, to the best of our knowledge, had any intercourse with civilized nations, and whose inhabitants may be considered as children of nature, and as still in their original condition, afford remarkable examples in confirmation of these assertions. The sweet and tender feelings of affection, and love, of friendship and attachment, even that of parents towards their children, and of children towards their parents, I have, alas! very seldom found among a rude and uncivilized people. The African hordes not only bring their prisoners taken in war, but their own children to market. The same thing is done by the Kergis, the Kalmucks, and many other inhabitants of the north-western coast of America; and here at Nakatiwa, (one of the islands of the South Sea,) a woman would very readily have given a child at her breast, which had been asked by us in jest, in exchange for a piece of iron."[*]

And he might have added that it was the exposure of British, or rather, perhaps, Saxon children, for slaves in the public market at Rome, as late as the close of the 6th century, expressly sold for this purpose by their own parents, at their own homes, that first induced Pope Gregory I. to plan a mission for the conversion of our barbarous forefathers, in Britain, to christianity, from the horror he felt at their conduct, and the pity with which he beheld the little outcasts.

In the view of history, therefore, as well as in the language of Scripture, man, in a state of nature, is prone to evil, and his heart is desperately wicked, or, as it is given most exquisitely in the poetical language of the Psalmist—"Behold the dark places of earth are full of the inhabitants of cruelty."[*]

The sentiment, then, that exists in human nature in favor of virtue, or a virtuous conduct, though general, is not universal, and consequently, cannot proceed from any original instincts, or innate ideas.—What, then, are the other causes to which it has been ascribed by moralists? The intrinsic loveliness of virtue itself: Because it conducts to human happiness. Because it is the will of God.

Now, all these answers, however diversified, may be resolved into two general ideas—human happiness, and the will of God; for we can only regard that as lovely, or an object of love which contributes to our happiness; and we can only regard that as useful or agreeable, which conduces to the same end.

The subject, therefore, becomes considerably narrowed, and the only substantial replies that appear capable of being given to the question, What is the source of this general sentiment among mankind in favor of virtue? are, because it is the path to happiness, or because it is the will of God. But, may not the subject be still farther narrowed, and both these replies be resolved into one identical proposition? may not human happiness and the will of God be the same thing? If so, we shall then only have to inquire further, whether virtue be the real path to human happiness? for if it be, then, necessarily, he who pursues that path obeys the will of God.

Both questions are important; the first, however, may be settled in a few words. To discover the will of an intelligent agent, nothing more is necessary than to examine the general drift or tendency of his contrivance, so far as we are able to make it out. Taking it, then, for granted that the whole world is the work of an intelligent agent, does it exhibit proof of having been devised for the general happiness of man?—for his general misery—or for neither? It cannot have been devised for neither, because that would be to relinquish the very foundation of our present position, and to deny that the world exhibits contrivance, or has been formed by an intelligent agent. Is, then, the world with its general furniture, is the frame of man itself caculated to promote man's happiness, or his misery? It is impossible to answer this question more strongly than in the words of Paley.—"Contrivance proves design, and the predominant tendency of the contrivance indicates the disposition of the designer. The world abounds with contrivance, and all the contrivances with which we are acquainted, are directed to beneficial purposes. Evil, no doubt, exists; but it is never that we can perceive the object of contrivance. Teeth are contrived to eat with, not to ache; their aching, now and then, is incidental to the contrivance, perhaps, inseparable from it, or even if you will, let it be called a defect in the contrivance; but it is not the object of it. This is a distinction which well deserves to be attended to. In describing implements of husbandry, you would hardly say of the sickle, that it is made to cut the reapers's fingers, though from the construction of the instrument, and manner of using it, this mischief often happens. But if you had occasion to describe instruments of torture, or execution, this engine you would say, is to extend the sinews; this, to dislocate the joints; this, to break the bones; this, to scorch the soles of the feet. Here, pain and misery are the very objects of the contrivance. Now, nothing of this sort is to be found in the works of nature. We never discover a train of contrivance to bring about an evil purpose. No anatomist ever discovered a system of organization calculated to produce pain and disease, or in explaining the parts of the human body, ever said, This is to irritate, this to inflame, this duct is to convey the gravel to the kidneys, this gland to secrete the humor that forms the gout. If, by chance, he comes at a part of which he knows not the use, the most he can say is, that it is useless. No one suspects that it is put there to incommode, to annoy, or to torment. Since, then, God has called forth his consummate wisdom to contrive and provide for our happiness, and the world appears to have been constituted with this design at first, so long as this constitution is upholden by him, we must, in reason, suppose the same design to continue."[*]

A thousand other examples might be added, but are unnecessary. The conclusion is clear, and it is most important; we obtain from the light of nature, or the exercise of our own reason, irresistible proofs of the divine benevolence, irresistible proofs that God has made man to make him happy, or, in other words, that human happiness is the will of God.

---

[*] Von Langsdorff's Voyages and Travels, chap. vii. p. 139.

[*] Psalms, lxxiv. 20.

[*] Paleys Moral and Political Philosophy, vol. 1. chap. v.

Religious Department.

From the Gospel Messenger.

CAUTION IN JUDGING.

The example of Christ in this, as in every concern of life, should be continually presented to our minds, and call forth our strongest powers of imitation. And there is no particular in which we can follow him, more to the advantage of our souls and the benefit of society, than in this, of cautiously pronouncing judgment upon others. It is here that the Christian cause is constantly in danger. Those furious passions that swell the proud bosoms of men, prompt them to hurl those arrows of calumny and detraction, which are continually wounding the tranquility of society, and destroying the sweets of domestic peace. What, exclaims the unbeliever, can there be in the religion of Christians, when the very doctrines they so highly extol, the very precepts which they so perpetually inculcate, fail in producing any more mildness and peace than the strange rites of pagan superstition? What, he continues, shall I think of a system, however highly admired, that fails to meliorate the heart, and render men more tender of each other? We must confess with shame, that there is too much ground for these remarks, and we must to a greater or less degree be answerable for them. Till we can show in our lives the superior excellence of our religion, all that we can say will never be admitted as sufficient testimony in its favor. We may defend its truth in such a way as to silence infidelity; we may hold up to view its exalted doctrines; we may explain and enforce its precepts, as comprising the most perfect code of morals that ever made its appearance. After all, we have done nothing, if our conversation in the world be not improved. Till it can in some measure be said, as in the apostolic age, "See how these Christians love one another, your faith is vain, and our preaching is also vain." By far the greater part of the tumults and vexations which convulse the world, which throw states and empires into anarchy and bloodshed, which involve the Church in heresy and schism, and families in broils and contentions, must be ascribed to that unhappy inclination of men to depart from their own sphere of action, from a careful watchfulness of themselves, to an undue investigation of the conduct of others.

Let every Christian pray for the grace of God to assist him in endeavoring to follow the example of his divine, in cautiously pronouncing judgment upon his fellowmen. There are, indeed, iniquities against which our voices should be raised—in the sight of which, silence would be criminal—but the utmost circumspection should be observed in attaching guilt to the character of any individual. Are you disposed to censure and condemn, be certain that the faults of which you disapprove, do really exist. Slander, busy with her thousand tongues, may have been engaged in the fabrication of a tale, designed to destroy the peace of the unsuspecting and the innocent. Some malignant spirit may have been conjuring up and concocting baneful ingredients, to poison reputation, and consign the unoffending to infamy and ruin.—Before you give currency to the base report, would you not be prudent, would it not be the part of a Christian to reflect, that possibly you were going to seal the misery of some helpless victim? By even listening, so far as your influence may extend, you may strengthen falsehood, and render the attainment of truth still more difficult. It is not to be expected that we should approve of all the actions we observe, but the motives which may have produced them, and the circumstances attending them, are perhaps of the best character, and should therefore be very tenderly treated. Till we can discover what these motives and circumstances may have been, till we perceive the springs which may have caused the conduct we condemn, we are totally incompetent to judge. Some extenuating particular of which we have not heard, would perhaps entirely alter our opinions. Does not justice, then, oblige us to suspend our opinion till we shall be able, according to a common and very useful proverb, "to hear both sides and then judge"?

Are you inclined to pronounce the severity of judgment, consider whether you have not the same faults, or even greater defects, than those that you condemn. Under the proper influence of humility, the real christian, while lamenting the errors of his neighbor, will be restrained in his judgment by the thought of those turbulent passions, which, in spite of his exertions, will excite commotion in his own bosom. Convinced of the frailty of his nature, and tender of the reputation of his fellow-man, he will rather say with the wise, "take no heed unto all words that are spoken." And, considering for a moment the errors and imperfections which attend us, how proper is this reflection. Can we, bearing in mind, as we ever should, our proneness to sin and error, be hasty in uttering anathemas not only against the guilty, but frequently the innocent? Are there not stains and blemishes in our characters, which if magnified by the distorted lens of jealousy and hate would carry us down to infamy and ruin? Have we not sometimes committed those offenses of which, when seen in other persons, we have expressed decided disapprobation? Arraigning ourselves at the bar of conscience, have we not felt a full conviction that if we were censured as severely as we censure, great injustice would be done us? Can we not discover many particulars wherein we have violated some of our own nice and just rules? Can we call to mind no instance when we have tossed by the tempest of passion? Has no reader of this, in a moment of inadvertency, lost sight of those great principles which adorn the religion he professes? Erring sometimes in judgment, has he not found that the results of his own actions, entirely contrary from his expectations, have been productive of unhappy consequences? In cases like these, would he be willing that the purity of his motives should be denied? Would he not view it as a cruel and unjust attempt to place him in an unfavorable light? Are there no transactions of his life, which, if in his power, he would not recal? for which he would desire to atone by a life of subsequent sorrow and amendment? And would he not consider it unreasonable and ungenerous in his neighbors, by keeping alive the recollection of an error, and by pronouncing the heavy judgments of God, endeavor to prevent the effect of his repentance? And who will deny to any of the human race that indulgence which we claim as a natural and religious right?

What was the conduct of our Lord towards the woman mentioned in the Gospel? Wicked as she was, he even suspended his decision, under the hope that her after life would make amends for her guilt, and prove to the world the advantage of cautious and kind judgment. He did not call his disciples to scrutinize her conduct, and raise their vanity by comparing her with themselves. He did not proceed to investigate her character, and those of her accusers, but simply told them, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." Should we not then, before sentencing characters to infamy, pause and address our hearts in this very language, if thou art without sin, first cast a stone at the offender? Well would it be for the happiness of mankind, and useful to our souls, were we ever to bear in mind the apostolic assurance, "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in the thing that he alloweth." Reader, consider this address of St. Paul as now delivering from his holy lips to you, and if you have any just sense of your own sinfulness, you will not fail to improve in your judgment of others; if you have any idea that there may be spots and wrinkles in your own reputation, you will be careful how you attach them to your neighbors. "Thou therefore who teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? Thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal? Thou that sayest, a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? Thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege? Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonorests thou God?" Thou who beholdest a mote in thy brother's eye, canst thou not perceive the beam in thine own?

G. M.

REFORMED RELIGION NOT A NOVELTY.

If it can be proved a day younger than Christ and his apostles, away with it from the earth as a pernicious delusion. It was no invention of Luther and his fellow-laborers. The Roman Catholics indeed would taunt us with the recent origin of our faith, as though it had sprung up in the sixteenth century, whilst their own is hallowed by all the suffrages of antiquity. There was never a more insolent taunt, and never a more unwarrented boast. Ours, as we have already intimated, is the old religion, theirs is the new. Ours is, at least, as old as the Bible; for it has not a single tenet which we do not prove from the Bible.—But theirs must be younger than the Bible; for where in the Bible is the Bible said to be insufficient, and where is the pope declared supreme and infallible, and where is sin divided into moral and venial, and where are the clergy forbidden to marry, and where are the images directed to be worshiped, and where is the church entrusted with the granting indulgences?—There is not a single article of Protestantism, in support of which we are not ready to appeal to the canonical scriptures, and the writings of the early fathers; there are a hundred of popery, which papists themselves are too wise to rest on such an appeal. They may ask us, where was your religion before Luther? and our reply is, in the word of the living God, in the creeds of apostles and apostolical men, and in the practice of those witnesses, who, in every age, refused to participate in the abominations of Rome. But we ask them, where was your religion before such or such an aspiring pontiff put forth such or such a doctrine or claim? We challenge the documents. We fix the doctrine of the papal supremacy to the sixth century—let them prove it older if they can; of seven sacraments to the twelfth century—let them prove it older if they can; of transubstantiation to the thirteenth century—let them prove it older if they can. And yet Protestantism is the spurious manufacture of a late date, whilst popery is the veneral transmission from the first year of the Christian era. Yes, all that is true in popery has been transmitted from the earliest days of Christianity; but all that is true in popery makes up Protestantism. Popery is Protestantism mutilated, disguised, deformed, and overlaid with corrupt additions; Protestantism is popery restored to its first purity, cleansed from false glosses, and freed from the rubbish accumulated on it by ages of superstition.

We recur then to our former assertion, and declare that the Protestantism for which we contend as irreconcilable with popery, is nothing else but the Protestantism of Christ and his apostles. And the Protestantism of Christ and his apostles can have no peace with popery. We would, if possible, "live peaceably with all men," and, therefore with the Roman church. But it is not possible. We can not surrender justification by faith. We can not multiply mediators. We can not bow down before images. We can not believe bread to be flesh, and wine to be blood. We can not ascribe to a fallible man the unerring wisdom of the one living God. And therefore, it is not possible. No; if popery regain its lost power, let it not be through our giving it the right hand of fellowship. Let it wrest back ecclesiastical endowments; let it rekindle the fires of persecution; let it be legislated into might by time-serving concessions: but never let us be silent, as though we thought popery to be true; never supine, as though we counted its errors unimportant.—Rev. H. Melville.

Minister's Department.

THE TWO MINISTERS.

In a certain church, where every visitant can unite with every resident in saying, "the lines are fallen in pleasant places, they have a goodly heritage," the following incidents occurred while the writer was a pastor in the vicinity.

The parish was favored for a short time with the services of a young man of unusual preaching talents. He united more of the dignity and gracefulness of a public speaker, than are often found blended in one man. Truth, argument, tenderness, in very impressive proportions combined in the matter and manner of his pulpit performances. Listening crowds hung upon his lips, and the hour which he spent in his sermon seemed but a few moments.—But he was not suffered to continue by reason of death. It was difficult to find a successor. After many attempts the people finally united in one of the excellent of the earth, and he entered upon his work in that beautiful garden. He preached the precious gospel in its purity, "not with excellency of speech and wisdom," but with a heavenly simplicity. In the devotional exercises of the sanctuary he excelled.—Such intimate fellowship with the Father and the Son did he seem to have, that his prayers were marked by every hearer as coming from a heart accustomed to pray, and to take large and nearer views of God's truth, and affecting views of human wants and wo.

He had an unusual qualification for performing a pastor's duties in the sick room and among the mourners of his flock. There was such intimate acquaintance with all the workings of the human heart, such ready access to Him who took our infirmities, and is afflicted in all the afflictions of His people, and such ability to comfort others with the comfort wherewith he had himself been comforted of God, that his visits on the occasions seemed almost more than human. But there was nothing startling in his preaching. It fell like the dew over the congregation, rather than like a storm of hail. It filled no newspaper paragraph. There was nothing to make the people wonder, and run and cry huzza.—A few persons in his congregation, not perhaps remarkably overstocked with discernment or grace, were often abroad and heard some of the great preachers; and these began to speak of not being edified with the preaching of their pastor. He is a good man, but he does not build us up. He does not draw people after him like Mr. ——. This leaven spread and worked its usual effects. The pastor was translated to another field.

A successor was sought by the people, and there was a determination to have a great man, and a great preacher at any rate. It is not very difficult to find such, in the estimation of their friends, or in their own, and so one was soon introduced. "He is a great preacher," was industriously circulated. "Do come and hear our minister, we have got the right one now," was said while he was a candidate. A flourish of trumpets was made at his settlement, and he began on the top of the wave. Not many months had passed before it was ascertained that, after all, there was not more instruction given in this preaching, bordering upon the profound obscure, than in the transparent thoughts of the minister who had left them, and was eminently happy and useful in another field. "We should like to hear our former minister pray," spontaneously escaped from the lips of many a member of the congregation. And especially when affliction came to their families, they sighed for the visits of him who had so greatly endeared himself to mourners.

God gave them their request, but sent leanness to their souls. They show it, they feel it, they acknowledge it.—Pastor's Journal.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, March 12, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

POSITION IN PUBLIC PRAYER.

We have long regretted that a position in prayer, so irreverent as sitting, should obtain the sanction of evangelical christians. This posture betokens as much indifference and disrespect, as any one could, which would not be indecorous. It indicates no humility, no reverence, no anxiety. 'Tis true that devotional feelings may possess the heart of the one who sits in prayer; but if proper feelings possess the one who prays, he will find that a kneeling posture is more congenial to his feelings. If a congregation may sit while the minister prays, then, with equal propriety, the minister may also sit and pray. Every one of us would, doubtless, have our pious feelings greatly disturbed by such a scene. If it is not proper, then, for one to sit and pray, it is not proper for one to sit who joins in the prayer. Such a spectacle has but once greeted our eyes, and the benefit we might otherwise have derived from the prayer, was lost, by reason of the irreverance manifested by the posture. The posture, abstractly, is nothing; but when we associate with it the idea of coming as petitioners before the Great Jehovah, we at once feel that a posture indicative of our helplessness, and the disparity between us and the living God, is the most proper to be taken. In the different grades of society a deference is required by some, and given by others, which professed worshipers fail to exhibit to God. It is a most unpleasant task to the minister of the gospel to be, professedly, the voice of the congregation in prayer to God, when two-thirds or more of that number are manifesting indifference to nothing else present, but the prayer which is offered for them. Prayers, in order to be heard and answered, must exhibit the evidence of sincerity.—Can a position indicative of the utmost indifference give, even to men, the appearance of sincerity? The eyes of God are more piercing in discernment than the eyes of men. They must also be reverent, both in the terms used, and the manner of their use. Language that brings God upon a level with men, or detracts aught from his perfections, is altogether unsuitable. This, accompanied with irreverence in posture, must render such an act odious in the sight of God.

It can not be denied that a kneeling posture is more scriptural, and is the most suitable in which to address the Divine Being, exhibiting at the same time, reverence, humility, penitence, helplessness, and entire dependence on God. We are aware that a variety of objections are started to this plea. But we reply, our duty to God must have preference to our personal convenience. If convenience is allowed to govern in this matter, it may in others of equal importance. And if a system of convenience is adopted, it is not difficult to have it supersede divine instruction.

The custom of kneeling has been adopted by our churches in Va. and Ohio. From the time that we first bowed ourselves with them in the holy convocation, we have felt that an unusual interest was added to the occasion. The posture, besides being reverent, is such as to exclude all external observation; thus fitting the mind for a more undivided and richer communion with God.

A standing posture, which is preferable to the sitting, by exhibiting more reverence, is tiresome, and also exposes the person to more difficulty in excluding all but God from his observation and thoughts. Houses of worship may, without much inconvenience, be kept clean enough to kneel in. We are, therefore, prepared to advocate the practice of kneeling in public prayer, by both preachers and people.

The same reasons exist for kneeling in social and family circles. How endearing that family must appear, where all its members bow together around the altars of God. We give below an extract of a letter on this subject, from a long tried friend of the Redeemer. We trust it will receive due attention.

—

A few years ago, I recollect to have seen in the Protestant Sentinel, a short sketch on the practice of religious communities sitting in the time of public prayer. It was, I think, too short, and touched the subject rather lightly; although good as far as it went, I have been waiting and wish the subject taken up by some one who was able to do it justice, but, so far, have waited in vain; and although conscious of my inability, I would drop a remark or two on the subject.

1. It evidently appears to be a very modern invention of men, calculated to indulge the flesh; encourage laziness and indolence; and to exert an influence on the young and rising generation, which has a very bad tendency on the minds of the youth, in leading them to pay little or no attention to the exercises that are going on, which they are but too naturally prone to do. Now, is not this very wrong?

2. It has an irreverent appearance; and says in substance, at least mentally, I do not join in your prayers. Now, does this look like union in worship? and is not union in the best of cases desirable—necessary—and important? and how can a pious person have a face to reprove young people for inattention in meeting, when they themselves set such apparent examples before their eyes?

3. And, above all, it is unscriptural, and pointedly contrary to what we read in the scriptures respecting the practice of the saints and primitive christians, and the example of Christ himself; and we do not read in the bible of any such custom, and are we not under the most solemn obligations to follow their examples, and to have our conduct, even our outward conduct to correspond, as far as possible, with that of primitive christians; you will say yes.

Finally, I might state many more reasons why the practice ought to be discountenanced, and banished from all religious communities who pretend to take the bible for their guide, or have any regard for the solemn worship of God. But a word to the wise is sufficient. We all know that it is a practice that has been recently invented, and introduced into the churches, for it was not so in primitive times, and there is no more to justify it in the bible than there is to justify the first-day Sabbath.

I know it is plead by some, and palliated by many, on the poor flimsy argument that it is of no consequence what position the body is in if the heart is right. And, again, that it is inconvenient, and rising up makes too much noise, &c. What strange reasoning, evidently to indulge the flesh and encourage laziness! I would ask, in the name of common sense, what evidence has any one for himself or to others that his heart is right when his conduct, which, if sincere, must flow from the heart, is unscriptural, irreverent, and consequently, wrong and sinful? as to convenience, would any enlightened person dare to say that it is inconvenient to them to do their duty? will it not, then, follow, of course, that it will be inconvenient with Christ to save them?

As to noise, this is a very singular excuse; inasmuch as there is no necessity of making much noise by just rising up, and if it should make a little stir, what is the harm? Vocal prayer makes some noise, and with some, a great deal; shall we, therefore, discontinue vocal prayer? I would, for myself, be ashamed to use such arguments.

My Brethren, this is something solemn; consider it seriously, and may the Lord give you a right understanding in all things.

A SUBSCRIBER TO THE REGISTER.
February, 20th, 1841.

The Christian Index, of Penfield, Ga., contains an advertisement of the sale of certain perishable property, and the hiring of certain negroes. From this, and several editorials, we have concluded that Br. Stokes is disposed to make a slave-holding religion, the religion of the Index. If the religion of Jesus Christ is of this character, we can not object to it. But we apprehend that that system that makes merchandise of souls, is opposed to the principles inculcated by the Lord Jesus Christ. The essence of the holy religion he taught, is love. First, to love God with all the heart, etc., and his neighbor as himself.—Now, will Br. Stokes show us that slavery is in conformity to this principle? Will he bow his neck and become himself the slave?

An Apostle says, "Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father, is this:—to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world." Does Br. Stokes visit the worse than widows and fatherless slaves of his state with the visits of the Gospel, and offer to them its blessed consolations? Does his "Index" point them to the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world"? And does he say to his readers who hold property in souls, put away the evil of your doings, and render to all their dues? For this lack, we fear that he fails of announcing as a faithful watchman on the walls of Zion the approach of an enemy. Alas, for those that teach doctrines contrary to the gospel!

Br. Stokes suggested a few weeks since, that some one should write a book on Abolitionism, and some other isms. We wish to inform him, that upon the subject of Slavery, or Abolitionism, we, in connection with many thousands more, make use of that book which is given by inspiration of God, as our text book; and he will find by examining this, (for he has it too,) that the whole subject is here embodied and explained. And if he will allow this to give tone to his feelings, and direction to his "Index," we shall expect to see Slavery exposed as being opposed to the gospel.—During our residence at the South, we learned that with slave-holders, Abolitionism and fanaticism were synonymous. Perhaps our friend has fallen into the same error. If so, we trust the explanation we have made, that the bible is the standard Abolition work, will correct his views, and he will not see the necessity for writing another.

News of the Day.

INAUGRAL ADDRESS
OF
PRESIDENT HARRISON.

From the National Intelligencer Extra.

Called from a retirement which I had supposed was to continue for the residue of my life, to fill the Chief Executive Office of this great and free nation, I appear before you fellow-citizens, to take the oaths which the Constitution prescribes, as a necessary qualification for the performance of its duties. And in obedince to a custom coeval with our Government, and what I believe to be your expectations, I present to you a summary of the principles which will govern me in the discharge of the duties which I shall be called upon to perform.

It was the remark of a Roman Consul, in an early period of that celebrated Republic, that a most striking contrast was observable in the conduct of candidates for offices of power and trust before and after obtaining them—they seldom carrying out, in the latter case, the pledges and promises made in the former. However much the world may have improved, in many respects, in the lapse of upward of two thousand years since the remark was made by the virtuous and indignant Roman, I fear that a strict examination of the annals of some of the modern elective governments would develope similar instances of violated confidence.

Although the fiat of the people has gone forth, proclaiming me the Chief Magistrate of this glorious Union, nothing upon their part remaining to be done, it may be thought that a motive may exist to keep up the delusion under which they may be supposed to have acted in relation to my principles and opinions; and perhaps there may be some in this assembly who have come here either prepared to condemn those I shall now deliver, or, approving them, to doubt the sincerity with which they are uttered. But the lapse of a few months will confirm or dispel their fears. The outline of principles to govern, and measures to be adopted, by an Administration not yet begun, will soon be exchanged for immutable history, and I shall stand, either exhonorated by my countrymen, or classed with the mass of those who promised that they might deceive and flattered with the intention to betray. However strong may be my present purpose to realize the expectations of a magnanimous and confiding people, I too well understand the infirmities of human nature and the dangerous temptations to which I shall be exposed, from the magnitude of the power which it has been the pleasure of the people to commit to my hands, not to place my chief confidence upon the aid of that Almighty power which has hitherto protected me and enabled me to bring to favorable issues other important but still greatly inferrior trusts, heretofore confided to me by my country.

The broad foundation upon which our Constitution rests being the People—a breath of theirs having made, as a breath can unmake, change or modify it—it can be assigned to none of the great divisions of Government, but to the Democracy. If such is its theory, those who are called upon to administer it must recognize, as its leading principle, the duty of shaping their measures so as to produce the greatest good to the greatest number. But with these broad admissions, if we would compare the sovereignty acknowledged to exist in the mass of our People, with the power claimed by other sovereignties even by those which have been considered most purely democratic, we shall find a most essential difference. All others lay claim to power limited by their own will. The majority of our citizens on the contrary, possess a sovereignty with the amount of power precisely equal to that which has been granted to them by the parties to the national compact, and nothing beyond. We admit of no Government by divine right. Believing that so far as power is concerned, the Beneficent Creator has made no distinction amongst men, that all are upon an equality, and that the only legitimate right to govern is an express grant of power from the governor.

The constitution of the United States is the instrument containing this grant of power to the several departments composing the Government. On an examination of that instrument it will be found to contain declarations of power granted and of power withheld. The latter is also susceptible of division, into power which the majority had the right to grant, but which they did not think proper to intrust to their agents, and that which they could not have granted, not being possessed by themselves. In other words there are certain rights possessed by each individual American citizen, which in his compact with the others, he has never surrendered. Some of them, indeed, he is unable to surrender being in the language of our system unalienable. The boasted privilege of a Roman citizen was to him a shield only against a petty provincial ruler, while the broad democrat of Athens could console himself under a sentence of death, for a supposed violation of the national faith, which no one understood, and which at times was the subject of the mocker of all, or the banishment from his home his family and his country, with or without an alleged cause, that it was the act, not of a single tyrant or hated aristocracy, but his assembled countrymen.

Far different is the power of our sovereignty. It can interfere with no one's faith, prescribe forms of worship for no one's observance, inflict no punishment but after well ascertained guilt, the result of investigation under rules prescribed by the constitution itself. These precious privileges, and those scarcely less important, of giving expression to his thoughts and opinions, either by writing or speaking, unrestrained but by the liability of injury to others, and that of a full participation in all the advantages which flow from the Government, the acknowledged property of all, the American citizen derives from no charter granted by his fellowman. He claims them because he is himself a man fashioned by the same Almighty hand as the rest of his species, and entitled to a full share of the blessings with which he has endowed them.

Notwithstanding the limited sovereignty possessed by the People of the United States and the restricted grant of power to the Government which they have adopted, enough has been given to accomplish all the objects for which it was created. It has been found powerful in war, and, hitherto, justice has been administered, an intimate union effected, domestic tranquility preserved, and personal liberty secured to the citizens. As was to be expected, however, from the defective language and the necessarily sententious manner in which the Constitution is written doubts have arisen as to the amount of power which it has actually granted or was intended to grant. This is more particularly the case in relation to that part of the instrument which treats of the Legislative branch. And not only as regards the exercise of powers claimed under a general clause, giving that body the authority to pass all laws necessary to carry into effect the specified powers, but in relation to the latter also. It is, however, consolatory to reflect that most of the instances of alleged departure from the letter or spirit of the Constitution, have ultimately received the sanction of a majority of the people. And the fact, that many of our statesmen, most distinguished for talent and patriotism, have been at one time or other of their political career, on both sides of each of the most warmly disputed questions, forces upon us the inference that the errors, if errors there were, attributable to the intrinsic difficulty, in many instances, of ascertaining the intentions of the framers of the Constitution, rather than the influence of any sinister or unpatriotic motive.

But the great danger to our institutions does not appear to me to be in a usurpation by the government of power not granted by the people, but by the accumulation in one of the departments, of that which was assigned to others. Limited as are the powers which have been granted, still enough have been granted to constitute a despotism, if concentrated in one of the departments. This danger is greatly heightened as it has been always observable, that men are less jealous of encroachments of one Department upon another, than upon their own received rights.

When the Constitution of the United States first came from the hands of the Convention that formed it, many of the sternest republicans of the day were alarmed at the extent of the power which had been granted to the Federal Government, and more particularly of that portion which had been assigned to the Executive branch. There were in it features which appeared not to be in harmony with their ideas of a simple representative Democracy, or Republic. And knowing the tendency of power to increase itself, particularly when exercised by a single individual, predictions were made that, at no very remote period, the Government would terminate in virtual monarchy. It would not become me to say that the fears of these patriots have been already realized. But, as I sincerely believe that the tendency of measures, and of men's opinions, for some years past, has been in that directon. It is, I conceive, strictly proper that I should take this occasion to repeat the assurances I have heretofore given of my determination to arrest the progress of that tendency, if it really exists, and restore the Government to its pristine health and vigor, as far as this can be effected by any legitimate exercise of the power placed in my hands.

I proceed to state, in as summary a manner as I can, my opinion of the sources of the evils which have been so extensively complained of, and the correctives which may be applied, Some of the former are unquestionably to be found in the defects of the Constitution; others, in my judgment, are attributable to a misconstruction of some of its provisions. Of the former is the eligibility of the same individual to a second term of the Presidency. The sagacious mind of Mr. Jefferson early saw and lamented this error, and attempts have been made, hitherto without success to apply the amendatory power of the State to its correction.

As, however, one mode of correction is in the power of every President, and consequently in mine, it would be useless, and perhaps invidious, to enumerate the evils of which, in the opinion of many of our fellow-citizens, this error of the sages who framed the Constitution may have been the source, and the bitter fruits which we are still to gather from it, if it continues to disfigure our system. It may be observed, however, as a general remark, that Republics can commit no greater error than to adopt or continue any feature in their system of government which may be calculated to create or increase the love of power, in the bosoms of those to whom necessity obliges them to commit the management of their affairs. And, surely, nothing is more likely to produce such a state of mind than the long continuance of an office of high trust. Nothing can be more corrupting, nothing more destructive of all those noble feelings which belong to the character of a devoted republican patriot. When the corrupting passion once takes possession of the human mind, like the love of gold, it becomes insatiable. It is the never-dying worm in his bosom, grows with his growth, and strengthens with the declining years of his victim. If this is true, it is the part of wisdom for a republic to limit the service of that officer, at least, to whom she has entrusted the management of her foreign relations, the execution of her laws, and the command of her armies and navies, to a period so short as to prevent his forgetting that he is the accountable agent, not the principal—the servant, not the master. Until an ammendment of the Constitution can be effected, public opinion may secure the desired object. I gave my aid to it, by renewing the pledge heretofore given, that, under no circumstances will I consent to serve a second term.

But if there is danger to public liberty from the acknowledged defects of the Constitution, in the want of limit to the continuance of the Executive power in the same hands, there is, I apprehend, not much less from a misconstruction of that instrument, as it regards the powers actually given. I cannot conceive that by a fair construction, any or either of its provision would be found to constitute the President a part of the legislative power. It cannot be claimed from the power to recommend, since, although enjoined as a duty upon him, it is a privilege which he holds, with every other citizen. And although there may be something more of confidence in the propriety of the measures recommended in the one case than in the other, in the obligations of ultimate decision there can be no difference. In the language of the Constitution, "all the legislative powers" which it grants "are vested in the Congress of the United States." It would be a solecism in language to say that any portion of these is not included in the whole.

It may be said, indeed, that the Constitution has given to the Executive the power to annul the acts of the legislative body by refusing to them his assent. So a similar power has necessarily resulted from that instrument to the Judiciary; and yet the Judiciary forms no part of the Legislature. There is, it is true, this difference between these grants of power; the Executive can put his negative upon the acts of the Legislature for other causes than that of want of conformity to the constitution, whilst the Judiciary can only declare void those which violate that instrument. But the decision of the Judiciary is final in such a case, whereas, in every instance where the veto of the Executive is applied, it may be overcome by a vote of two-thirds of both Houses of Congress. The negative upon the acts of the Legislative, by the Executive authority, and that in the hands of one individual, would seem to be an incongruity in our system. Like some others of a similar character, however, it appears to be highly expedient, and if used only with the forbearance, and in in the spirit which was intended by its authors, it may be productive of great good, and be found one of the best safe-guards to the Union.

At the period of the formation of the constitution, the principle does not appear to have enjoyed much favor in the state governments. It existed but in two, and in one of these there was a plural Executive. If we would search for the motives which operated upon the purely patriotic and enlightened assembly which framed the constitution, for the adoption of a provision so apparently repugnant to the leading democratic principle, that the majority should govern, we must reject the idea that they anticipated from any benefit to the ordinary course of legislation. They knew to well the high degree of intelligence which existed among the people, and the enlightened character of the state Legislatures, not to have the fullest confidence that the two bodies elected by them would be worthy representatives of such constituents, and, of course, that they would require no aid in conceiving and maturing the measures which the circumstances of the country might require. And it is preposterous to suppose that a thought could for a moment have been entertained that the President, placed at the capitol in the centre of the country, could better understand the wants and wishes of the people than their own immediate representatives, who spend a part of every year among them, living with them, and bound to them by the triple tie of interest, duty and affection.

To assist or control Congress then in its ordinary legislation, could not, I conceive, have been the motive for conferring the veto power on the president. This argument acquires additional force from the fact of its never having been thus used by the first six Presidents,—and two of them were members of the convention, one presiding over its deliberations, and the other having a larger share in consummating the labors of that august body than any other person. But if bills were never returned to Congress by either of the Presidents above referred to, upon the ground of their being inexpedient, or not as well adapted as they might be to the wants of the people, the veto was applied upon that of want of conformity to the constitution, or because errors had been committed from a too hasty enactment.

There is another ground for the adoption of the veto principle, which had probably more influence in recommending it to the convention than any other; I refer to the security which it gives to the just and equitable action of the Legislature upon all parts of the Union. It could not but have occurred to the convention that in a country so extensive, embracing so great a variety of soil and climate and consequently of products, and which, from the same causes, must ever exhibit a great difference in the amount of the population of its various sections, calling for a great diversity in the employments of the people, that the legislation, of the majority might not always justly regard the rights and interests of the minority. And that acts of this character might be passed, under an express grant by the words of the Constitution, and, therefore, not within the competency of the judiciary to declare void.

That however enlightened and patriotic they might suppose, from past experience, the members of Congress might be, and however largely partaking in the general, of the liberal feelings of the people, it was impossible to expect that bodies so constituted should not sometimes be controlled by local interests and sectional feelings. It was proper, therefore, to provide some umpire from whose situation and mode of appointment more independence and freedom from such influences might be expected. Such a one was afforded by the Executive Department, constituted by the constitution. A person elected to that high office, having his constituents in every section, state and sub-division of the Union, must consider himself bound by the most solemn sanctions, to guard, protect, and defend the rights of all, and of every portion, great or small, from the injustice and oppression of the rest.

I consider the veto power, therefore, given by the Constitution to the Executive of the United States, solely as a conservative power. To be used only, 1st, to protect the Constitution from violation; 2dly, the people from the effects of hasty legislation, where their will has been probably disregarded or not well understood; and 3dly, to prevent the effects of combinations violative of the rights of minorities. In reference to the second of these objects, I may observe that I consider it the right and privilege of the people to decide disputed points of the Constitution arising from the general grant of power to Congress to carry into effect the powers expressly given. And I believe, with Mr. Madison, "that repeated recognitions under varied circumstances, in acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Government, accompanied by indications in different modes of the concurrence of the general will of the nation as affording to the President sufficient authority for his considering such disputed points as settled.

Upwards of half a century has elapsed since the adoption of our present form of government. It would be an object more highly desirable than the gratification of the curiosity of speculative statesmen, if its precise situation could be ascertained a fair exhibit made of the operations of each of its Departments of powers which they respectively claim and exercise, of the collisions which have occurred between them, or between the whole Government and those of the States, or either of them. We could then compare our actual condition, after fifty years trial of our system, with what it was in the commencement of its operations, and ascertain whether the predictions of the patriots who opposed its adoption, or the confident hopes of its advocates, have been best realized. The great dread of the former seems to have been, that the reserved powers of the States would be absorbed by those of the Federal Government, and a consolidated power established, leaving to the States the shadow, only, of that independent action for which they had so zealously contended, and on the preservation of which they relied as the last hope of liberty.

Without denying that the result to which they looked with so much apprehension is in the way of being realized; it is obvious that they did not clearly see the mode of its accomplishment. The General Government has seized upon none of the reserved rights of the States. As far as any open warfare may have gone, the State authorities have amply maintained their rights. To a casual observer, our system presents no appearance of discord between the different members which compose it. Even the addition of many new ones has produced no jarring. They move in their respective orbits in perfect harmony with the central head, and with each other. But there is still an under current at work, by which, if not seasonably checked, the worst apprehensions of our anti-federal patriots will be realized. And not only will the State authorities be overshadowed by the great increase of power in the Executive Department of the General Government, but the character of that Government, if not its designation be essentially and radically changed. This state of things has been in part effected by causes inherent in the Constitution, and in part by the never failing tendency of political power to increase itself.

By making the President the sole distributor of all the patronage of the government, the framers of the constitution do not appear to have anticipated at how short a period it would become a formidable instrument to control the free operations of the State governments. Of trifling importance at first, it had early, in Mr. Jefferson's administration, become so powerful as to create great alarm in the mind of that patriot, from the potent influence it might exert in controlling the freedom of the elective franchise. If such could have then been the effects of its influence, how much greater must be the danger at this time, quadrupled in amount, as it certainly is, and more completely under the control of the Executive will, than their construction of their powers allowed, or the forbearing characters of all the early Presidents permitted them to make? But it is not by the extent of its patronage alone that the Executive Department has become dangerous, but by the use which it appears may be made of the appointing power, to bring under its control the whole revenues of the country.

The constitution has declared it to be the duty of the President to see that the laws are executed, and it makes him the Commander-in-Chief of the Armies and Navy of the United States. If the opinion of the most approved writers upon that species of mixed Government, which in modern Europe is termed anarchy, in contradistinction to despotism, is correct, there was wanting no other addition to the powers of our Chief Magistrate to stamp a monarchial character on our Government, but the control of the public finances. And to me it appears strange, indeed, that any one should doubt that the entire control which the President possesses over the officers who have the custody of the public money, by the power of removal with or without cause, does, for all mischievous purposes at least, virtually subject the treasure also to his disposal. The first Roman Emperor in his attempt to seize the sacred treasure, silenced the opposition of the officer to whose charge it had been committed, by a significant allusion to his sword. By a selection of political instruments for the care of the public money, a reference to their commissions by a President would be quite as effectual an argument as that of Cæsar to the Roman knight.

I am not insensible of the great difficulty that exists in devising a plan for the safe-keeping and disbursement of the public revenues, and I know the importance which has been attached by men of great abilities and patriotism to the divorce, as it is called, of the Treasury from the banking institutions. It is not the divorce which is complained of, but the unhallowed union of the Treasury with the Executive Department which has created such unhallowed alarm. To this danger to our republican institutions, and that created by the influence given to the Executive through the instrumentality of the federal officers, I propose to apply all the remedies which may be at my command. It was certainly a great error in the framers of the Constitution, not to have made the officer at the head of the Treasury Department entirely independent of the Executive. He should at least, have been removable only upon the demand of the popular branch of the Legislature. I have determined never to remove a Secretary of the Treasury without communicating all the circumstances attending such removal to both Houses of Congress.

The influence of the Executive in controlling the freedom of the elective franchise through the medium of the public officers, can be effectually checked by renewing the prohibition published by Mr. Jefferson, forbidding their interference in elections, farther than giving their own votes; and their own independence secured by an assurance of perfect immunity, in exercising this sacred privilege of freemen under the dictates of their own unbiassed judgments. Never, with my consent, shall an officer of the people, compensated for his services out of their pockets, become the pliant instrument of Executive will.

There is no part of the means placed in the hands of the Executive, which might be used with greater effect, for unhallowed purposes, than the control of the public press. The maxim which our ancestor derived from the mother country, that "the freedom of the press is the great bulwark of civil and religious liberty," is one of the most precious legacies which they have left us. We have learned, too, from our own as well as the experience of other countries, that golden shackles, by whomsoever or by whatever pretence imposed, are as fatal to it as the iron bonds of despotism. The presses in the necessary employment of Government, should never be used "to clear the guilty or to varnish crimes." A decent and manly examination of the acts of the Government should be not only tolerated but encouraged.

Upon another occasion, I have given my opinion at some length, upon the impropriety of Executive interference in the legislation of Congress. That the article in the constitution making it the duty of the President to communicate information, and authorizing him to recommend measures, was not intended to make him the source of legislation, and, in particular, that he never should be looked to for schemes of finance. It would be very strange, indeed, that the constitution should have strictly forbidden one branch of the Legislature from interfering in the origination of such bills, and that it should be considered proper that an altogether different department of the government should be permitted to do so. Some of our best political maxims and opinions have been drawn from our parent Isle. There are others, however, which cannot be introduced in our system without singular incongruity, and the production of much mischief. And this I conceive to be one. No matter in which of the Houses of Parliament a bill may originate, nor by whom introduced, a minister, or a member of the opposition, by the fiction of law, or rather of constitutional principle, the Sovereign is supposed to have prepared it agreeably to his will, and then submitted it to Parliament for their advice and consent.

Now, the very reverse is the case here, not only with regard to the principle, but the forms prescribed by the Constitution.—The principle certainly assigns to the only body constituted by the Constitution, (the legislative body,) the power to make laws, and the forms even direct that the enactment should be ascribed to them. The Senate, in relation to Revenue bills, have a right to propose amendments; and so has the Executive, by the power given him to return them to the House of Representatives with his objections. It is in his power, also, to propose amendments in the existing revenue laws, suggested by his observations upon their defective or injurious operation. But the delicate duty of devising schemes of revenue should be left where the Constitution has placed it, with the immediate representatives of the people. For similar reasons, the mode of keeping the public treasure should be prescribed by them; and the farther removed it may be from the control of the Executive, the more wholesome the arrangement, and the more in accordance with Republican principles.

Connected with this subject is the character of the currency. The idea of making it exclusively metallic, however well intended, appears to me to be fraught with more fatal consequences than any other scheme, having no relation to the personal rights of the citizen, than has ever been devised. If any single scheme could produce the effect of arresting, at once, that mutation of condition by which thousands of our most indigent fellow citizens, by their industry and enterprise, are raised to the possession of wealth, that is the one. If there is one measure better calculated than another to produce that state of things so much deprecated by all true republicans, by which the rich are daily adding to their heads, and the poor sinking deeper into penury, it is an exclusive metallic currency. Or if there is a process by which the character of the country for generosity and nobleness of feeling may be destroyed, by the great increase and necessary toleration of usury, it is an exclusive metallic currency.

Amongst the other duties of a delicate character which the President is called upon to perform, is the supervision of the government of the Territories of the United States. Those of them which are destined to become members of our great political family, are compensated by their rapid progress from infancy to manhood, for the partial and temporal deprivation of their political rights.

It is in this District, only, where American citizens are to be found, who, under a settled system of policy, are deprived of many important political privileges, without any inspiring hope as to the future.—Their only consolation, under circumstances of such deprivation, is that of the devoted exterior guards of a camp—that their sufferings secure tranquility and safety within. Are there any of their countrymen who would subject them to greater sacrifices, to any other humiliations than those essentially necessary to the security of the object for which they were thus separated from their fellow-citizens? Are their rights alone not to be guarantied by the application of those great principles, upon which all our constitutions are founded? We are told by the greatest of the British Orators and Statesmen, that, at the commencement of the war of the Revolution, the most stupid men in England spoke of "their American subjects." Are there, indeed, citizens of some of our states who have dreamed of their subjects in the District of Columbia? Such dreams can never be realized by any agency of mine.

The people of the District of Columbia are not the people of the States, but free American citizens. Being in the latter condition when the constitution was formed, no words used in that instrument could have been intended to deprive them of that character. Is there any thing in the great principles of unalienable rights, so emphatically insisted upon in our Declaration of Independence, they would neither make, nor the United States accept, a surrender of their liberties, and become the subjects, in other words the slaves, of their former fellow-citizens. If this be true, and it will scarcely be denied by any one who has a correct idea of his own rights as an American citizen, the grant to Congress of exclusive jurisdiction in the District of Columbia, can be interpreted, so far as respects the aggregate people of the United States; as meaning nothing more than to allow Congress the controlling power necessary to afford a free and safe exercise of the functions assigned to the General Government by the Constitution. In all other respects the legislation of Congress should be adopted to their peculiar position and wants, and be conformable with their deliberate opinions of their own interests.

I have spoken of the necessity of keeping the respective departments of the Government, as well as all the other authorities of our country, within their appropriate orbits. This is a matter of difficulty in some cases, as the powers which they respectively claim are often not defiled by very distinct lines. Mischievous, however, in their tendencies, as collisions of this kind may be, those which arise between the respective communities, which for certain purposes compose our nation, are much more so; for no such nation can long exist without the careful culture of those feelings of confidence and affection which are the effective bonds of union between free and confederated states. Strong as is the tie of interest, it has been often found ineffectual. Men, blinded by their passions, have been known to adopt measures for their country, in direct opposition to all the suggestions of policy. The alternative then, is to destroy, or keep down a bad passion by creating and fostering a good one; and this seems to be a corner stone upon which our American political architects have reared the fabric of our Government.

The cement which was to bind, and perpetuate its existence, was the affectionate attachment between all its members. To insure the continuance of this feeling, produced at first by a community of dangers, of sufferings and of interests, the advantages of each were made accessible to all. No participation in any good, possessed by any member of an extensive confederacy, except in domestic government, was withheld from the citizen of any other member. By a process attended with no difficulty, no delay, no expense but that of removal, the citizen of one might become the citizen of any other, and successively of the whole. The lines, too, separating powers to be exercised by the citizens of one state from those of another, seem to be so distinctly drawn as to leave no room for misunderstanding. The citizens of each state unite in their persons all the privileges which that character confers, and all that they may claim as citizens of the United States; but, in no case can the same person, at the same time, act as the citizens of two separate states, and he is therefore positively precluded from any interference with the reserved powers of any state but that of which he is, for the time being, a citizen. He may, indeed, offer to the citizens of other states his advice as to their management, and the form in which it is tendered is left to his own discretion and sense of propriety.

It may be observed, however, that organized associations of citizens, requiring compliance with their wishes, too much resemble the recommendations of Athens to her allies—supported by an armed and powerful fleet. It was, indeed, to the ambition of the leading states of Greece to control the domestic concerns of the other, that the destruction of that celebrated confederacy, and subsequently of all its members, is mainly to be attributed. And it is owing to the absence of that spirit that the Helvetic confederacy had been for so many years preserved. Never had there been seen in the institutions of the separate members of any confederacy, more elements of discord. In the principles and forms of government and religion, as well as in the circumstances of the several cantons, so marked a discrepancy was observable as to promise any thing but harmony in their intercourse, or permanency in their alliance. And yet, for ages, neither has been interrupted. Content with the positive benefits which our union produced, with the independence and security from foreign aggression which it secured, cause sagacious people to respect the institutions of each other, however repugnant to their own principles and prejudices.

Our confederacy, fellow-citizens, can only be preserved by the same forbearance. Our citizens must be content with the exercise of the powers with which the constitution clothes them. The attempt of those of one state to control the domestic institutions of another, can only result in feelings of distrust and jealousy, the certain harbingers of disunion, violence, civil war, and the ultimate destruction of our free institutions. Our confederacy is perfectly illustrated by the terms and principles governing a common co-partnership. There a fund of power is to be exercised under the direction of the joint coincide of the allied members, but that which has been reserved by the individual members is intangible by the common government, or the individual composing it. To attempt it, finds no support in the principles of our constitution. It should be our earnest and constant endeavor, mutually to cultivate a spirit of concord and harmony among the various parts of our confederacy. Experience has abundantly taught us that the agitation, by citizens of one part of the Union, of a subject not confided to the General Government, but exclusively under the guardianship of the local authorities, is productive of no other consequences than bitterness, alienation, discord, and injury to the very cause which is intended to be advanced. Of all the great interests which appertain to our country, that of union, cordial, confiding, fraternal union, is by far the most important, since it is the only true and sure guaranty of all others.

In consequence of the embarrassed state of business and the currency, some of the States may meet with difficulty in their financial concerns. However deeply we may regret any thing imprudent or excessive in the engagements, into which States have entered for purposes of their own, it does not become us to disparage the State Governments, nor to discourage them from making proper efforts for their own relief; on the contrary, it is our duty to encourage them, to the extent of our constitutional authority, to apply their best means, and cheerfully to make all necessary sacrifices, and submit to all necessary burdens to fulfil their engagements, and maintain their credit; for the character and credit of the several States form part of the character and credit of the whole country. The resources of the country were abundant, the enterprise and activity of our people proverbial; and we may well hope that wise legislation and prudent administration, by the respective Governments, each acting within its own sphere, will restore former prosperity.

Unpleasant and even dangerous as collisions may sometimes be, between the constituted authorities or the citizens of our country, in relations to the lines which separate their respective jurisdictions, the results can be of no vital injury to our institutions, if that ardent patriotism, that devoted attachment to liberty, that spirit of moderation and forbearance for which our countrymen were once distinguished, continue to be cherished. If this continues to be the ruling passion of our souls, the weaker feelings of the mistaken enthusiast will be corrected, the Utopian dreams of the scheming politician dissipated, and the complicated intrigues of the demagogue rendered harmless. The spirit of liberty is the sovereign balm for every injury which our institutions may receive.

On the contrary, no care that can be used in the construction of our Government, no division of powers, no distribution of checks in its several departments, will prove effectual to keep us a free people, if this spirit is suffered to decay; and decay it will without constant nurture. To the neglect of this duty, the best historians agree in attributing the ruin of all the republics with whose existence and fall their writings have made us acquainted. The same causes will ever produce the same effects; and, as long as the love of power is a dominant passion of the human bosom, and as long as the understandings of men can be warped, and their affections changed by operations upon their passions and prejudices, so long will the liberty of a people depend on their own constant attention to its preservation.

The danger to all well-established free governments, arises from the unwillingness of the people to believe in its existence, or from the influence of designing men, diverting their attention from the quarter whence it approaches, to a source from which it can never come. This is the old trick of those who would usurp the government of their country. In the name of Democracy they speak, warning the people against the influence of wealth, and the danger of aristocracy. History, ancient and modern, is full of such examples. Cæsar became the master of the Roman people and the Senate under the pretence of supporting the democratic claims of the former against the aristocracy of the latter; Cromwell, in character of protector of the liberties of the people, became the dictator of England; and Bolivar possessed himself of unlimited power with the title of his country's liberator. There is on the contrary, no single instance on record of an extensive and well-established republic being changed into an aristocracy. The tendency of all such governments in their decline, is to monarchy; and the antagonist principle to liberty, is the spirit of faction; a spirit which assumes the character, and at times of great excitement, imposes itself upon the people as the genuine spirit of freedom, and like the false Christs whose coming was foretold by the Savior, seeks to, and were it possible, would impose upon the true and most faithful disciples of liberty.

It is in periods like this, that it behooves the people to be most watchful of those to whom they have entrusted power. And, although there is at times much difficulty in distinguishing the false from the true spirit, a calm and dispassionate investigation will detect the counterfeit as well by the character of its operators, as the results that are produced. The true spirit of liberty, although devoted, persevering, bold, and uncompromising in principle, that secured, is mild and tolerant, and scrupulous as to the means it employs; whilst the spirit of party, assuming to be that of liberty, is harsh, vindictive, and intolerant, and totally reckless as to the character of the allies which it brings to the aid of its cause.—When the genuine spirit of liberty animates the body of a people to a thorough examination of their affairs, it leads to the exercise of every excrescence which may have fastened itself upon any of the Departments of Government, and restores the system to its primitive health and beauty. But the reign of an intolerant spirit of party amongst a free people, seldom fails to result in a dangerous accession to the Executive power, introduced and established amidst unusual professions of devotion to democracy.

The foregoing remarks relate almost exclusively to matters connected with our domestic concerns. It may be proper, however, that I should give some indications to my fellow-citizens of my proposed course of conduct in the management of our foreign relations. I assure them, therefore, that it is my intention to use every means in my power to preserve the friendly intercourse which now so happily subsists with every foreign nation; and that, although, of course, not well informed as to the state of any pending negotiation with any of them, I see in the personal characters of the Sovereigns, as well as in the mutual interests of our own, and of the Governments with which our relations are most intimate, a pleasing guaranty that the harmony so important to the interests of their subjects, as well as our citizens, will not be interrupted by the advancement of any claim, or pretension upon their part to which our honor would not permit us to yield. Long the defender of my country's rights in the field, I trust that my fellow-citizens will not see in my earnest desire to preserve peace with foreign powers any indication that their rights will ever be sacrificed, or the honor of the nation tarnished, by any admission on the part of their Chief Magistrate unworthy of their former glory.

In our intercouse with our aborignal neighbors, the same liberality and justice which marked the course prescribed to me by two of my illustrious predecessors, when acting under their direction in the discharge of the duties of superintendent and commissioner, shall be strictly observed. I can conceive of no more sublime spectacle—none more likely to propitiate an impartial and common Creator—than a rigid adherence to the principles of justice on the part of a powerful nation, in its transactions with a weaker and uncivilized people, whom circumstances have placed at its disposal.

Before concluding fellow citizens, I must say something to you on the subject of the parties at this time existing in our country. To me it appears perfectly clear that the interests of that country requires that the violence of the spirit by which those parties are at this time governed, must be greatly mitigated, if not entirely extinguished, or consequences will ensue which are appalling to be thought of.

If parties in a republic are necessary to secure a degree of vigilance sufficient to keep the public functionaries within the bounds of law and duty, at that point their usefulness ends. Beyond that, they become destructive of public virtue, the parents of a spirit antagonist to that of liberty, and eventually, its inevitable conqueror. We have examples of republics, where the love of country and of liberty, at one time were the dominant passions of the whole mass of citizens. And yet, with the continuance of the name and forms of free government, not a vestige of these qualities remaining in the bosom of any one of its citizens. It was the beautiful remark of a distinguished English writer, that "in the Roman Senate, Octavius had a party, and Anthony a party, but the Commonwealth had none." Yet the Senate continued to meet in the Temple of Liberty, and to talk of the sacredness and beauty of the Commonwealth, and gaze at the statutes of the elder Brutus, and of the Curtii and Decii.

And the people assembled in the forum, not as in the days of Camillus and the Scipios, to cast their free votes for annual magistrates, or pass upon the acts of the Senate, but to receive from the hands of the leaders of the respective parties their share of the spoils, and to shout for one or the other, as those collected in Gaul, or Egypt, and the Lesser Asia, would furnish the larger dividend. The spirit of liberty had fled, and, avoiding the abodes of civilized man, had sought protection in the wilds of Scythia, or Scandinavia; and so, under the operation of the same causes and influences, it will fly from our Capitol and our forums. A calamity so awful, not only to our country, but to the world, must be deprecated by every patriot; and every tendency to a state of things likely to produce it, immediately checked. Such a tendency has existed—does exist. Always the friend of my countrymen, never their flatterer, it becomes my duty to say to them from this high place, to which their partiality has exalted me, that there exists in the land, a spirit hostile to their best interests—hostile to liberty itself. It is a spirit contracted in its views, selfish in its object. It looks to the aggrandisement of a few, even to the destruction of the interests of the whole. The entire remedy is with the people. Something, however, may be effected by the means which they have placed in my hands.

It is union that we want, not of party for the sake of that party, but a union of the whole country for the sake of the whole country—for the defence of its interest and its honor against foreign aggression, for the defence of those principles for which our ancestors so gloriously contended. As far as it depends upon me it shall be accomplished. All the influence that I possess shall be exerted to prevent the formation at least of an Executive party in the halls of the Legislative body. I wish for the support of no member of that body to any measure of mine that does not satisfy his judgment and his sense of duty to those from whom he holds his appointment; nor any confidence in advance from the people, but that asked for by Mr. Jefferson, "to give firmness and effect to the legal administration of their affairs."

I deem the present occasion sufficiently important and solemn to justify me in expressing to my fellow-citizens, a profound reverence of the Christian Religion, and a thorough conviction that sound morals, religious liberty, and a just sense of religious responsibility, are essentially connected with all true and lasting happiness; and to that good Being who has blessed us by the gifts of civil and religious freedom, who watched over and prospered the labors of our fathers, and has hitherto preserved to us institutions, far exceeding in excellence those of any other people, let us unite in fervently commending every interest of our beloved country in all future time.

Fellow-citizens—Being fully invested with that high office to which the partiality of my countrymen has called me, I now take an affectionate leave of you. You will bear with you to your homes the remembrance of the pledge I have this day given, to discharge all the duties of my exalted station, according to the best of my ability; and I shall enter upon the performance with entire confidence in the support of a just and generous people.

Death of several persons by breathing Hydrogen Gas.—The Strasburg (French) Courier gives the following melancholy statement, which should serve as a warning to the consumers of gas:—

About ten o'clock on Saturday morning, M. Horst, a teacher of the Piano, uneasy at finding that the house in which he lived was infected with a strong smell of gas, sent for the chief agent of the company to ascertain the cause.

They began by examining the ground floor, and on coming to the kitchen of an apartment occupied by the family of M. Beringer, a dealer in glass and other articles from the Black Forest, stifled groans and other sounds of a dying person were heard from the adjoining room. It then occurred to M. Horst, that although the day was so far advanced, not one of this family had been stirring. He therefore called for assistance, and had the room whence the ominous sounds issued, forced open. It was in darkness, the shutters being still closed. When light was admitted, the following horrible spectacle presented itself. Six persons were lying in different positions, either dead or in the last agonies.

M. Beringer was lying in the middle of the chamber, with his face to the ground, entirely dressed except his coat and waistcoat. Near him, and in front of a stove, lay the servant a young woman completely clothed. The wife, who also dressed, was lying on her bed, with the youngest child, a little girl seven years old. On a mattrass, near the window, was one of the two sons, 15 years of age, with his drawers and waistcoat on, and near him on the floor, his brother in his shirt. All were foaming at the mouth, had their features contracted and of a violet color, and their limbs distorted and stiff as if they had been suffering from violent convulsions.—Not one of them showed any signs of life except the father, the rattling in whose throat had given the alarm. Medical assistance was given, but all were dead except the father and mother. It was afterwards found that a considerable issue of gas had taken place from the pipes into the house, and had no doubt caused the accident. In the evening M. Beringer was still alive, but was not expected to survive. His wife remained in a state of delirium.

Steam Boat Accident.—The steamboat Swan, which left here this morning for South Amboy, with the passengers for Philadelphia, went ashore in the fog on the Mill-reef, Bergen Point, opposite the New Brighton dock, knocking a hole in her bows, and lying at the latest accounts with her cabin half full of water There were about 50 passengers on board at the time, who were taken off by the steamboat Staten Islander, Capt. Bristid, and conveyed to Jersey City, where they arrived, however, too late to take the cars by the rail road line for Philadelphia. One of the passengers, we are informed, was taken from the cabin through the sky light.

Since the above was in type we have received the following additional particulars. When the boat struck the passengers were at breakfast.—She went bow on, the stern settling so low in the water as almost immediately to fill the cabin. The breakfast table was raised so high that some of the articles on it were taken off by those that were on the deck.

As might be expected, there was a rush for the companion way, and some who could not get out soon enough in that direction made their way through sky-light. They remained on the rock for about one hour—the passengers calm particularly the ladies. When the fog cleared off a little, it was found that the boat was about her length out of the channel.—Com. Adv.

Cheap Travelling.—The fare between New-York and Albany is likely to be cheap enough. A new line of steamboats is formed, consisting of the North America, Rochester, and South America, a new boat, nearly 30 feet longer than the North America, and of whose speed the highest expectations are entertained.

The old line will consist of the Dewitt Clinton, Swallow, Troy and Albany, besides which, there are to be other independent boats, all running at the low price of one dollar.—N. Y. American.

Tray, Blanch and Sweetheart.—Somebody has estimated the dog population of the United States at about two millions, and the expense of keeping them upwards of $10,000,000 per annum.

MARRIED.

In Bridgewater, on the 4th inst., by Eld. F. Page, Mr. SAMUEL B. RHODES, of Paris, son of Eld. Rhodes, and Miss ELIZABETH A., daughter of John Davis of the former place.

LIST OF LETTERS.

N. Y. Hall, (we will write you.) Otis R Hopkins P M. S S Streeter, P M. William Saunders, (we will arrange the matter.) R R Lewis, (we will do it.) B F Palmer, P M. S Russel, P M. Calvin Green, (thank you.) A Fitch, (we have done it.) H Francis, P M (we admit your explanation.) Lewis A Davis, (you have our gratitude.) A R Hathaway, P M. Royal Taft, (those that receive and read papers are responsible for them.) Jabish Brown, Jr.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

N. Y. Hall. $13.00, cr. Clark Burdick, S. Crandall, Lyman Pratt, A. Greenman, $2,25, each. J. Redner, $2.00, T. Carrick, $1,69, Vol. 1. 31 retained. Greene Rathbun, $1,00. B. F. Palmer, $12,00, cr. George Greenman, Welcome B. Lewis, Peleg Saunders, Ethen Lanphere, Thos. S. Greenman, Simeon Fish, $2 each, Vol. 2. Polly Lashure $2. Vol. 2 Elias Rogers, $1,37, Vol. 1. S. Bailey, $2.25, cr. James Hill. Calvin Green, $6,50, cr. Job Spencer, Edward Green, $2.25 each, Vol 1. Elisha Crosby, $2. Vol. 2. R. S. Burdick, $4, cr. Jesse Maxson Vol. 1 & 2. Lewis A. Davis, $17, cr. Davis Babcock, Jacob D. Maxson, Calvin Davis, $2, each, Vol. 1. John Forsyth, John Babcock, Caleb Ayres, Simeon Babcock, L. A. Davis, $2 each, for Vol. 2. John Loofbourrow, $1. G. P. Maxson, $4, cr. John A. Crandall, $2, Vol. 2. J. Thompson, Wm. H. Stillman, $1, each. Corydon B. Burdick, $3, Vol. 1 & 2.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

VOLUME II.

The SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER will be published weekly, at De Ruyter, Madison Co., N. Y., on an Imperial sheet, at $2 per annum, in advance; $2,25, after six months; or $2,50 at the end of the year. To village subscribers, $2,25, in advance; or $2.50, at the end of the year.

It will continue to be the organ of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, and contend for the truths of the Bible, as held by them. In advocating the sentiments of this people, it will not be censorious or illiberal to those of different denominations. It will embrace in its object the whole range of christian doctrines and duties, and advocate with a becoming zeal, the various moral and benevolent enterpizes of the day. In its columns may be found things interesting and profitable to all.

The REGISTER will be what it has been, with such alterations only, as will make it more interesting to its readers. While we are grateful for the indulgence and approbation of our readers, during the first year of our labors, we would respectfully invite their co-operation, assuring them it will be our chief effort to make the REGISTER what it should be, and well worthy of their patronage.

We assure those of all denominations, who patronize us, that it will be our object to furnish them with an evangelical paper, which shall "contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." In all of our labors, we shall strive to cultivate the spirit of the Gospel, and labor for the promotion of practical religion, as well as to defend its theory.

We wish our agents to renew their efforts to supply each family in our denomination with a copy of the Register.

A portion of our columns will be devoted to Literature, Science, Agriculture, and General Intelligence. Party Politics will have no place in the REGISTER.

Those who will aid us in procuring new subscribers, and in remitting money, shall receive both our gratitude and a liberal compensation.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DISSOLUTION.

THE co-partnership heretofore existing under the firm of Greene, Bailey, & Burdick, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business of the firm will be settled by James Bailey, who is duly authorized to settle the same,

JOEL GREENE,
JAMES BAILEY,
ROWLAND S. BURDICK.

De Ruyter, Feb. 25th. 1841.

POETRY.

Fight the Good Fight of Faith.

1 TIMOTHY, VI. 12.

Rouse ye! warriors of the Lord!
Pilgrims here and strangers---
Rouse ye, at your captain's word,
Take the helmet---grasp the sword---
On through pain and danger!

Jesus is your sun and shield,
Light and strength ye borrow;
Stand, then, on th' embattled field,
Glorious things shall be revealed;
Short is earthly sorrow.

From your ranks! unite, unite!
Is your courage sinking!
Strong in God, and in his might,
Press ye onward to the fight,
Fearless and unshrinking.

Love's the banner o'er you spread---
Can your spirits languish!
Think of Him who for you bled,
Look to Him who bowed the head,
Meek in lonely anguish.

Charge! the battle hath been won,
Still the palm is glorious;
Fight! ye soon will share the throne
Of Him who grappled all alone,
Suffering, but victorious

M. A. S.

Miscellaneous Department.

BATTLE OF TRENTON.

FROM THE MANUSCRIPT OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

I had scarcely put my foot in the stirrup before an aid-de-camp from commander-in-chief galloped up to me with a summons to the side of Washington. I bowed in reply, and dashed up the road. The general-in-chief was already on horse back, surrounded by his staff, and on the point of setting out. He was calm and collected, as if in his cabinet. No sooner did he see me than he waved his hand as a signal to halt. I checked my steed on the instant, and lifting my hat, waited for his commands.

"You are a native of this country?"

"Yes!—your excellency."

"You know the roads from M'Conkeys ferry to Trenton—by the river and Pennington—The bye-roads and all?"

"As well as I know my Alphabet," and I patted the neck of my impatient charge.

"Then I may have occasion for you—you will remain with the staff—ah! that is a spirited animal you rode, Lieutenant Archer," he added smiling, as the fiery beast made a demivolt, that set half the group in commotion.

"Your excellency—"

"Never mind," said Washington, smiling again, as another impatient spring of my charger, cut short the sentence, I see the heads of the columns are in motion—you will remember," and waving his hand he gave the rein to his steed, while I fell back bewildered into the staff.

The ferry was close at hand, but the intense cold made the march any thing but pleasant. We all, however, hoped on the morrow to redeem our country by striking a signal blow, and every heart beat high with the anticipation of victory. Column after column of our little army defiled at the ferry, and the night had scarcely set in before the embarkation began.

At last we crossed the Delaware. The whole night had been consumed in transportation of the men and artillery, and the morning was within an hour or two of dawning before the last detachment had been embarked. As I wheeled my horse, on the little bank above the landing place, I paused an instant to look back through the obscurity on the scene. The night was dark, wild, and threatening, the clouds betokened an approaching tempest—and I could with difficulty penetrate with my eye, the fast increasing gloom. As I put my hands across my brow to penetrate into the darkness, a gust of wind, sweeping down the river, whirled the snow in my face, and momentarily blinded my sight. At last I discerned the opposite shore amid the obscurity,—The landscape was wild and gloomy. A few desolate looking houses only were in sight, and they scarcely perceptible in the shadowy twilight.—The bare trees lifted their hoary arms on high, groaning and creaking in the gale. The river was covered with drifting ice, that now jammed with a crash together, and then floated slowly apart, leaving scarcely space for the boats to pass. The dangers of the navigation can better be imagined than described,—for the utmost exertions could often just prevent the frail structures from being crushed. Occasionally a stray fire would be heard shooting shrilly over the waters, mingling feebly with the fiercer firings of the winds,—and anon the deep roll of the drum would boom across the night, the neigh of the horse would float from the opposite shore, or the crash of the jamming ice would be heard like far off thunder. The cannoneers beneath me were dragging a piece of artillery up the ascent, and the men were rapidly forming on the shore below as they landed. It was a stirring scene. At this instant the band of the —— regiment struck up an enlivening air, and plunging my rowels into my steed, I whirled him around into the road, and went off on a gallop to overtake the general's staff.

It was now four o'clock, and so much time had been consumed that it became impossible to reach our destination before day break and consequently all certainty of a surprise was over. A hasty council was therefore called on horseback to determine whether to retreat or not. A few minutes decided it. All were unanimous to proceed at every peril.

"Gentlemen," said Washington, after they had severally spoken, "then we all agree—the attack shall take place—general," he continued, turning to Sullivan, "your brigade shall march the river road, while I take that to Pennington—let us arrive as near eight o'clock as possible.—But do not pause when you reach their outposts—drive them in before their ranks can form, and pursue them to the very centre of the town. I shall be there to take them in the flank—the rest we must leave to the God of battles. And now, gentlemen, to your posts." In five minutes we were in motion.

The eagerness of our troops to come up with the enemy was never more conspicuous than on the morning of the eventful day. We had scarcely lost sight of Sullivan's detachment across the intervening fields, before the long threatened storm burst over us. the night was intensely cold; the sleet and the rain rattled incessantly on the man's knapsacks and the wind shrieked, howled and roared among the old pine trees with terrific violence.—At times the snow fell perpendicularly downwards—then it beat harizontally into our faces with furious impetuosity—and again it was hurled wildly on high, eddying around and around and sweeping away on the whistling tempest far down into the gloom. The tramp of the men—the low orders of the officers—the occasional rattle of a musket were almost lost in the shrill voice of the gale, or the deep sullen roar of the tortured forest.—Even these sounds at length ceased; and we continue to march in profound silence, increasing as we drew nearer to the outposts of the enemy. The redoubled violence of the gale, though it added to the suffering of our brave continentals was even hailed with joy, as it decreased the chances of our discovery, and made us once more hope high for a surprise. Nor were those sufferings light. Through that dreadful night nothing but the lofty patriotism of a freeman could have sustained them. Half clothed; many without shoes, whole companies destitute of blankets, they yet pressed bravely on against the storm; though drenched to the skin, shivering at every blast, and too often marking their footsteps with blood. Old as I am now, the recollection is still vivid in my mind. God forbid that such suffering should ever have to be endured again!

The dawn at last came; but the storm still raged. The trees were borne down with sleet, and the slush was ankle deep in the roads. The few fields we passed were covered with wet spongy snow,—and the half buried houses looked bleak and desolate in the uncertain morning light. It has been my lot to witness few such forbidden scenes. At this instant a shot was heard in front and a messenger dashed furiously up to announce that the outposts of the British were being driven in.

"Forward—forward," cried Washington himself galloping up to the head of the column, "push on, my brave fellows—ON."

The men started like hunters at the cry of the pack, as their general's voice was seconded by a hasty fire from the riflemen in the van, and forgetting every thing but the foe marched rapidly, with silent eagerness, toward the sound of the conflict As they emerged from the wood the scene burst upon them.

The town lay but a short distance ahead just discernable through the twilight, and seemingly buried in repose. The streets were wholly deserted; and as yet the alarm had not reached the main body of the enemy. A single horseman was seen however fleeting a moment through the mist—he was lost behind a clump of trees—and then reappeared, discharging wildly down the main street of the village. I had no doubt he was a messenger from the outposts of a reinforcement; but if suffered to rally one we knew all hope was gone. To the forces he had left we now therefore turned our attention.

The first charge of our gallant continentals had driven the outposts in like the shock of an avalanche. Just aroused from sleep, and taken completely by surprise they did not at first pretend to make a stand, but retreated rapidly and in disorder, before our vanguard. A few moments, however, had sufficed to recall their reeling faculties, and perceiving the insignificant force opposed to them, they halted, hesitated, rallied, poured in a heavy fire, and even advanced cheering to the onset. But at this moment our main body emerged from the wood, and when my eyes first fell upon the Hessian grenadiers, they were beginning again to stagger.

"On—on—push on, continentals of the ——," shouted the officer in command.

The men with admirable discipline still forbore their shouts, and steadily pressed on against the now flying outposts. In another instant the Hessians were in full retreat upon the town.

"By heaven!" ejaculated an aid-de-camp at my side, as a rolling fire of musketry was all at once heard at the distance of half a mile across the village, "there goes Sullivan's brigade—the days our own."

"Charge that artillery with a detachment from the eastern regiment," shouted the general as the battery of the enemy was seen a little to our right.

The men levelled their bayonets, marched steadily up to the very mouths of the cancon, and before the artillerists could bring pieces to bear, carried them with a cheer. Just then the surprised enemy was seen endeavoring to form in the main street, ahead, and the rapidly increasing fire on the side of Sullivan, told that the day in that quarter, was fiercely maintained. A few moments of indecision would ruin all.

"Press on—press on there," shouted the commander-in-chief, galloping to the front, and waving his sword aloft, "charge them before they can form—follow me."

The effect was electrical. Gallant as had been their conduct before our brave troops now seemed to be carried away with perfect enthusiasm. The men burst into a cheer at the sight of the commander's daring, and dashing rapidly into the town, carried every thing before them like a hurricane. The half-formed Hessians opened a desultory fire, fell in before our impetuous attack, waved, broke, and in two minutes were flying pell-mell through the town; while our troops, with admirable discipline still maintaining their ranks, passed steadily up the street, driving the foe before them. They had scarcely gone a hundred yards, before the banners of Sullivan's brigade were seen floating through the mist ahead—a cheer burst from our men—it was answered back from our approaching comrades, and perceiving themselves hemmed in on all sides, and that further retreat was impossible, the whole regiment he had routed laid down their arms. The instant victory was ours, and the foe had surrendered, every unmanly exultation disappeared from the countenances of our brave troops. The fortune of war had turned against their foes, it was not the part of brave men to add insult to misfortune.

We were on the point of dismounting when an aid-de-camp wheeled around the corner of the street ahead and checking his foaming charger, at the side of Washington, exclaimed breathlessly—

"A detachment has escaped—they are in full retreat on the Princeton road."

Quick as thought the commander-in-chief flung himself into the saddle again, and looking hastily around the group of officers, singled me out.

"Lieutenant Archer—you know the roads, Colonel ———, will march his regiment around and prevent the enemy's retreat.—You will take them by the shortest route."

I bowed in acknowledgment to the saddle bow and perceiving the colonel was some distance ahead, went like an arrow down the street to join him. It was but the work of an instant to wheel the men into a neighboring avenue, and before five minutes the muskets of the retiring foe could be seen through the intervening trees. I had chosen a cross-path, which making, as it were, the longest side of a triangle, entered the Princeton road a short distance above the town, and would enable us to cut off completely the enemy's retreat. The struggle to attain the desired point where the two routes intersected was short, but fierce.—We had already advanced half way before we were discovered, and the enemy passed on with the eagerness of despair, our gallant fellows were fired on their part with the enthusiasm of conscious victory. As we drew rapidly nearer to the intersection, we were cheered by finding ourselves ahead—a bold, quick push enabled us to reach it some seconds before the foe—and rapidly facing about as we wheeled into the other road, we summoned the discomfited enemy to surrender. In half an hour I reported myself at head quarters as the aid-de-camp of Colonel ——, to announce our success.

The exultation of our countrymen on learning the victory of Trenton, no pen can picture. One universal shout of victory rolled from Massachusetts to Georgia; and we were hailed every where as the saviors of our country. The drooping spirits of the colonists were re-animated by the news; the hopes for a successful termination of the contest once more were aroused; and the enemy, paralyzed by the blow, retreatad in disorder toward Princeton and New Brunswick. Years have passed since then; but I shall never forget the battle of Trenton.

Fom the Young Men's Evening Book.

ANIMALS AT PEACE, OR EFFECTS OF DISCIPLINE.

"All association between animals of opposite natures are exceedingly interesting; and those who train animals for public exhibition, know how attractive are such displays of the power of discipline over the strength of instinct. These extraordinary arrangements are sometimes the effect of accident, and sometimes of the greater force of one instinct over the lesser force of another. A ratcatcher having caught a brood of young rats alive gave them to his cat, who had just had her kittens taken from her to be drowned. A few days afterwards, he was surprised to find the rats in the place of the drowned kittens, being suckled by their natural enemy. The cat had a hatred to rats, but she spared these young rats to afford her the relief which she required as a mother. The rat-catcher exhibited the cat and her nurslings to considerable advantage. A somewhat similar exhibition exists at present.

"There is a little Menagerie in London where such odd associations may be witnessed upon a more extensive scale, and more systematically conducted, than in any other collection of animals with which we are acquainted. Upon the Surry side of Waterloo Bridge, or sometimes, though not so often, on the same side of Southwark Bridge, may be daily seen a cage about five feet square containg quadrupeds and birds. The keeper of this collection, John Austin, states that he has employed seventeen years in this business of training creatures of opposite natures to live together in content and affection.—And those years have not been unprofitably employed! It is not too much to believe that many a person who has given his half-penny to look upon his show, may have had his mind awakened to the extraordinary effects of habits and of gentle discipline, when he has thus seen the cat, the rat, the mouse, the hawk, the rabbit, the guinea-pig, the owl, the pigeon, the starling, and the sparrow, each enjoying, as far as can be enjoyed in confinement, its respective mode of life, in the company of the others,—the weak without fear, and the strong without the desire to injure.—It is impossible to imagine any prettier exhibition of kindness than is here shown,—the rabbit and the pigeon playfully contending for a lock of hay to make up the nests; the sparrow sometimes perched on the head of the cat, and sometimes on that of the owl,—each its natural enemy; and the mice playing about with perfect indifference to the presence either of the cat, or hawk, or owl.

"The modes by which this man has effected this, are, first, by keeping all the creatures well fed; and secondly, by accustoming one species to the society of the other at a very early period of their lives. The ferocious instincts of those who prey on the weaker are never called into action; their nature is subdued by a systematic gentleness; the circumstances by which they are surrounded are favorable to the cultivation of their kindlier dispositions; all their desires and pleasures are bounded by their little cargo; and though the old cat sometimes takes a stately walk on the parapet of the bridge, he duly returns to his companions, with whom he has so long been happy, without at all thinking that he was born to destroy any of them. This is an example, and a powerful one, of what may be accomplished by a proper education which rightly estimates the force of habit and confirms, by judicious management, that a habit which is most desirable to be made a rule of Conduct. The principle is the same, whether it be applied to children or to brutes."

A SCRAP FROM MY DIARY.

True greatness is not an exclusive property of highly cultivated minds. Genuine benevolence does not consist so much in the magnitude, as in the motive of our deeds, and the circumstances under which they are performed. The poor widow who threw a farthing into the treasury, cast in more than all they who contributed of their abundance.

"I will tell you," said an obscure and illiterate, but generous poor man, "what taught me to neglect no reasonable opportunity of doing an act of kindness to any person in need. Some years ago, I was traveling on horseback through a newly settled part of the country, and overtook, in the woods, a wretched looking man with a large bag of potatoes upon his shoulder. He appeared to be very much fatigued, and the sweat was flowing freely from his emaciated brow. A kind spirit within me, whispered to lend the man my horse to relieve him of his load. I was on the point of dismounting for this purpose, when another spirit admonished me to mind my own business, and let every one bear his own burthens—that my horse had traveled a long distance without food or rest, and had yet far to go. I did not stop to consider, but spurred on and soon left the poor man out of sight. Directly I came to a small opening, where a log cabin and a little stack of hay stood by the way side, which I had no doubt, belonged to the man with the potatoes. Here was a good chance to give my horse a baiting which I had not found before for many miles; but I had no money in my pocket to pay for it. Now the selfish spirit whispered to let my horse fill himself from this stack of hay. But the kind spirit reminded me that I would not help the poor man carry his potatoes, and that it would be rascally to rob him of his hay. The argument was undeniable, and the result was, that I rode to the end of my journey without finding another chance to refresh my jaded and hungry beast. From that time to this," concluded the humble narrator, with a tear in his eye, "I have neglected no convenient opportunity to assist a fellow creature in need."

L.

MORAL SUASION.—A gentleman in this village, not long since, was passing a drunkard's house, and heard a noise within that induced him to enter suddenly. The husband had his little child by the heels, and was just swinging it back, as if to dash its brains out against the chimney. His wife was struggling with him in agony, and imploring him not to murder the child! What rumseller can have the heart to continue his traffic, when such are its horrible results?—Springfield Gaz.

Children's Department.

From the Olive Leaf.

The Little Sparrow.

Who formed the little sparrow,
And gave him wings to fly?
Who shields him from the arrow,
When flying in the sky?
Our Father, God, who reigns in heaven,
By whom are all our blessings given.

And who so gently leads him,
Far from the fowler's snare?
And who so kindly feeds him,
And shows such tender care?
Our Father, God, who stoops to show
His grace to creatures here below.

And who a dress provides him,
So beautiful and warm!
Who in the shelter hides him,
Amid the raging storm?
Our Father, God, extends his care
Through heaven and earth and seas and air.

Does God full many a favor
To little sparrows give?
And shall we not endeavor
By faith on him to live!
Our Father, God, who reigns above,
Is worthy of our hightest love.

ILLUSTRATIONS FOR CHILDREN.

I once saw a preacher trying to teach the children that the soul would live after they were all dead. They listened but evidently did not understand it. He was too abstract. Snatching his watch from his pocket he said, "James, what is this I hold in my hand?"

"A watch, sir;" "a little clock," says another.

"Do you all see it?"

"Yes, sir."

"How do you know it is a watch?"

"It ticks, sir."

"Very well, can any of you hear it tick? All listen now." After a pause—"Yes, sir, we hear it." He then took off the case, and held the case in one hand, and the watch in the other.

"Now, children, which is the watch?—you see there are two which look like watches?"

"The little one—in your right hand, sir."

"Very well, again; now I will lay the case aside, put it away down there in my hat. Now let us see if you can hear the watch tick?"

"Yes, sir, we hear it," exclaimed several voices

"Well, the watch can tick, and go, and keep time, you see, when the case is taken off and put in my hat. The watch goes just as well. So it is with you, children. Your body is nothing but the case—the soul is inside. The case—the body may be taken off and buried up in the ground, and the soul will live and think, just as well as this watch will go, as you see, when the case is off."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NOTICE.

THE Subscriber respectfully solicits those who are indebted to him on Book account of six months standing to call and settle the same, if possible, without delay, as he is very much in want of the avails of his labor. De Ruyter, March 3, 1841.

1w3 HALSEY STILLMAN.

Medicines! Medicines!!

TO FAMILIES.

S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public; for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s
MOTHER'S RELIEF.
JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT—
DR. McMUN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—
MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—

De Ruyter, Dec. 5, 1840. 1m3

REPRINT OF THE OLD DIVINES.

THIS work will be devoted to the publication of Arguments or Summaries of the Sermons and Discourses of the most eminent British Divines,—a complete collection of whose invaluable writings in some instances scarce, in others voluminous and expensive, is rarely to be found in the libraries of the Clergy, while our great public repositories themselves are not unfrequently deficient in this branch of literature.

These Skeletons which are intended as models of Scripture argumentation and composition, selected from the writings of the most distinguished ornaments of the Church, will be found highly acceptable to Clergymen, and more particularly useful to the young Divine, whose studies they are well calculated to facilitate by perusal and consultation.

The work will commence with Summaries of the Discourses of Bishop Sherlock, which will be followed by those of Jeremy Taylor, Dr. Barrow, Tillotson' Beveridge, S. Clark, Jewell, Jortin, Ogden, Porell, Fawcett, Cabrnock, Hooper, Bull, Leighton, Hopkins, Howe, Maclaurin, South, Secker, &c. &c.

"A Summary of each discourse is admirably calculated to assist the Divine in the arduous task of Composition for the pulpit."—Observer, London

"No archetype can be better than Sherlock and Barrow adapted to modern taste."—Gentleman's Magazine.

"To the Christian Minister, at the outset of life and the Theological Student, such a work must prove invaluable."---Exeter Flying Post.

"The mode pursued is to present the skeleton of the discourse only, retaining the order, the arguments and, as it were, the key notes of the original. By this means a great saving of space and money is effected. Judging from the specimen before us, the work will be carefully and skillfully done. The abridgment reads continuously, and preserves the effect of a whole."---Spectator.

The above very valuable work, which has been highly commended by Ministers and Religious Press in Great Britain, the subscriber proposes to republish in this country, if sufficient encouragement is given

The work was originally published by A. J. Valpy, A. M., editor of the Family Classical Library, Greek Septuagint, &c. &c.---and edited by Rev. T. R. Hughes, B. D., Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Peterborough---late Christian Advocate at Cambridge, Editor of the Continuation of Hume and Smollet's History of England from the reign of George the 2d, to 1835, Author of Travels in Greece, &c. &c. The well established literary reputation of the original editor and publisher will no doubt be a sufficient guaranty that the abridgement has been executed with skill and fidelity.

CONDITIONS.

1. The work will be commenced as soon as 300 subscribers are obtained.

2. It will be printed on paper of very superior quality with type and page similar to the North American Review.

3. It will be Issued quarterly, each number to contain at least, 132 pages, making a volume of 528 octavo pages, anually, with a Title Page, and an Index containing a list of texts, subjects, &c.

4. Price $2 a year, payable on the reception of the 1st number.

5. The work will commence with the republication of the valuable Sermons and Discourses of Sherlock, which will be followed with those of Jeremy Taylor, or Dr. Barrow. The first year will contain the whole of Sherlock and Taylor, or Sherlock and Barrow.

N. B. As the proposals for republishing the above work originates in a want frequently expressed by ministers, no agents will be appointed, as those wishing for the work, by writing a line something similar to the following and getting the Postmaster to sign and frank it, can forward their orders free of expense;---

By request of (here inser your own name,) forward you his name as a subscriber to the "Reprint of the Old Divines." You will direct his copy to (here give your Post Office address.) signed,

——— ———, P. M.

It will be understod that no money is expected with the orders for the work, as it will not be published unless 300 subscribers are obtained. It s hoped, however, that so many as design to subsdribe for it, will forward their names immediately. As the number of copies issued will depend upon the number of copies ordered, ministers will perceive the necesity of ordering the work at the commencement.

LITERARY AND THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTIONS.

Officers of Literary and Theological Institutions, who may receive this Prospectus, are respectfully requested to hand it to some active young man, who will exert himself to obtain a list of subscribers in the Institution; and Students, and Beneficiaries of the Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, and christian, Education Societies, will be furnished with the work on the following very low terms, viz: two copies for $3, or seven copies for $10, and a copy gratis to the individual acting as agent.

$5 will pay for two copies of "The Young People's Library," and one copy of the Reprint of the Old Divines." or $10, for five copies of "The young People,s Library," and one do. of the "Reprint of the Old Divines." Any Minister or Student shall receive the above works on these terms.

TO CHURCH MEMBERS.

Dear Brethren---If the circumstances of your pastor will not allow him to suboribe for the proposed work, will you not supply him? At small expense you can make him a very acceptable present. Just call upon him, and if he does not take the work, supply him with it, and thus benefit both him and yourselves.

All Communications must be directed to B. Brierly, North Springfield, Vt.

Editors and publishers of newspapers, who will give the above, without any abridgement a few insertions, and forward a single copy of their paper to the publisher, shall receive the work for one year should it be published. Quarterly publications, by giving the same a single insertion, and Monthly do. by two insertions, shall be entitled to the same compensation.

Cabinet Ware-House.

D. R. BURDICK,

WOULD respectfully inform the inhabitants of this town and the surrounding conutry, that he still continues to carry on the Cabinet Business, in all its various branches, at his shop directly opposite the De Ruyter Institute. He is prepared to execute all kinds of work in his line with neatness, promptness, and dispatch, such as Bureaus, Secretaries, Lockers, Sofas, Book-cases, Bedsteds, Tables, Stands, &c. &c. Most kinds of Lumber and produce will be taken in exchange for work, and even CASH will not be refused.

All kinds of House, Carriage, and Sign Painting, Glazing, Bronzing, &c. &c. will be executed on short notice.

SADDLE, HARNESS & TRUNK-MAKING.

THE subscriber is much gratified with the generous patronage of his former customers, and with pleasure announces to them and the public that he still continues his business in all its various branches at his old stand in De Ruyter village, where he keeps constantly on hand and offers for sale, on the most reasonable terms, Saddles, Bridles, Martingals, Trunks, Valices, Traveling Bags, and Harness of every description; all of which are well manufactured of the very best materials.—Those who wish to avail themselves of the opportunity of buying cheap, can do so by calling on

B. G. STILLMAN.

N. B. Any quantity of good beach or maple wood taken in exchange for the above articles. B. G. S.

STRAYED.

CAME into the enclosure of the subscriber, about the 25th May, 1840, one RED YEARLING STEER, with white stripes running up across his face to the horns. Also, one RED YEARLING HEIFER, with a slanting crop off the left ear. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges, and take them away. 51w3

Traxton, (lot No. 55,) Feb. 10, 1841.

JACOB HOLMES.

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

GEO. W. SUTTON.

De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin, P. M.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott—Joel Greene, Ezekiel G. Potter.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Hopkinton.—Joseph Spicer, jun., P. M.
Westerly.—Jonathan Maxson.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh.—Isaac Titsworth
Salem.—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport.---Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield---Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson.---Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.---Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.---Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISCONSIN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 3.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 55.
TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, MARCH 19, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

ESSAY ON HUMAN HAPPINESS,

BY DOCT. A. L. SAUNDERS.

NO. II.

We are now prepared to enter upon our last question:—Is a course of virtue the path to happiness? for if it be, it must necessarily be the will of God to walk in it. Or, having proved the terms to be co-ordinate, we may propose the question conversely:—Is a course of virtue the will of God? for if it be, it must necessarily conduct to human happiness. Under either view of the question, the general proposition will be as follows:—God has willed human happiness, and he has willed it to be obtained by a course of virtue. God, then, is the author, happiness the end, and virtue the means.

Let us take the question before us in its first view, Is human virtue the means of human happiness?

Had we time, it might, perhaps, be expedient to enter into a definition of the terms; but we have not time, and I must refer, therefore, to the general understanding of mankind upon this subject, which I may do the more safely, because, though the terms virtue and happiness are strikingly comprehensive, there is no great difference of opinion either among the learned or the unlearned concerning their general outlines or more prominent characteristics.

The question, then, ought to be argued in relation to the happiness both of the individual, and of the community; or, in other words, to the happiness of man in his private and his social capacity.

Is the practice of virtue most contributory to a man's individual happiness? the libertine says no; and he seeks for it in his mistress whom he changes as often as he changes his dress. The glutton says no, unless a good city feast be virtue; for the soul of happiness, with him, consists in a haunch of venison and a brisk circulation of the bottle. The spendthrift says no, you may as well seek for happiness in a hay-stack; happiness, my dear sir, consists alone in gay attire and splendid equipage. The gamester, in like manner, says no; and he directs us to a pack of cards and a pair of dice. Even the miser joins in the general negative, and would fain persuade us that it resides in the meagre and miserable ghost that constitutes his own person, or the meagre and miserable pursuits to which his person is daily prostituted.

Now, all these have, no doubt, their respective enjoyments; but do they constitute happiness in any fair sense of the term? are they permanent? I do not say through life, but for four and twenty hours together. Many of them, on the contrary, are of that violent kind that they wear themselves out in an hour or two; and what is the state of the system before it recovers sufficient energy for a renewal? To say that it is as empty as the exhausted receiver of an air pump, would be to give a better character of it than it deserves. It is not empty; it is still full, full of bitterness or insupportable languor; sickness at heart, or sickness at the stomach. Even the miser, who, properly speaking, provides for a longer range of enjoyment than any of the rest of this group, is a victim while he is a worshiper—a sacrifice to anxiety while an idolator of mammon.

We are, at present, however, merely following them through a single day, but life is a series of days in its ordinary estimate of three score years and ten. And he who is a candidate for happiness must prepare himself not for a single day, but for the entire term: he must save his strength and proceed cautiously, for there is no race in which he may so soon run himself out of breath. His motto may perhaps be, "A short life and a merry one," and this, in truth, is the motto, and not the motto only, but the brief history of most of those whom we have thus far considered. For consumption, dropsy, gout, or chagrin, and suicide, make, not unfrequently, a woful havoc in their ranks before they have cleared two-thirds of the pleasurable career they have marked out for themselves.

Let them, then, have their motto if they will, but let them not boast that they have found out the specific for making life happy; for all that they have found out, is a specific for throwing both life and happiness away at the same time. They have had a few fitful bursts of enjoyment, but the price has been enormous—a costly birthright for a mess of pottage. He only can fairly boast of happiness, place it in whatever way you please, who, on casting up the account, can honestly say it has accompanied him through the long run.

There is another and a very different set of people, both in the higher and lower ranks of life, who, also, occasionally strive to persuade themselves that they are happy, and who are sometimes actually thought so by those around them, and these are the listless and idle, who loll and saunter life away as though it were a dream; and who, in truth, are more alive in their dreams than in their waking hours. Now, happiness consists in activity; such is the constitution of our nature, it is a running stream and not a stagnant pool. It shows itself under this form from the first moment it shows itself at all. Behold the happiness of the infant, or of the school-boy; he is full of frolic, he cannot contain the current of self-delight, for, in the bold significancy of vulgar language, it runs out at his fingers' ends.

Upon the whole, the listless and the idle have less pretensions to happiness than the characters we have just surveyed—the libertine, the gamester, and the spendthrift; for, should you distil the aggregate of insignificant incidents that compose the whole tenor of the feeble life of the former, not a drop, perhaps, of the essence of happiness would ascend in the alembic.—They may be at perfect quiet, if you please, and look fat and in good liking, but this is not happiness; for if so, capons and Cappadocian slaves would have a better title to it than themselves.

Let us now apply these observations to the questions before us. No man can be happy without exercising the virtue of a cheerful industry or activity. No man can lay in his claim to happiness, I mean that happiness that shall last through the fair run of life, without chastity, without temperance, without sobriety, without economy, without self-command, and consequently without fortitude, and let me add, without a liberal and forgiving spirit. The whole of this follows as the necessary result of our argument. The exercise of these virtues may, perhaps, cost a man something at the time, but the full scope and aggregate of his happiness depends upon the exercise. It is a tax upon the sum total that must be regularly paid to secure the rest.—And it ought never to be forgotten that we are so much the creatures of habit, that the more we are accustomed to the exercise, like an old garment the easier it will sit upon us.

But these are private virtues, and only a few of them. Man, has also, if he would be happy, to practice a still longer list of public virtues, and he cannot be happy without practising them. Or, in other words, (for I am now to consider him in a social capacity,) the happiness of the community to which he belongs, and of which his own forms a constituted part, could not continue without his practising them.

He may steal, indeed, from his neighbor, and hereby increase his means of gratifying some predominant passion; but then his neighbor may also steal from him in return, and to a greater extent; and his happiness, therefore, (ever regarding it in the aggregate,) is connected with his exercising the virtues of justice and honesty.—He may break his promise, or lie to his neighbor upon a point in which his own interest seems to be concerned; but then his neighbor may also return him the compliment, and in a way in which his interest is still more deeply concerned; and his interest, therefore, or which is the same thing, his happiness obliges him to practice the virtue of veracity.

It is not necessary to pursue the catalogue. Man is by nature a social being, every one is purposely made dependant upon every other; and consequently, the happiness or well-being of the whole, and of every one who constitutes an integral part of the whole, must be the same happiness. Yet, as the happiness or well-being of the individual demands in his private capacity, as we have already seen it does, a system of private abstinences or restraints, the happiness or well-being of society demands a more extensive system of public duties of the same kind. We must consent to relinquish a part of our liberty, a part of our property, a part of all our personal propensities and appetites, or the well-being of the society to which we belong, and consequently, our own social well-being could not continue. We may, indeed, take ourselves away from society and live in the solitude of the forest, but our happiness is bound up in social life, and whatever is the cost, it is consistent with the same happiness that we pay it.

Free-thinkers are accustomed to sneer at the precepts of the Bible which inculcate upon us the virtues of self-denial and mortification in the present life, in order to our making sure of a life of uninterrupted happiness hereafter.

But if there be any degree of truth in the remarks now offered, they find themselves called upon to practice a similar restraint and denial, even in the purchase of present enjoyment. And the analogy is so striking between the natural and moral government of the Deity in this respect, that Bishop Butler has forcibly laid hold of the same argument, not only in vindication of the Gospel precepts upon this point, but in illustration of the paramount importance of our attending to them if we would be wise to our future and everlasting interest. He says, "Thought and consideration—the voluntary denying ourselves many things which we desire—a course of behavior far from being always agreeable to us, are absolutely necessary to our acting even a common-decent, and a common-prudent part, so as to pass with any degree of satisfaction through the present world, and be received upon any tolerably good terms in it. Since this is the case, all presumption against self-denial & attention to secure our HIGHER INTEREST is removed. The constitution of our nature is as it is. Our happiness and misery are trusted to our conduct, and made to depend upon it. Somewhat, and in many circumstances, a great deal too, is put upon us either to do or to suffer as we choose. And all the various miseries of life which people bring upon themselves by negligence and folly, and might have avoided by proper care, are instances of this; which miseries are beforehand just as contingent and undetermined as their conduct, and are left to be determined by it."*

It is from this common consent to put a restraint upon our personal feelings in the pursuit of relative pleasures, from this social impulse of our constitution with which we are so wisely and benevolently endowed, that every man belonging to the same state or community, becomes a part of every man, and cannot, even if he would, be an indifferent spectator of the woe or the weal of his neighbor. And hence arises the sacred bond of sympathy or fellow-feeling: "And true self-love and social are the same." While, as the line is drawn still closer, and we associate together more frequently and more intimately, we become, from the great and powerful principle of habit, still more kindred parts of each other. And hence, the origin of the higher public virtues of patriotism, generosity, gratitude, friendship, conjugal fidelity, parental love, and filial reverence; the exercise of all which, in our relative situations of life, whether we contemplate it at the time, or whether we do not, is, by our own constitution, or which is the same thing, by the will of the great Creator, rendered essential to our individual happiness.

Mr. Pope finely compares this origin and spread of the different circles of private and public virtues from the salient point of self-love, or the desire of individual happiness in the breast, to the series of circles within circles excited on the bosom of a still and peaceful lake by the throwing of a pebble, while all nature smiles around, and from this very agitation the face of the heavens is reflected with an additional degree of lustre.

> "Self-love but serves the virtuous breast to wake,
> As the smooth pebble stirs the peaceful lake;
> The center moved, a circle straight succeeds,
> Another still, and still another spreads
> Friends, parents, neighbors, first it will embrace,
> Our country next, and next all human race;
> Wide and more wide the overflowing of the mind
> Takes every creature in, of every kind;
> Earth smiles around in boundless beauty dressed,
> And heaven reflects its image in his breast."

We stand in need, then, of no præcognitia, or innate ideas of no fanciful instinct whatever, arguing as intelligent beings, and fairly exercising the discursive faculty of reason—we come to the clear conclusion that virtue is the path to human happiness. The case, indeed, is so manifest, that while many of the instincts we actually possess, are often tempting us against such a conduct and such a conclusion whenever reason is applied to, we never fail to return to the same established dictum.

---

*Analysis (Butler's,) of Religion, Natural and Revealed, part I. chap iv.

Whatever may be my religious notions; whatever my creed of propriety—deliver me from the contaminating influences of the person who will disturb a religious meeting.

ZENO.

MONTHLY SERMONS,

BY

A VILLAGE PASTOR.

(MARCH, 1841.)

NO. III.—ONE PERFECTION ARGUMENT TESTED.

Romans Vii: 15, 22. Verse 15; But what I hate, that do I. Verse 22; I delight in the law of God after the inward man.

In this chapter, Paul demolishes the pleasing superstructure of the Jew who rested in the law, and he thus prepared the way for those exclamations of holy triumph, (contained in the 8th chapter,) in view of complete and certain salvation for all who believe in Jesus.

It has long been the prevailing opinion among evangelical christians, that from the 14th verse to the end of the chapter, the exercises of the regenerated man are described. But some are found, eminent for piety and learning, who suppose that no reference is here made to christian experience.

It is not proposed to enter upon the wide field of discussion which here opens before us. I have before me a single object to which I solicit attention; I design to test one of those arguments which are urged to defend the position that christian experience is not here described. The argument to which I allude, is this, viz:—

"Language equally strong is applied to the sinner in other parts of the Bible."*

By "the sinner," we are to understand the impenitent sinner—the unrenewed man; and by the phrase, "language equally strong," is intended, that which as strongly indicates christian character, or, a right state of heart towards God.

From the closing part of the 7th of Romans I have selected two expressions, which I propose to compare with four passages from other parts of the Bible, which PRESIDENT MAHAN, of the OBERLIN INSTITUTION, OHIO, has adduced in support of the argument—that, "Language equally strong is applied to the sinner in other parts of the Bible."

I. Rom. vii: 15. BUT WHAT I HATE, THAT DO I.

Those things done by Paul, which he hated, were wrong.

It is clear, therefore, that he hated evil. The impenitent sinner may disapprove of his sins, he may be ashamed of them, he may wish a thousand times that he had not committed them; but does he hate them? He may hate their bitter consequences, but does he hate them?

To love and to hate, are not the mere decisions of conscience, approving or disapproving of actions; they are exercises of the heart.

It is the characteristic of those who love the Lord, to hate evil: they hate every false way. It is the christian, and the christian only, who says,

> "I hate the sins that made thee mourn,
> And drove thee from my breast."

Hatred to sin, when felt in the lowest degree in which it can exist, is unspeakably superior to the highest disapproval of the conscience, abstractly considered. The one, often awes and sways the intellect of the enemy of God; the other, is never known except to the heart of the friend of God. The expression of Paul, "But what I hate, that do I," has every appearance of teaching that Paul hated his evil actions.—It contains, therefore, a strong indication, that during the period to which, in the 15th verse, he alludes—he did love God. I have never been able to find language equally strong, applied to the sinner in other parts of the Bible.

We will now test the strength of the other expression of the apostle;—(verse 22.)

II. I DELIGHT IN THE LAW OF GOD AFTER THE INWARD MAN.

It is admitted that the term, "the inward man," as viewed by itself, may possibly designate merely the conscience. But Dr. Scott observes; "By the inward man the apostle must mean the soul as renewed by divine grace. He alone uses the term, and he uses it concerning believers only." (See Rom. ii: 25—29. 2 Cor. iv: 13—18.—Eph. iii: 14—19.)

The entire sentence, "I delight in the law of God after the inward man," compares most beautifully with the following scripture;—The first psalm, in pronouncing benedictions on the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful—declares of him, "But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night." In the 97th verse of the 119th Psalm, David, after having recorded, "I have seen an end of all perfection," fixes his eye on the exceeding broad commandment of God, and exclaims, "O how love I thy law!" After describing the heart of the wicked as insensible, the psalmist adds—'But I delight in thy law."

The apostle's words, I delight in the law of God after the inward man, and these expressions of the psalmist, appear to perfectly harmonize, not only with each other, but also with that pithy description of the righteous which is given in the 37th psalm—"The law of God is in his heart."

If the apostle's hatred of his wrong actions was an exercise of his heart, it is natural to infer that his delight in God's law was also an exercise of his heart. In hating his evil deeds, and in delighting in God's law, he exhibited feelings precisely like those of David as expressed in the 113th verse of the 119th psalm, "I hate vain thoughts, but thy law do I love."

Before commencing our examination of the four passages which have been adduced as furnishing language equally strong, applied to the impenitent sinner, it should be mentioned that two of those quotations, the one from Ezek., and the other from Isa., were not applied originally to impenitent sinners as such, but to God's covenant people collectively. But it is conceded that however pious the hearts of individuals among them might have been, as a people they were in an impenitent state; and thus it is proper to say that the language which is there used, was applied to impenitent sinners. We will now examine the four passages:—

PASSAGE I. EZEKIEL, XXXIII. 32.

"And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but do them not."

This passage on its very front presents the idea, that in their professed attachment to Ezekiel's instructions, there was no heart work: all was mere hypocritical formality. Now read this verse in connection with the one immediately preceding; "And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they shew much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness. And, lo, thou art," &c.

PASSAGE II. ISAIAH, LVIII. 2.

"Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the ordinances of their God: they ask of me the ordinances of justice: they take delight in approaching unto God."

The first impression on the minds of some may be, that this language as strongly indicates a right state of heart, as the words which have been cited from the pen of Paul, and which constitute the basis of this discourse. But look again: the verse commences with the disjunctive "yet":—"Yet they seek me," &c. This is a plain intimation that something of importance immediately precedes, which must be carefully regarded, if we would correctly interpret the strength of the language of the second verse. The preceding words are, "Cry aloud, spare not: lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and shew my people their transgressions, and the house of Israel their sins. Yet they seek," &c.

Here is a determined and protracted course of wicked conduct specified as standing forth in palpable contradiction to their professed attachment to the commands of God: whereas the case of Paul appears to be thus,—viz: that he hated his own occasional wicked actions, regarding them as diametrically opposed to his prevailing feelings of heart, which were those of benevolent delight in the law of God. How vast the difference!

In the succeeding context, the house of Israel are represented as boastingly and fretfully recapitulating their good works, and they make fasting prominent.

The reply of God is, "Behold ye fast for strife and debate, and to smite with the fists of wickedness, to make your voice to be heard on high." All, all selfish. Nothing here like hating evil, and loving God's law. At the close of the chapter, after God had directed them how to keep a fast, and how to observe the Sabbath, he says, "Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord." Yes, then thou shalt do it in sincerity of heart, and not in mere pretence: then, thy delight shall be love. Clearly are we here taught, that the delight twice mentioned in the second verse of the chapter, though joined with seeking and asking, and a sort of approaching to God, was utterly spurious, the detestable cloak of a heart supremely selfish.

PASSAGE III. ST. JOHN, V. 35.

"He was a burning and a shining light, and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light."

Here the expression, "for a season," cautions us against supposing that their rejoicing was of the right kind. This phrase teaches us to class them with the stony ground hearers, who with joy received the word, but had not root in themselves. Here again also the context effectually guards us against all misapprehension. Christ says, (38th verse.) "And ye have not his word abiding in you, for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not." Again, (verse 42.) "I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you."

It remains to notice

PASSAGE IV. ROM. II. 17, 18.

"Behold, thou art called a Jew, and restest in the law, and makest thy boast of God, and knowest his will, and approvest the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the law."

From the clause, "and approvest the things that are more excellent," do we for a moment receive the impression, that the person whom Paul here supposes himself addressing, is a renewed man—a proper notice of the phrase, "restest in the law," must at once remove that impression; for this clearly defines the man to be a rejecter of Christ. The closing part of the chapter, especially the last two verses, will save every discerning reader from cherishing the idea, that the Jew who rested in the law, was a new man in Christ Jesus:—"For he is not a Jew which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh: But he is a Jew which is one inwardly," (delights in the law of God after the inward man,) "and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter: whose praise is not of men but of God." Having now examined the four passages from Ezek., Isa., St. John, and Romans, it is now left for you to decide, whether the language when properly compared with the context, as strongly indicates the exercises of a christian, as the language of Paul—"What I hate, that do I. I delight in the law of God after the inward man."

Perhaps some one will inquire, Does not the context in the 7th of Romans, as clearly designate that these expressions of Paul were designed to apply to the impenitent sinner, as the context thus qualifies the four passages which we have examined? If it were so, such a candid and learned expositor as the REV. ALBERT BARNES of Philadelphia, could not fail to have observed it. MR. BARNES says;—"The view which is here expressed of this chapter," (Rom. 7th.) as supposing that the previous part (verse 7—13,) refers to a man in his unregenerate state, and that the remainder describes the effect of the law on the mind of the RENEWED man, was adopted by studying the chapter itself, without aid from any writer."

REFLECTIONS.

1. We must not embrace a religious sentiment merely because those who advocate it, refer to a great many passages of scripture for its support. We must not be misled by the mere sound of words; the context must be examined, and scripture must be compared with scripture.

2. If we find any theory of religion which requires for its support, that the closing part of the seventh chapter of Romans be applied to the impenitent sinner, we cannot have confidence in the soundness of that theory.

3. Let each inquire:—What is my experience? Do I hate my wrong actions because they are opposed to God's holy law? Do I delight in the law of God after the inward man? If it be thus, may the Lord comfort your hearts, and sustain you in your contest against sin, until the hour of complete and final conquest.

Look to the Moral Law as the rule of action, but not as the source of peace, pardon, justification, or sanctification. Through Jesus may you obtain daily victory over sin, and thus be continually preparing for the achievement of that ultimate victory, which the purpose of God hath made sure to all who confide in Him who shed his own most precious blood for the remission of sins.

> "What though thine inward lusts rebel,
> "'Tis but a struggling gasp for life;
> "The weapons of victorious grace
> "Shall slay thy sins, and end the strife."
> "Thus will the flesh and spirit strive,
> "And vex and break my peace;
> "But I shall quit this mortal life,
> "And sin forever cease."

---

*President Mahan.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, March 19, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

On account of having more than our usual quantity of original articles in this week's paper, we shall omit several articles which we intended to prepare for the Register.—Our foreign news was crowded out last week to make room for the President's Inaugural Address. It is, however, of so important a character, that we present it this week. Our relations with England are to some extent critical. If we give credit to rumor, we should apprehend serious consequences. But we shall not be concerned for our peace till more decisive acts are taken by one nation or the other. We shall immediately lay before our readers any official act that shall be made affecting our internal or foreign relations.

UNITARIANISM.

We are quite willing that this subject should be canvassed in our columns, if there are those who wish to do it. From our knowledge of those who will probably exhibit their sentiments on this subject, we feel confident that nothing unkind will have place in any remarks made. The question will be discussed, and not the individuals. The exercise of a Christian temper in Theological discussion can never be dispensed with, without prejudicing the truths controverted.

CAPTIVES OF THE AMISTAD.

The friends of freedom, of christianity, will rejoice to learn that these captives, by decision of the Supreme Court of the U. S., have been set at liberty. This decision we regard as having an important bearing upon the subject of freedom. There are thousands more who are as much entitled to freedom as these, who, by the laws of Christian Legislatures, are chattelized, and bought, and sold as brute beasts. The friends of humanity may take courage to plead the cause of the dumb.

MANUFACTURE OF SALT.—We have transferred to our columns an able article on extending the manufacture of Salt, from the pen of our friend, WILLIS GAYLORD, Esq. It is a subject which is to claim the deliberate attention of the Legislature of this State at the present session. The article in reference, appears to have emanated from a mind well stored with a scientific knowledge of the subject, and we bespeak for it a candid perusal.

A CREDIT MARK FOR LOWELL, MASS.—"Over 9000 persons applied for admission to hear Prof. Silliman's lecture on Chemistry, at Lowell, recently." So says the "summary" of the papers. See how free labor and a thirst for knowledge are combined.

For the Register.

INDEPENDENCE OF OPINION.

MR. EDITOR:—It is not intended in this article to advocate the principle that no respect whatever should be had to the opinions of others; but that we should not make up our minds on religious, as on any other subjects, merely because other men have thought thus and thus; but should form our judgments upon the evidence belonging to the case, to which it is equally our right and privilege to have access.—The conclusions which other men have adopted concerning matters in which we are personally interested, and which it is our province and duty to investigate for ourselves, ought not to satisfy us. This rule will hold especially in things of a religious and moral nature. It is here that independence of thinking is of high importance to intelligent and responsible agents. And, yet, there is here a strong propensity in the multitude to follow in the train of thinking adopted by others—especially, if they are regarded as venerable on account of talents, virtue and experience. This reliance on the opinions of others, without personal investigation, is, doubtless, one main cause of the continued prevalence of error, and of those divisions which so sadly mar the beauty of Zion, and hinder the prosperity of the Christian cause. Various opinions and usages pass currently with many because they are sanctioned by great names, or because they can boast of antiquity.

If individual christians properly realized their obligation to search for themselves, and to form their own judgment "as those that must give an account," these opinions and usages, if not conformable to the scriptures, would often be detected and abandoned, as having no other than human authority for their support. What I wish, particularly to urge upon public attention, is the obligation which every man is under, as a reasonable and accountable being, to examine the principles and practices of religion for himself, and to form his own conclusions from the testimony which is furnished. It will be readily admitted by all enlightened persons, that a body of jurors being called and sworn to render judgment in a given case, from the evidence presented, are bound to found their opinion, each one for himself, upon the character of said evidence, and not upon the opinion adopted by their fellow jurors. The obligation to do so is equally obvious and sacred as the case in question. We may respect the judgment of others as far as the nature of the case will admit, and may often profit by the light which they may impart. At the same time, we are not to rest in their conclusions, simply because they have adopted them; but must look at the data upon which they have based their judgment, and adapt, or reject their opinions, as we shall find them, correct, or not, from our own investigations. "No prophecy of scripture is of any private interpretation:" but the evidence from God's word, like the light of the natural sun, is open and free for all. And God will bring us all into judgment for the belief we entertain, and will hold us responsible in proportion to the means of information which are possessed. It is not mantained that correctness of opinion in all things is essential to Christian character, or that all errors are equally aggravated. Particular circumstances may, doubtless, lessen or increase the blame of incorrect opinions of religion. At the same time, it is obvious that we are bound to think and act for ourselves, and not to leave matters of faith and practice to be decided for us by others; in as much as "every one of us must give an account of himself to God." It is high time that Christians were cured of the impropriety of committing their consciences to the safekeeping of others, and convinced of the necessity of determining for themselves what the Master has taught and required. If this obligation to independency of thinking were suitably felt, we should find the example of the "noble Bereans" more faithfully imitated, and as the natural result, we should see the cause of truth more thoroughly and extensively advanced.

C.

For the Register.

"THE PROPER UNITY OF GOD."

BROTHER BAILEY:—In the Register of March 5, the Rev. Jabez Chadwick says,—"I supposed that in this section, the Churches of the Seventh-day Baptists generally consider a belief in the Trinity indispensable to church fellowship. Therefore, as I am a conscientious believer in the proper unity of God, I can have no prospect of a particular connection with them." If Mr. Chadwick will mention some reasons why he regards it inconsistent for himself, as "a conscientious believer in the proper unity of God," to embrace also the doctrine of the Trinity—I will reply to him, if the Lord permit.

Yours truly,
JOSEPH R. JOHNSON.
De Ruyter, March 8th, 1841.

For the Register.

MY WIFE'S DREAM

She dreamed that she saw a distillery gliding over the country with a rail-car velocity. The plan was to have this flying paraphernalia of death stop for a little time at our village, then roll on, dashing and foaming, to scourge other villages. In front, was stationed a man, who from a trumpet of terrifying sound, announced the woes which the distillery would bring upon the people. In the rear, the black smoke went up, and all the gloomy horror of a genuine Giles establishment, was exhibited. The relation of the dream elicited from our family circle an expression of gratitude that neither our village, nor its vicinity, is cursed with a distillery.

But why do we sustain the license system which is the occasion of locating these antagonists of human happiness and life, in so many villages and neighborhoods?

A TEMPERANCE HUSBAND.
De Ruyter, 1841.

For the Register.

RIGHT INSTRUCTION TO THE AWAKENED SINNER.—Nothing can be more important. He begins to inquire, "What shall I do to be saved?" This question must be met tenderly, solemnly, faithfully. The Bible furnishes the answer—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." Faith in Christ must be proclaimed, plainly as words can state it, as the only hope of the sinner. Of course, we must tell who Christ is—must speak of his Deity, and of his humanity, and of his being "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world."

We must not direct the sinner to do any thing to fit himself to come to Christ.

We must not encourage him to suppose that he is doing any thing right in the sight of God, while he rejects Christ. We must guard him against supposing that his tears, his distresses, his resolves, can constitute any part of the ground of his acceptance with God.

We must instruct him that his language must be,

"In my hands no price I bring,
Simply to thy CROSS I cling."

"Who is sufficient for these things?"—May the Lord help us to instruct awakened sinners as we ought.

J. R. J.

For the Register.

BANKS BROKEN.

The following Banks under the General Banking Law, (Red Back,) have been thrown out by the Comptroller, and therefore the bills are good for nothing.

Miller's Bank, Clyde.
Farmer's Bank of Seneca County.
Tonawanda Bank.
New York City Trust and Banking Company, (fraud.)
Tenth Ward Bank, N. York City, (fraud.)
Staten Island " "
Washington " "
Erie County Bank, Buffalo.
Union " "
Bank of Commerce, "
Bank of America, "
Merchant's Exchange Bank, Buffalo.
Mechanic's " "
United States " "
Phenix " "
Bank of Western New York, Rochester.
Farmer's and Mechanic's Bank, Batavia.
Binghampton Bank.
Bank of Brockport.
Cattaraugus County Bank.
Bank of Lodi.
St. Lawrence Bank.
Manhattan Exchange Bank, N. Y. City.
Exchange Bank of Genesee County, Alexandria.
Allegany County Bank.
Middletown Bank, Orange County.
Delaware Bank, Delhi.
Farmer's Bank of Orleans County.
Genesee County Bank.
James Bank, Jamesville, Saratoga Co.

C. B. C.

REVIVAL RECORD.

Br. C. M. Lewis, of Verona, informs us that an interesting state of feeling exists in the bounds of the society where he labors. Some have already obtained a hope in Christ, and others are inquiring what they must do to be saved? Br. L. T. Rogers also informs us that a similar state of feeling is enjoyed at Jordan Plains.

Extract of a letter from Br. A. J. ELLIS to a friend in this village, dated DANBY, TOMP. CO., N. Y., March 9, 1841.

REVIVAL IN DANBY.

A blessed work of God is in progress in Ithaca, under the charge of Br. Blain of Syracuse. Whilst I have been presenting truth or preaching Jesus to the people in Danby, I have been ready to adopt the language of the Prophet:—"Behold the Lord's arm is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear." Christians have been quickened and made to rejoice whilst weeping for poor sinners, and sinners have been made to cry out, "Christians, pray for me! Jesus, thou son of David, save or I perish!" The results of the meeting in Danby, so far, are as follows: some 20 to 30 have been converted to God, and backsliders are daily returning from their wanderings, acknowledging that the way of the transgressor is hard. Whilst at the water's side one week ago yesterday, nine willing converts were buried in baptism by Eld. Gross.—Deep solemnity rested upon the minds of God's children and anxious friends. Salvation came to the water's side, and the weeping sinner was made to rejoice in the glory of God. Fourteen of the number have trod the verge of Jordan, and more are expected soon to obey the Savior in his ordinances. The work of God is going on. There were a great number out for prayers last evening. Children that have been converted to God during this meeting, would go to the father and weep for him and pray for him whilst he was on the anxious seat—brothers over sisters—and sisters over brothers—and a melting time it was. The proud Universalist was heard to cry out in the agony of his spirit, "I have sinned away the day of grace and there is no mercy for me." I rejoice that I have the privilege of pointing sinners to the Savior.—I rejoice that I have some friends left in De Ruyter who have not been led away by the alluring schemes of Infidelity. And let me say to you, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ with all your hearts, then your peace shall be like a river, wider and deeper, and your righteousness like the waves of the sea, successive one after another, until you arrive safe in the broad bay of Heaven.

REVIVAL IN INDEPENDENCE.

The revival mentioned in my last has been a glorious work. The spirit of the Lord has been poured out here in a bountiful manner, and we trust that the spirit has not yet left the place. Many are still enquiring what they must do to be saved.—Amongst those who keep the Sabbath, there are but few over ten years of age but have embraced the Savior. A goodly number of our first-day friends are converted. One or two have embraced the Sabbath—others are inquiring. Union and harmony prevails. Twenty-two have united with the church—some more will probably join with us soon. Pray for us. Yours, &c.

JOHN P. LIVERMORE.
Independence, March 11th, 1841.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Six days Later from Europe.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM-SHIP PRESIDENT.

The arrival of the Steam-ship President, Capt. Roberts, after a very stormy and unpleasant passage, has put us in possession of London dates to the 9th, and Liverpool to the 10th of February.

The President brings about fifty passengers, and a cargo valued at £50,000.

China.—An overland mail had arrived, bringing dates from Macao to the 3rd of Nov., and from Chusan to the 24th of Sept. Affairs remained in the same posture that the last previous advices left them. The British still retained Chusan, which proved very sickly—nearly two thousand of the troops landed there being on the sick list.

Commissioner Linn has been deprived of all authority, but petitions the Emperor for mercy, and advises him not to give way to the English, but tire them out by delay.

The intelligence from India brings further accounts of the success of the British arms. A brilliant victory had been obtained on the Scinde, over 4000 natives, by Lieut. Col. Marshal, with a force of only a thousand, mostly Sepoys. Five hundred of the enemy were killed.

The Duke of Wellington has been sick again—but has recovered.

In the House of Commons, on Monday, February 9th, Lord Stanley proceeded to state the facts relating to the destruction of the Caroline, to sketch the negotiations which had been had upon the subject, and to set forth the proceedings which had attended the arrest of McLeod, and the correspondence which had passed between Messrs. Fox and Forsyth upon the subject.

"The question, then, "said Lord Stanley, "which he wished to put was: that, inasmuch as negotiations had commenced upon the subject of the burning of the Caroline since January, 1838, between her Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States, he wished to ask, in the first place, whether her Majesty's Government would have any objection to lay on the table the entire correspondence which had taken place upon the subject of the Caroline?—and, also, whether the despatches had all been received which had been referred to by Mr. Fox in the recent accounts, and particularly that which had been transmitted on the 29th of December last, announcing the apprehension of Mc Leod? He begged to ask, farther, whether her Majesty's Government had taken any steps toward procuring the release of Mr. McLeod from his present confinement, and, if so, whether they would lay upon the table the nature of those steps, and the correspondence which had passed upon this subject between the Government of the United States and Her Majesty's Ministers?"

Lord Palmerston in reply, said that "he thought it would not be expedient, in the present state of the question, to lay upon the table the correspondence relating to the capture and destruction of the Caroline, until that correspondence was brought to a final close"—[hear, hear.]

In corroboration of a remark made by Lord Stanley, the Viscount said he believed that McLeod was not a member of the party that was concerned in the destruction of the Caroline.

He went on to say that the American Government had chosen to treat this matter as one to be decided between the two Governments, instead of by the local authorities; and that this was the ground on which they were entitled to demand redress from the British Government for the acts of its subjects, as had been done by their Minister in the case of the Caroline.

Lord Stanley repeated a question which he considered to be of the deepest interest. That question was, "whether the noble Lord, Palmerston, had taken any steps, and if so, what those steps were, for the protection and liberation of Mr. McLeod"—[hear, hear.]

The Secretary said, in reply, that "he trusted the House would suppose that her Majesty's Government had already sent certain instructions, but until the correspondence upon this subject had concluded, it was impossible to send any instructions that could be final. He hoped the House would believe that the Government would send Mr. Fox such farther instructions as they might think it their duty to do; at the same time he was not prepared to state what the nature of those instructions was"—[hear.]

Mr. Hume then made some remarks, stating in the first place, the fact that in Janury, 1838, a letter from Mr. Stevenson had been laid upon the table in the House of Representatives "in which the burning of the Caroline was characterized in very strong language" and in which "Mr. Stevenson denied he had ever been informed that the expedition against the Caroline was authorized or sanctioned by the British Government." "Now," said Mr. Hume, "from May, 1838, the time when that letter had been written, up to this hour, no answer had been given to that letter, nor had any satisfaction been given by the British Government upon this subject." He then alluded to a letter from Mr. Stevenson, July 2d, 1838, stating that "he did not wish to press the subject farther; but if the Government of the United States wished him to do so, he prayed to be informed of it." "It appeared," he said, "that the Government of the United States had been ignorant of any information that could lead them to suppose that the enterprise against the Caroline had been undertaken by the orders of the British Government or by British authority."

Mr. Hume therefore hoped that no discussion would take place until all the papers connected with the matter were laid before the House.—He wished to know what the nature of those communications was with Mr. Stevenson and her Majesty's Government, which had induced him to act as he had done.

Viscount Palmerston said that he rather thought that his honorable friend would find in that correspondence that instructions had been given by the American Government to Mr. Stevenson to abstain from the subject farther—[hear.]

With regard to the letter of Mr. Forsyth, he (Viscount Palmerston) begged leave to say that the case stood thus:—In the case of the American citizens engaged in invading Canada, the American Government disavows the acts of those citizens, and stated that the British authorities might deal with them as they pleased—[hear, hear,] and that there were persons concerned in this undertaking who were not in any degree entitled to the protection of the United States—[hear.]

But in the other case they treated the affair of the Caroline as one to be considered as that of the Government, and in fact assumed it to be altogether a Government transaction, and not to be left upon the responsibilities of individuals. Until, therefore, the British Government disowned those persons concerned in the destruction of the Caroline, in the same manner as the American Government had disavowed their citizens in the other case, he conceived that the American Government had adopted an international responsibility in the late detension of Mr. McLeod, and could not, therefore, change their ground upon this question—[hear, hear.]

Sir R. Peel wished to ask the noble Lord a question, relating to a matter of fact. He believed that, in the expedition which had been formed for the destruction of the Caroline, certain officers who held commissions in her Majesty's army and navy were concerned in that affair, and that some of these officers had, in the execution of the orders which were issued, received wounds.

The question he wished to ask was, whether or not her Majesty's Government had thought proper to award pensions to those officers corresponding in amount with those which were usually granted for wounds received in the regular service of her Majesty?

Lord J. Russell said that he was not aware of any pensions having been granted to those officers who were wounded in the expedition against the Caroline.

Mr. O'Connell was sorry that his honored friend (Mr. Hume,) had taken such a course, because he, (Mr. O'Connel, thought upon this subject, at all events, there ought to be a unanimity of feeling—[hear, hear.] He thought that every exertion should be made to have Mr. McLeod saved, as he had acted under the command of the officers of her Majesty's Government, and it was in the strict performance of his duty that he had incurred the danger with which he was threatened—[hear, hear.] Whether those orders had been right or wrong, this Government was bound to give him every protection possible—[cheers from all parts of the house.]

News of the Day.

From the New Yorker.

LATEST FROM WASHINGTON.

Rumors of War are rife at Washington. Nothing official has yet transpired; but the current report is that the British Embassador, Mr. Fox, received instructions by the steamship to make a peremptory demand of the prompt liberation of McLeod, and in default thereof, to threaten unpleasant consequences. Some accounts add that he is instructed to demand his passports. Nothing will probably be known officially for some time; but the new Administration is intently engaged with the subject of our relations with Great Britain, to the exclusion of almost every thing else.

We understand that the first cursory examination of the several Departments has convinced the new Cabinet that an early assemblage of Congress is absolutely necessary, and the proclamation of the Government summoning it to meet in May or June, may be looked for within the next week.

A lamentable personal difference arose in the Senate on Tuesday, on the discussion of the resolution dismissing Blair & Rives from the office of Printers to the Senate.—Mr. Clay, of Ky., had remarked in the debate that the unceasing, envenomed scurrility and slander of the Globe, and the personal character of its Editor, (Blair,) rendered its continuance as an organ of the present majority of the Senate impossible. To this remark, Mr. King, of Ala., replied in a bitter personal attack on Mr. Clay, asserting that in morals, integrity, reputation and standing that Editor was nowise inferior to his assailant.—Mr. Clay retorted that he could view this in no other light than a studied personal insult, and as such he pronounced it "false, unjust and cowardly." Mr. King rose in great agitation, and barely said—"Mr. President, I have no reply to make—none whatever." He immediately sat down and wrote a challenge to Mr. Clay, which was delivered by Mr. Linn of Mo. All this passed rapidly in the Senate Chamber, while that body was in session! It is understood that Mr. Archer the new Senator from Virginia, was to second Mr. Clay. A citizen of New York, named Origen Bacheler, promptly lodged information at the Police of Washington, by whom Mr. Clay was arrested and bound in the sum of $5,000 to keep the peace. It is understood that warrants are out for the other parties interested. But these cannot prevent a duel out of the District after the Senate shall have adjourned.

No nominations, other than for the Cabinet, have yet been acted on by the Senate, the protracted resistance of the minority to the dismissal of Blair & Rives having prevented and still preventing Executive Sessions this week. It is understood that few nominations will at this time be made, save to fill actual vacancies. The following are reported.

Gen. Waddy Thompson, of S. C., Minister to Mexico.

Hon. C. B. Penrose, of Pa., Solicitor of the Treasury.

Hon. Ogden Hoffman, of N. Y., Southern District Attorney.

Hon. James Todd, Collector at Philadelphia.

Hon. Levi Lincoln, Collector at Boston.

Solomon Lincoln, Esq., Marshal for Massachusetts.

James Donaghe, Esq., Collector at New-Haven.

The latest report affirms that Hon. Edward Curtis will probably be Collector for this Port, and Dr. John S. Bowron, Surveyor.

Decision of the Amistad Case.—Mr. Justice Story, at Washington, on Tuesday pronounced the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Amistad prisoners, (negroes,) claimed by Spain as criminals and fugitives from Havana. The decision is adverse to the claim and in favor of the prisoners, who must forthwith be set at liberty. It affirms the judgment of the District Court below, in every respect, save that clause which orders the restoration of the prisoners to Africa by the Federal Government. The conduct of Lieut. Gedney of the revenue Cutter in taking possession of the Amistad is approved, and his claim of salvage sustained. Such is the substance of the decision of the highest judicial tribunal. It was unanimously rendered; no dissenting opinion being indicated. So this long vexed question is set at rest.

P. S. Mr. Justice Baldwin, of Pa., is said to have dissented.—New Yorker.

Sudden Death.—At the large ball given in Portland, in the Exchange Hall, on the 4th inst., before the dancing had begun, Mr. William Parker having led his partner to the floor for the purpose of taking part in the first dance, fell suddenly to the floor, and was carried out of the room. A surgeon was immediately called, and he found lifeless.—N. Y. Spectator.

Myron Holley is dead! This eminent citizen, accomplished scholar, and noble man, expired on Friday morning, at his residence on John street, in this city, at the age of sixty two, carrying with him to the grave the love and regret of all who knew him. The public services of Mr. Holley are engraved upon the state in lines as enduring as Lake Erie and the Hudson, while his private virtues and benevolence will live in the hearts of his friends and acquaintances, until they cease to beat.—Rochester Democrat.

A Strike for Wages.—On one memorable day, near the close of February, the wheels of government in the great and flourishing republic of Texas were brought suddenly to a stand-still; the motion of public affairs was as effectually stopped as that of a clock would be by the dropping of the weights, or of a locomotive by running into the side of a steep hill. It was not that the President and Vice President was dead, or the heads of departments all stricken down with paralysis; neither was the Congress dispersed by a Mexican invasion; but the clerks in the departments, one and all, sent in their resignations. There was no body to audit an account, copy a despatch, or make an entry in the books of the Government. And the reason why they did this thing was that their salaries were too small to afford them a living. It was literally a strike for increased wages.

Fortunately, Congress had not yet adjourned, although a resolution for adjournment had been agreed to, and the very next day was to see it complied with. The resolution was rescinded in great haste, the salaries of the clerks were raised, the wheels set once more in motion, and the Senators and Representatives went home rejoicing.—N. Y. Spectator.

From the West Indies.—Kingston papers and intelligence from all parts of Jamaica have been received to the 20th February. The affairs of the island are generally prosperous, and the Royal Gazette says that increased immigration is all that is necessary to secure its opulence and well being. The emigrants from the United States have done much, by their vigor and enterprise, to arouse a similar spirit throughout that country. Three hundred Scotch emigrants had recently arrived, under a contract that each family should be provided with a cottage, lands and all the necessaries of life, and their children be instructed in all the branches of elementary education.

A mine has been discovered in Jamaica, the ore of which yields upwards of 40 per cent of copper.

An attempt was made on the night of the 3d ult., to burn the town of Lucea.

In Trinidad, the weather has been rather unfavorable to the commencement of the sugar crop, but laborers are increasing, and the population are as contented and peaceable as can be expected. Within the last years 5,398 persons have come in as immigrants.

In Barbadoes, the prospects for the next crop are very unfavorable, and provisions of all sorts have been extremely scarce, so much so, that the "Barbadian says that without the importations from America, a famine must have ensued." The Legislature of the Colony has been reviewing their judicial system, and passed an act providing for the appointment of a chief justice. It is expected that the office will be filled from the bar of the Colony.

From the Western State Journal.

SALT.

MR. SMITH:—I perceive by your 'Journal,' as well as by the procedings in the State Legislature, that an effort is to be made to extend the manufacture of Salt; and that, for the accommodation of the several districts of Salina engaged in the production of this indispensable article, new wells have been or are to be opened, at such points as shall be deemed most proper or practicable. I perceive, also, that some little feeling is excited by a proposition to open a new series of salt lots, on the plain west of the creek; and one of the objections urged is the distance from the sources of Salt water. Into the propriety or impropriety of this measure, I shall not now enter. That the extension of the manufacture of Salt is a thing to be desired by the State, and by the citizens of this county, will scarcely be disputed. Nature has placed in the town of Salina a source of inexhaustible wealth—its developement is in our hands. There can be no question, that there can be Salt water enough furnished from the Salina Springs to manufacture as much as can possibly be disposed of, even were the quantity a supply for the Union. By a proper course of measures at home, and by negotiations with other States, when necessary to make way for the extension of the manufacture, is the duty and the business of others and for which they will be held responsible by the People. My present object is to give some reasons for my belief, that Salt water may be found in any desirable quantity much farther south than has yet been attempted in the Onondaga valley.

To be understood, it may be necessary to glance at the geological structure of the district; and such is the regularity of the strata, as we ascend in the series, that there can scarcely be a mistake in their position or order from Niagara to Utica, by any one who has paid attention to the subject. Beginning with the red sandstone, that forms the southern shore of lake Ontario, we find lying above this Protean group of calcarious shales and lime-stones, which forms the Falls of Niagara and Rochester, and is prolonged eastward across the counties of Wayne, Cayuga, Onondaga, &c. Above, and lying on this, is what is called the Saliferous group, divided by Prof. Vanuxem as follows: 1st, the red shale; 2d, the lower gypseous shales; 3d, the gypseous deposite, which embraces the plaster quarries, the copper shaped cavities, and the vermicular dime rock; and 4th the magnesian deposite. Above the saliferus group comes the Water Limes, followed by the singular strata of white coarse sandstone, called the Oriskany Sandstone. This is succeeded by the Encrinal Limestone, in which are the split rock quarries, as well as those of Auburn and Jamesville. This series of limestone is followed by the Marcellus shales, a mass of some seven or eight hundred feet in thickness, in which is excavated the beds of the beautiful chain of lakes that add so much to the scenery of Western New-York; and above this is the Tully Limestone, the last strata of lime below the coal series, and above which it is not necessary now to go.

The dip of all these various strata, is to the south, at the average rate of about 50 feet to the mile; of course our acquaintance with their nature is in most instances confined to their northern termination or outcrop, save where they have excavated into the deep vallies which intersect the district from north to south, of which those of the Onondaga and Cayuga are most conspicuous, and I may add important, as it is at the northern termination of these two vallies the salt springs of Salina and Montezuma are found.

From the nature of the country around and from the character of the various strata of diluvial matters passed through in the numerous borings made for salt water in Salina and Montazuma, there is no doubt that the salt water occupies a deep basin, excavated in the red shale nearly or quite to the limestones of the Protean group, and so far as our present evidence extends, we are warranted in believing that the basin or rather excavation, is prolonged to the south and with an increasing depth, until cut off by the natural dip of the sporry or encridal limestones.

The reasons for this opinion are found in the geological character of the country, and the fact that all the excavations made in the shales of the district have their deepest part at some distance from their northern extremity. This is seen at once by an examination of the beds of the lake in which the increase of depth is much more gradual from the northern than the southern ends, showing that in the former case the original strata determine the increase, while in the latter case the masses of diluvial matter that have partially refilled these excavations determine and of course render the increase of depth more abrupt and irregular. In several instances this excavation has been stopped by the intervention of a border strata, of which it is enough to adduce the southern extremity of the Onondaga valley, the southern prolongation of which was evidently arrested by the Tully Limestone, which at the present moment forms the bed of the northernmost Tully lakes, and the barrier which prevents their being drained to the north instead of the south.

The valley of the Onondaga is divided by the action of natural causes into two sections; the first of those consisting of the excavation originally made in the red shale and gypseous formations, all which extended south until arrested by the natural dip of the upper or mountain limestone, that in which the Onondaga quarries are situated; and the second part would be the one excavated in the Marcellus shales above the encrinal limestone, and continuing south, as mentioned above, until arrested by the Tully limestone. Where would this division of the valley take place? This question is of some consequence, if my views of the excavation are correct. The farthest point south to which the limestone can be traced in the valley, is near the farm formerly occupied by Mr. Webster, the Indian agent, and on both sides of the valley it there passes under the diluvial formation thrown upon it. That this is the encrinal or sporry limestone of Split Rock is evident not only from the well known character of the rock itself, but also from the presence of the Oriskany Sandstone, which is here found in thick masses and in its proper position. This point may then be considered as the southern termination of the first or Northern basin, separated from the Southern by the Onondaga limestones, as the Southern is from the Tioughnioga valley by the Tully limestone.

If the same laws have governed the excavation of the northern section which have prevailed in other cases, then the deepest part must be in the vicinity of Onondaga Hollow; although in this case the whole of the excavation, with the exception of the part now occupied by the slight depression of the Onondaga Lake, has been filled by diluvial & alluvial deposition. I think the whole this excavation may be considered as one vast reservoir of brine, filled to the level at which it is found in the marsh at Salina, or the various borings that have been made for it. In considering this question, it makes no difference as to what we may consider the origin of the brine; whether from streams passing over rock salt, or from the dissolving out of the muriate of soda from the hopper-formed rocks; as in both cases the excavation in the red shale is the reservoir nature has formed for its reception, and in which it must accumulate.

If this excavation which I have supposed, exists, (and if it does not, it forms an exception to the laws which have regulated the action of the excavating currents elsewhere,) it can scarcely fail to be filled in the manner supposed, and to its southern extremity. The brine as now found, is below the several strata of clay or marl that overlies the gravel which evidently forms the great mass of matter filling the excavation; and through this mass of gravel the brine will extend until it meets with some interposing impenetrable strata, such as now clearly marks its boundaries to the east, west and north. It is therefore clear, that boarings may be successfully made, at least as far as the Onondaga Hollow—the only additional obstacle to be encountered consisting in the greater elevation of the surface at Onondaga, over that of the Onondaga Lake; which, from the numerous springing up of Salt streams on the surface of the marsh, may be considered as nearly the level of the salt reservoir below. Various causes may contribute to make the brine in some parts of this reservoir stronger than in others; such as proximity to its source, &c.; but all the experiments made at the borings, both at Salina and Montezuma, prove that the greater the depth from the brine is drawn, the more rich in saline materials it will be.

Circumstances have induced me to give considerable attention to the structure of the Salt region of this county, as forming one of the most unfailing sources of wealth conferred on any part of the Empire State or the United States, and of the value of which we have as yet but very slight materials for forming a correct estimate. If my conjectures are correct, the time may come, when a large part of the plain stretching from Syracuse to Onondaga will be occupied as salt lots, or reservoirs for the manufacture of coarse Salt. Without any wish, however, to indulge in anticipations of this nature, I may still be permitted to add, that it might be well for the State to cause a boring to be made near the creek, and as far south as the Cinder road, and to such a depth as shall test the existence of Salt water in the valley thus far. The management or extension of the Salt works of this county is an affair of too grave moment to be mixed up with personal jealousies or political rivalries, and should be conducted solely with reference to the great and permanent interests involved. If the above remarks shall induce those who are better acquainted with the subject than I can pretend to be, to take new and more comprehensive views of the Salt manufacture, my object in penning these suggestions will be answered.

WILLIS GAYLORD.

Otisco, February, 1841.

TWENTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

CLOSE OF SECOND SESSION.

Business moved rapidly, as the session drew near its close.

Passage of the Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill.—In Senate, March 2nd.—This bill was reported, and passed with amendments. The marshals are allowed pay for their deputies, and marshals and district attornies in States where the State officers' fees are small, are allowed to retain $1500 of their fees, as compenstion, the rest to be paid to the treasury. The collectors are to be allowed $1000 salary, and $2000 fees, and a share of seizure and forfeitures.

Agreement with the Senate—In the House.—The House agreed to all the amendments offered in the Senate to the appropriation bill; so it passed and became a law.

Miscellaneous Business—Close of the House.—In Senate and the House, March 3rd The navy bill passed the House of Representatives, with important amendments, but was lost in the Senate. The heavy appropriations for the erection and repair of steamships has, also, passed. The army bill, Indian bills, and West Point bill passed the Senate.

The Senate then went into Executive session, the nomination before it being that of a Judge of the Supreme Court.

The Vice-President, Col. Johnson, took leave of the Senate in a very feeling and appropriate address.

Mr. Mangum immediately drew up a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, declaring that the thanks of the Senate were due, and were now tendered unanimously for the dignified and impartial manner in which he had discharged the duties of his office. In offering his resolution, Mr. Mangum paid the Vice-President the highest compliments. So also did Mr. Clay, both politicl opponents.

In the House, in committee of the whole, Mr. Wise in the chair, the closing business of the session rapidly progressed. The Senate amendments to the House bills were generally concurred in, and both Houses adjourned at 12 o'clock at night.

ORGANIZATION OF THE NEW SENATE.

Washington, Thursday, March 4.

The Senate convened in pursuance of notice from the President of the United States.

Mr. King, of Alabama, having been sworn in upon his appearing upon re-election, to a new term, was then elected President pro-tem, of the Senate.

Several other of the old members of the Senate were sworn in upon re-election, as were also two new ones a list of whom we have heretofore published.

The Vice-President having taken the oath of office, and assumed his place as President of the Senate delivered a very appropriate address.

Consul to Paris.—The Washington correspondent of the United States Gazette says: "I understand that Mr. Van Buren has appointed Dr. Martin, recently chief clerk in the State Departmet, to fill the situation of Consul to Paris, which has become vacant in consequence of the death of Mr. Brent."

Steamboats.—America and England have each 800 steam vessels, but in the year 1838, the accidents to English steamers were 165, and 80 lives were lost; while during the same year in America, the accidents were 272, and the loss of lives 1921!

Greenough's Statue of Washington.—A correspondent of the Boston Transcript, writing from Naples, Jan. 13 says:

"Greenough has finished his statue of Washington, which is of the colossal size, and a beautiful work. He is represented in Grecian costume, seated, holding a sheathed sword extended, with the handle forward in the left hand, expressive of resigning to the people his military command, whilst the right hand is elevated with the finger pointed upwards, to signify that to Heaven they are indebted for success in the use of it. The statue will be sent to America next summer, as soon as the ship of war shall arrive to receive it."

Hiram Wood, of Chili, Monroe co. for the crime of rape, has been sentenced to the State prison for life.

Mr. E. Dye, a few days since, near Hightstown, N. J. captured a large bald eagle, near seven feet across, wings included.

There are, according to the late census in the State of New-York, 15,621 persons engaged in the navigation of the ocean, lakes, canals, and rivers; 4029 revolutionary pensioners; 1057 persons who are deaf and dumb; 972 who are blind; 2327 who are insane; 563,060 pupils in the various literary institutions; and 43,715 over 20 years of age who can neither read nor write!

It is estimated that there are materials at the present time, in the various Navy Yards of the United States, sufficient to build 26 ships of the line, 40 frigates, and a number of steamers.

The inmates of a house in Small street, Philadelphia have been arrested on suspicion of having murdered a sailor, who was found dead in a bed in said house.

A man named James Reddy was burnt to death at Boston, by falling in the fire when intoxicated.

A man named Dauphin was killed in a duel at New-Oarlens, on the 21st ult. by his antagonist, named Nora.

It is ascertained, by actual measurement, that the depth of Seneca Lake is 553 feet.

The value of the manufactured goods brought by the President steamship, is said to be £500,000; besides which, she was obliged to refuse 200 tons of freight.

The total population of the State of New-York is 2,429,476.

The total amount of capital invested in manufactures in the State of New-York, is $52,069,856.

The revenue of Texas for the year 1840, is estimated at $3,000,000.

Capt. Charles W. Morgan has been appointed to the Command of the Navy Yard at Charleston, Mass.

A contribution of $550 for the benefit of the Orphan Asylum, was made at New-Orleans on the 31st Jan. after a sermon by the Rev. Dr. Breckenridge.

It is stated that McLeod will be removed to Albany for trial, as an impartial jury cannot be found in the West.

The Utica Observer says that a new article for stuffing cushions, sofas, mattrasses, &c. has been lately manufactured in that city.

The editors of the Journal of Commerce have received from the American Colony in Liberia, a present of sweet potatoes, Oranges and limes, grown in that colony.

Lord John Russell is reported to have said in debate, that he would be willing to confide the settlement of the Boundary Question to Gen. Scott alone in the conviction that he would render strict justice to both nations.

The slaves in Missippi outnumber the white population, by over 17,000.

At Rochester, on the 26th ult. a boy named Battles fell over a precipice 70 feet in height, and sustained no other injury than the dislocation of his ankle.

In Boston, on Saturday last several boys sold the old Inaugural Address of Thos. Jefferson, with Gen. Harrison's name attached to it.

The negro man who murdered Mr. Kirkpatrick, of Stewart co. Ga. was hung, agreeably to his sentence, on the 12th ult.

A number of suits have been commenced against the Baltimore banks, by the note holders.

We are glad to learn that the "panic" in relation to Red-back money is subsiding. The excitement has to a great extent been artificial. There are a few rotten Associations whose chin have been kept out of water by Brokers who sold one package of notes to redeem another. Such Banks will wind up, leaving the sound ones to discharge their functions and fulfil their engagements.—Albany Evening Journal.

Death of Benjamin Hazard.—It is with no ordinary regret, that we announce the death of Benjamin Hazard, of Newport, who expired yesterday morning. He was one of the last of the school of Rhode Island men, who appear to have been identified with our institutions, the Potters and Searls and Burrills and Bridghams of the State.—Providence Jouonal.

War Movements in Maine.—On the 3d instant, resolutions on the subject of repelling British aggression, were offered in the House of Representatives, and referred. We learn from the Portland Argus of the 15th inst., that these resolutions were taken up by the Senate on the 13th, and after being amended by inserting $1,000,000, instead of $100,000, for the defense of the State, were referred to the Boundary committee.

Sylvester's Reporter publishes a list of 152 banks which have failed, and swindled the community out of at least $38,000,000.

The debts owed by the several States is said to amount to the sum of $200,000,000! The annual interest at the rate of 6 per cent. amounts to $12,000,000!

Mr. Burritt, the learned blacksmith, recently delivered a lecture before the Lyceum, at Northampton, (Mass.) "which," says the Courier, "for literary beauty and performance, astonished all who heard him." Mr. Burritt is about 30 years of age, and still continues his manual labor, and pursues his studies. He is already master of more than fifteen different languages.

James G. Brooks, Esq., extensively known in early life as a Poet, and for the last fifteen years as Editor of different newspapers, after a long illness, died at Albany a few days since.

A race.—Last Saturday, in the violent gale, when the train on Long Island rail road arrived at Hicksville, on the rear of the train were a couple of baggage cars, which were detatched just before going into the depot. The fury of the wind immediately seized the two cars and sent them back upon the road. As soon as possible, a locomotive was started in pursuit, but it was only after a race of seventeen miles, in a thicket of trees upon a course in the road, that the fugitives were overtaken.—J. of Com.

Daily Prayer Meeting.—One year has elapsed since a United Morning Prayer Meeting of members of the Orthodox Congregational Churches was commenced in Park St. Vestry. On Wednesday morning last, a statement was made of the additions to eight of the 12 Churches, during the year, which were 284 by profession and 145 by letter—total 429—show an average gain of fifty members to each church. These facts afford great encouragement to continue that Morning Prayer Meeting, as one of the means of grace which God has evidently blessed.—Boston Recorder.

Mammoth Bones on the Kentucky River. It is stated in the late report of Mr. Stealey, the resident engineer on the Kentucky river, that bones of the Mammoth have been found in building every lock and dam on that stream. These bones were dug out of the bank of the river, never less than one hundred feet below the surface of the earth. Some of the tusks and teeth of these huge monsters of the antediluvian world, buried under the banks of the Kentucky, may be seen in the office of the Board of Internal improvement, at Frankfort.

HON. NATHANIEL GARROW of Auburn, long Marshal of the United States for the Northern District of New-York, died at his residence in Auburn, on the 3d inst., from a third attack of apoplexy, though in apparent health on the morning of that day.—Mr. Garrow had just been reappointed for a further term of four years.

Common Schools.—A Bill reported from the Committee on Colleges, Common Schools, &c., to the Assembly of this State, and which has been read twice and committed to a committee of the whole, and made the special order for last Friday, contains a section to this purport: That a school for colored children may be established in any city or town in the State, with the approbation of the Commissioners, and such school is put upon the same footing with the other common schools, as to public money, teachers, &c.

The Savannah Georgian of the 25th ult., stated that a Jewish Synagogue was consecrated in that city on the day before, by the Rev. Isaac Losser, of Philadelphia. The building was crowded with all classes of the community, who manifested a deep interest in the ceremonies of this ancient people. The service was performed in Hebrew.

The Rev. George Cookman, chaplain to the Senate of the United States, has been appointed a delegate from the American Bible Society, to represent that body at the next anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in May next.

From the Journal of Commerce.

STATISTICS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

In compliance with a resolution of the New York Assembly, the Clerk of that body on the 8th ultimo submitted to the House a detailed statement of the returns of the Census of the State of New York, as obtained from the Marshals of the Northern and Southern Districts. The same has been printed, by order of the House, and makes a pamphlet of 80 pages, large 8vo. Some of the footings are annexed. "It is proper to say," remarks the Clerk in an accompanying note, "that these aggregates are taken from the footings of the deputy and assistant marshals who were employed to take the census, and may not, in all cases be entirely correct. These footings are now undergoing a careful revision in the Department of State at Washington, which possibly might vary the result in some instances; but it is believed that the errors will be few and of but trifling importance."

NUMBER OF FREE WHITE PERSONS.

Under 5 years of age,	Males,	187,553
" "	Females,	180,689
Five and under 10,	Males,	158,059
" "	Females,	154,495
Ten and under 15,	Males,	139,653
" "	Females,	135,144
Fifteen and under 20,	Males,	130,461
" "	Females,	137,446
Twenty and under 30,	Males,	230,836
" "	Females,	226,650
Thirty and under 40,	Males,	158,251
" "	Females,	113,809
Forty and under 50,	Males,	97,496
" "	Females,	89,958
Fifty and under 60,	Males,	55,102
" "	Females,	53,526
Sixty and under 70,	Males,	30,887
" "	Females,	30,173
Seventy and under 80,	Males,	14,639
" "	Females,	14,292
Eighty and under 90,	Males,	3,961
" "	Females,	4,165
Ninety and under 100,	Males,	378
" "	Females,	517
One hundred & upwards,	Males,	47
" "	Females,	25

NUMBER OF FREE COLORED PERSONS.

Under 10 years of age,	Males,	5,990
" "	Females,	6,150
Ten and under 24,	Males,	6,363
" "	Females,	5,908
Twenty four & under 36,	Males,	5,689
" "	Females,	6,803
Thirty six and under 55,	Males,	4,218
" "	Females,	4,427
Fifty five and under 100,	Males,	1,463
" "	Females,	1,892
One hundred & upwards,	Males,	16
" "	Females,	43

Total population of the State, 2,429,476

NUMBER OF PERSONS EMPLOYED IN

Mining,	1,830
Agriculture,	456,475
Commerce,	28,595
Manufactures and Trades,	102,576
Navigation of the Ocean,	5,560
Navigation of Canals, Lakes & Riv's,	10,061
Learned Professions and Engineers,	14,231
Revolutionary Pensioners,	4,029

Death of the Secretary of State of New Jersey.—Judge James D. Wescott died at his residence at Trenton, on Tuesday last. Judge W. represented Cumberland county in the Legislature of that State for many years, and for many years has been Secretary of State of New Jersey.

Daring Robbery.—A most daring robbery was committed at Waterloo, U. C. Between 10 and 11 o'clock, a gang of five armed men entered the house of the Rev. Mr. Anderson, and after threatening him with assassination, robbed the premises of every article of value which fell in their way, including money, watches, fowling pieces, &c. After loading themselves heavily with plunder, the whole decamped toward the Niagara river, where a boat had been kept ready for a retreat, Lett must be on the border again.—Buffalo Com. Adv.

The Inauguration.—The correspondent of the Journal of Commerce gives the following account of the Inauguration. We had a fine day for the Inauguration, and every thing went off very well. The number of strangers was great,—perhaps not so great as at the first inauguration of General Jackson. The number of persons in and about the Capitol are estimated at from fifteen to twenty five thousand. The procession moved to the Capitol about 11 o'clock; at 12 o'clock the long procession, enlivened by many bands of music, and decorated with flags and banners, indicating the several sections of the procession, as well as the principles which they professed. The Log Cabin Clubs from different parts of the country were represented, and wore the decorations of their order.

The members of the new Senate attended in the Senate Chamber. Col. R. M. Johnson introduced the Vice President elect, John W. Tyler, and accompanied him to the Chair. The Judges of the Supreme Court then entered the Chamber, and afterwards, the foreign ministers and their suits and full dress, and many members of the House of Representatives. After the Vice President elect had taken the oath, he addressed the assembly in a few pertinent remarks, in relation to the duties he had assumed.

The President elect, escorted by the Committee of the House and Senate, then entered the Senate Chamber, after which he was accompanied by the whole body present to the eastern portico: from the platform in which General Harrison addressed the vast assemblage about an hour and a quarter, interrupted by frequent and hearty cheers. The oath was administered to him by Chief Justice Taney, when the big guns, the cheers of the multitude, waving their hats in the air, and the sound of martial music proclaimed that the work was finished. The portico was thronged with ladies—from every window on the Avenue, the white handkerchiefs waved, as the Procession passed. The procession returned from the Capitol to the President's House, where the President received the whole body of the People who chose to come. He did not shake hands with them—that tiresome ceremony being dispensed with. They passed before him, bowing without halting.

This ceremony occupied some hours.—An incident occurred during the speech, which elicited some applause. The people below cried out "off hats," but Gen. Harrison exclaimed,—"keep on your hats," "don't expose yourselves." Hats went on again, with few exceptions. The General spoke in a loud, clear and strong voice. He had the printed speech before him, pasted on leaves in a book.

The steam boat Great Britain, so favorably known on Lake Ontario, will no longer run as a passage boat. Her engines have been purachased by Mr. Tate, who runs a line of boats between Montreal and Quebec: the hull has been bought by the government and will be converted into a store ship.

You may trust a strange dog that professes friendship; not a strange man.

A man by the name of Crumb was killed on Tuesday last, near New-Orleans, by an elephant attached to a menagerie. It appears there were two of these animals in company, the deceased being the keeper of one to which he addressed some words; the other elephant immediately struck him with his trunk, knocking him and the horse on which he rode down, and taking him up in his mouth, crushed him to death. The elephant then became unmanageable and broke away; he had not been secured as late as 10 o'clock on Tuesday night.—Mobile Reg.

DIED,

In Homer, on the 15th inst. JASON HULL, aged 22 years.

LIST OF LETTERS.

J. P. Livermore, P. M. R. T. Green, P. M. (thank you.) J. B. Hibbard, P. M. Lester T. Rogers. H. Willson. P. M. C. M. Lewis, W. B. Brand. (thank you) Willet Stillman, P. M. Brayton Babcock. L. Vose, P. M. J. Kingerman, P. M. H. Harding, Edwin Stillman, (notices next week. We shall send you the paper.) S. S. Streeter, P. M. (your explanation is probably correct,) Levi H. Bond. (we will write you soon.) J. A. Potter. (we will do it.)

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Of R. T. Greene $2. vol. 2, H. Willson $2; cr. G. W. Maryott, vol. 2, Daniel Sexton $1, vol. 2, Caleb Church $1, vol. 2, Wm. Lieber $1,45, vol. 1, Leonard Ashcraft $2 vol 1, Ezekiel G. Potter $4,25, cr. John C. Frisbie $2,25, vol. 1. Amelia Green $2 vol. 2. William Clark $2 vol. 2, Doct. A. D. Bly $1,84 vol. 1. A. H Burdick, $4, cr. Leonard Babcock in full for vol. 1 & 2, Andrew Babcock $2 vol. 2, John T. G. Bailey $2, vol. 2, Levi H. Bond $6,50, cr. Thos. Van Horn, $2,25, Abram Batten $2. Samuel Cookman $2,25, vol. 1, ($1,50 retained.) A. Parker $1, J. P. Livermore $11; cr. N. R. Crandall, Joseph Clark each $2,25 vol. 1, W. S. Livermore $1,50. I. W. Green, J. C. Basset $2 each, Wm. Reynolds $1 vol. 2, Nathan R. Truman $2 vol. 2, Davis Rogers, 2d. $2 vol. 2, B. West $1 vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. A certain cure in all cases. Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

FOUND.

ONE Keg of dried PLUMS, on the Turn-Pike near my house, one and a half miles west of this Village. The owner can have them by calling and paying the expenses of this advertisement which is $1.

3w3. ELIAS BENJAMIN.

De Ruyter March 15, 1841.

Medicines! Medicines!!

TO FAMILIES.

S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public; for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s
MOTHER'S RELIEF.
JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT—
DR. McMUN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—
MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—
DOCT. BISHOP'S ANTI BILLIOUS PILLS. A HIGHLY VALUABLE FAMILY MEDICINE.

D. R. BURDICK,

WOULD respectfully inform the inhabitants of this town and the surrounding country, that he still continues to carry on the Cabinet Business, in all its various branches, at his shop directly opposite the De Ruyter Institute. He is prepared to execute all kinds of work in his line with neatness, promptness, and dispatch, such as Bureaus, Secretaries, Lockers, Sofas, Book-cases, Bedsteds, Tables, Stands, &c. &c. Most kinds of Lumber and produce will be taken in exchange for work, and even CASH will not be refused.

All kinds of House, Carriage, and Sign Painting, Glazing, Bronzing, &c. &c. will be executed on short notice.

DISSOLUTION.

THE co-partnership heretofore existing under the firm of Greene, Bailey, & Burdick, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business of the firm will be settled by James Bailey, who is duly authorized to settle the same,

JOEL GREENE,
JAMES BAILEY,
ROWLAND S. BURDICK.

De Ruyter, Feb. 25th, 1841.

POETRY.

From the Philanthropist.

A Parody

ON LINES SUPPOSED TO BE WRITTEN BY ALEXANDER SELKIRK.

I am monarch of nought I survey,
My wrongs there are none to dispute;
My master conveys me away
His whims or caprices to suit.
O slavery, where are the charms
That "patriarchs" have seen in thy face;
I dwell in the midst of alarms,
And serve in a horrible place.

I am out of humanity's reach,
And must finish my life with a groan;
Never hear the sweet music of speech
That tells me my body's my own.
Society, friendship, and love,
Divinely bestowed upon some,
Are blessings I never can prove,
If slavery's my portion to come.

Religion! what treasures untold,
Reside in that heavenly word!
More precious than silver or gold,
Or all that this earth can afford.
But I am excluded the light
That leads to this heavenly grace;
The bible is clos'd to my sight,
Its beauties I never can trace.

Ye winds, that have made me your sport,
Convey to this sorrowful land,
Some cordial endearing report,
Of freedom from tyranny's hand.
My friends, do they not often send,
A wish or a thought after me?
O, tell me I yet have a friend,
A friend I am anxious to see.

How fleet is a glance of the mind!
Compared with the speed of its flight!
The tempest itself lags behind,
And the swift winged arrows of light,
When I think of Victoria's domain,
In a moment I seem to be there,
But the fear of being taken again,
Soon hurries me back to despair.

The wood-fowl has gone to her nest,
The beast has lain down in his lair,
To me there's no season of rest,
Though I to my quarter repair.
If mercy, O Lord, is in store,
For those who in slavery pine;
Grant me when life's troubles are o'er
A place in thy kingdom divine. U.

Miscellaneous Department.

LIFE OF A NEWSPAPER—BY ITSELF.

My life is shortly told. My first impression was the sensation of a tremendous squeeze which instantly awoke me into life and thought. I was spread out to the light and a glow of intelligence completely pervaded me. My ideas were at first new, multifarious, and confused. Nations, politics, courts, wars, speeches, fightings, feasts, merchandize, marriages, deaths, dittie, &c. &c., made up my thoughts, which were various and mixed, and I lay in a silent state of wonder and amazement. I soon found found that I was but one of a large family that was ushered into the world by the same prolific mother. Our whole litter was laid in regular order in a pile; my situation being one of the first born, was particularly oppressed damp and uncomfortable. I had a silent intuitive, longing wish to get into the world, which was at length gratified. Morning and night came, and I was carefully folded, and laid, Moses like, in a basket, by an urchin who was called the carrier. The said carrier I soon found to be an object of interest and desire. He was soon accosted by an elderly looking man with threadbare rusty breeches: "Have you got a paper to spare this morning my boy?" asked Tightstring. "No, sir," was the short reply, and he trudged on muttering, "not for such as you, Old Gripe, you are the same chap that promised me some coppers for a paper the other morning, and han't paid me yet, you are too stingy to take the paper, but won't get another from me I guess." My brethren were now just leaving me, being deposited at their proper destinations, at length my turn came, and I was tucked into the crevice of a shop door. The first sample of the kind was not at all prepossessing. I had not been long in my new situation, when a reluctant apprentice swinging a key in his hand wistfully eyed me; and cast a look about him, feloniously seized and thrust me into his pocket. My rightful owner, by virtue of advance pay, being in sight, hailed and arrested the pilferer, and with threats compelled him to relinquish his prize. He entered his shop, and I soon found I was an object of some interest. After hastily drying me by the fire, in which process I narrowly escaped conflagration, he ran over me and fixed his eyes upon the sales at auction, advertisements, &c. I was then more particularly examined and dismissed with condemnation. Nothing but foreign news and cabinet, love stories and accidents by flood and field; "a newspaper should be a commercial report—one side at least should be devoted to prices current." I was then perishly thrown upon the counter, but as soon in requisition. A bare headed boy made his appearance, with a "please to lend me your paper a few minutes, just to look at the ship news?" The request was reluctantly granted, with something about the plague of paper borrowing, and a determination to stop it. I was soon borne to a neighboring house. The good old woman whose husband was at sea, eagerly sought the ship news, but was disappointed in her search. "How negligent these printers are," said she, "not a word of the wind Bird; they print of Poland and poetry, and fill their papers with advertisements, and that is all they care about." Miss now took her turn—She sought the stories, poetry, and marriages which in half an hour were all devoured with the wonder they put any thing else in their paper." An elderly lady now took me, who adjusting the spectacles, surveyed me a little while, declared me a "terrible uninteresting paper hardly a column of deaths, and not more than fifteen or twenty murders or accidents, &c." In this way I passed through all the hands of the family, and after being somewhat torn by the little ones was sent home. For three whole days I had no rest, but was continually borrowed and abused. At the end of this period I was supplanted by a new face, and was then discarded and thrown aside like all servants when they become useless. I was however, again resuscitated and employed as a wrapper to some merchandize sent into the country. There again I became an object of interest, went the rounds of the neighborhood and was a nine day's wonder. I am now quietly hanging up in a farmer's kitchen, from which I have written this brief memoir. I have seen much of the world, and I have learned that mankind are unreasonable and ungrateful; and that, in a world of great variety of tastes and wishes, it is impossible to please all.—Salem Obs.

SIEGE OF TROY.—The nine first years of war were consumed in various engagements of no great importance; the Greeks having, in that time, chiefly employed themselves in ravaging the territories of Priem and his allies. It is therefore true that the war of Troy continued ten years, but it is not true, as is commonly believed, that the city of Troy was besieged all that space; for it was not until the spring of the tenth year that the Greeks formed the siege.

They at first experienced the most vigorous resistance on the part of the besieged, who were commanded by Hector, his brother Deiphobs, and by several princes that had come to their assistance; such as Sarpedon, Rhœsus, and Memnon. The Trojans had even the advantage in several engagements, and made a great slaughter of the Greeks, but none of these were decisive.

At last, however, Hector, at the head of the Trojan, beat the enemy fairly from the field pursued them to their camp, forced the entrenchments, and set fire to their ships; and the victory seemed at last on the point of declaring for the Trojans. But Patroclus, the friend of Achilles, perceiving the extreme distress of the Greeks, advanced in this critical moment to their relief, with the troops of Achilles, reckoned the bravest of the Grecian army, rallied the Greeks, and repulsed the Trojans. Several of the best officers, on both sides, fell on the occasion; among the rest Sarpedon, slain by Patroclus & himself slain by the hand of Hector

Affairs now assume a different appearance. Achilles, furious for the loss of his friend, forgetting the former cause of his resentment, joins his forces to the rest of the Grecian army, beats the Trojans, and sacrifices on the tomb of Patroclus, twelve of the noblest prisoners taken by him in the engagement. He is now solely intent on fighting personally with Hector, whom he engages, and kills at last. But not satisfied with the death of his gallant enemy, he sullies the glory of his victory, by insulting, in the most ungenerous and savage manner, over his dead body which he drags at his chariot wheels around the city. Achilles himself is slain soon after by Paris; who in in like manner, falls in a short time by the hand of Philotetes.

REPUBLICAN VIRTUE OF WASHINGTON.

It may not generally be known that at the close of the Revolutionary War, certain officers of the American army tended the royal crown to Washington. The popularity of Washington at the time might have enabled him to accept the tender with comparative safety. The quarrel with Great Britain had in the first instance been against oppression, rather than against the principle of monarchy, and multitudes at the period referred to, before the advantages of republican institutions had been tested, might have been induced to believe that a limited monarchy, at the head of which Washington should be placed, would fully secure all the rights for which he had been contending. The noble and virtuous chieftain, whom no crown could have dignified, indignantly rejected the offer. His reply, as we learn from the National Gazette, has lately been brought to light by Mr. Sparks, a portion of which is subjoined.—Presbyterian,

"Sir,—With a mixture of great surprise and astonishment, I have read with attention the sentiments you have submitteed to my perusal. Be assured, sir, no occurrence in the course of the war has given me more painful sensation than your information of there being such ideas existing in the army, as you have expressed, which I must view with abhorrence, and reprehend with severity. For the present, the communication of them will rest in my own bosom, unless some further agitation of the matter shall make a disclosure necessary.

"I am much at a loss to conceive what part of my conduct could have given encouragement to an address which to me, seems big with the greatest mischiefs that can befall my country. If I am not deceived in the knowledge of myself, you could not have found a person to whom your schemes are more disagreeable.

* * * * *

"Let me conjure you, then, if you have any regard for your country, concern for yourself or posterity, or respect for me, to banish these thoughts from your mind and never communicate as from yourself, or any one else, a sentiment of the like nature. I am, &c.

SIMPLICITY OF TRUE POLITENESS.

Were I to search for an unadulterated politeness, I would pass by all the coined affections of the modern schools—the parlors of the great, and glance at a few sketches of the ancient Bible days. I would witness the strife between the herdsmen of Abraham and Lot, and the dispute amicably adjusted by this simple sentence—"If thou wilt take the left hand then will I go to the right," etc. I would sit down in the assembly of Abraham and the children of Heth; when Abraham rose up and bowed before Sarah, and asked for a sepulchre to bury his beloved Sarah out of his sight. I would listen to their answers—"none of us shall withhold from thee this sepulchre." I would hear him offering money, and Ephron saying—"Nay, my lord hear me; the field I give thee," and then receiving the money upon the earnest solicitation to spare the feelings of obligation. I would stand by the well of the wondering Laban, while Rebecca hastened and let down her pitcher, and drew water for his camels to drink. I would go in the time of barley harvest into the field of Boaz, and hear him charge the reapers to let the damsel, Ruth, glean among the sheaves, and drop a handful of design and rebuke her not.

Who can read these unadorned narratives without wishing the spirit of those days to return, when the stuffed fowl and the Christmas cake shall be offered as unostentatiously as the fatted calf and unleavened bread of Abraham and Sarah—when proffers of kindness—when a promise shall mean something put off, and a kiss of salutation something but a betraying into the hands of enemies—when our daughters shall be taught that taking the lowest seat when "bidden to a feast," and a "rising up before the hoary-headed," savor more of true politeness than a graceful curtesy or gilt-edged card to a modern dinner party. The time is coming when truth shall stand before us, disrobed of all her tinsel, "unadorned and plain," in all her native majesty, then we shall see things as they are, and custom have no demand for affected sincerity."

HYPOCRISY.—The murderer who sheaths his knife in the heart of the unconscious sleeper—the incendiary who kindles the flame upon the unguarded dwelling—the thief who prowls at midnight—or the avowed robber, who robs and plunders even in the face of open day—we detest and hunt down as a foul depredator in society. But these are not the only persons who inflict deep and lasting wounds upon their fellow-citizens. He who has about him the shining face of hypocrisy and the smooth tongue of deceit—who plunders under the specious pretence of fair dealing, who disregards the bonds of honorable surety, who tramples upon the vows of plighted faith, who in a thousand ways, by an ambiguous word, a well turned suggestion, a meaning look, deludes and injures, and perhaps ruins another—he is a prowling depredator under the garb of peace and honor, a masked robber, who takes advantage of a sacred principle to injure and destroy—who to a greater or less extent, breathes blighting and death upon faith, hope and joy, that had sprung up confidingly under the light and warmth of the social compact. We go armed and prepared for the assassin, the eye of our police is upon the incendiary and the robber; but these are unexpected aggressors.—They have secured our faith by the disguise of respectability and friendship Or, perhaps, they were re-adopted and cherished by our charity, and now, like the thawed viper they have turned and stung us! We have discovered, too late, that they are possessed of no integrity.

ENTRANCE TO THE CONVENT OF MT. SINAI.—The sun had set before we reached the middle of the valley—and I have seldom seen any thing grander than the appearance of these bare granite mountains, with their ragged peaks glittering in the moonlight. As we entered the narrow valley in which the convent stands, lights were seen moving about the building; and, when we rode up to the walls, a grey-bearded figure appeared with a torch at a small window high above our heads, and, after reconnoitering us for a few moments, withdrew without speaking a word. Presently another window opened, several monks appeared with lights, and a rope was let down for our letters. After a minute or two, during which our friends above appeared to be in deep consultation, the rope was again let down for ourselves. The ascent is somewhat nervous, I assure you; for the whole apparatus consists of a rope with a loop at the end of it; rather ominous—very like being "kilted up in a tow," as Balie Jarvie has it; your whole safety depends on your holding the rope firmly with your hands, and you find constant employment for your feet in keeping yourself from coming in collision with the rough projection of the wall. Then the old monks walk so slowly round their windlass above, that you think you are to be left all night dangling in the air; and when you are fairly wound up, you find yourself hanging two or three feet from the window, without the possibility of getting in, till the monks get hold of the rope, and land you like a bale of goods.—Kinmear's Cairo, Petra, and Damascus.

EARLY RISING.—The air in the morning is more bracing and balmy than during any other part of the day. Every boy or girl who can be spared from household affairs, should be abroad with the lark and the robin, inhaling it. What will your sons or daughters be good for, if allowed to be dozing, and breathing carbon in a close room and dreading to get up, when they ought to be out brushing off the dew drops from the flowers, and listening to the ministrelsy of the orchard and the grove, or with burning cheeks and frosty breath, dallying with the hoary locks of winter. It is easier for a child to rise at five o'clock than at seven.

DECEPTION.—Never deceive for the sake of foolish jest, or to excite the laughter of a few companions at the expense of a friend. Be anxious when you relate any thing, to tell it just as it occurred.—Never variate in the least degree. The reason why our ears are so often saluted by false reports, is, because people in telling real things, add a little to them, and as they pass through a dozen mouths, the original stories are turned into something entirely different. So when you attempt to tell any thing that you have seen with your own eyes, relate it correctly in every particular; and as you grow older you will reap the advantage of this course.

Children's Department.

From the Youth's Cabinet.

AMUSEMENTS OF CHILDREN.

BY AN APPENTICE BOY.

Two little boys often met one another in their room adjoining that in which I work. They are about eight or nine years old. The name of the oldest is Charles; that of the other Eden.

Charles is the son of an industrious and moral tradesman. The instruction which he receives is imparted to him by his father and Sabbath School teacher. The father of Eden, formerly an estimable merchant and good citizen, is now a pest, avoided by all. Alas! intemperance has ruined his good name, and destroyed his noble faculties.

An intimacy has grown up between the two boys, and they often meet through the week, and always in the Sabbath School.

I have observed that their amusements are mostly profitable.

One day, after growing tired of noisy play, they sat down on a bench, and Charles took up a picture book and began turning the leaves. As he turned them, he called on Eden to say which of the objects represented by the pictures he preferred. The properties and advantages of the house and the cow, the lamb and the pig, the vessel and the wagon were discussed, as each of the boys contended for the greater usefulness of the object of his choice. At length Charles turned a leaf which displayed a fine house and the Bible, Charles quickly, and with earnestness, remarked that he preferred the Bible.

"Why so?" demanded Eden. "Why would you prefer a book to this fine house?"

"I do not prize it simply as a book," replied Charles, "but I think the Bible of more value than all the houses in this town. My Sabbath School teacher gave me a beautiful present for reading it through the past year; and I learn from it that mansions are prepared in heaven for all that love God:—That our Lord Jesus Christ descended from heaven to die for Sinners:—That wicked men crucified him:—That in his death he finished an atonement for sin, and all that believe on his name can be saved:—That he rose from the dead and ascended to his Father, in the New Jerusalem, the Holy City of our God. Now the house you see here would not accommodate but a few persons, while the Bible offers the privileges of heaven and the mansions above to all people, for 'God hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the earth.' For a short time only, will this house be of use to us; for I read in my Bible that we must all die; but the mansions in heaven will continue forever. And the Bible informs us how we may prepare for death. When we go down to the silent grave, if we possess ever so many fine houses they can be of no advantage to us whatever. But if we love the Bible, and fulfil its requirements when our bodies die, our souls shall ascend to God and be forever happy. And throughout eternity the truth of this blessed Book will increase in interest, as we learn more of the character and ways of its Divine Author."

Eden came to the conclusion that the Bible is of great value; and that although young, he had no time to lose in becoming experimentally acquainted with the blessed truth of God's holy word. E. W.

Agricultural Department.

FENCES.

THERE is scarcely any department of farming of more immediate consequence than that of fencing; and there is none that, as a whole, is more neglected or badly managed. If the proportion of crops that are annually lost in this country, from the use of such apologies for fences are frequently seen, could be correctly ascertained, and added to the sum which must be deducted from the value of the horses and cattle thus taught vicious and unruly habits, and the whole presented at once to the eye of the farmer, or landholder, it can scarcely be doubted he would be surprised at the result, or that he would at once awaken to the importance of having good fences.

In a paper in the New England Farmer a few years since, Mr. Shurtleff estimated the cost of several kinds of fences (and they were taken from his own experience) as follows:—

White cedar fences made of posts and rails, five rails in height, three length to two rods nearly cost ninety-one cents a rod.

White pine rails sawed two inches by eight, and chestnut posts, four rails high, three to two rods nearly, cost sixty-four cents a rod. In both these instances the cost was exclusive of the setting.

Good four and a half feet stone wall varied from one dollar to two dollars fifty cents the rod, according to the case with which the stone could be procured, and the manner in which it was laid, whether by trenching or otherw .

Hedge fence, made of Virginia thorn plants (Cratægus cordata,) set twenty-one to a rod, cost at the end of the fourth year, including planting, trimming, &c., forty cents a rod; and this agrees very well with the estimate made by Mr. Kirk, of Brandywine, Del. who has had more experience in the making hedge fence than almost any man in the United States.

We have found by experience that in making fence of posts and rails or posts for bars or gates, there is nothing gained by making the posts too small. Perhaps there is no timber in which the difference of durability between large and small posts is more striking than in that of the common white cedar or cypress of our swamps. Mr. Shurtleff found his cedar fence to last about fifteen years, the posts rotting off in that time; and perhaps fifteen years may be set down as about the ordinary duration of a wood fence, let the method of construction be what it may. This single fact should cause farmers and land owners to pause and ask, where their fences are to come from, when their present, and perhaps already half decayed, worn fences are rotten and gone? We are convinced, that ere many years, want of fence will be one of the most serious evils the farmer will be called to encounter.—Gen. Farmer.

ENGLISH FARMING.—That the English obtain larger crops from the acres they cultivate, than we get on this side of the Atlantic, & the average, is too generally admitted to require proof. That they use more manure, and bestow more labor than we do, is also generally understood. The New England farmer would think his neighbor almost insane, who should apply annually 10 to 15 loads of manure to the acre. Still in England, fine fortunes have been made by such an outlay on rented farms, and the enormous taxes of that country met. One hay farm of 160 acres, near London, was rented for $1.920 per annum; yet the tenant accumulated riches from it, by liberal outlays in manure, implements, and the employment of laborers. So it appears that even a grass crop, which our farmers are too apt to imagine needs no aid from the barn yard, will pay a great per centage on money invested in manure.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

REPRINT OF THE OLD DIVINES.

THIS work willbe devoted to the publication of Argumentsr Soummaries of the Sermons and Discourses of the most eminent British Divines,—a complete collection of whose invaluable writings in some instances scarce, in others voluminous and expensive, is rarely to be found in the libraries of the Clergy, while our great public repositories themselves are not unfrequently deficient in this branch of literature.

These Skeletons which are intended as models of Scripture argumentation and composition, selected from the writings of the most distinguished ornaments of the Church, will be found highly acceptable to Clergymen, and more particularly useful to the young Divine, whose studies they are well calculated to facilitate by perusal and consultation.

The work will commence with Summaries of the Discourses of Bishop Sherlock, which will be followed by those of Jeremy Taylor, Dr Barrow, Tillotson' Beveridge, S Clark, Jewell, Jortin, Ogden, Powell, Fawcett, Cabrauck, Hooper, Bull, Leighton, Hopkins, Howe, Maclaurin, South, Secker, &c. &c.

"A Summary of each discourse is admirably calculated to assist the Divine in the arduous task of Composition for the pulpit."—Observer. London

"No archetype can be better than Sherlock and Barrow adapted to modern taste."—Gentleman's Magazine.

"To the Christian Minister, at the outset of life and the Theological Student, such a work must prove invaluable."—Exeter Flying Post.

"The mode pursued is to present the skeleton of the discourse only, retaining the order, the arguments and, as it were, the key notes of the original By this means a great saving of space and money is effected. Judging from the specimen before us, the work will be [illegible] done The abridgment reads continuously, and preserves the effect of a whole."—Spectator.

The above very valuable work, which has been highly commended by Ministers and Religious Press in Great Britain, the subscriber proposes to republish in this country, if sufficient encouragement is given

The work was originally published by A. J. Valpy, A. M., editor of the Family Classical Library, Greek Septuagint, &c. &c.—and edited by Rev. T. R. Hughes, B. D. [illegible] Bishop of Peterborough [illegible] at Cambridge, [illegible] and Smollett's History of England [illegible] of George the 2d, [illegible] 1835. Author of Travels in Greece, &c. &c. [illegible] reputation of the [illegible] ment has been [illegible]

CONDITIONS.

1. The work will be commenced as soon as 300 subscribers are obtained.

2. It will be printed on paper of very superior quality with type and page similar to the North American Review.

3. It will be Issued quarterly, each number to contain at least, 132 pages making a volume of 528 octavo pages, annually, with a Title Page, and an Index containing a list of texts, subjects, &c.

4. Price $2 a year, payable on the reception of the 1st number.

5. The work will commence with the republication of the valuable Sermons and Discourses of Sherlock, which will be followed with those of Jeremy Taylor, or Dr. Barrow. The first year will contain the whole of Sherlock and Taylor, or Sherlock and Barrow.

N. B. As the proposals for republishing the above work originates in a want frequently expressed by ministers, no agents will be appointed, as those wishing for the work, by writing a line something similar to the following and getting the Postmaster to sign and frank it, can forward their orders free of expense;—

By request of (here inser your own name.) forward you his name as a subscriber to the "Reprint of the Old Divines." You will direct his copy to (here give your Post Office address) signed,
——— ———, P. M.

It will be understood that no money is expected with the orders for the work, as it will not be published unless 300 subscribers are obtained. It is hoped, however, that so many as design to subscribe for it, will forward their names immediately. As the number of copies issued will depend upon the number of copies ordered, ministers will perceive the necesity of ordering the work at the commencement.

LITERARY AND THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTIONS.

Officers of Literary and Theological Institutions, who may receive this Prospectus, are respectfully requested to hand it to some active young man, who will exert himself to obtain a list of subscribers in the Institution; and Students, and Beneficiaries of the Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, and christian, Education Societies, will be furnished with the work on the following very low terms, viz: two copies for $3, or seven copies for $10, and a copy gratis to the individual acting as agent.

$5 will pay for two copies of "The Young People's Library," and one copy of the Reprint of the Old Divines." or $10, for five copies of "The young People,s Library," and one do. of the "Reprint of the Old Divines." Any Minister or Student shall receive the above works on these terms.

TO CHURCH MEMBERS.

Dear Brethren—If the circumstances of your pastor will not allow him to suboribe for the proposed work, will you not supply him! At small expense you can make him a very acceptable present. Just call upon him, and if he does not take the work, supply him with it, and thus benefit both him and yourselves.

All Communications must be directed to B. Brierly, North Springfield, Vt.

NOTICE.

THE Subscriber respectfully solicits those who are indebted to him on Book account of six months standing to call and settle the same, if possible, without delay, as he is very much in want of the avails of his labor. De Ruyter, March 3, 1841.
1w3 HALSEY STILLMAN.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

WANTED—Any quantity of RAGS wanted in exchange for BOOKS, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany-st.
De Ruyter, Dec. 16, 1840.

SADDLE, HARNESS & TRUNK-MAKING.

THE subscriber is much gratified with the generous patronage of his former customers, and with pleasure announces to them and the public that he still continues his business in all its various branches at his old stand in De Ruyter village, where he keeps constantly on hand and offers for sale, on the most reasonable terms, Saddles, Bridles, Martingals, Trunks, Valices, Traveling Bags, and Harness of every description; all of which are well manufactured of the very best materials.—Those who wish to avail themselves of the opportunity of buying cheap, can do so by calling on
B. G. STILLMAN.

N. D. Any quantity of good beach or maple wood taken in exchange for the above articles. B. G. S.

Medicines! Medicines!!

TO FAMILIES.

S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public; for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s
MOTHER'S RELIEF.
JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT—
DR. McMUN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—
MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—
De Ruyter, Dec. 5, 1840. 1m3

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
GEO. W. SUTTON.
De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull,
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin, P. M.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Potsdam, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott—[illegible], Ezekiel G. Potter.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—[illegible] Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Hopkinton—Joseph Spicer, jun., P. M.
Westerly—Jonathan Maxson.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh.—Isaac Titsworth
Salem.— David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis.
Jackson.—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISCONSIN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 4.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 56.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, MARCH 26, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

ESSAY ON HUMAN HAPPINESS,

BY DOCT. A. L. SAUNDERS.

NO. III.

The Stoics, with a sort of romantic refinement, pretended to have fallen into a love of virtue for her own sake, and to sustain and to abstain, to bear and forbear, to be patient and continent, comprised the summary of their moral system. But while they were enraptured with the means, like every other society of mankind, they had the full advantage of the end. They may, indeed, have practiced virtue for the love of virtue, but they also practiced virtue and reaped the benefit of their own happiness.

The Epicurians, on the contrary, regarded all these sublime pretensions as mere cant and affectation. They also enjoined and practiced, and notwithstanding the false reproach that has attached to their name, enjoined and practiced with more rigidity than even the Stoics the laws and restraints of moral virtue; boldly and unequivocally avowed that it was chiefly as a mean toward an end: that it was not so much from a love of virtue as from a love of pleasure or happiness; and hence, pleasure and happiness were in this school used as synonymous terms, as were also vice, and folly, and wisdom, and virtue; or, rather wisdom was regarded as the first of all virtues, as being that which teaches us that a life of real pleasure or happiness is to be obtained, alone, by the exercise of the general cluster of virtues. In one of his letters to Menæceus that has yet survived the ravage of time, Epicurus has a passage upon this subject peculiarly striking, and that can not be too strongly impressed on our memories. "Wisdom," says he, "is the chief blessing of philosophy; since she gives birth to all other virtues which unite in teaching us that no man can live happily who does not live wisely, conscientiously, and justly; nor, on the other hand, can he live wisely, conscientiously, and justly, without living happily, for virtue is inseparable from a life of happiness, and a life of happiness is equally inseparable from virtue. Be these, then, and maxims like these, the subjects of thy meditation, by night and by day, both when alone and with the friend of thy bosom, and never, whether asleep or awake, shalt thou be oppressed with anxiety, but live as a God among mankind."[*]

To the same effect, Cassius, in an expostulatory letter to his friend Cicero, who had shown some inclination to join in the general calumny against the Epicureans:—"These whom we call lovers of pleasure are real lovers of goodness and justice; they are men who practice and cultivate every virtue, for no true pleasure can exist without a good and virtuous life."

So Lucretius, when describing the different tribes of the sons of vice, or offenders against the public law, characterizes them by the common name of fools. "They are," says he, "perpetually smarting even in secret beneath a sense of their atrocious crimes, and that reward of their guilt which they well know will sooner or later overtake them:—

The scourge, the wheel, the block, the dungeon deep,
The base born hang-man, the Tarpean cliff,
Which though the villain scape, his conscience soul
Still fears perpetual; torturing all his day,
And still foreboding heavier pangs at death,
Hence, earth itself to FOOLS becomes a hell."

It was from the elegant and ornate moralists of the East, that the philosophers of this school derived this figurative synonyme; from Arabia, Egypt, and India, in all which quarters we find it still more frequent and familiar. Solomon, whose early studies were derived from an Arabic source, is peculiarly addicted to this use of the terms. The very commencement of the book of Proverbs, or the system of ethics as the schools would denominate it, affords us a striking instance:—

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge, but fools despise wisdom and instruction."[†]

So Vishnusarman in his Hitopadesa to the same precise effect. "Many who read the Scriptures are grossly ignorant, but he who acts well is truly a LEARNED man."[‡]

Whatever view, therefore, we take of this subject, in whatever way we exercise our reason upon it, we cannot fail to regard virtue as the only sure road to happiness, and consequently, as the path of wisdom, or as the will of God. The case, indeed, is so clear, that it is seldom mankind in any part of the world are now-a-days at the trouble of debating the subject. There is no controversy—the result is taken for granted. And hence, wherever education exists, or in other words, wherever civilized life extends, we are chiefly taught it not as a science, but as a rule of action; we imbibe it as a habit, and our first and finest feelings co-operate with our best reason in its favor.

We form an abstract picture of it in our minds, and delineate it under the correct and pleasing image of the fair, the needful, the sovereign good. We have already seen that in proportion as society is ignorant, men are wicked; in proportion as it becomes wise, they grow virtuous. They acquire clearer ideas of right and wrong, which are obviously nothing more than virtue and vice under an additional set of names, or in a state of activity. And were the rules and laws of right, virtue or wisdom to be constantly adhered to, or in other words the will of the Deity to be fully complied with, there can be no question that mankind, even in the present state, would enjoy all the happiness their nature would allow of; and that a kind of paradise would once more visit the earth.

And why, then, is not the will of the Deity fully complied with? Why, since the consequence is so undoubted and so beneficial, are not the rules of virtue constantly and universally adhered to? This is a most important question, as well in itself as in its results.

The will of the Deity, or the entire rules of virtue are not always adhered to; first, because as collected from reason and the light of nature alone they are not, through the whole range of this complicated subject, in all instances, equally clear and perspicuous; and, secondly, because in a thousand instances in which there is no want of clearness or perspicuity, there is a want of sanction—of a compulsory and adequate force. The rules of virtue are general and must necessarily be general, but the cases to which they apply are particular. The case is present and often impulsive, but the operation of the rule is remote, and it may not operate at all; and, hence, the pleasure of immediate gratification is perpetually unhinging this harmonious system, and plunging mankind into vice with their eyes open.

But civil laws, moreover, or the authority of the social compact in favor of virtue, are not only often inadequate in their force, but they must necessarily, in a thousand instances, be inadequate in their extent. It is impossible for man, of himself, to provide against every case of vice and criminality that may offend the public, for the keenest casuist can form no idea of many such cases till they are before him; and if he could, the whole world would not contain the statute books that should be written on the subject.

There are, also, duties which a man owes to himself, as well as to his neighbor, or, in other words, human happiness, as we have already seen, depends almost as largely upon his exercise of private, as of public virtues. But the eye of civil law can not follow him into the performance of these duties, for it can not follow him into his privacy; it can not take cognizance of his personal faults, or offences, nor often apply its sanction if it could do so. And, hence, in most countries this important part of morality is purposely left out of the civil code, as a hopeless and intractable subject; yet, in the breach of public duties, specifically stated and provided for, it can not always follow up the offender and apply the punishment, for he may secrete himself among his own colleagues, and elude, or he may abandon his country, and defy the arm of justice.

There seems, then, to be something still wanting. If the Deity has so benevolently willed the happiness of man, and made virtue the rule of that happiness, ought he not, upon the same principle of benevolence, to have declared his will more openly than by the mere, and at times, doubtful inferences of reason? in characters, indeed, so plain that he who runs may read? and ought he not also to have employed sanctions so universal as to cover every possible case, and so weighty as to command every attention?

As a being of infinite benevolence, undoubtedly he ought. And what in this character he ought to have done, he has actually accomplished. He has declared his will by an express revelation, and has thus confirmed the voice of reason by a voice from heaven; he has made his revelation a written law, and has enforced it by the strongest sanctions to which the mind of men can be open;—not only by his best chance of happiness here, but by all his hopes and expectations of happiness hereafter. And he has, hence, completed the code of human obligations, by adding to the duties which we owe to our neighbor, and to ourselves, a clear rescript of those we owe to our Maker. Nor is such a revelation of recent date; for a state of retributive justice beyond the grave, constituted in the earliest ages of recorded time the belief of all mankind; and amid all the revolutions the world has witnessed, amid the most savage barbarism, and the foulest idolatries, there never, perhaps, has been a country in which all traces of it have been entirely lost, or have, even, entirely ceased to operate.

At different periods, and in different manners, the Deity has renewed this divine communication, according as his infinite wisdom has seen the world stand in need of it. New doctrines and discoveries—and doctrines and discoveries too of the highest importance, but which it is not my province to touch upon in the present place, have, in every instance, accompanied such renewal justificatory of the supernatural interposition. But the sanction has, in every instance, been the same, while, and I speak it with reverence, the proofs of divine benevolence have, with every promulgation, been growing fuller and fuller; revealed religion thus co-operating with natural; co-operating with the great frame of the visible world; co-operating with every pulse and feeling of our hearts in establishing the delightful truth that GOD IS LOVE; and in calling upon us to love him, not from any cold and lifeless picture of the abstract beauty of holiness, beautiful as it unquestionably is in itself, but from the touching and all-subduing motive—BECAUSE HE FIRST LOVED US.

---

[*] Diogenes Laertius, x. 132, 135.

[†] Proverbs i. chap. 7th verse.

[‡] Sir W. Jones, vi. p. 37.

Children's Department.

From the Sabbath School Messenger.

POOR HARRY, OR THE FATAL QUARREL.

There were two boys, who once lived in a small village, the one named Richard and the other Harry. Richard's father was rich, but Harry was the son of a lonely widow, who was extremely poor. Now, Richard was one of those quarrelsome boys, who are often doing mischief. Sometimes he would throw stones from the hill-side upon the passing traveler, and hardly a day passed in which he did not fall out with some of his schoolmates.

One fine summer's morning, as Harry was going to the store with a bottle to get some molasses, Richard met him.

"Holloa, Mr. Harry," said he, "where are you going?" as he aimed a kick at his bottle.

"To Mr. Day's store; but don't kick my bottle," replied Harry.

"There, get out with you, Mr. Ragmuffin," said Richard, as he pushed him violently into the road.

Harry fell down, and in falling broke his bottle against a stone. This made him feel angry, though he was generally a pretty quiet boy. So, getting up, he stepped up to Richard, and said:—

"Don't push me down again; if you do, look out," and he clenched his fists in great wrath.

"Look out! Pooh! Who cares for such a bunch of rags as you are. Why, I could thrash half a dozen of you," replied Richard, as he tauntingly shook his fist in the other's face.

"Don't shake your fist at me again," said Harry, "or I'll whip you, till you are sick of it."

"Whip me!" responded Richard, as he clenched his fists, and looked more like a little savage than like a civilized child; "it would take half a dozen like you to do it; but if you want to fight, come on," and he pulled off his coat in all the madness of wicked passion.

By this time, a number of idle boys had gathered around them, and were crying in their noisy tones, "A fight! a fight!" and some of them were sneering at poor Harry, who now felt disposed to settle the matter without coming to blows. But some of them set up a cry of "Coward! coward!" while others patted him on his shoulder, and told him "not to be afraid, but to give Dick a licking for his impudence." So poor Harry consented to fight, and the battle commenced.

Oh! it was a sad and painful sight, at which angels might weep, to see those boys rushing at each other, like wild beasts, and striking with all their might at each other's faces.

Their eyes glared furiously, and their hands and cheeks were soon smeared with blood. Sometimes they fell, and then the wicked boys around them raised them up and urged them, all tired, exhausted and giddy with pain, to the strife again.

At last, after fighting for half an hour, poor Harry, in falling, struck his head against a rock by the road side, and was taken up senseless, and was carried home to his mother's cottage.

Alas! how it pains my heart to finish this sad tale. Harry never spoke again.—The blow he received from the rock was fatal. After lingering a few hours he expired, and his young spirit was hurried away to meet its God! O, awful meeting! Alas! that Harry should have been so wicked as to fight.

Dear children, let this story teach you a lesson. If you meet a boy whom you know to be quarrelsome, avoid him. Don't stop to talk with him! If he says something impudent to you, don't reply, but in your heart ask God to forgive him. Whatever he does to you, don't fight. No, not if boys call you a coward. It shows more real courage to do right, than it does to do wrong, because idle boys laugh at you.—Would not Harry have shown more courage if he had refused to fight, than he did by fighting?

Then think of the awful result. It cost him his life. And oh! his precious soul! It went into eternity with all its sins upon it. And how his poor widowed mother must have felt. She loved him tenderly, for he was her only son. Her husband was dead, and now her child was taken away. And by such a death! Oh, it came like a dagger to her heart. She never smiled again, but sunk in sorrow to the grave!

How wretched was the guilty Richard! Surely if he should live to be gray-haired, he will never forgive himself for that shameful battle.

Dear young readers, never quarrel or fight; and if you are tempted to do either, repeat the following lines and pray God to help you.

"Let dogs delight to bark and bite,
For God hath made them so;
Let angry lions growl and fight,
For 'tis their nature too.

"But children, you should never let
Such angry passions rise,
Your little hands were never made
To tear each other's eyes."

LITTLE ELIZABETH S———.

In the village of M——, among the Green Mountains of Vermont, lived Elizabeth S——. She was the daughter of pious parents, who early sent her to the Sunday School, where she had a kind teacher, who taught her the way to heaven. Elizabeth had a very pretty face, but this did not make her vain, nor did her friends and companions admire her so much for this, as for her kind and gentle manners. She loved every body, and always tried to do them good. When she saw the poor, she did not laugh at them, but if she could, she did something to make them more comfortable and happy.

One day, when she was at the day school, while playing with her young companions, she fell from a piece of board which they had placed upon the fence, and injured her side. When she went home her side pained her very much, she did not hide the truth from her kind parents, but told them how she hurt her side, and felt very sorry that she had been playing in such a dangerous manner. Her parents did all they could to cure her, but the wound which she had received was so deep that it could not be entirely cured. She, however, became much better, and they thought she was going to get well again. She became so well that she again began to attend both day and Sabbath school. Her companions felt very glad when they saw her appear among them, but she soon became pale and weak. She could very willingly deny herself the pleasure of attending day school, but when they spoke to her of leaving the Sabbath school, she could not bear the thought. She loved it so well, and her teacher was so kind in pointing out to her the way to heaven. O, how often wo'd the big tear steal down her cheek, when that teacher told her of the sufferings of Christ for wicked men; and how often would she turn away and weep, that she was one cause of the Savior's death.

In this way she continued for nearly five years, sometimes seeming to be nearly well, and then again becoming very sick. At the end of five years; when she was about 13 years of age, she became so sick that she could not go out any more, O, how much she wept, when her physician told her she must not go to Sabbath school any more; but she soon remembered that it was God's holy will, and ceased her weeping, well knowing that he does all things for the best. She now being no longer able to go out of her room, asked for her Bible, and when it was brought, she pointed out a Psalm, which her mother read to her. She then desired her mother to lay the Bible under her pillow, and to pray with her; this her mother willingly did. She requested also to see her teacher, Miss M——, and the good superintendant, Mr. S——, who both came to her, and prayed with her, for they both loved her very much.

Mr. S——, and her teacher often afterward came at different times and conversed with her about her soul, and about dying. She told them that she had put her confidence in God, and therefore her soul had been redeemed by the blood of Christ, and as to dying, she feared not death, since the Savior had passed through the grave before her, and had destroyed all its gloom. Thus she passed her days of sickness, and though sometimes in extreme pain, she never complained. Often did she request her friends to read the 23d Psalm, and as with her withered hand, she took the Bible from under her pillow, she rejoiced in the kind care of that Shepherd of whom the Psalm speaks.

When her last day had come, and she was about to die, she wished to see all her brothers and sisters. When they came into the room, she took each one by the hand and exhorted them to seek the Savior. And to a brother who was absent she sent the same message.

By her teacher she sent her love to the Sabbath school, and earnestly prayed that her young companions would trust in that Savior whom she now found so precious to her soul, then kissing her father and mother, and all present, she commended her soul to God and rejoiced in the light of his countenance, that was then beaming upon her.

Thus died Elizabeth S[illegible] of my young fri[illegible] Will not some of [illegible] these lines, be ind[illegible] up to God, and [illegible] remember my [illegible] ners as Eliz[illegible] same Savior w[illegible] him too, now. [illegible] may die soon. [illegible] your souls if y[illegible] to trust? Do [illegible] learn to trust in [illegible] Elizabeth in [illegible] Imitate her in [illegible] panions. Imit[illegible] and submission [illegible] then like her you w[illegible] ceived to heaven, wh[illegible] and unite with her in [illegible] forever and ever.

God loves the young who [illegible]
His favor to obtain:
He will not turn away his ear,
Nor let them seek in vain.

His ear is open to their cry,
He'll hear their earnest prayer,
And through the slippery paths of youth,
He'll make their cause his care.

He'll make their pillow soft in death
He'll guide them through the tomb,
And to his shining courts above,
He'll bid them welcome come.

Religious Department.

From the New York Evangelist.

THE FAMILY OF GOD.

"The Lord reigneth: let the earth rejoice."

The manner in which the providential government of God over the affairs of the world, is regarded, furnishes no imperfect test of the vigor and intelligence, if not of the reality, of the Christian's piety. Some have not thought enough of it to discern that it is often enveloped by clouds and darkness; others with feeble and imperfect faith, sometimes fail to realize that righteousness and truth are the habitation of the throne of Jehovah.

In this vast field of thought, many problems are presented to the attentive student of God's word and providence, of some of which his mind, guided by prayer and faith, can find a satisfactory solution; but there are many others of which he can only say, "Secret things belong unto Jehovah our God," and wait until the explanation shall be afforded to his sanctified soul in heaven. Not merely the abstract question, why natural and moral evil are permitted to exist, will perplex the inquiring mind; but various particular instances, some of them of the greatest magnitude and importance, will plunge him into difficulty. The want of success which has attended many faithful and persevering efforts to plant and extend the knowledge of the pure word; in France, Spain and Italy, for example, in the sixteenth century, when the blood of the saints was poured forth like water, and when, after a long contest, the man of sin triumphed, and a cloud of darkness and thick gloom enveloped those lands, which even to this day has hardly begun to break away: the neglect of the Church for so many centuries, to obey the command of its ascending Master, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," together with the imperfect and hesitating manner in which it is even now performed: the premature death of the devoted champions of the cross, of Brainerd, and Martyn, and of multitudes who, like them, employed every hour with untiring energy and unshaken persevearance, in the promotion of the work of salvation;—while the bold blasphemer of his God, and the vile corrupter of his fellow men, Paine and Voltaire, pass the ordinary limit of human life: the unpalsied arm of the tyrant: the successful dagger of the assassin:—these, and ten thousand other things which the Providence of God permits, compel the Christian to say, "How long, O God! holy and true," and call forth from the unbeliever, the insulting question, "where is the promise of his coming?"

These mysteries I can not fathom: still, "the foundation of the Lord standeth sure." My faith, with unchanging and undoubting trust, can confide in the wisdom of Him who guideth the stars in their courses—who seeth the end from the beginning, and saith, "My counsel shall stand;" in the power of the great God who holdeth the winds in the hollow of his fists, and stilleth the raging of the seas, and the madness of the people; and in the love of the Redeemer, who bore our sins in his body on the tree, and who is exalted to be a Prince and a Savior, and the head over all things to his Church. Like the saints in all ages, I can rejoice in the assurance, that he will bring light out of darkness, and order out of confusion; that at the appointed time, he will withdraw the veil wherewith he hideth himself, and show to the conviction of every intelligent being, that his ways are all just and true.

The trial of the believer's faith, is at times more severe than any other to which it is subjected. Still it is sent by God; and the child must take, as the basis of his confidence, the character of his heavenly Father as revealed in his word, and not his own interpretation of his providence. He must be willing to let God govern, without his supervision and assistance. He must unite with the whole family of the redeemed, in exclaimining,

"By the faith that knows no ark
Save in thy breast, when storms grow dark,
[illegible] Thee: as the sailor knows,
[illegible]s place of calm repose
[illegible] star rests, though mists, and cloud,
[illegible] with a midnight shroud,
[illegible] reignest, the All-holy One, the All-
[illegible],
[illegible] still, with love's own boundless trust."

W. C.

[illegible] IMPRESSIONS.—In the gen[illegible]ces of God, men may have wish[illegible] willings, and good liking of the [illegible] some faint and floating resolu[illegible] to pursue it, who yet have no firm [illegible] proceeding from the whole bent of [illegible] heart, from a thorough mortification of [illegible] evidence of grace, but from such weak and wavering principles as may be perturbed by every new temptation, like letters written in sand, they vanish away like morning dew, and leave the heart as hard and scorched as it was before. The young man whom, for his ingenuity and forwardness, Christ loved, came in a sad and serious manner to learn of Christ the way to heaven: and yet we find there were secret reservations which he had not discerned in himself, upon discovery whereof by Christ, he was discouraged, and made to repent of his resolution, Mark x. 21, 22. The Apostle speaketh of a "repentance not to be repented of," 2 Cor. vii. 10, which hath firm, solid, and permanent reasons to support it: therein secretly intimating, that there is likewise a repentance which, rising out of an incomplete will, and admitting certain and undiscerned reservations, doth, upon the appearance of them, flag and fall away, and leave the unfaithful heart to repent of its repentance. St. James tells us, "that a double minded man is unstable in all his ways," James i. 8, never uniform or constant to any rules. Now, this division of the mind stands thus; the heart, on the one side is taken up with the pleasures of sin for the present; and, on the other, with the desires of salvation for the future; and according as the workings and representations of the one or the other are at the time more fresh and predominant, in like manner is sin for that time either cherished or suppressed.—Many men at a good sermon, when the matter is fresh, and newly presented, and while they are looking on their face in the glass; or in any extremity of sickness, when the provisions of lust do not relish for the present, when they have none but thoughts of salvation to depend upon, are very resolute to make promises, vows, and professions of better living; but when the pleasures of sin grow strong to present themselves again, they return, like a man recovered of an ague, with more greediness to their lusts again. As water which hath been stopped for awhile, rushes with the more violence when its passages are open.—Reynolds.

POSTURE IN PRAYER.—We see some of the papers are dissatisfied with the present posture of congregations in prayer. If they get the people back to the former practice of standing, in this exercise, we hope they will get them back also to the former practice of sitting during singing, or induce them to avoid turning round to gaze at the choir. For if the sitting posture be exceptionable in prayer, the standing posture in many congregations, (we are happy to say not in all,) in singing, is not less so. Instead of uniting in worship, they just turn round and gaze at the choir, as though they were the objects of homage; and the hymn of praise is permitted to languish below, except on the lips of here and there one, who deems his obligation to worship in the song no less imperative than in the prayer. Some pastors have effectually rebuked this unseemly proceedure, and their congregations generally have their psalm-books, and bear their part in the delightful service; but many appear to think their only business is to turn round and gaze, as they would at a company of performers at a concert. This would answer for the old Jewish service, where there was so much form, but we think it hardly compatible with that spiritual worship demanded under the light of the gospel.

To "sing with the spirit and the understanding," was the desire of the apostle Paul; and so it should be of every disciple; but how it is to be done by looking at the choir instead of the hymn-book, we can not perceive. It can be done with neither unless the language in which praise is offered, is considered and understood; and few choirs sing with that distinctness of articulation which enables an assembly to understand what is sung. Unless reference be had continually to the book, therefore, the music is but little more than that of an instrument, delightful to the ear, but without an association with an intelligent offering.—New York Baptist Register.

No affliction for the time seems joyous. All time in affliction seems tedious. I will compare my miseries on earth with my joys in heaven, and the length of my miseries with its eternity; so will my journey seem short, and my burden easy.—Warwick.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, March 26, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

Backbiters

Besides being the enemies of good order and right, are strangers to those high & ennobling feelings that govern the christian's conduct. They are a curse to the society that harbors them, being the sworn enemies of God and man. An apostle classes them with the "haters of God," &c. A lover of right is open, ingenuous, and ascribes to the best of motives whatever defect he may trace in the conduct of any; while the backbiter, as the name indicates, is crafty, slanderous, and gives to actions the worst coloring they will bear.

That the unregenerate should at some times assume this character, is not strange, since it is more natural for them to sin, than to love and practice virtue. Happy would it be for men to know that none but the wilfully and professedly wicked ever assumed this character, and that backbiters were found only in the ranks of the professed enemies of God. Shall it be said that any bearing the Christian name are backbiters? It is a contradiction in terms. A Christian backbiter! It can not be.—Whatever outward claim such may have to Christianity, it can not be true that the pure and holy principles of the Gospel have place in that man's heart, whose tongue gives utterance to unjust and ungenerous slanders. Christ gave a new commandment to his disciples, viz:—"That they should love one another." There is a union existing between Christians, that is distinguished from every other union by its untold strength, and by its endearing nature. It is of such a peculiar character as to make the heathen say, "behold how these Christians love one another." Can it be possible, then, that those bound by this union shall become backbiters? Let those cease to call themselves followers of the Lamb, who take a course directly the reverse of that marked out for them by the Savior.—What worthy object can be attained by circulating reports, true or false, to the prejudice of any person? Especially, what honor does the backbiter suppose he will bring to Christ, or his cause, or to the members of his church by such proceedure? It can be ascribed to no better cause than the gratifying of a "contemptible vanity or wicked envy." The Gospel requires the exercise of charity, "which will cover a multitude of sins"; and every true friend of the Redeemer, and of his children, will rather seek to recover a wanderer by gentle admonition, than to pour contempt and ridicule upon him by backbiting. The Savior when he was reviled, reviled not again. But the backbiter, though a professed follower of the Lamb, reviles and slanders without other provocation than his corrupt heart suggests. The constitution of mind, and a difference in education, present things in different views; and it is not strange that men conscientiously differ in opinion on important questions. Consequently, the man who is rightly instructed in human nature, will not be an impugner of motives, or a backbiter, even though he can discover no consistency in the views offered to his inspection. He, who wishes to be considered honest in his views and motives, will not maliciously or idly impugn the intentions of others, without the best evidence possible. We conclude that we are justifiable in the opinion, that he who originates idle tales to the prejudice of another, or gives currency to them, or, in other words, backbites, is conscious of wrong in his own bosom. Otherwise, he would act the part of an ingenuous, candid friend, and adviser. He that can not point out my faults to me, or inquire of me concerning my conduct, or concerning reports relative to me, shows that he is my enemy without cause.

Dueling.

We can with difficulty conceive of a character more reprehensible than the duelist. He, who in a fit of insanity or sudden madness slays his fellow, shows not so much corruption of heart as the man that does it deliberately in single combat. The man that sanctions such a course is a perfect stranger to the principles of the Gospel, and possesses a disposition in common with brute beasts. O tell it not to heathens that chief men in a Christian country approbate such conduct as this!—Let it not be known that such men are chosen to legislate for Christians. The blush of shame mantles our cheek, when we are forced to acknowledge that such men as these disgrace our national councils, and hold places of honor and trust. We may expect the like so long as Christians engulph themselves in the whirlpool of party excitement, and in the politician forget the christian. Let Christians arise and discountenance the cool-blooded murderer. Let them exert their influence, and let the Patriot and the lover of humanity speak forth, and those men must remain in obscurity, who, for a supposed insult, will imbrue their hands in human blood.

AMISTAD CAPTIVES.—On our last page we have inserted a part of the trial and arguments in this case, as reported in the Youth's Cabinet. Our readers will doubtless be interested in them. We shall continue the arguments next week.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—A correspondent requests thus:—"I wish you would review your article on "Position in public Prayer," so as to save me the trouble."—We reply, as we do not see occasion for doing so, we shall leave it for him to review. We should be happy to insert any thing that would have a tendency to promote good order and devotion in public worship, from the pen of any, or as many as wish to show their opinion.

WINE FOR COMMUNION.—A correspondent writes: "Our church makes use of wine from the dried fruit of the vine; and as far as I am able to learn, all are pleased. Some, not members of the Tee-total Society, have expressed the highest satisfaction at the change."

For the Register.

Posture in Public Prayer.—No. I.

MR. EDITOR,—I discover by the papers that the "Posture in Prayer" is receiving some considerable attention; and in a matter possessing so much interest as does this subject in sustaining the good order and decorum which is ever to be desired in all christian congregations, and especially in our own churches, the subject cannot be too thoroughly discussed if done in a 'spirit of kindness,' which I understand must characterize all discussions that find a place in the columns of the Register.

What is Prayer? It is a petition for mercies, or a request made of GOD; or, in other words, it is the offering up of our desires to God for those things which may be in accordance with His Divine will, connected with a heart-felt confession of sins, and a thankful acknowledgement of the numerous mercies and blessings conferred upon us by the GREAT AUTHOR OF PRAYER. It is a rational exercise, and is very consistent in every christian assembly. Nor, indeed, would I confine it to those only, for we are exhorted to "pray always, and in every thing give thanks." How reasonable, how consistent, then, that in public Prayer, or in our congregated assemblies for the worship of God, a becoming deference should be attached to our POSTURE in Prayer!

How beautiful would be the spectacle could all of our members, when they come to the house of God, be united in the same posture in the time of Prayer, and their hearts fixed upon the Being whom they are addressing, with an intensity of purpose that should become every zealous christian!—But what should that posture be? It doubtless should be a reverential posture; one that should witness to the ungodly that christians KNOW whom they serve; one that should exhibit the greatest possible reverence and awe towards the "Author and Finisher of our Faith."

KNEELING in Prayer-time, doubtless, would indicate the most humility. But can the numerous objections which will be raised to this humble posture be obviated? People, at this age of the world, have become so proud and popular that, as a general thing, this posture cannot prevail to any considerable extent. For, while some few devoted christians will readily kneel as the minister of God addresses the throne of grace; others, being too proud to KNEEL as a suppliant for mercy, will remain in the SITTING posture; or, perhaps, wishing to display themselves more conspicuously, some will assume the STANDING posture; and if, perchance, all sense of decorum is lost, they will turn their back to the servant of God and cast their ever-wandering eye into the gallery, and thus they roam where'er they list during the solemn and interesting exercise of Prayer in the sanctuary. Now, I remark, if the posture of kneeling, which, no doubt, is the most in accordance with primitive example, can not become a general or universal posture, then let us adopt some other course which will be calculated to meet a general approbation. It is not, I apprehend, very material what posture is taken, provided, however, a becoming reverence is maintained, and a uniformity of practice is secured. It is highly important, in my opinion, that this flagrant violation of decorum in the worship of God should be remedied. The interests of religion require the remedy, and the salvation of souls immortal may depend upon a reform in this particular. It should be so effectually remedied that every professed christian, who will not take an interest in sustaining a proper and reverential posture in Prayer-time, will feel an aching void in their own bosoms in consequence of their negligence in observing a proper reverence towards God during these solemn exercises.

It strikes me very forcibly that the only way in which a reform can be effected in this particular, would be to have the most reverential posture agreed on which would be likely to obtain precedence in this day of POPULARITY and FASHION, and then have the subject set home to the hearts of the people by the Pastor of every church in our connection, until it resulted in a UNIFORMITY OF POSTURE THROUGHOUT THE CONGREGATION. H.

The Northern Light

Devoted to Free Discussion, and to the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, Miscellaneous Literature, and General Intelligence, and conducted by JOHN A. DIX, GIDEON HAWLEY, AMOS DEAN, T. ROMEYN BECK, THOS. W. OLCOTT, and E. C. DELEVAN, is published monthly, at Albany, at $1 for a single copy, $5 for six copies, $75 for one hundred copies.

The principal object of the publication is to diffuse information on subjects of practical usefulness. It will embrace four distinct branches of inquiry and intelligence:—

1. POLITICAL ECONOMY.
2. Agriculture.
3. Literary and Scientific Miscellany.
4. General Intelligence.

The following extract from the prospectus will give a correct view of the design of the paper.

"In respect to some of the subjects which properly come under the first general head, (POLITICAL ECONOMY,) the unsettled state of opinion renders it expedient that the greatest latitude should be given to discussion. In this particular, the publication will be somewhat novel in its character, at least in the United States; and a brief exposition of the motive, as well as the end to be attained, is, therefore due to the public.

"Though the country abounds with publications of a political, scientific and literary character, conducted with distinguished ability, there is no periodical which proceeds upon the principle of securing an unrestrained discussion of questions of public policy, opening its columns freely to different classes of thinkers. It is principally to supply this deficiency in respect to an important subject, that the proposed publication is to be issued; though as has been seen, there are other objects in view of great, if not equal, utility to the reading community. On questions of political economy, including the tariff, and the policy of protective duties, differences of opinion are known to exist; and it is believed that these differences, like most others, may be harmonized, if they can be harmonized at all, by an open and candid examination of the subjects out of which they arise. In public discussions, the object of all is truth, however much we may differ as to the mode of pursuing it, or as to the use to be made of it when found. But all agree that it is most likely to be attained by a comparison of the views entertained by persons who think differently on the same subject. To secure this object, the columns of the NORTHERN LIGHT will be open to all persons who think proper to discuss the public questions referred to, upon the sole conditions, that their communications shall be free from partizan politics, and that they be given to the public under their own signatures. In Germany and France, the usual course with correspondents for the periodical press is, to write under their own names. It is also the general practice in this country and in Great Britain, in the departments of literature and science. Why not extend the principle to those practical questions of political economy with which the public prosperity is so intimately interwoven?—He who comes before the public under the responsibility of his own name, naturally prepares his communication with more care than he who writes anonymously; and thus a higher and purer tone of public discussion is likely to be secured. Public men are constantly presenting their views to their fellow-citizens, in public speeches, made before deliberate bodies or assemblies of the people; and not unfrequently in reference to matters of personal bearing in respect to others. Should individuals hesitate to assume the same responsibility when writing for the periodical press, in respect to discussion, from which all personal and partizan references will be rigorously excluded? It is believed that no reason exists for the distinction: and if the public so think, and writers will so act, there can be no doubt that the cause of truth will be promoted, and that public discussion will be elevated in its tone and its objects.

"In the department of AGRICULTURE, the best selections will be made from foreign treatises and periodicals, and from some of the many very excellent publications in different portions of the United States; with such original matter as may be procured, through arrangements with individuals practically acquainted with the operations of agricultural industry.

"The department of LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC MISCELLANY will embrace a variety of interesting and important subjects.—Although the lighter pursuits of literature will not be wholly relinquished to other periodicals, the principal aim in this, as in the other departments, will be to embody valuable information. The results which have been obtained by the investigations of science, particularly in our own day, and the applications of scientific principles to the improvement of the social condition of mankind, will be presented in a popular shape, and divested of those abstractions, which constitute the greatest impediment to the diffusion of intelligence upon many of the most valuable and attractive subjects. Under the literary head, it is intended to present from time to time, articles from the pens of native writers of distinguished reputation. Translations from German, French and Italian authors will be occasionally furnished, so that our readers may become, to a certain extent, acquainted with the literature of European countries as well as our own. It is intended, also, to give selections of English poetry, commencing with some of the earliest metrical compositions in our language, and accompanying them with biograghical sketches of their authors.

"Under the head of GENERAL INTELLIGENCE, a brief summary of current events in this country and in Europe will be regularly furnished. To this department will also belong such statements as the limits of the publication will allow, with the internal condition of the Union and the several States, as exhibited by documentary evidence. A place will also be found for the most interesting portions of statistical information, which has been collected and published under the direction of European Governments, illustrating their political and social condition."

* * * * * *

☞ To Publishers and Editors.—Such editors and publishers as are willing to insert our prospectus with the terms of subscription, or give such liberal extracts from it as to make its design understood, shall receive a copy of the Northern Light during the year, without subjecting them to the tax of exchanging with us.

Missionary Department.

To the Members of the S. D. B. Missionary Society:

DEAR BRETHREN.—It is but recently that we were informed of our appointment as Executive Committee of your Society. We have as yet received no statistics from our predecessors, but from the information we have, it appears that the Society is embarrassed, through inability, to meet its outstanding accounts, much less to advance in supplying the wants of those who are famishing for the word of life.

This can not be attributed to the inability of its patrons, nor to unwillingness to do according to the rule of duty. Rather should we look for the defect in an indefiniteness with which the subject has been before your minds, both as to the claims of this sacred enterprise, and the unsystematic operations of the Society.

We wish, therefore, in few words, to call the attention of those whose servants we are, to the things entrusted to our stewardship.

Brethren, we would say your society is in debt for Missionary labors to brethren whose poverty can illy forego the fruit of their hard-earned toil two, three, or four years; besides, the condition of our feeble churches imploringly solicits the hand of assistance.

Let us, then, say to our ministering brethren:—Will you not spread out the subject before your respective congregations in the name of Him, who says, "The poor ye have always with you, and when ye will, ye may do them good"?

To the Agents:—Will you not do what you can to collect funds and stir up the spirit around you, and forward the amount collected to the Treasurer, (Henry C. Hubbard, of Scott,) or pay it over to some Missionary, and with a copy of his receipt send the amount still due on his order?

To those having claims against the Society:—Will you not visit some Agent in your vicinity and give him a copy of your account, adding such information as will be of general interest?

To the destitute churches, and brethren that are laboring with those that are feeble:—Will you not forward to the Chairman of the Executive Committee, or the Editor of the Register, (free of postage,) an expression of your wants, and the prospective encouragements to support a laborer with you.

Finally, we would say to all:—Look over "the field white" for your improvement, and let not the thought that you did as much as you were able at one time, rob you of the privilege of doing now, as the Lord hath prospered you, and do not forget that whatever may be your ability to give of carnal things, your efficiency in those spiritual remains; and the attentive ear of the Lord of the harvest is still open to your importunate cry.

Will the Executive Committee of last year furnish us with such statistics and information as will be necessary for us to act understandingly, and present to the Society a succinct view of their operations and standing.

J. R. IRISH, Ch'n of Ex. Com.

[We insert, agreeable to the request of the above, from the Minutes of the General Conference, the local Agents of the Missionary Society.—Ed.

Names.	Churches.
Daniel Lewis,	1st Hopkinton.
Nathan H. Langworthy,	2d "
Benjamin V. Crandall,	3d "
Jonathan Maxson,	Paucatuck.
Sanford Noyes,	Westerley.
Lester T. Rogers,	Waterford.
W. B. Gillett,	Piscataway.
Randolph Dunham,	Plainfield.
John T. Davis,	Shilo.
Mark Moore,	Salem.
John Whitford,	Berlin.
Benjamin Clark,	Petersburgh.
Benjamin Platts,	1st Brookfield.
Silas Bailey,	2d "
Adin Burdick,	3d "
Amos Colegrove,	De Ruyter.
William Crandall,	Lincklaen.
Russel G. Burdick,	Truxton.
Henry C. Hubbard,	Scott.
Clark Rogers,	Preston.
Halsey H. Baker,	Adams.
David Williams,	1st Verona.
Joseph A. Potter,	2d "
Maxson Green,	1st Alfred.
Nathan Lanphear,	2d "
A. A. F. Randolph,	Friendship.
Nathan Truman,	Bolivar.
Dennis Saunders,	1st Genesee.
Joseph S. Crandall,	3d "
Joel Jones,	Clarence.
Hosea Whitford,	Persia.
Lewis A. Dunham,	Hayfield.

News of the Day.

PICKPOCKET.—On the arrival of the Mail Pilot Line on Friday night at the Kensington Depot, Philadelphia, a somewhat fashionable looking man, who had come on from New-York, was detected in the act of robbing another passenger of his watch, and committed to prison.

UTICA AND SCHENECTADY RAIL ROAD. In the course of the five years during which the road has been in operation upwards of seven hundred thousand passengers have been carried over it without, we believe, a single fatal accident.

CELESTE.—On Thursday last the bill to divorce Henry Elliot from his wife, Celeste, was taken up in the Maryland House of Delegates, and rejected by an almost unanimous vote.

THE LEARNED BLACKSMITH.—The Northampton Courier says Mr. Burritt the learned blacksmith, who has mastered so many different languages, can hammer out every thing but low dutch.

WOOD SAWERS USED UP.—The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company have put a machine in operation for sawing the wood to supply the engines on their Railroad. The machine is operated upon by steam power, and consists of two seperate circular saws each but 20 inches in diameter. These saws turn with as much speed as steam can make them, and cut the sticks placed before them as fast as they can be supplied. Each of these saws will cut 35 cords of wood in ten hours when well attended to.

Louis Phillippe, besides King of a nation of 30,000,000 of people, is an agriculturalist, an iron founder, a wool merchant, a house holder, a rent owner, and a speculator in the funds.

We understand that a large amount of money purporting to be issues from the National Bank of Montreal, is in circulation. We are informed that there is no such bank.—Rochester Democrat.

The construction of the Oswego and Syracuse Rail Road will place Kingston U. C. within 36 hours of Boston.

A special messenger, with dispatches from Lord Sydenham, the Governor of Canada, passed through this city Sunday evening on his way to Washington.

ABDUCTION AND SEDUCTION.—A young man calling himself Isaac W. Shepperd, said to be from New-York, has been for some time visiting the family of a respectable citizen in Southwark, and succeeded in gaining the affections of one of his daughters. Within the last week he induced her to leave her father's house, and took her to a house of ill fame, where they were both apprehended on Saturday—Shepperd was committed by Alderman Hoffner to answer the charge of abduction and seduction, and the girl sent to the House of Refuge. Shepperd not only admitted his guilt but confessed that he had a wife and child in New-York. The young girl is but fifteen years of age.—Norwich Courier.

ABOLITIONISTS.—The Baptist Convention of Alabama recently resolved to withhold all appropriations to certain missionary societies, until they give satisfactory evidence that they are not, either directly or indirectly, concerned in anti-slavery movements and, in case of their refusal, the convention recommends the establishment of a southern Board of Missions, entirely distinct from the northern Baptists.

Dr. Charles Raymond of Albion, N. Y. died recently from the effects of poison imbibed in dissecting a corps—he having at the time a sore upon one of his thumbs, through which the fatal infection passed.

VERMONT.—There is a singular institution in Vermont, and one peculiar to that State, called the "Council of Censors." By a clause in their State Constitution, the people are required evey seventh year to select thirteen persons whose duty it shall be to inquire whether, during the last seven years, the Constitution has been violated—whether the Executive and Legislative branches of the Government have performed their duties—whether the taxes have been justly levied and collected—and whether the laws have been duly executed.

About twenty millions of bushels of corn were produced in Illinois last year. There were also produced 385,963 lbs. of tobacco; 28,120 lbs. of rice; 194,190 lbs. of cotton; and 323,296 lbs. sugar.

DASTARDLY OUTRAGE.—On Friday evening last, the wife of a respectable master carpenter was waylaid by three men, one of whom held her, while the other placed his hand over her mouth, and the third clapped a pistol to her breast. They first asked her if she had any money or jewelry about her person, and then searched over her clothes, but found none; they then by main force carried her over into the commons hard by, and when they arrived at a distant and lonely place, two of the ruffians violated her person, the third preventing her cries. Their diabolical purpose accomplished, the two left her to the tender mercies of the third, who raised her in a weak and exhausted state and carried her over several unfrequented places, and returning with her to the inhabited streets, finally left her at the house of one of her friends, which she had sufficiently recovered by this time to recognize. Subsequently this person was arrested, and on being brought into the lady's presence at the Alderman's office, she nearly fainted with emotion at seeing him, and exclaimed "that is the man." She subsequently swore positively to his identity, and he was committed for trial.—Phil. Ledger.

THE FREE BANKS.—The Comptroller has published a full statement of the number and condition of the Free Banks of the State, which will go far towards allaying the panic which has existed for a few days. Their condition may be summarily stated as follows: Securities—in bonds and mortgages, $2,117,644; New-York State Stocks fives $29,610; do fives and a half 72,000; do 6's, 70,000; Indiana fives 710,000; Illinois sixes 1076,000; Michigan sixes 707,000; do sevens 30,000; Arkansas sixes 769,000; Alabama fives 156,000; Kentucky sixes 31,000; Dividends retained 19,703. Making the total amount of securities $6,752,957. The whole number of notes in circulation, and liabilties of the banks $5,466,113, leaving an excess of securities over liabilities, if the securities be taken at par, of $4,286,844. This shows them to be at least safe.

REPRESENTATIVES OF FOREIGN STATES NOW IN WASHINGTON.—There are 6 Envoys Extraordinary, viz: from Great Britain, Henry S. Fox, Esq.: from Russia, M. Al de Bodisco: from the Argentine Republic, Gen. Alvear: from Austria, Baron de Mareschal: from Spain, Chevalier D'Argaiz: from France, M. de Bacourt. There are also, 2 ministers resident from Prussia, Baron de Roenne: from Portugal, M. Figaniere de Morao. There are six charges d'affaires: Mr. Steen Bille, from Denmark; Chevalier Adrian Martini, from Netherlands: M. Charles Serrugs, from Belgium: Chevalier de Nordin, from Sweden; Count de Colobiano, from Sardinia; Bernard E. Bee, from Texas.—Nat. Int.

NEW-YORK AND VIRGINIA.—A bill has recently passed the House of Delegates, in Virginia, by a majority of 37 votes, which authorizes the search of every vessel owned or commanded by any citizen or resident of the State of New-York, in order to see that no slave, or person charged with the commission of any crime shall be concealed on board said vessel; and the Captain of any vessel departing without such inspection, is subject to a penalty, for the benefit of the person who will sue for the same. Any vessel may be seized by the Inspector, and held in his possession until a bond with two securities is given. If this still becomes a law, it will be apt to give serious difficulty.

DEFENCE OF NEW-YORK.—A merchant of New-York, now at Washington, has submitted to the President a plan of defence that meets with such approbation. He has assured the President that within 60 or 90 days the city of New-York can be placed in such a state as to resist any attack. He proposes to erect towers 200 feet high, not more than 75 feet square at the base and, on the summit of each to place ten guns that will throw shot of 120 lbs.: to build the towers of heavy timber, and place in the centre of each a steam-boiler, to defend it from the attack of men, and also, to heat shot. The first tower to be erected back of the City Hall, the second at the Battery, and the third up Broadway, by Union Square—thus commanding both rivers.

The cost of all these he estimates, would not exceed $300,000, and the speculation of steam-vessels entering New-York and destroying the city, would be at an end, as a single shot, well directed from the tower, would send any ship to the bottom.

Gov. Davis, of Massachusetts, has appointed Thursday, the 8th of April, for the annual public fast.

The Lexington (Ky.) Observer says, "Kentucky would this day abolish slavery, if a convention were called to remodel her constitution." The Louisville Public Advertiser concurs in the opinion of the Observer.

Col. Chambers of Kentucky, has been appointed the President's private Secretary.

The relative strength of the two parties in the new Senate of the United States, is as follows: 29 whigs; 22 opposition, and one vacancy.

Peter Robinson was indicted on the 10th inst. by the Grand Jury at New-Brunswick, N. J. for the murder of Abraham Suydam, and the cause was set down for trial on the 11th inst.

The Toronto Patriot states that upwards of 15,000 soldiers, horse, foot and artillery, the very elite of the British army, are now stationed in the United States.

Daniel F. Webster has received the appointment of chief clerk in the Department of Secretary of State.

Intelligence has been received in Philadelphia from the British West Indies, stating that orders had some time since reached the islands from the Home Government, that 25,000 colored men were to be disciplined as soldiers, in addition to the ordinary colored militia and regulars of the islands.

THE NEW SENATE.

Maine.
Ruel Williams,	1845
George Evans,*	1847
Vermont.
Samuel Prentiss,*	1843
Samuel S. Phelps,*	1845
Massachusetts.
Isaac C. Bates,*	1847
Rufus Choate,*	1845
New Hampshire.
Franklin Pierce,	1843
Levi Woodbury,	1847
Connecticut.
Perry Smith,	1843
J. W. Huntington,*	1845
Rhode Island.
Nathaniel F. Dixon,*	1845
James F. Simmons,*	1847
New-York.
Silas Wright,	1843
Nathaniel P. Tallmadge,*	1845
New Jersey.
Samuel L. Southard,*	1845
Jacob W. Miller,*	1847
Pennsylvania.
James Buchanan,	1843
Daniel Sturgeon,	1845
Delaware.
Richard H. Bayard,*	1845
Thomas Clayton,*	1847
Maryland.
William D. Merrick,*	1845
John Leeds Kerr,*	1843
Virginia.
Wm. C. Rives,*	1845
Wm. S. Archer,*	1847
North Carolina.
Wm. A. Graham,*	1843
Willie P. Mangum,*	1847
South Carolina.
Wm. C. Preston,*	1843
John C. Calhoun,	1847
Georgia.
Alfred Cuthbert,	1843
John P Mc Berrien,*	1847
Alabama.
Clement C. Clay,	1843
Wm. R. King,	1847
Mississippi.
John Henderson,*	1845
Robert J. Walker,	1847
Louisiana.
Alexander Mouton,	1843
Alexander Barrow,*	1847
Arkansas.
Ambrose H. Sevier,	1843
WM. S. Fulton,	1847
Missouri.
Lewis F. Linn,	1843
Thomas H. Benton,	1847
Kentucky.
Henry Clay,*	1843
Thomas T. Morehead,*	1847
Ohio.
William Allen,	1843
Benjamin Tappan,	1845
Indiana.
Oliver H. Smith,*	1843
Albert S. White,	1845
Illinois.
Richard M. Young,	1843
Samuel McRoberts,	1847
Tennessee.
A. O. P. Nicholson,	1847
(Vacancy.)
Michigan.
Augustus S. Porter,*	1845
Wm. Woodbridge,*	1847

*29 supporters of Gen. Harrison's administration.

22 opposed; one vacancy.

Condition of the Banks.—The statement from the Comptroller, which we publish to-day, showing the amount of circulating notes delivered to the different associations under the General Bank Law, with the amount and nature of the Securities held by him for the redemption of such notes, is timely, and ought to go far towards relieving the public anxiety. But for the depression of the stocks of the new States the accurities held are abundant for the redemption of every Red-back note in circulation. And who doubts either the ability or the faith of those States? Their credit is wounded now, it is true, but it will recover. Michigan, Indiana and Illinois, are too rich in resources and possess too much energy and enterprise either to stop payment or fail. They will go on paying the interest on this debt until the distribution of the proceeds of the Public lands enables them to pay the principal.—Albany Journal.

Lyceum Village.—There is a village called Berera, near Cleaveland, Ohio, which is maintained in connection with the system of Lyceums introduced by Mr. Josiah Holbrook, the chief manual occupation of the inhabitants of which is to get out grindstones! The pupils work six hours at this business, there being an excellent quarry in the neighborhood, and then spend four more in study and recitation.

Shocking Death.—We learn that yesterday morning Mr. Jacques Girodeau, one of the proprietors of the lower ferry boat, being on board, and thinking that the engine of the boat was stopped, as she had neared the bank, thrust his head under the lever of the engine to look at something aside. All at once the engine was put in motion, and the result was, that Mr. Girodeau's head was severed from his body, and fell inside, while the body was left in the passage way.—New Orleans Bee.

The Boston and Providence railroad has recently reduced the fare from $2 to $1,50, and the effect has been a decided increase of the nett revenue.

Gibbon, in his biography, mentions that during the trial of Warren Hastings, he inquired of a reporter how many words a speaker uttered in an hour—the answer was, 7200. At this rate one talking two hours a day for fifty years, would utter 63,000,000 of words.

The Legislature of Maryland, at its late session, passed a bill to receive as part of the territory of the State, parts of the District of Columbia, in case of a retrocession.

Late Texas papers say that Gen. Hamilton is appointed Envoy Extraordinary to England; Judge Webb, Minister to France; Dr. Chalmers, Secretary of the Treasury; Mr. Mayfield, of Nacogdoches, Secretary of State; Dr. Archer Secretary of War and the Navy.

From the New Yorker.

MONEY MATTERS.

There has been a very serious panic of late with regard to the solvency of the notes ('Red-Back') of our General Law Banks—a panic commencing in our City, causing a pressure upon their several places of redemption in Albany, and thence rendering many of their agents there unable to continue their redemption as heretofore. The announcement of this failure of course increased and extended the alarm, until it had nearly overspread the State, and caused about one-half the 'red dogs' to stop redeeming at Albany, and some of them to fail altogether. The original grounds of panic were the general and extraordinary depression of all State Stock and Mortgage securities, on which securities the circulation of these Banks rest as a basis and a pledge of redemption; and the depression in money matters generally, causing a steady decrease of the circulating medium, and a consequent pressure upon the Banks. The weakness evinced by some of these Banks in the hour of trial very easily accounts for the extension of the panic. The following are the Banks which are now generally discredited, having failed to redeem at their own counters, we believe, as well as at Albany, viz: Millers' Bank of Clyde, Farmers' Bank of Seneca county, Tonawanda Bank, N. Y. City Trust and Banking Co., (fraud,) Tenth Ward Bank N. York, Chelsea Bank, do., Staten Island Bank, do., Erie County Bank, Buffalo, Union Bank, do, Bank of Western N. York, Rochester; Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, Batavia; Binghamton Bank, James Bank, Jamesville. The greater number of these Banks stopped payment long since, and have been winding up for months.

The following have stopped redeeming at Albany, but not, so far as we can learn, at their own counters, viz: Bank of America, Buffalo; Merchants' Exchange, do; Mechanics' Bank, do.; United States Bank, do.; Phœnix Bank, do.; Bank of Commerce, do.; Bank of Brockport; Cattaraugus County Bank; Bank of Lodi; St. Lawrence Bank.

Of our Safety Fund Banks, the Commercial Bank of Buffalo failed some fifteen months since, and is now being wound up by Hon. W. L. Marcy, Receiver. The Wayne County Bank at Palmyra collapsed last winter, and is now in the hands of a Receiver. The Commercial Bank of Oswego is said to be in trouble. These are called Safety Fund Banks which have been discredited some years, and their notes are in as good credit as any others, being promptly redeemed by the Comptroller at Albany, out of the Safety Fund.

Messrs. Clay and King.—We rejoice in being able to state that the personal misunderstanding between Hon. Henry Clay of Ky., and Hon. Wm. R. King of Ala., which was mentioned in our last as occuring in the Senate on the 9th inst., has been fully adjusted through the zealous exertions of the friends of those distinguished gentlemen. No challenge has ever passed between them, though their misunderstanding seemed likely at one time to lead to one. The country is mainly indebted to Mr. Preston of S. C. for effecting a mutual explanation, which was announced to the Senate on Monday, to the profound gratification of all parties.—New Yorker.

Bad Banks in Ohio.—The Gallipolis Bank, having fallen into the hands of swindlers, is utterly exploded, and its notes are worth nothing. (We announced its failure several weeks since.) The following Ohio Banks are not in good credit in this quarter, viz: Farmers' Bank of Canton; German Bank, Wooster; Lebanon Banking Co.; Manhattan Bank; Miami Exporting Co.; West Union; Granville; Erie and Kalamazoo.—New Yorker.

The North Eastern Boundary.—The committee of the Massachusetts House of Representatives on the North-East boundary question, has reported a series of resolutions declaring that the right of the State of Maine to the territory in question, remains, after the lapse of half a century, unimpaired by the passage of time, or the interposition of multiplied objections; that though there is no cause to apprehend any immediate collision on the subject, it is earnestly to be desired that a speedy adjustment should remove the possibility, however remote; that the report of Messrs. Mudge and Featherstonhaugh is calculated to produce, in every part of the United States, a state of mind unfavorable to the proper conciliating spirit; and that the interests and honor of Massachusetts alike demand a perseverance, not the less determined because it is temperate, in maintaining the rights of Maine.—Evening Star.

Attempt to Burn a Whale Ship.—We are informed by the Newport (R. I.,) Mercury, that a letter from Capt. Griswold, of the whaling ship Audley Clark, of Newport, to his owners, dated St. Catharines, Jan. 4th, 1841, states that he had put into that port to put on shore three men, for the Consul to send home for trial, they having attempted to burn up the ship. One of the men, named Wm. Rankin, alias Bowland, confessed before the Consul that he put fire to the train of combustibles, at the instigation of Wm. Maxfield and Henry Wood, two seamen belonging to the ship. The fire was communicated through the hole in the forecastle bulk-head, but was fortunately discovered before it had done much damage, and was extinguished in about fifteen minutes. The only reason given for their diabolical conduct, was that they wished to get clear of paying large bills which the ship had against them.

Damage by the Tide.—The tide in the Delaware on Thursday last, is said to have been higher than at any former period, and among other damage done is the carrying away of the abutments of the Rail road bridge over Newton creek, about three miles below Camden. This is felt as the greater inconvenience to West Jersey travel just now, from the fact that the next nearest road is so much cut up by travel as to be rendered impassable.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Steamboat Disaster.—The Charleston Courier publishes a letter over the signature of David Ewart, of Charleston, S. C., by which we learn that besides the three persons before mentioned as having been saved from the steamboat Lamplighter, which sunk while at anchor near Apalachicola, Florida, on the 4th of February, six or seven others escaped, which would reduce the number lost to fourteen. The steamer when near Dog Island. broke her shaft, cast anchor, and waited for assistance. In the meantime, a boat was despatched to St. Mark's light house, and procured a schooner which hastened to the sufferers; she reached the spot on the 15th, but not a trace of her was to be found, she having sunk in a severe gale, which prevailed on the 13th. Nine men who took possession of two small boats, were driven to sea, and endured much suffering from cold and hunger, from which three of them died. They at length reached land, at an uninhabited part of Florida, and the next day were taken off by the ship John Adams, having fasted from Saturday till Thursday.—New Yorker.

New way of Settling a Minister.—Last week we copied two brief extracts from a letter of Elder John Peck, General Agent of the Baptist Home Mission Society, to the New York Baptist Register, dated at Pennfield, Ga., January 29, 1841.

The following additional extract will be read with interest:

"From Marion I passed on to Salma, and thence to Montgomery; and as I had to travel nights, I became very feeble, so that I stopped here till my health recovered. I had a very agreeable interview with Br. W. C. Crane, and with the church of which he is a pastor. He and the church are not affected with the excitement, as most of the churches are through this country. They consider that if others do wrong, it is no excuse for them to neglect their duty to God or his cause; hence, all the benevolent institutions of the day share in their prayers and contributions. This is as it should be. I saw in this place a colored ministering brother, belonging to Montgomery church—Cæsar Blackmoor, who is OWNED BY THE ALABAMA ASSOCIATION, and is appointed by them a missionary to the colored people, under the direction of three trustees, and preachers, within the bounds of the Association, and elsewhere, at their direction. Br. Crane informed me that he has been very successful in his labors, and preaches with great acceptance to both white and colored brethren. He baptized last year, on his mission, one hundred and ten persons of his own color. As a man, a Christian, and a minister of the gospel, his character is irreproachable. He preached on Lord's day in the afternoon in the same pulpit that I occupied in the morning; but my health would not admit of my going to hear him."

So here is a minister of the Gospel, faithful and successful, a man without reproach, who is after all, nothing but a thing, an article of personal property, and kept in that degraded position by a body of professed Christians—Baptists! Comment is unnecessary.—Reflector.

Oil.—Importations of Sperm and Whale Oil into the several ports of the United States, during the month of December, is as follows:

Ports.	Barrels.
New-Bedford,	3950
Nantucket,	2000
Fairhaven,	2500
Salem,	400
Mattapoisett,	400
Salem, (whale oil,)	2600

Total—9150 barrels, or 288,225 gallons Sperm. 2600 barrels, or 81,905 gallons of Whale.

The Manchester of America.—The whole number of mills at Lowell, Mass., for the manufacture of cloth, is 30, containing 178,868 spindles, and 5,588 looms, giving employment to a capital of nearly eleven millions of dollars. The number of females employed, is 6,920, and males 2,172; the yards of cloth manufactured in a week, 1,265,450. The average amount of wages paid each month is $170,000.

The Navy.—The Navy appropriation bill appropriates for the increase, repair, armament and equipment of the Navy, and wear and tear of vessels in commission, $2,000,000; of which $400,000 is to be expended in building and equiping war steamers of the medium size. For pay of officers and seamen, $2,335,000. For provisions, $500,000. Other objects connected with the Navy, $1,000,737. Total, $5,835,737.

New Invention.—We learn from the London Standard that a Mr. Hill, a gentleman of great scientific ability, has ascertained that a woolen band or belt, if passed over two plain rollers, one fixed at the top of a shaft or well, and the other below the surface of the water, by turning the upper roller at the rate of 1,000 feet per minute, the adhesion of the water overcomes its gravity, and a much larger quantity, as in the case of the common pump, is raised and discharged in a uniform and continuous stream. The inventor at once secured a patent for so valuable and important a discovery, and it is now in use in various noblemen and gentlemen's estates throughout England. It is likewise applied to the draining of waste lands, mines, and coal pits.

It is estimated that there are materials at the present time, in the various Navy Yards of the United States, sufficient to build 29 ships of the line, 40 friagtes, and a number of steamers.

It is ascertained, by actual measurement, that the depth of Seneca Lake is 563 feet.

The value of manufactured goods brought by the President steamship, is said to be £500,000; beside which, she was obliged to refuse 200 tons of freight.

Temperance in Cincinnati.—The friends of Total Abstinence are now making vigorous efforts to prevent the retail of ardent spirits by any tavern or Coffee-house within the chartered limits of the city of Cincinnati. Petitions containing upwards of 2000 signatures have been presented, we are informed, to the Council, praying them to grant no license hereafter, for the retail of ardent spirits within the city corporation, and new signatures are being constantly sent in. We wait solicitously to see the result of this movement. We hope that the success of the measures taken, will vindicate the wisdom of those who projected them, and are carrying them forward.—Cincinnati Observer.

Retailing of Intoxicating Liquors.—The Committee in the Assembly of this State, to whom was referred the petition of the New York State Temperance Society, and others, relative to the sale of intoxicating liquors, have reported a bill in favor of leaving to the decision of the electors of the respective towns and cities, the question whether their board of excise shall or shall not grant licenses for the ensuing year, for the sale of intoxicating liquors. The legislation on this subject, heretofore, seems to have been made on rather peculiar principles: more like a sale of indulgences and a small source of profit, than in a way truly to benefit the community.—N. Y. Jour. of Commerce.

Gov. Page of New Hampshire, has appointed the 15th of April, to be observed throughout the State, as a day of Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer.

Going Ahead.—It is said that numerous Temperance Societies are forming in Wisconsin Territory, and the papers suggest that the present year will witness a vast improvement among the inhabitants in consequence.

An English paper mentions that one of the American ships at Calcutta, recently landed 400 tons of ice, which sold at the wholesale rate of one penny per pound, netting a profit, exclusive of port duties, of upwards of £3,700 sterling.

A man who puts aside his religion because he is going into society, resembles a person taking off his shoes because he is about to walk upon thorns.

Many families have owed their prosperity full as much to the propriety of female arrangement as to the knowledge and activity of the father.

The Portsmouth Journal says, that the punishment of death is virtually abolished in New Hampshire, by public opinion.

Well done Lowell!—By a vote, 830 to 365, the citizens of the Factory City, have instructed their Mayor and Aldermen to license no grog shops the present year.

An Anecdote.—A friend of ours has just returned from Kentucky, and brought with him a box of superior extra cigars, (500) worth $10, and a beautiful walking cane, both which are a present sent by an emancipated slave to his old master, residing at present in this vicinity, and are designed as a token of gratitude for the liberty he now enjoys. The colored man said he always liked to send his old master something from time to time, as he had opportunity, to show him that he had not forgotten his former kindness.

We can hardly say whether this is more creditable to the former master, or the emancipated slave. This fact will show at least, how much danger there is connected with emancipation.—Pittsburgh Witness.

Ice.—There are now sixteen companies in Boston, engaged in the business of shiping ice to the East and West Indies, and to New Orleans and other southern ports.—The demand for the article is now so great for exportation, that large contracts have been made for it in Worcester county, to be transported to Boston by rail road. They formerly sold their ice in New Orleans at six cents a pound, but now sell it at one cent, and where they made one dollar by selling it at six cents, they now make four dollars by selling it at one cent a pound.—When it sold at six cents, none but the wealthy could afford to purchase it, but at one cent all classes buy it, so it is sold before much of it is wasted by melting.

The ice is sawed by a machine into square blocks not less than 12 inches thick, and is packed on board the vessels with straw and hay, boxed with thin lumber and made air tight. One of the Boston companies paid last year $7000 for the straw and hay they used in packing.—Boston Mer. Journal.

The Far West.—The Boonsville, (Mo.,) Observer says:—"A number of citizens of Platte county are about to emigrate to Upper California, and invite all disposed, to join them in planting a colony on the shores of the Pacific."

An anti-opium association has been formed in London, to prevail with the Government to cease growing opium in India with public funds.

Our sons hold themselves erect without busk, or corset, or frame work, or whalebone. Why should not our daughters also? Did not God make them equally upright? Yes—but they have "sought out many inventions."—Mrs. Sigourney.

From Florida.—From the Savannah papers, we learn further particulars of the severe skirmish between a small body of U. S. Troops under Lieutenant Albertis and a large party of Indians in the neighborhood of Fort Russell. The detachment fought its way through to the Fort with the loss of 4 killed, and 6 wounded. A detachment of 150 dragoons, under Capt. Burnham, we learn since by way of St. Augustine, were immediately sent after the enemy. The result is unknown, but the last news was, that 6 of them had been killed in a fight which ensued.

The Indians had not been shipped from Tampa Bay, but a letter from Fort Holmes, 3d inst., says: Gen. Amistad has 380 men, women and children in at Tampa, who are to embark for Arkansas on or before the 10th inst. They are closely guarded night and day by a company of Infantry, and half a company of Dragoons, so that they cannot escape. Two tried it, and were shot down and bayoneted—one killed instantly and the other died from his wounds.

Distilleries.—Neither New Jersey nor Delaware have a single distillery within their limits. How much vice and crime, and poverty and misery, would be prevented if such establishments were entirely unknown in the United States.

Tavern Keepers.—There is a bill before the Legislature of Pennsylvania, providing that tavern keepers shall publish their application for license, with the names of those recommending them.

An Opium Eater.—A woman in Boston, addicted to opium eating, has been committed, at her own and her husband's request, for two years to the House of Correction, that she may have an opportunity of subduing her depraved appetite.

Value of the Property of Great Britain.—Ricardo estimates the whole value of property in the British Empire at £3,000,000,000. G. R. Porter's tables for 1833, make it £3,660,000,000. The gross annual income is estimated by the latter at £514,000. The property owned by the nobility amounts to £100,000,000.

Gov. Page has been re-elected Governor of New Hampshire, and the Van Buren Congress ticket is also elected, as was expected.

Stenography Done Up.—An English paper gives the following notice of an important discovery which if true, would surpass that of Mr. Daguerre. It is, indeed, no less than a plan of rendering the vibrations of sound permanently visible!

A most ingenious and valuable discovery has just been made by Mr. Southworth, of Cheetham street, Manchester, by means of which an individual, although unacquainted with the art of writing, is enabled to take down the speech even of the most rapid speaker; and what is yet more surprising, in such a way as to indicate the peculiar emphasis with which it may be delivered. As the inventor has not yet secured a patent, all that we are at present enabled to state is, that it bears some analogy to photogenic drawing. It is well known in the latter case, that when a substance properly prepared is presented to objects illuminated by the rays of the sun, it receives a distinct and faithful impression of them, which is afterwards rendered permanent by suitable chemical agents.—So also the present discovery consists of a piece of mechanism, as susceptible of impression of sounds as the tympanum of the ear, which impression remains permanent, and is as perfectly legible as the clearest typography.

Distilleries.—Mr. Laing, in his "Tour in Sweden," lately published in England, informs us that there are in that kingdom 120,000 distilleries, many of them on a small scale and in private families. The consumption of spirits in 1786 amounted in Sweden and Finland anually to 5,400 000 kanns. At the present time in Sweden alone, the anual consumption is 22,000, 000 kanns. The temperance reform was never more needed in any country.

A new counterfeit $5 note on the Bank of Syracuse has just made its appearance. It is said to be an excellent imitation, but can be detected from the circumstance that the engravers names are printed "Rawdon, Wright, Hatch, New York," instead of Rawdon, Wright & Hatch," as in the genuine—the character "&" being left out entirely.

Senators Clay and King.—An altercation having occurred some days since in Senate between these gentlemen, a challenge was sent by Mr. King and accepted by Mr. Clay. After much delay, and great anxiety being felt on the subject, we learn that the matter has been adjusted.

After the Senate opened on Monday last, Mr. Preston rose and remarked upon the deep regret felt by himself and others at the collision which had taken place in the Senate between two of its most distinguished members. But he believed that the difficulty had arisen from a misconception on the part of the Senator from Kentucky (Mr Clay) as to what was said by the Senator, from Alabama (Mr. King). He had it from an undoubted source that there was no intention on the part of the Senator from Alabama to wound the feelings of the Senator from Kentucky. He expressed a hope, therefore, that the unhappy differences might soon be settled to the mutual satisfaction of both parties.

Mr. Clay then said that although he had misconceived the tenor of the remarks of the Senator from Alabama, and had acted on the belief that there was an intention to wound him, yet being more prompt to repair than to repel an injury, he would say that he was now convinced that the Senator from Alabama had no design to insult him; and he now cheerfully took back all that he had said in reply. A burst of applause followed Mr. Clay's remarks.

Mr. King rose and stated, in substance, that he hoped his course here had been always marked by forbearance and courtesy; and, in reference to this matter, he would, after the frank declaration of the Senator, say that he had never meditated or uttered any thing intended to be insulting to him or disparaging of him. Mr. Clay then advanced towards Mr. King, and offered his hand, which was most cordially received. The galleries and lobbies then set up a shout of applause, which was not checked.

The steamboat Swiss Boy was snagged and sunk a few days since, on her downward passage to Mobile, laden with cotton.

At the commencement of the Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, on the 6th inst. the degree of M. D. was conferred on 57 gentlemen.

MARRIED,

In De Ruyter, on the 16th inst. by Rev. Mr. Ainsworth, Mr. Wm. JENNINGS, of Lenox, to Miss HARRIET E. LESUER, of the former place.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Of R. P. Babcock $1,37 cr. self $2,25 vol. 1 Brayton Babcock, $1,12 1-2 vol. 1. $1 vol. 2. Oliver Curtis, $8, cr. Edwin Kelsey, Nathan Rogers. 1st. Clark Rogers. Susan Curtis, each $2, vol. 2. C. M. Lewis, $2,25 cr. Daniel Williams, vol. 1. of G. Barber. vol. 1.$1, of J. Greene, $4,22 cr. E.G. Potter, $2,22 H. Crandall. $2 vol. 2. of A. D. Babcock, $1, of H. Colgrove, $2, of J. R. Irish, $10, cr. G. Sherman L. Maxson jr. and T. Lewis $2, each vol. 2. Daniel Maxsou, $2,25 vol. 1. for Hand Bills, $2. M. Greene, $2,25 vol. 1. G. Sherman, $2.25 vol. 1. of W. B. Gillett, $12, cr. Isaac Clawson, Nehemiah F, Randolph, Samuel Dunham, John D. F. Randolph. Jeremiah Dunham, Jacob Martin, each $2,25 vol. 1. $1, before rec'd ,50 retained.

LIST OF LETTERS.

Zeno Allen, P. M. Joseph Jeffry P. M. (E. Bee was credited at the time) W. B. Gillett, C. M. Lewis. S. S. Streeter P. M. (the requested arrangements are made) Jas. R. Irish (your requests are all attended to) Another Subscriber (next week. too late for this) D. Coon rec'd. some time since and accidentally mislaied, containing the death of Thompson W. Stillman &c. if Brother Coon will furnish us the contents of the letter again he may do so at our charge.

DIED,

In Genesee, Jan. 20th ALANSON ABEL BABCOCK, aged 3 years 17 days, son of Dea. Peleg Babcock.

Feb. 2nd LUCINDA, wife of Peleg Babcock, in her 37th year. She had been for a number of years a worthy member of the 1st S. D. B. Church in Genesee, and died after a short but severe sickness; leaving an affectionate husband and 7 small Children to mourn her loss.

"She has gone to the grave; but we'll not deplore her,
Though sorrows and darkness encompass the tomb;
The Saviour has pass'd through the portals before her:
The light of his love was her lamp through the gloom.

She has gone to the grave: we no longer behold her,
Nor walk the rough path of the world by her side
But the wide arms of mercy, were spread to enfold her:
And sinners may hope since the sinless have died.

She has gone to the grave; and its mansions forsaking,
Perhaps her tried spirit in doubt lingered long;
But the sunshine of heaven beamed bright on her waking,
The song which he heard was the seraphim's song.

She has gone to the grave; but 'tis wrong to deplore her,
Since God was her ransom, her guardian, her guide.
He gave her; he took her: and soon he'll restore her,
Where death has no sting, since the Saviour has died."

In Genesee. March 3d ORVILLE EVERETT, son of Asa and Emma Langworthy. aged 14 months and 3 days.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ALFRED ACADEMY,

AND

TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

ENCOURAGED by the liberal patronage of the surrounding country, the Trustees hope to meet all reasonable expectations of their patrons by increasing the facilities of intellectual improvement.

The Academic Year for 1841—2 is divided into four terms of 11 weeks each, opening, viz:

1st,—Wednesday. April 28.
2nd.—Wednesday, Aug. 18.
3d,—Wednesday, Nov. 10.
4th,—Wednesday, Feb. 3

Familiar Lectures may be expected, as occasion may require, from the Principal, Mr. W. C. KENYON, and during the fall term by J. R. IRISH, on THE ART OF TEACHING.

TUITION—Varying with Studies, from $2,50 to $3,50.

BOARD—According to accommodations from $1 to $1,25.

M. GREEN,
A. BURDICK, 3d, } Trustees.
J. R. IRISH,

Alfred, March 17th, 1841.

BOOKS! BOOKS!! BOOKS!!!

EDWIN P. BLY,

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of De Ruyter and the public generally, that he has for sale Books of most kinds and descriptions usually called for in any Book Store. The following are a few, viz:—Davies Geometry, do. Surveying, do. Algebra, do. Arithmetic, do. First Lessons in Arithmetic. Also, almost all kinds of Latin, Greek and Italian, Olney's Geography & Atlas, Burnet's Geography of the Heavens.

Common Schools can be supplied with Books for a Library.

BOOK BINDING

Done in a neat and durable manner, and as cheap as can be done in any other place, at the sign of the Mammoth Book—No. 3, Albany St., De Ruyter.

De Ruyter, November 1st, 1840. 35tf

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

POETRY.

Immortality.

[From the German.]

Hark to the sea wave ringing sound!
The awful storm's wild roar we hear:
Poor trembling man appears this hour,
They prey of passion's evil power,
The vivid lightning darts around;
The lordly lion flies in fear.
Whose sin-fed phantoms of affright,
Add terror to the gloom of night.

Let mountains worn by ages, send
Through all their caves the howl of dread.
Let shaken earth asunder rend,—
Man calm beside the gulph should tread,
The beast by flight its weakness shows,
But deeply on the life that glows,
So brightly in the human breast
Is immortality impressed.

O man, though force may shake to dust
Thy dwelling place of living clay;
Never through fear forsake thy trust,
Or turn from duty's call away.
The murderer's steel with crimson stain
Marks but the outer being slain;
And though in ruins that may fall,
The spirit triumphs over all.

On then with zeal and courage high,
Though death-armed dangers may oppose;
And dare, when duty prompts, to die:
'Twill give life's day a glorious close.
Earth can but kindred earth entomb:
As leaves shook off in summer bloom,
Upon the lap of earth decay,
So melts the outer man away.

Upward towards Truth's eternal sun,
Up to fair virtue's home on high;—
To bowers, where perfect Love is known,
The Christian turns the spirit eye,
Virtue, and Truth, and perfect Love,
Gladden the faithful soul above;—
Where God his paradise has made,
And neither clouds nor sorrows shade.

Then though by life storms fiercely driven,—
Though violence thy path attend,—
A voice comes whispering from heaven,—
"Man thou shalt conquer in the end."
For when thy dust with dust shall lie,
Thine are the glorious halls on high;
And death, on eagle wings shall bear,
The ever living Spirit there.   N.

Miscellaneous Department.

THE TRIAL.

Feb. 20, 1841, the trial, on the appeal, commenced before the Supreme Court, which meets under the Senate Chamber in the right wing of the Capitol.

Mr. Baldwin read his motion to dismiss the appeal, on the ground, 1. That the United States have no right, by their Constitution or laws, or the law of nations, to take an appeal, or to take any proceedings to procure the surrendering of the respondents as slaves; 2. That there was no demand made by the Spanish minister for them as slaves, and no appearance authorised by him, or on his behalf, against them as slaves; 3. That the United States Government had no right to surrender them for trial; 4. And that, in any view, the appeal could not be tried here, because the several appellees [the Africans] were not, individually, of the value of $2000.

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S ARGUMENT.

On Monday, the Attorney General briefly recapitulated the evidence and the substance of the decree of the Court below, and then stated the points which he considered to be established. They were, that the vessel and cargo at Havana were the ascertained property of Spanish subjects; that slavery is allowed there, and slaves are property; that these particular negroes were there certified by the Governor General, the highest official authority on the Island, to be ladinos, and the property of Ruiz and Montez, who had a regular permit to ship them on board the Amistad. This vessel, thus certified, and the negroes in charge of the persons certified to be their owners, were regularly cleared, with the proper papers. Here then was the complete documentary evidence of property, ascertained by the highest official evidence. On the 26th of August, the vessel not having changed in any respect her natural character, her papers all on board, and the certified owners of these negroes on board, and in possession of the property which they were thus officially shown to be entitled to hold by the laws of Cuba, were taken possession of by a public armed vessel of the United States, and delivered to the proper tribunal. At this point, the minister of Spain interferes, and demands that, according to the provisions of the treaty, the vessel, cargo and negroes shall be delivered to his charge for the owners.

The only inquiries, then, are, I. Whether due and sufficient proof has been made of the property in the vessel, cargo and negroes. And—

2. Have the United States a right to interfere, as they have done in this case, to obtain the restoration of this property to its owners.

Sufficient Proof that the Slaves were Property.

He argued that due and sufficient proof of property has been made to authorize the restoration of this property.—Property in slaves is held as completely in Cuba as in any one of the United States—and if they are property of Spanish subjects, they must be given up under the treaty of 1795, the same as any other property, on proof of ownership.—The certificate of the Governor General, that they are slaves, and are the property of the persons named as owners, is conclusive on this point. He is the highest functionary known to the laws of the land, and as such, his public acts are to be received as evidence of any facts certified by him, within the scope of his authority. Commerce would be at an end, if countries were to refuse full faith to the official documents of the proper authorities of other countries. The question whether these authorities have acted right or wrong cannot be raised here. If it is ascertained by the proper certificate that they have acted within the scope of their authority whether they be judicial, executive, or any other public functionary, makes no difference. How could the tribunals of our country enquire into the local laws and municipal regulations of another? This doctrine is sustained by the whole course of judicial decisions, both in this Court and elsewhere. This Court has sustained the decrees of foreign Courts, on matters before them, whether this Court deemed the decree right or wrong. The principles so well established on this point can apply to no case more fully than to the present. Here is exactly the evidence that ought to be had, the papers are such as the parties were bound to have, and they are therefore conclusive. The evidence is found by the District Court to be sufficient to establish the right of property in the vessel and the goods; why is it not then in regard to the negroes. It was sufficient in the Island of Cuba, and therefore ought to be received as sufficient here. It is a settled principle of Admiralty proceedings, that the best evidence to be had is the documents accompanying the property, and the Courts will always look to that as conclusive, where they are regular.

The learned Attorney argued further, that there is no different rule of evidence in the case of slave property and any other, that it must have been the understanding of both nations, by the 9th Article of the Treaty, that slaves were to be restored as any other property; that this Court cannot look behind the certificate of the Governor General to ascertain whether the negroes are recently imported from Africa, that if they are so imported, they yet are not free by Spanish laws until judicially "declared free" by the proper Spanish tribunal, that the allegation of fraud in obtaining the certificate cannot be made here. But if you go behind the certificate, there is no evidence but hearsay, Dr. Madden's deposition is chiefly hearsay, and has been contradicted in several important particulars, is it upon such grounds that the Court will set aside the official records of foreign countries?

Should the President Interfere?

On the point whether the Executive had a right to interfere, at the request of the public functionary of Spain, the Attorney General urged, first, that the Executive was bound to interfere, because it was in the execution of a treaty stipulation, and the Executive was the proper organ of the government to see to the execution of treaty stipulations.—If called upon to restore property, the President was bound to take measures for that purpose. And if he found it in custody of the Courts, he was bound to go to the Court and present the evidence, and require the decision of the Court. As to the decree of the Court below, it was clearly wrong in awarding salvage on the vessel and cargo, because the treaty is express that property shall be restored entire and without diminution, and therefore no citizen of the United States had any right of salvage under such circumstances. The treaty was as effective as any Act of Congress, because all treaties are declared by the Constitution to be the supreme law of the land. And in regard to the negroes, the decree is erroneous, because they are fully shown to be property of Spanish subjects, and ought to have been restored as such, on due proof.

Mr. Gilpin closed at twenty minutes past one, and the remainder of the setting was occupied by Mr. Baldwin, on behalf of the Africans, in urging the motion to dismiss the appeal.

MR. BALDWIN'S ARGUMENT.

Mr. Baldwin, in opening his argument, said that in appearing on behalf of these humble Africans, whom he represented, and who are contending for freedom and life, with two powerful governments arrayed against them, it was a source of high gratification that the question will be heard and tried in a court which is high above the influence of Executive power or popular prejudice. By its very constitution, it is exempt from all the importations to which, under other circumstances, Courts are subject; imputations such as he regretted to say, have been most unjustly cast in certain quarters, on the Hon. Judge of the District Court in Connecticut, before whom this cause was first tried. In a case of this kind, involving the destiny of thirty-six unhappy men, cast by Providence on our shores, under circumstances calculated to excite the sympathies of all to whom the facts are truly known, he was very sorry that attempts should have been made, here, on the very eve of the trial before the Court of dernier resort, to disturb the course of justice, by appeals to local prejudices and sectional interests, and especially that even the official gazette of the government had stooped to publish the imputations upon judicial functionaries, and appeals to prejudice, represented as coming from one of the most commanding minds of the country, calculated to impair the confidence of our own and other nations in the purity and impartiality of this high tribunal. And, what seemed still more grievous, that the accredited minister of a foreign government should, on the very day in which it was expected that this case would come to a hearing before the Judiciary, communicate to the Executive Department of our government, an article from a Spanish newspaper, to have it published to the world, charging upon these unfortunate men the most atrocious crimes, with the intent to have them regarded as monsters in human shape. I do not mention these things, said Mr. B., because I fear their effect upon this Court, but because it is my duty thus publicly to reprobate a course of proceeding calculated to impair that just confidence which the country has ever been accustomed to repose in the decisions of this Court.

This case said he is one of deep interest, from its circumstances, and is felt as such throughout our whole country, and almost through the civilized world, so extensively have the circumstances become known. But it has an interest on other grounds to our citizens. It has perverted the question of power on the part of the Executive, in a manner that has filled men in one portion of the country with alarm and anxiety. It is the first time, since the government was formed, founded as it is on the principles of the revolution, that all men are created equal, and have from the Creator certain inalienable rights, formed expressly to establish justice,—it is the first time that the Executive has appeared in court, litigating and appealing from court to court, to consign human beings to slavery. Can the government thus appear before the courts for such an object? I deny it, and trust the courts will not sanction the interference.

Review of the Facts.

Before proceeding to argue the motion to dismiss the appeal of the United States, he would advert to the facts, as they appear on record. It appears that the schooner Amistad arrived in the waters of the United States, in Long Island Sound, in the possession of the appellees, who are all admitted on the record to be native Africans, recently from Africa. The papers of the vessel show that when she left Havana, there were on board of her fifty-four passengers, of whom the appellees were apart, who were taken on board as slaves, as slaves under the color of two custom house permits, describing them by Spanish names, and as the property of Ruiz and Montez. They were libelled as property by Lt. Gedney, and claimed as property by Ruiz and Montez, and all the parties in interest were thus regularly before the court, by admiralty proceedings in a condition to litigate their respective claims. In this stage of the case, the United States came in and alleged that the Spanish Minister had made a demand, &c,, "which claim was now pending upon the United States," and praying the Court, if the slaves were found to be the property of Spanish subjects, to do what was necessary to keep the public faith inviolate, or if they should be found to have been brought in by an infraction of our laws against the slave trade, then that they should be delivered to the President to be sent back. The Court, after a patient investigation, found the facts to be, in all material points, as had been set forth in the plea of the Africans, and that they were entitled to be free; but as it appeared that Ruiz and Montez, in steering the vessel for the United States, had in view the preservation of their property in the slaves, it was adjudged that they were guilty of violating the slave trade act and so the Africans were placed at the disposal of the President. The claim of Lt. Gedney was dismissed, and that of Ruiz and Montez, with costs, and the first part of the claim of the United States. From this decree neither Gedney nor Ruiz nor Montez, nor the Spanish minister acting for them, has taken an appeal. Nobody has appealed but the United States.

Now said Mr. B., what has become of Ruiz and Montez? They submitted to the jurisdiction of the District Court,.—No principles is better settled in admiralty practice, than that a party in court is bound by the decree, unless he appeals. The question whether these Africans are the property of Ruiz and Montez, lies at the foundation of all the proceedings, at the foundation of the claim of the United States; the District Court have decided that the property is not in Ruiz and Montez and they have acquiesced, by not taking an appeal.

ARGUMENT AGAINST THE PRESIDENT'S INTERFERENCE.

What right had the Executive to interfere? The whole case was fully in the hands of the judiciary, it was the duty of the Court to decide, and to see that justice was done, the parties in interest were all there; where, then, is the law which authorizes the Executive to interfere, to appear before our judicial tribunals, and make itself a party in questions involving individual rights?

But suppose the Executive had a right to appear in a private litigation as to property, has it a right to intefere for the re-capture and surrender of fugitive slaves who have come without wrong into the territory of a free State? Was this the object for which the free States joined in framing our Constitution of government? Did they ever consent to such an object? This whole matter was wisely left to the States, AND TO THEM ALONE. The government of the Union has no power to establish slavery in a State where it does not exist, nor to give extra-territorial force to the slave laws of a foreign nation within the bounds of a free State. I speak not of cases where slaves in possession of their owners are driven into our ports by stress of weather and remain in the possession of their owners, that the government should interfere to set them at liberty, as was done at Bermuda.—That is not this case. These slaves did not come here in the possession of Ruiz & Montez, but in the full possession of their liberty, with Ruiz & Montez in subjection to them And now the claim of the United States, is, that the Executive is bound to enter upon the territory of the free State of New-York, by its naval officers, and seize these men, and carry them by force into another district, and re-enslave them for the benefit of Spanish negro-dealers. The vessel had been taken by force out of the hands of Spanish subjects, was not sailing under Spanish colors, had lost its national character, and was in the full possession of the Africans. What right had Lieut. Gedney to seize it or them? That seizure was wrong, not to Ruiz and Montez, not to Spain, but to the Africans, who were in possession, and had committed no crime for which they were amenable to our authorities.

If Cinquez when he landed on the shore of New-York was free by the laws of that State, can the U. S. interfere and change his relations and make him a slave? This is on the supposition that the Africans had been domiciled in a Spanish colony, and were actual slaves by the laws of Spain. But the record shows that they were recently from Africa, and therefore never were subject to those laws. Yet we are asked, as an act of comity, to suppose that there might be some law by which they could be held as property in Cuba. Slavery, as recognized by Admiralty courts, is purely local, in the territory where it is established, but there is no country now, where recently imported Africans are recognized as slaves.

To the argument that the treaty required the surrender of "merchandize," Mr. B. made a most conclusive and elaborate reply. The same clause is in our treaty with Tripoli. Would a citizen of Tripoli be allowed to hold his white slaves in our courts under that clause? It may be well doubted whether it was ever within the power of the treaty-making department of our government to establish such a right. The fraudulent nature of the transaction at the Havana Custom House, in first shipping the negroes as ladinos with Spanish names, to evade the local laws, and then clearing them as "passengers for the Government," to elude the British cruisers, was strongly argued. But I cannot give even an outline of what is by general consent acknowledged to have been one of the most complete, finished, conclusive legal arguments ever made before that Court. I felt that it was an honor to any country and her courts an honor to the science of law and to the jurisprudence of Christian nations, that a foundation was laid for such an argument.

Mr Baldwin closed about twenty minutes after three o'clock, by paying a deserved tribute to the illustrous individual who was to present the remainder of the topics in the case;—who, after having filled the highest office in this or any nation, thought it yet a higher honor to appear in vindication of the rrghts of these unhappy foreigners the honor of the country and the character of our free institutions.

(Remainder Next Week.)

Mother's Department.

A MOTHER'S TEARS.

There is a sweetness in a mother's tears when they fall on the face of a dying babe, which no eye can behold with a heart untouched. It is holy ground upon which the unhallowed foot of profanity dares not encroach. Infidelity itself is silent and forbears her mocking—and here woman shows not her weakness but her strength, it is strength of attachment which man never can feel. It is perennial; dependent on no climate, no changes, no soil, but alike in storms as in sunshine, it knows no shadow of turning. A father, when he sees his child going down the dark valley, may weep when the shadow of death has fully come over him, and the last departing knell falls on his ear, may say,—"I will go down to the grave for my son in mourning," but he turns away—in the hurry of business, the tear is wiped, and though when he returns to his fireside the sportive laugh comes up to his remembrance, the succeeding day blunts the poignancy of his grief, and it finds no permanent seat.—Not so with her who has nursed the tender blossom. It lives in the heart where it was first entwined in the dreary hour of night. She sees its playful mirth, or hears its plaintive cries—she "seeks in the morning," and she goes to the grave to weep there. Its little toys are carefully laid aside as mementos to keep continually alive that thrilling anguish which the dying struggle and sad look produced, though grief, like a canker worm may be gnawing at her vitals, yet she finds a luxury in her tears, and sweetness in her sorrow, which none but a mother ever tested.—Sylvester's Reporter.

FAITH OF AN INDIAN MOTHER.

If a mother lost her babe, she would cover it with bark, and envelope it anxiously in the beaverskins. At the burial place she would put by its side its cradle, its beds, and its rattles; and, as a last service of maternal love, would draw milk from her bosom in a cup of bark and burn it on the fire, that her infant might still find nourishment on its solitary journey to the land of shades. Yet the new born babe would be buried not as usual on a scaffold, but by the way side, so that its spirit might secretly steal into the bosom of some passing matron, and be born again under happier auspices.

On burying her daughter, the Chippewa mother adds, not snow shoes, and beads, and moccasins only, but (sad emblem of woman's lot in the wilderness!) the carrying-belt and paddle. "I know my daughter will be restored to me," she once said, as she clipped a lock of hair as a memorial; "by this lock of hair I shall discover her, for I shall take it with me,"—alluding to the time when she too with her carrying-belt and paddle, and the little relic of her child, should pass through the grave to the dwelling place of her ancestors.—BANCROFT.

THE TRULY GREAT MIND.

To the really great mind, the most serious obstacles are but stepping stones to facilitate its upward rising—the rounds in the ladder by which it ascends to an elevation at once beautiful and sublime. It feeds opposition, it courts danger, it smiles at the petty shafts of envy, and heeds not the hissing of the serpent, scandal. These it knows and feels are but temporary—Truth is immortal, and grounded by TRUTH, is will triumph over all obstacles that may be placed in its onward and upward career. And though it may not assume its true position here—is there not a hereafter? The truly great mind, then is not over anxious for success in "the life that now is"—for if it have hope only in the present life, it is of all things the most miserable, but it looks to the future, and rests calmly secure in the bosom of the Infinite. All matter, all evil shall pass away, but the soul and the good shall live forever!—Bay State Dem.

CONSISTENCY IN THE FAMILY.

Let a parent be particularly on his guard against his faults and weaknesses when in the bosom of his family. Few of us, I conceive, are unconscious of having been sometimes taken by surprise on the entrance of a friend, of having felt that it was necessary to recall both the mind and the face to greater serenity and benignity, in order to receive him properly. Now can we seriously think, that a heart and countenance unfit for our friend, was fit for our children, who surrounded us before his arrival? Can we estimate the mischief which such moral deformity, placed before the eyes in the person of their father or mother, may produce?

VENTILATION OF SCHOOL-ROOMS.—After all that has been said about the necessity of a supply of fresh air for school-rooms, we constantly find cases in which it is shamefully overlooked. The teachers who are in the room from the opening of the school, do not perceive the process of corruption which the atmosphere is undergoing. But the visiter who enters during the services from the fresh air, feels at his first entrance that he inhales a pernicious and disagreeable fluid. Where the school is kept in a close room, there should be an arrangement by which a constant supply of air from without can be distributed through the apartment, and this can very easily be managed without creating a draught, or making the room too cold. Our city Sunday-school rooms are almost always too warm, as well as close, especially those which are subjected to the modern improvement (!!) of cellar furnaces.—And, to make the matter worse, the female pupils commonly sit the whole time in the same clothing that they put on for the street,—cloaks, tippets, scarfs, over-shoes, &c. Who can wonder that children, under these circumstances become languid and dull?

ADVERTISEMENTS.

REPRINT OF THE OLD DIVINES.

THIS work willbe devoted to the publication of Argumentsr Soummaries of the Sermons and Discourses of the most eminent British Divines,—a complete collection of whose invaluable writings in some instances scarce, in others voluminous and expensive, is rarely to be found in the libraries of the Clergy, while our great public repositories themselves are not unfrequently deficient in this branch of literature.

These Skeletons which are intended as models of Scripture argumentation and composition, selected from the writings of the most distinguished ornaments of the Church, will be found highly acceptable to Clergymen, and more particularly useful to the young Divine, whose studies they are well calculated to facilitate by perusal and consultation.

The work will commence with Summaries of the Discourses of Bishop Sherlock, which will be followed by those of Jeremy Taylor, Dr. Barrow, Tillotson, Beveridge, S. Clark, Jewell, Jortin, Ogden, Powell, Fawcett, Cabrnock, Hooper, Bull, Leighton, Hopkins, Horne, Maclauren, South, Secker, &c. &c.

"A Summary of each discourse is admirably calculated to assist the Divine in the arduous task of Composition for the pulpit."—Observer, London.

"No archetype can be better than Sherlock and Barrow adapted to modern taste."—Gentleman's Magazine.

"To the Christian Minister, at the outset of life and the Theological Student, such a work must prove invaluable."—[illegible]

"The mode pursued is to present the skeleton of the discourse only, retaining the order, the arguments and, as it were, the key notes of the original. By this means a great saving of space and money is effected. Judging from the specimen before us, the work will be carefully and skillfully done. The abridgment reads continuously, and preserves the effect of a whole."—Spectator.

The above very valuable work, which has been highly commended by Ministers and Religious Press in Great Britain, the subscriber proposes to republish in this country, if sufficient encouragement is given

The work was originally published by A. J. Valpy, A. M,, editor of the Family Classical Library, Greek Septuagint, &c. &c.—and edited by Rev. T. R. Hughes, B. D., Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Peterborough—late Christian Advocate at Cambridge, Editor of the Continuation of Hume and Smollet's History of England from the reign of George the 2d, to 1835, Author of Travels in Greece, &c. &c. The well established literary reputation of the original editor and publisher will no doubt be a sufficient guaranty that the abridgement has been executed with skill and fidelity.

CONDITIONS.

1. The work will be commenced as soon as 300 subscribers are obtained.

2. It will be printed on paper of very superior quality with type and page similar to the North American Review.

3. It will be Issued quarterly, each number to contain at least, 132 pages, making a volume of 528 octavo pages, anually, with a Title Page, and an Index containig a list of texts, subjects, &c.

4. Price $2 a year, payable on the reception of the 1st number.

5. The work will commence with the republication of the valuable Sermons and Discourses of Sherlock, which will be followed with those of Jeremy Taylor, or Dr. Barrow. The first year will contain the whole of Sherlock and Taylor, or Sherlock and Barrow.

N. B. As the proposals for republshing the above work originates in a want frequently expressed by ministers, no agents will be appointed, as those wishing for the work, by writing a line something similar to the following and getting the Postmaster to sign and frank it, can forward their orders free of expense;—

By request of (here inser your own name,) forward you his name as a subscriber to the "Reprint of the Old Divines." You will direct his copy to (here give your Post Office address.) signed,
——— ———, P. M.

It will be understod that no money is expected with the orders for the work, as it will not be published unless 300 subscribers are obtained. It s hoped, however, that so many as design to subsdribe for it, will forward their names immediately. As the number of copies issued will depend upon the number of copies ordered, ministers will perceive the necesity of ordering the work at the commencement.

LITERARY AND THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTIONS.

Officers of Literary and Theological Institutions, who may receive this Prospectus, are respectlully requested to hand it to some active young man, who will exert himself to obtain a list of subscribers in the Institution; and Students, and Beneficiaries of the Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, and christian, Education Societies, will be furnished with the work on the following very low terms, viz: two copies for $3, or seven copies for $10, and a copy gratis to the individual acting as agent.

$5 will pay for two copies of "The Young People's Library," and one copy of the Reprint of the Old Divines." or $10, for five copies of "The young People,s Library," and one do. of the "Reprint of the Old Divines." Any Minister or Student shall receive the above works on these terms.

TO CHURCH MEMBERS.

Dear Brethren—If the circumstances of your pastor will not allow him to suboribe for the proposed work, will you not supply him? At small expense you can make him a very acceptable present. Just call upon him, and if he does not take the work, supply him with it, and thus benefit both him and yourselves.

WANTED—Any quantity of RAGS wanted in exchange for BOOKS, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany-st.
De Ruyter, Dec. 16, 1840.

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞ A certain cure in all cases ☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6
S. D. DELLAY.

Medicines! Medicines!!

TO FAMILIES.

S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public; for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s
MOTHER'S RELIEF.
JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT—
DR. McMUN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—
MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—
DOCT. BISHOP'S ANTI BILLIOUS PILLS.
A HIGHLY VALUABLE FAMILY MEDICINE.

FOUND.

ONE Keg of dried PLUMS, on the Turn-Pike near my house, one and a half miles west of this Village. The owner can have them by calling and paying the expenses of this advertisement which is $1.
3w3.   ELIAS BENJAMIN.
De Ruyter March 15, 1841.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
GEO. W. SUTTON.
De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin, P. M.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick
Scott—Joel Greene, Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Hopkinton.—Joseph Spicer, jun., P. M.
Westerly.—Jonathan Maxson.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh.—Isaac Titsworth
Salem.—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Salem—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport.—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield.—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson.—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISCONSIN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

C Pennington

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II.—NO. 5.] [WHOLE NO. 57.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, APRIL 2, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

Development of Mind and the Progress of Science.

BY DOCT. H. S. CRANDALL.

When we look back upon the past, and arrange in regular order and succession the various and diversified effects resulting from the development of Mind and the progress of Science, from the earliest ages of which we have a history down to the present time, we are filled with wonder and admiration. Mankind, in ancient or antediluvian times, when compared to those of modern days in relation to the Arts and Sciences, bore no more analogy than does an infant to adult age, or to manhood. The human mind lay enshrouded in the dark grottoes of ignorance and superstition; and, like the golden ore in the mines of the earth, latent and unknown. But when we view the contrast at the present day, of which we all are witnesses, we are led to enquire, How shall this phenomena be explained? We may solve the question by supposing that whatever superstition and ignorance may have enshrouded the human mind in the more dark and benighted ages of the world, it has ever been struggling to be free. And whenever these strictures have been measurably removed, we see it on the wing, and soaring to higher, and still higher degrees in the scale of moral and intellectual improvement, and exploring the previously unknown regions of Philosophy, and bringing back the richest trophies of Scientific Knowledge to the world of mankind, for their benefit and improvement.—And for the last two centuries it has been marching onward in all the majesty of Mind, overcoming the remaining impediments to its progress, and approximating nearer, and still nearer to the goal of human attainments. But we can see in tracing history back but a few centuries, that accidental and providential circumstances have done very much to impede the progress of Science; although heathenish darkness and superstition have been measurably, or entirely removed from many nations of the globe. "Greece, lovely Greece! the land of scholars and the nurse of arms, where and what is she"? She has long since vanished before a conquering foe, and with her smouldering towers and leveled walls, lay her pride and literary glory. Had she, with Rome, and other nations of literary renown been permitted to have moved on uninterrupted in the road of Science, where should we now behold them? We should behold them on the pinnacle of fame. We should see the light of Science radiating from them to the remotest corners of the earth. But they, with their sons of Science, have descended upon the roll of those that were, but are not. Yet their memories live, and will live on to all future generations, lasting monuments of intellectual improvement, and the perfections of Art.

For the last half century, the improvement of Art, and the development of Mind have been advancing in our own native, happy America, with rapid strides. Here, where not a century ago was nought to be seen but one vast wilderness, inhabited by the savage Indians and wild beasts, only, we now behold the broad fields, shorn of their forests by the ingenuousness of Art, yielding their abundant harvest to the worthy hand of industry. Here, we now behold the towering domes and lofty spires, peering their heads above the numerous villages and cities which are so thickly interspersed throughout our wide-spreading country. Here, we can look with profound admiration on the deep-rooted pillars of civil and religious liberty, and enjoy all the blessings which are common to a civilized and enlightened people. Yes, here, when we turn the eyes of our Mind to the East, North, South, or West, they are every where met by countenances beaming with intelligence, and minds, too, whose strength and caliber can not be surpassed by men of any country in the world. Here, the Arts and Sciences have been carried to as high a degree of perfection as our parent, England, can boast; and, perhaps, can not be rivalled by any nation or people now living. Should we be so happy, as a nation, as not to meet with the destroying pestilence—the sweeping conflagration—or any unforeseen calamity, What great and glorious advances may we not anticipate in the future? May we not confidentially anticipate the day when America's sons shall stand maximum on the universal roll of Science, when we shall behold our American Eagle soaring higher and higher, and serving as a beacon of emancipation and liberty—buoyed up by a free people, whose happiness and intelligence shall be the glory of the world?

Yes, if we let our motto be, "upward and onward," these high distinctions are ours—they are already within our reach, and we have only, with an undying grasp, to lay hold of the means of improvement which are so abundantly spread out before us, and we shall, ere we find ourselves on the tower of Science, where, with one glance, we may scan and comprehend the universal world, look down with dignity and proud indignation upon those who have persecuted us, and who would tramel the expansive power of our minds, and trample under foot our civil and religious liberties.

In view of these facts, What American's bosom, that is in possession of one spark of patriotism, or philanthropy, that does not swell with love of country, and heave with buoyant hopes of continued happiness and future greatness, and begin at once to burst asunder the remaining shackles which confine the Mind, and prevent its growth and expansion? The fault can but be our own, if our civil and religious institutions are not preserved and perpetuated, for our strength lies in knowledge; and never was there a people under Heaven more highly favored with the means of knowledge than are we, and never were there stronger inducements, or more urgent claims held up before a people to make use of the means, than are presented to us at the present time. Then let us commence the work now, and stop not until the "Herculean task be done."

Leonards-Ville, N. Y.

For the Register.

Deacon's Office.

I consider the office of Deacon to be one of the most important, and the most responsible stations in the Church of Christ. It is one thing to obtain the title, and another thing to possess the true spirit that such ought. In our Churches, we have Deacons who are active, and are blessings to God's Zion; and we have men who possess the spirit of Deacons, and do the labor of Deacons, but do not possess the title by the Church, in their selection; such have been overlooked. In too many of our Churches we have Deacons in name, but as to action in the station in which they have been placed, they are delinquents.

By such, their work is not correctly understood, or else there is a willing ignorance exercised in regard to all its important relations. It is, truly, a solemn thought, that but very few among the many selections made, fill their office with any kind of efficiency. But the Deacons are not altogether to blame. Churches are censurable and will have to share in the guilt, for they have been actuated by sinister motives in making their selection, and have put men in stations for which they have no aptitude to fill, and, therefore, can not use the office well. Neither property, nor education, nor popularity, nor native talent, should be the hinge upon which the choice of Deacons should turn, although they might be desirable; but unless they possess the other graces as taught by Paul to Timothy, they will be more useful as private members, than to be public officers of God's Church. But we are aware that there are Deacons who use the office well, having first been proved. Such are to a Church a blessing that can hardly be appreciated.

But my brethren may wish to know how are we to know so as to distinguish the delinquent Deacon from those who are active. Many Deacons are at a loss to know what their duty is. There are many duties belonging to a Deacon of which he can not be at a loss, and unless he possess a willingness to be active in those of every day's observation, we must conclude that he is a delinquent. Such as are not given to much prayer and exhortation, who are seldom seen in the chambers of the sick and dying with the healing balm of consolation, who are seldom seen among the poor of the neighborhood, hunting out objects of charity, and to point the sinner to Jesus, and at prayer and Conference meetings. Such may be seldom seen, and when there, probably their voice but seldom heard. Such Deacons are very choice of their visits to their Pastor, and if they accidentally meet with him, any other subject is more pleasing than to enquire after his temporal wants, or those of his family. Indeed, so many of our Deacons are so busily engaged in the bustle of life, that but very few of them can spend a few hours of each week to their official duties, that they may be feeders of the flock, and thus have their own souls abundantly replenished.

I ask, how can Deacons who thus neglect their duty, purchase to themselves a good degree? How can they escape the disapprobation of the Church, of the frown of the Judge in the last day? There are many Deacons who are considered gifted in distributing the element at the communion, and having done this, suppose that their work is done until another communion season arrives. Such are mere drones in the Church, and she would be better without them. It would be well for our Deacons to imitate the pattern, and to study the rule as laid down by the Apostle Paul in his letter to Timothy.

For the benefit of my brethren, I would give my opinion relative to the work of a Deacon in the Church.

1. They were chosen by the request of the Apostles for the furtherance of the Gospel, that they might take upon them a part of the burden borne by the Apostles, so that they might give themselves entirely to the preaching of the word, and prayer.—Thus, it is not unlawful for a Minister to do the work of a Deacon so far as he can, and not infringe upon his ministerial duties. But there is no Gospel Minister who can not be more useful than to be loaded down with the temporalities of the Church. His time could be more profitably spent in study.

2. The Deacon is to superintend all the secular concerns of the Church, for, by virtue of his office, to him they are committed.

3. All the social religious meetings of the Church have special claims upon him, not only to be present, but to be active, and to labor to get others to attend. To visit his brethren occasionally, individually, and others. He should deem it to be his imperative duty, especially, to visit the delinquent members of the Church.

4. The Deacon should pay particular attention to all false reports, such as backbiting, or scandalizing any of the members of the Church, especially the Minister, and, if possible, stop its progress before it becomes a case of discipline. And such should consider themselves co-workers together with the Pastor, always to stand at his right hand, ready with him to engage in all good works. Great care should be taken by Churches in selecting their Deacons. They should be men of good experience—men of good attainments—men of strong minds, and of good judgment—of liberal and benevolent dispositions—of ardent piety—of unblemished character—of good report, and, above all things, be sure to select a peace-maker. Let them first be proved, and then let them use the office.

Who, then, is sufficient for these things? Not the prayerless—not the Covetous—not the proud and haughty, but such as are meek and lowly at heart—who are familiar with the prominent doctrines of the Bible—who lead a Godly and a Christian life. Such, in our opinion, are those who should fill the station of Deacons in the Church of God. G.

New Market, N. J., March 12th, 1841.

Temperance Department.

From the Canada Temperance Advocate.

A TRUE PASSAGE FROM THE LIFE OF A DRUNKARD.

It was Saturday night—the rain was falling in torrents—in a miserable dwelling, on an old broken chair, almost the only one the house contained, sat a tall yet bowed-down woman. She still retained enough of youth to show that she had once been beautiful, though now care-worn and emaciated. She was singing in a low, sweet, plantive voice, to a sickly, restless infant; another child, a little girl, sat on the floor, gazing wistfully up into her mother's face; and that patient, woe-worn mother smiled—smiled, to hide her tears as she stooped to smooth her cheek, and murmured, 'My darling, he will soon be here; and then my little one shall have her supper.' A few moments after, the latch was lifted. A slight, (and in spite of his tattered garments) a genteel looking boy entered. 'They will not let me have any more, dear mother,' said he, flinging down his ragged cap with an air of despondency: 'they say my father drinks, and there is little probability of their ever getting paid for what we have had;' and here the poor boy's voice faltered. The woman sat for some time in mute despair; at last she said, 'Well Edward, what is to be done? To-morrow is Sunday, and we must certainly starve, unless you go again to——,' she seemed almost afraid to say the word—'to your uncle's, and beg a few shillings: perhaps, if you tell him how absolute is our want, he will not, he can not refuse.' As his mother spoke, the boy's white cheek became instantly suffused with burning crimson; his large, dark, yet sunken eye, flashed, as he exclaimed vehemently, 'Never, mother, never! Oh! I would a thousand times sooner starve, beg, die! Oh! mother, do not ask me;' and he hid his face in the arm that rested on the table.—A long silence ensued, which was at last broken by the little girl: 'Mother, you said I should have some supper when Ned come back.' A low, suppressed sob was the only answer. The next instant the boy's head was raised, the cheek had settled to its ashy hue, the fiery light was quenched in his dark eye; and he stood at the woman's side, threw his arm around her neck, and stooping to kiss her prematurely furrowed brow, whispered, 'Forgive me, dear mother; I know not what I said. Oh! do not kill me by those tears, as if you had not misery enough without my increasing it. I will go this instant; and after all he cannot say more than he did the last time. Mother, look up; I will go.'—'Edward,' said the agitated woman, pressing him to her bosom, 'gladly, most gladly, would I lay down my own life to save my precious boy one pang, one moment's grief; but it is not for myself I ask you to do what I feel and know to be so humiliating, but for their sake, (and she glanced at the sleeping infant,) for their sake my boy will throw aside all selfish feeling; my Edward will, I know, do his duty." Another instant and she stood, or rather kneeled, alone. How long, how weary was the next hour to the bleeding heart of the anxious mother? How often did she rise, and, opening the door, peer into the darkness, or bend her ear in intense eagerness at every passing step? At last those loved feet approached; again the latch was raised, and again the boy appeared; but this time he brought joy and gladness. He did not tell his mother how he had again and again been spurned; how he had been taunted; how he had been told that the hard-earned bread of industry was not to be given to the drunken father and his lazy son; how he had borne all this opprobrium for her sake, and quelled his proud spirit, and on his knees sued again and again; and at last gained by his importunity, that which was denied to his misery. But the bright hectic spot that shame had called into his pale cheek, and that still burned there, told to that observant mother how great had been the mortification which the heroic boy had endured.

* * * * * *

All was silent in the low dwelling.—'Mother,' said the dying boy, 'raise my head and lay it once again on your bosom. Do you weep,' he said, after a short pause, and making a feeble effort to throw his arm around her neck, 'do you weep, dearest mother, that to-day you have a son on earth—to-morrow, one in heaven? Do you weep that I am leaving a world so full of wo—a world that you yourself are so weary of, for that bright heaven, that happy home, which we have so often talked about? The thought of parting from you is the only sting that death has for me. Oh! if I could but take you, sweet mother, with me? But you will soon come: you cannot stay without me.' Here his whisper became inaudible; his head pressed heavier on her bosom; a short gasp—a low sigh, and the unhappy woman clasped convulsively to her breast a lifeless corpse!

Many long hours had passed, yet that mother still hung motionless over her son; so still and immoveable was she, you might have imagined that she, too, had bid farewell to earthly sorrow. Presently the door was pushed violently open, and a man staggered into the room. He stood for some time glaring around him, as if endeavoring to remember where he was. At last he recognized his wife; and reeling towards here, he seized her arm, and pulled her rudely up. As he did so, a low agonized groan showed that she was awakened to consciousness; but as her eyes rested upon his face, a long, loud, appalling laugh rang through the cold dim room: then suddenly stopping, and laying one hand on the shoulder of the now sobered man, and with the other parting back the long black locks from the face of the dead child; 'Do you see him, Charles?' she exclaimed, 'do you see him? and do you know who has laid him in his early grave? Do you know who it was that clouded his young days with misery: that gave him for his portion here, poverty, and hardship, and shame; that filled his cup of life so full of bitterness, that at the first taste he turned with loathing from it, and pined and died? Need I tell you, man, murderer!' she shrieked, 'that it was a DRUNKEN FATHER?—need I tell you, that you have laid the head of your child in the dust, and broken the heart of your wife you had sworn to cherish?' then looking slowly and shudderingly round the dismal apartment, she sank again upon the body of her son. 'Oh! take me with you, my beautiful, my best: leave me not to this loneliness of heart—this living death. My boy, my Edward, take your wretched mother with you.'

And what were the drunkard's feelings during this scene? Did not his soul smite him? It did, it did. Most keenly did he feel the pangs of remorse; yet he rushed from the house, and entered the first dram shop!! 'Oh! thou invisible spirit of wine! if thou hast no other name to be known by, let us call thee, DEVIL!' E. D. J.

EFFECTS OF RUM.—A gentleman in this village, says the Springfield Gazette, not long since, was passing a drunkard's house, and heard a noise within that induced him to enter suddenly. The husband had his little child by the heels, and was just swinging it back, as if to dash its brains out against the chimney. His wife was struggling with him in agony, and imploring him not to murder the child!

What rumseller can have the heart to continue his traffic, when such are its horrible results?

Parent's Department.

THE TIME TO BEGIN.

One afternoon, in the autumn of 1839, I rode several miles to visit a family in a remote part of my parish. The mother, a son, and a daughter, were professedly pious. During the interview which I had with the mother—the other members of the family being absent, except two or three quite small children—various Christian duties were presented by one and the other, as subjects of conversation. At length the relation of parents to their children was spoken of. The mother evidently felt the importance of the subject. She was apparently endeavoring to train her children for the "skies." One question after another was proposed and answered. Among other things, the duty of praying for and with our children was referred to. "Mrs. M.," inquired I, 'Do you pray with your children?' The tear started in her eye as she replied, 'Ah no, sir, with my oldest I do not. I know it is my duty to pray with all my children; and I am sensible that the influence of a mother's prayers is great and lasting; but I have not the confidence to go forward in the performance of this duty.—This is just what they need; and the salutary effects of such an exercise would be felt and manifested by them, perhaps, when I should be in my grave: but the cross is great. I have not resolution to take it up. We have no morning nor evening prayers,' continued she, 'in our family; and I never set the chairs about the table, to sit down and take our meals, but I think of it. My husband sometimes expresses a faint hope in the Savior, but has never erected the family altar. Could I take my four oldest children into my chamber with me, and there wrestle with God for them, as did the mother of John Newton for her son, and as I trust I now sometimes do for those little ones on the hearth, and for them all, when in my closet alone, what a blessed thing it would be!' Her emotions nearly stopped her utterance, as she closed this sentence. 'O, that I had begun with my oldest children when they were small,' said she. 'That is the time to begin." Yes, thought I, that is the time to begin.—Parent's Magazine.

Religious Department.

ELEVEN REASONS FOR NOT ACCEPTING AN INVITATION TO A FASHIONARLE PARTY.

1. Because I have no desire to form intimacies with the fashionable world, to which Christians are forbidden to be conformed, and from which they are called to come out and be separate.

2. Because, as a Christian, I ought not, and cannot find pleasure in the displays of vanity, and in the frivolous conversation of those whose principal maxim is, "Let us eat, drink, and be merry."

3. Because in society I might insensibly imbibe the spirit of the world, which a Christian is commanded not to cherish.

4. Because it would induce late hours, and necessarily lead to the neglect or sleepy performance of family devotions.

5. Because it would tempt to undue indulgence of appetite, and perhaps excite a taste for luxuries which would endanger health, and lead to unnecessary expense.

6. Because I should find few, if any Christians there, and these alone should be my cherished associates.

7. Because it would give offence to my Christian brethren, and might become to them an occasion of stumbling.

8. Because I can spend my time better.

9. Because such company and scenes appear inconsistent with taking up the cross, and walking in the narrow way.

10. Because it would encourage and confirm the thoughtless in their sinful alienation from God.

11. Because I should be very cautious where I am found, especially as I am forewarned, that in such a day and in such an hour as I expect not, the Son of Man cometh.

CONSIDERATIONS IN COMPANY.

1. Consider, O my soul, that perhaps some in this company may be lying under the wrath of God. Should I not do something for such?

2. Some may be acting inconsistent with the Gospel, and although I know not, yet, if I am spiritual, something may drop which will reach them indirectly.

3. Consider that perhaps some of the company may be halting between two opinions, and waiting for the sanction of thy example to determine them in some things, but wo to thee if thou doest or sayest any thing which will encourage to evil, or to a lukewarm profession.

4. Some of this company may be beginning religion, tempted, wounded, or persecuted, and discouraged. Should not something be said which has a tendency to counteract these evils?

5. Consider what views thou didst have of these ministers who did not converse profitably in company,—avoid this evil.

6. Some who are sitting around me at tea, or dinner, &c., may be near to eternity; perhaps this may be the last company they will ever be in.

7. What, if this be the last opportunity I shall ever have of doing good?—am I improving it? What, if the chilly hand of death, in the midst of this company, stop the springs of life? What if the hour of thy departure should come in this place—art thou suitably employed.

8. Would Jesus and his Apostles, would Brainard, Whitefield, &c. have been HERE IN THIS company? Would they say what I am saying, or do what I am doing?

N. B. Perhaps, my soul, God has gathered this company together to give thee an opportunity for usefulness. Also, I may be sure that my being IN THIS company will tend to answer some end, either to HARDEN or RECLAIM, to DEADEN or to quicken, to good or evil.—Dr. Milne.

EVIDENCE OF CHRIST'S RESURRECTION.—It has been well contended against infidels, that if the body of Christ had really remained in the sepulchre, the Jewish rulers would have produced it in public, for the purpose of refuting, in the most convincing manner possible, the doctrine of the resurrection; and that with respect to the common cavils about the watch, the severity of the Roman discipline, of which none could have been better apprized than the soldiers, the poverty of the disciples, which removed them from the offer and acceptance of it could have been practicable—together with every attendant circumstance, are ample demonstrations that it must have been removed in a supernatural manner.—The credibility of the history is likewise increased by the fact, that not one of the Evangelists cites any eye witness of the ACT of the resurrection, but merely those of its REALITY, whereas, had not the Gospels been intrinsically genuine, and had their authors been inventors of the marvellous, the Gospels would probably have described the ACT itself; and their writers, like those of the Apocryphal, would have launched at once into accounts, the most marvellous and absurd.

Children's Department.

THE SHEPHERD'S DOG.

A shepherd who inhabited one of those valleys or glens which intersect the Grampian mountains, in one of his excursions to look after his flock, happened to carry along with him one of his children, an infant of three years old. This is not an unusual practice among the Highlanders, who accustom their children from the earliest infancy to endure the rigors of the climate. After traversing his pastures for some time, attended by his dog, the shepherd found himself under the necessity of ascending a summit at some distance, to have a more extensive view of his range. As the ascent was too fatiguing for the child, he left him on a small plain at the bottom, with strict injunctions not to stir from it till his return. Scarcely, however, had he gained the summit, when the horizon was darkened by one of those impenetrable mists, which frequently descend so rapidly amidst these mountains, as, in the space of a few minutes almost to turn day to night. The anxious father instantly hastened back to find his child; but owing to the unusual darkness, and his own trepidation, unfortunately missed his way in the descent. After a fruitless search of many hours, he discovered that he had reached the bottom of the valley, and was near his own cottage. To renew the search that night was equally fruitless and dangerous; he was, therefore, compelled to go home, although he had lost both his child and dog, who had attended him faithfully for many years. Next morning, by break of day, the shepherd, accompanied by a band of his neighbors, set out in search of his child; but, after a day spent in fruitless fatigue, he was at last compelled by the approach of night, to descend from the mountain. On his returning home to his cottage, he found that the dog, which he had lost the day before, had been home, and on receiving a piece of cake, had instantly gone off again. For several successive days the shepherd renewed his search for his child, and still, on returning home disappeared in the evening, he found that the dog had been home, and on receiving his usual allowance of cake, had instantly disappeared. Struck with this singular circumstance, he remained home one day; and when the dog, as usual, departed with his piece of cake, he resolved to follow him, and find out the cause of this strange procedure. The dog led the way to a cataract at some distance from the spot where the shepherd had left his child. The banks of the cataract almost joined at the top, yet, separated by an abyss of immense depth, presented that appearance which so often astonishes and appals the travelers that frequent the Grampian mountains.—Down one of those rugged, and almost perpendicular descents, the dog began, without hesitation to make his way, and at last disappeared by entering into a cave, the mouth of which was almost level with the torrent. The shepherd, with difficulty, followed; but on entering the cave, what were his emotions when he beheld the infant eating with much satisfaction, the cake which the dog had just brought him; while the faithful animal stood by, eyeing his young charge with the utmost complaisance!—From the situation in which the child was found, it appeared that he had wandered to the brink of the precipice, and then either fallen or scrambled down till he reached the cave. The dog, by means of his scent, had traced him to the spot; and afterward prevented him from starving by giving up to him his own daily allowance.

The sincerity of the heart discovers itself in the end, aimed at by an action, more than in the action itself. The thief and honest traveler may ride the same road; but they have different aims; and this distinguisheth them.

No man ever repented of being a Christian on his death-bed.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, April 2, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

This paper has reached the 1st No. 2d Vol. It is an excellent family paper, and though sectarian, yet liberally conducted. Their argument in relation to the Sabbath is very hard to refute. It is now edited and published by James Bailey, per $2 in advance, at De Ruyter, N. Y.—Western Recorder.

We thank Br. Springer for his good opinion of the Register, and the manner in which it is conducted. But we feel much more grateful for the admission that our arguments in relation to the Sabbath are 'very hard to refute.' If our arguments were sophisticatal, or founded on wrong data, they would not be hard to refute. If they are hard to refute, because scriptural, then would it not be wise in him to adopt them, and observe the Sabbath that the Bible enjoins? The Register, while it claims, and is claimed to be a fellow laborer with a multitude of other papers in the extension of evangelical truth, is left to stand alone in the defense of the Sabbath which the Scriptures declare to be the Sabbath of the Lord thy God.

"Above all things have fervent charity among yourselves."

Charity is comprehended in a desire to glorify God and to do good unto men, being in no way a selfish principle. It is one of the most excellent characteristics of the Gospel. He who possesses it, is penitent, slow to anger, and ready to forgive wrongs, and never interprets things in the worst sense they can be made to bear. It being a principle of the gospel, and pre-eminently exhibited only by those under the influence of the gospel, never finds a lodgment in those hearts that are not under the restraints of religion. It is a christian qualification, and its perfect possession is necessary to render a man what he should be in the sight of God. Its excellencies are best exhibited in the following language of an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ.—"Though I speak with the tongue of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.—Charity suffereth long and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Charity never faileth." We ask the most charitable of all to review this language of the Apostle, and measure himself by it.

The conduct of men is open to inspection, and of this only does christian charity allow one to judge. It is not possible for one to enter the recesses of another's heart and understand the motives that influence his conduct. Different habits of thinking, reasoning, and acting, lead to a difference in results in things of an important character. It is not admissible to ascribe to the worst, or even to wrong motives such differences in opinion. The gospel requires in this case, as in others, that we should love our neighbor as ourself, and be as ready to award good intentions to him, as to claim them for ourselves. It cannot be expected that men, who are so clogged as all are in this life with sinful pleasures, will get beyond the possibility of erring in conduct or judgment. What person is there of us, who would not feel ourselves injured by the treatment we mete out to others? The censorious know but little, experimentally, of this excellent characteristic of christianity.

We think ourselves justified in the conclusion, that the absence of charity is the most prolific source of discord or disunion in the church of God. Almost every evil follows in its train until brotherly love is destroyed, fellowship hindered, and strife, anger, ill-will, and evil surmisings, with all jealousies, possess the heart.

"The Young People's Library"

Is a semi-monthly re-publication of select religious works, on devotional and practical subjects. The following entire works were reprinted during the first half year:—

"Self Discipline," by H. F. Burder.

"A Plea for the Sabbath," Rev. J. Sherman.

"Preciousness of Christ," Rev. J. Thornton.

"The Witnessing Church," Rev. J. Harris.

"The Missionary," A London Annual.

"Scripture Marks of Salvation," Rev. R. Darracott.

"Christ our Example."

The number before us contains, "Counsels for the Communion Table," by John Morrison, of England. "Advantages of Early Piety," by Thomson. "The Black Linn." "Habitual remembrance of God." "Importance of Sensibility to Piety."—"Study of the Bible," and "The Angel's Call," (poetry,) by Mrs. Hemans. "Death of the Righteous," by Cowper, and "God Omnipresent," by J. Edmeston," &c.

From the specimen number before us, we feel great confidence in recommending this work to young people. Throw aside the "Ladies' Companion," "Graham's Magazine," and the numerous other works of a sickening Literary character, whose only tendency is to give wrong impressions and corrupt the mind. Rev. B. Brierly, of North Springfield, Vt., unless he alters the character of the "Young People's Library," will furnish you with a semi-monthly Magazine of 24 pages, for two dollars in advance, which will be worth more to you than all the diseased Literature of the day.

For the Register.

MESSRS. EDITOR.—In the 2d number of the present volume of your excellent paper, I noticed an article under the Editorial head "on Position in Public Prayer," and immediately following it, an extract of a letter "from a long and tried friend of the Redeemer," on the same subject, signed "A Subscriber." After reading the above named articles, I find myself inclined to throw out a few ideas, or suggestions on the subject, also. The articles alluded to, handle, rather roughly, the practice of sitting and its advocates, and condemn the practice decidedly, as being unscriptural, irreverent, &c. &c., and, especially the latter, (to use his own words,) "and pointedly contrary to what we read in the scriptures respecting the practice of the saints and primitive Christians, and the example of Christ himself"; and, further, from the fact that the writer strives to remove "the flimsy arguments" (as he calls them) against the practice of standing, we necessarily conclude that he is in favor of standing, and, no doubt, verily believes, and honestly too, that the mode is scriptural and according to the ancient custom of the saints.—I would, therefore, respectfully ask our venerable friend, or some one else of the same opinion, to give us another article, and tell us where in the scriptures we may find the practice of standing in prayer, either in public or private, sustained. I am free to acknowledge that I cannot find it in my Bible. I admit there are a few instances where the supplicant is represented as standing in prayer; for instance, the Pharisee and Publican, and also Solomon at the dedication of the temple. But it will not be urged, I presume, that this circumstance establishes the fact, for although it is said in the 22nd verse of the viii. chap. of the first book of Kings, that Solomon stood before the altar of the Lord in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands towards heaven, at the commencement of his prayer; it is also said in the 54th verse of the same chap., when his prayer was ended, that he arose from before the Altar of the Lord, from kneeling on his knees, &c. This circumstance to me, at least, is circumstantial evidence that when others are represented as standing in prayer, that they stood upon their knees, also. But, as it was not my object in this communication to either justify or condemn the custom of standing or sitting in prayer, but to offer suggestions, I would, therefore, submit to all reflecting minds, whether all the objections brought to bear against the sitting posture in prayer, will not bear with equal force against the standing posture also? and whether the practice is not equally unscriptural? I would join with both the Editor and writer of the extract in condemning every thing, both in manner and matter, which may appear like irreverence or inattention in the exercises of religious worship, and would justify the opinion, that some humble and corresponding attitude of body, highly became all who are permitted to approach the mercy-seat. But, most of all, the heart should be humble and right in the sight of God.

Before closing my remarks, I would say, with Brother Bailey, that I think a kneeling posture is most scriptural, and the most appropriate and becoming, and I would add, the most agreeable to every penitential, humble supplicant.

ANOTHER SUBSCRIBER.

For the Register.

FIRE.—The Tannery of Elisha Thompson, in Otselic, was consumed on the 22d ult. The fire is supposed to have originated from the stove-pipe, about 7 o'clock in the evening, and was supposed to have been extinguished, but broke out again about 2 o'clock and consumed the entire building and stock. It was insured by the Saratoga Company for $1,900. J. R. B.

For the Register.

Posture in Public Prayer.—No. 2.

I contend that it is not very material what posture is taken, provided a becoming reverence is maintained, and a uniformity of practice secured. And, to show that I am not alone in forming this conclusion, I would refer to one among the many able theologians of the day, whose works now grace the historic page, who have spoken upon this subject. The Rev. CHARLES BUCK, author of a Theological Dictionary, &c. &c., says, in reference to the subject, "It must be observed, that it does not consist in the elevation of the voice, THE POSTURE OF THE BODY, the use of a form, or the mere extemporary use of words; nor, properly speaking, in any thing of AN EXTERIOR NATURE; but simply the offering up of our desires to GOD." His view of the subject corresponds with Matt. xv. 8. "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; BUT THEIR HEART IS FAR FROM ME." In the language of another, "Prayer is a key which unlocks the blessings of the day, and locks up the dangers of the night. It is the part of wisdom, as well as of duty, to seek the blessing of the Lord on all our undertakings; for, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it. Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman walketh but in vain." 'What can you do without the blessing of God? And if you neglect to ask it, you can hardly expect to have it.' How vastly important, then, in view of these solemn considerations, that the heart be right!

From the earliest ages of the world it has been customary for public prayer to be offered up to God, in the midst of congregated assemblies. The patriarchs offered prayers to God in the early ages, as recorded in Gen. iv. 26. "Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord." The Jews, also, observed the practice of public prayer in the midst of their assembled multitudes, as in Ex. xxix. 43: "And there will I meet with the children of Israel, and the tabernacle shall be sanctified by my glory." The practise was also observed in the temple service, as in Isa. lvi. 7: "Even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer; their burnt offerings and sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for my house shall be called A HOUSE OF PRAYER for all people." And, in short, the scriptures abound with suggestions as to the propriety of public prayer. It is recommended by Christ in divers places; nor were his disciples deficient in this particular. Yet, notwithstanding there is so much taught in the sacred scriptures upon the duty of Public Prayer, there is no particular posture pointed out for a congregation of worshipers—for those who would acquiesce with the servant of God who leads in the devotions. It may be urged that Solomon arose from his knees after having prayed. Well, all this may be true; but does that intimate in what posture the congregation were on the occasion? Certainly not. They might have knelt before the Lord, or they might have stood up; or, indeed, they might have BOWED under the mighty hand of God. I have no doubt but they were uniform in their posture; and, I may add, reverential too.

I trust that I shall not appear ridiculous in the opinion of any friend of good order in the house of God, when I urge the posture of bowing in prayer-time. It is my honest conviction that the posture of bowing with reverence before the Lord is congenial with the spirit and policy of religion. Religion requires no vain show, no idle parade, nor high sounding philactories. It requires none of the austerities of the Romish hierarchy. It is a plain, unvarnished tale. It is to love God with all our hearts, and our neighbor as ourself. The whole system of religion is simple and uniform. Then, with what deference should we endeavor to have our practice correspond with its simple mandates! Let our posture be reverential and uniform, and my word for it, the attractions of religion will find lodgment in many hearts that are strangers to grace.

1. Bowing before the Lord in prayer-time, is a reverential posture. It exhibits a degree of reverence and beauty that will recommend itself to almost every individual that may compose a congregation. The writer recollects with peculiar feelings of affection, the dear people who worship in the Presbyterian Church in the town of C——. Their Church was new, and finished off with a neatness, a chasteness of workmanship that bespoke the skill of the architect. The caps of the slips were worked from beautiful Black Walnut, and the whole interior arrangement exhibited an almost perfect degree of symmetry and beauty. And what a spectacle there met my eye! When the servant of God arose from the undecorated pulpit to address the throne of grace, every head, as if by natural impulse, BOWED before the Lord. It was uniform. There was no half-way work about it. The rich and the poor—the proud and the gay—the humble professor and the ungodly—the female and the male, all, all were uniform in the posture. It was a lovely sight, and will be long had in fond remembrance by me, on account of its uniformity, simplicity and beauty.

2. It is a convenient posture, and can be assumed without the least possible confusion. In our churches the slips are generally so narrow that it is a difficult task to kneel, and remain comfortable during prayer-time; especially so, if the slip is crowded as is often the case. On the contrary, every person in the house can bow the head with the utmost ease and composure, and thus place themselves in a proper attitude to pour out the soul to God in secret, or acquiesce in, and backen up the prayer which is ascending by a heart-felt and understanding concurrence in the up-raised desires of the servant of God.

3. It is a posture which excludes, in an eminent degree, the world and its delusive, captivating trappings from the mind. And this should be the grand, primary object in selecting a proper position in Prayer. A devotional heart—one that is drawn out in love to God, can hold as effectual an audience with Deity in the simple, unvarnished posture of bowing, as in kneeling; and much more so than in standing. For, in standing, the mind, ever fond of change, and ever on the alert, will find attractions to draw it away from God and religion. In the posture of bowing, the world, then, is excluded and our desires can constantly

"Soar above the ethereal blue,
Where God, the Maker, dwells."

The soul will quit for a season this terrestrial ball, and, uplifted on the wings of faith and love, will enter the portals of Heaven. Oh, it is a scene upon which angels and glorified spirits may look with delight! It is a symmetry of beauty that will vie with all other postures which the human mind can compass, and will recommend itself for its simplicity and veneration. The prayer-scene on such principles, and regulated with such uniformity, may encircle in its fond embraces the souls of the thoughtless & the gay. Who could look upon such a scene, and remain careless of their responsibility to God? Who could steel his heart against the claims of the gospel while presented with so much solemnity and reverence? Who would be so reckless of his soul's best interest as to thwart the purposes of mercy, if proffered with such a sense of moral obligation towards God? Who would be vain and trifling in the midst of such a congregated mass of intelligent minds? Who, I ask, would not bow before the Lord, in view of all the pleasing anticipations of heaven?—And who, in fear of the eternal wailings of the lost soul—lost through the influence which may have been exerted upon the ungodly in this very act of carelessness and indecorum in prayer time, but will arouse themselves to the importance of the subject? Oh, it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, and there meet our actions in this world! The unhappy influence we have cast abroad upon an ungodly soul, will there meet us.—And Oh, what an account we shall have brought against us for our inattention in the solemn season of prayer in the Sanctuary! H.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the New York Sun, Extra, Sunday Morning.

TWENTY TWO DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM-SHIP CALEDONIA AT BOSTON.

The Caledonia steam-ship arrived at her moorings in Boston harbor, on Saturday, at half-past 11 o'clock, A. M. She sailed from Liverpool on the 4th inst., and consequently she has had a passage of fifteen days.

The Caledonia left Halifax half past 11 P. M. Thursday, and ran to Boston 396 miles in 36 hours making the passage from Liverpool to Boston in 15 days.

By the arrival of the Caledonia, we are in possession of all our usual files of London, Liverpool, and Provincial papers, together with the magazines and periodical works for March, and letters from our correspondents at London and Paris.

The most startling and awful intelligence the steamer has brought us, is that of the total loss of the American packet ship Governor Fenner, bound for New York, with 124 souls on board, all of whom perished, with the exception of the captain and mate.

By means of a special express from London to Liverpool, our attentive agent at the former place forwarded to us the London Times of the 4th inst., the day the Caledonia sailed. It announced the arrival of the George Washington packet ship from New York, with the news of the third suspension of the United States Bank, and also the proceedings of the populace at Lockport in reference to the attempt to bail McLeod. All the news in regard to these matters was published at much length and caused considerable sensation, but sufficient time had not elapsed to learn their full effect upon the market or in the political circles. The British Queen will therefore be looked for with anxiety.

Sir William Colebroake is to succeed Sir John Harvey, Governor of New Brunswick, who has been recalled.

The Globe, (Ministerial paper,) announces that her Majesty is again in an "interesting situation," at once exciting the hopes and sympathies of the nation.

It was rumored in Paris, on Thursday afternoon, that the French Cabinet was disposed to offer its mediation to arrange the McLeod dispute with the United States.

MC LEOD.

The intelligence from England, so far as it relates to the McLeod affair, is of a pacific character. Just after the President left Liverpool, the war flurry then existing, seems to have died away. Still the papers keep up a show of fight, but the ministers are evidently pacific in their feelings. The display of the journals is more for effect than any thing else, but is not confined to the Tory papers, though almost entirely.—The London Times says:

The news from America is, we regret to say, of an alarming character, for every friend of peace, of human happiness, and of the especial ease and prosperity of two great nations. Should the hostile spirit now and for months past, prevalent among the hot-brained democracy of the northern states—not justified, as it unquestionably is not, by any act or movement on the part of Great Britain, and only to be accounted for by the tendency of wanton violence to excuse itself by further violence—should that bad spirit, we say, proceed to the iniquity of fulfilling certain wishes proclaimed in Congress, and executing our Canadian fellow-subject for the faithful discharge of his duty to the British crown, we suspect that no casuistry nor false philanthropy will prevail upon any government of this country, present or future, Whig or Conservative, to forego the rights of retributive justice, and shrink from such retaliatory measures as may best become the honor, and best insure hereafter the safety of her Majesty's people. With regard to the boundary question, we lament to say that no glimpse of hope can be drawn from these arrivals that it will be adjusted by means like those which have been heretofore employed. It is quite palpable that the "Caroline" question and the boundary question are now about to merge in one collective strife, and that the state of Europe, and the prospects arising from it, have been deeply though furtively mingled in the same cauldron.

The Spectator, on a similar point, has the following:

It is one awkward incident of Lord Palmerston's system of open questions, that it admits of an accumulation of difficulties, which might be dismissed with comparative ease as they arise in succession, but which baffle every art when encountered in numbers. Such is the case with the many existing disputes in the United States. The troublesome question of the Caroline steamer, complicated as it is by the detention of Mr. McLeod in Lockport gaol on a charge of murder and arson, has lasted so long, that another question, not altogether dissimilar, has occurred to double the force of the difficulty. A British war-brig lately seized an American vessel for slaving on the coast of Africa, and she was sent to Salem, in Massachusetts, for adjudication: the court at Salem pronounced the seizure illegal, and actions of trespass were immediately brought against the prizemaster: he pleaded personal immunity, on the score of having acted in obedience to the superiors set over him by his Government: the plea was rejected by the American court; and the same question, only in a civil instead of criminal case, is raised respecting personal and national responsibility for aggressions committed by order of constituted authorities, as that mooted in McLeod's case.

The weight of the North-eastern Boundary dispute is in like manner redoubled by a new boundary dispute which is just brought into play by a measure before Congress, to extend the authority of the Union over the Oregon territory, whose boundaries are unsettled. Some border collisions, too, have helped this complication of quarrels in exasperating the American people, to such an extent that they have assumed a more menacing air than they had yet borne: a "great American mass meeting" was preparing at New York when the last accounts left that place, and similar meetings were expected to take place throughout the Union. At several public meetings which had been held in the Border provinces, the most inflamed language had prevailed. Such is the disposition of the people with whom the English Government have to discuss some half-dozen matters in dispute, which taken singly and in time, might have been disposed of, with scarcely an angry word.

The London Atlas talks as follows:

The Americans have just perpetrated against us one of the most flagrant insults that was ever offered by one civilized nation to another. They have seized upon an officer in her Majesty's service, who, under the orders of her Majesty, attacked and destroyed an American steam-boat, and they have, through their Government, and through their members of Congress, expressed their determination of trying him upon accusation of arson and murder, and, if he should be found guilty, of hanging him.

Again; it says—

That this was a public and national act, performed by the troops of her Brittannic Majesty acting under commission, is notorious throughout the world. The deed was avowed by the British government, and has been officially acknowledged to the American government as an act which her Majesty had authorized and commanded. If any doubt existed that the affair was so understood by America, that doubt is at once set at rest by the declaration of Lord Palmerston in our House of Commons. We extract the following from the report of the debate on Tuesday last:—

"Mr. T. Duncombe wished to ask the noble lord, the Secretary for Foreign Affairs, whether the government had adopted the act of Capt. Drew, and those who acted with him under the orders of Sir F. Head, in the capture and destruction of the "Caroline," as its own?—whether in fact, they had approved or disapproved of that act, and if they had approved of it, had they since withdrawn that approval, or did they still continue to adopt it?

"Lord Palmerston said, that if the hon. member meant to ask whether the government did, or did not consider the capture & destruction of the "Caroline" as a justifiable proceeding, he had no hesitation in saying that her Majesty's government looking at all the circumstances of the case did consider that act as a justifiable proceeding, seeing that it was done in defending the territory of her Majesty from unwarranted invasion. (Loud cheers from both sides of the House.)

"Mr. Hume wished to know whether her Majesty's government had signified that approval to both parties?

"Lord Palmerston replied, that it had been communicated to the American Minister in this country, and by Mr. Fox to the government of the United States." (Cheers.)

This sets the question of the authority of Mr. McLeod for what he did, altogether at rest. It shows that this officer took possession of this steamboat for his mistress, the Queen of England, and that, holding it for her, he destroyed it for her service. It shows that he is just as much personally responsible for this act as Commodore Napier would be responsible to Mehemet Ali for battering down the walls of Acre; or to a shop-keeper of Acre for sending a shell through the roof of his house and destroying his goods; or to the laws of Egypt against murder, for having destroyed those fifteen hundred men, who were blown up by the explosion of the powder magazine. There are men still alive who took part in the American war of indepence; there are many more still alive who took part in the subsequent war between England and America. If we were to watch our opportunity to catch one of these men in our country, and were to seize him and hang him, we should do precisely what the Americans are doing in the case of McLeod.

If McLeod has been in any way injured, reparation must be made—or we must go to war. This is no question of air-drawn boundary lines, no trifling grievance; it is vital, for upon it depends, immediately, the safety and respect of every Englishman abroad, and hardly more indirectly, although perhaps less immediately, the safety of every Englishman at home. Sorry, indeed, should we be to see ourselves at war with a nation, which may be said to consist almost of our grandsires' grandsons; but, if the dire necessity should be forced upon us, if we have no other way left of preserving the lives of our fellow-citizens, if these Americans will become murderers of Englishmen, then war with them, even were the world in arms to back them.

From the New Yorker.

The most startling intelligence is that of the destruction of the American packet ship Governor Fenner, owned in this city, with the loss of one hundred and twenty two lives. The details of this awful calamity are given in the London journals. The following is the account given by Capt. Andrews, who, with the mate, was the only person saved of the 124 who were on board at the time of the catastrophe.

"We sailed from Liverpool on Friday, the 19th, at noon, with the wind at S. S. W. The crew consisted of 17, and the passengers in the steerage of 100. We had a full cargo of manufactured goods. On Saturday morning, at 2 o'clock, the wind blowing fresh from the S. S. W., and when the ship was under double-reefed topsails, the jib, spanker, and mainsail in, saw a steamer to windward on the larboard bow. The ship's helm was instantly put hard a-port. The steamer crossed our bow, and we struck her right amidships. From the force of the collision, it was evident that either the ship or the steamer would sink; or perhaps both. Instantly I felt the ship, the bow of which was stove in, was sinking. I cried out to the crew—(all the passengers were below)—to save their lives. They, instead of running forward, through fear ran aft. My first object was to endeavor to save the crew and passengers; but, so rapid was the sinking of the ship, I found it impossible to do any thing to accomplish that object. I and the mate then ran forward, and, finding the ship sinking fast, I tried to jump on to the steamer. Failing in my first attempt through a momentary faintness, I made a second; and, just as the ship was at the water's edge, succeeded in grasping a rope which hung over the steamer's side. The mate saved his life by jumping from the fore-yard-arm on the steamer's deck. In one minute the ship sank, with 16 of her crew and all the passengers, amounting to 122 souls. The steamer's boat was instantly lowered, for the purpose of making an attempt to save such of the crew and passengers as might be floating, but it unfortunately swamped."

The passengers were all below in their berths when the collision between the ship and steamer took place. The shock caused by it would, of course, rouse even those who might have then been asleep. No doubt they would make a rush toward the deck; the interval which elapsed, however, between the shock and the sinking was so short, scarcely five minutes, that very few, if any, could have succeeded in reaching it. So that in all probability, they perished in the steerage. The mate had been married only a few days before the ship's sailing; the captain had given his wife a berth with her husband in the cabin. When the fate of the ship became inevitable, he attempted to run aft to rescue her. Time failed him, the instinct of self-preservation became strong, he sprang up the shrouds, and reached the steamer, by jumping from the yard-arm.

The Governor Fenner was fourteen years old, built in Massachusetts, and had recently been refitted at Liverpool at an expense of above $8,000. She was about 500 tons burthen, and is said to have been one of the most seaworthy vessels of her class. The passengers who perished with her, were for the most part Irish emigrants to this country, chiefly mechanics and labors of a superior class. The steamer was much injured by the collision, and her owners have brought a suit against the Proprietors of the Fenner, (Messrs. Andrews and Co. of this city,) claiming compensation for the damage sustained. Capt. Andrews, having put his helm aport according to the regulations adopted by all the Liverpool steam ship owners, charges all the blame upon the commander of the steamer. He is anxious for the fullest investigation, and has waited upon the Mayor of Liverpool for that purpose. The wreck of the vessel was met a few days after her terrible destruction, and two dead bodies were taken from her.

News of the Day.

From the Anti-Slavery Reporter.

LETTER FROM THE TEACHER OF THE AFRICANS.

New Haven, March 9th, 1841.

Dear Sir—Your note requesting me to forward you information, concerning the Amistad captives, was received this afternoon, and I hasten to comply with your request, so far as it lies in my power.

It is about five months since I commenced instructing them, and what I shall communicate will of course be limited to that period. With regard to intellectual progress, proficiency in study, &c., they are divided into three classes. The first class of 12, since I have been with them, have read the four gospels, and 10 chapters of Acts. They then commenced again and have proceeded as far as the 10th chapter of Luke, in the review. The interest which they manifest in this history, their anxiety to understand the meaning of words, and the avidity with which they drink in truth, can scarce be realized by one who has not been present at their exercises. They are very fond of reading when I am not with them, and have read many parts of the Bible in my absence. Their other exercises are writing, singing, spelling in Webster's spelling book, and easy exercises in mental arithmetic. Their improvement in writing has been very rapid, and when we consider the nature of their former employments, their use of the pen is wonderful. The writing of the boy, Ka-le, in orthography and chirography, would not suffer in comparison with that of any American youth of his age. They have a good taste for singing, and learn tunes readily.

The second class have read half through Lovell's First Reader, the second time, and the same in Webster's Spelling Book. They learn to write on the black board and slate. Their other exercises are similar to the preceding. The remaining class are pursuing the same course.

Their whole souls are absorbed in their studies, to which they give their undivided attention. They are the most attentive pupils I ever saw, and never get tired of learning. They are very inquisitive, and manifest great joy when they gain a new idea. They are affectionate, grateful, and warm in their attachment. They often follow out a train of reasoning, in their way, which would do credit to a professed logician. In this way they illustrate points, which otherwise their imperfect knowledge of our language would prevent their doing forcibly. I will give you an example. I one day said to them, "When you go back to Mendi you will forget American people, and forget all they have told you." They all, with much earnestness said, No, no. Foule said, (pointing to a Lehigh-coal fire,) "Mr. Booth, your hand in that fire, you can't get it out. Grabeau come pull it out; you forget Grabeau? No, we no forget America people." They have a great horror of falsehood, and of theft in its most minute form. They are very devout. It is interesting and affecting to witness their devotions. When any one leads in prayer they kneel, and with closed eyes and clasped hands, they remain evidently engaged in spirit, in each petition, till it closes.

As an evidence of their horror of theft, I asked one of them one day, "If a bad man should threaten his life with a pistol if he did not engage in a certain robbery with him, if it would not be better to steal than to lose his life?" He said, "No. I die." I put the question to Cinque, What would you do under those circumstances? After a little hesitation, he replied earnestly, "I die. He only kill my body; but if I steal, I lose my soul." One or two of the most intelligent gave me a full description of falling meteors, which they had seen in Mendi, and asked what they were. They gave a very full and accurate description of them, so that I could not mistake their meaning. I had never said any thing to them on the subject, and am not aware that any one else had. One gave a description of the halo round the moon, and asked me what caused it, telling me the Mendi name for it.—They were much interested in the recent lunar eclipse, recognizing it as having seen the same in Mendi. They are very anxious to know the meaning of all the signs and terms used in our almanacs, singling them out, and requiring a definite explanation of each; e. g., apogee and perigee, aphelion and perihelion.

A grammar having fallen in their way, they expressed a wish to study it. They talk much about studying geography, and are anxious to learn the relations of countries to each other. Should they remain long in this country some maps would be of much service. They would need to be large not crowded with names, but those names put down which were important and printed large. They have learned of the existence of other countries besides Mendi and America, and are very inquisitive concerning them. Yours, truly,

S. M. BOOTH.

P. S. I should have sent this yesterday, but did not receive yours until nearly dark, and my health would not permit me to take time for it from the hours of rest. I send you enclosed, a copy of Ka-le's letter to J. Q. Adams on a separate paper, because I have not time to copy it, and this was ready written. Yours, &c.

S. M. B.

KA-LE'S LETTER TO MR. ADAMS.

The teacher of the Africans has furnished us with a copy of a letter that Ka-le, the African boy, addressed to the Hon. J. Q. Adams, after his visit to the Africans on his way to Washington, and in view of his having been engaged as one of their counsel:—

New Haven, Jan. 4, 1841.

Dear Friend Mr. Adams,—I want to write a letter to you because you love Mendi people, and you talk to the grand court. We want to tell you one thing—Jose Ruiz say we born in Havana, he tell lie. We stay in Havana 10 days and 10 nights, we stay no more. We all born in Mendi—we no understand the Spanish language. Mendi people been in America 17 moons. We talk America language little, not very good; we write every day; we write plenty letters; we read most all time; we read all Matthew, and Mark, and Luke, and John, and plenty of little books. We love books very much. We want you to ask the court what we have done wrong. What for Americans keep us in prison. Some people say Mendi people crazy; Mendi people dolt, because we no talk American language. Merica people no talk Mendi language; Merica people dolt? They tell bad things about Mendi people, and we no understand. Some men say Mendi people very happy, because they laugh and have plenty to eat. Mr. Pendleton come and Mendi people all look sorry, because they think about Mendi land and friends we no see now. Mr. Pendleton say Mendi people angry; white men afraid of Mendi people. Then Mendi people no look sorry again—that why we laugh. But Mendi people feel sorry; O, we can't tell how sorry. Some people say Mendi people no got souls. Why we feel bad we no got souls? We want to be free very much.

Dear friend Mr. Adams, you have children, you have friends, you love them, you feel very sorry if Mendi people come and carry them all to Africa. We feel bad for our friends, and our friends all feel bad for us. Americans no take us in ship. We on shore and Americans tell us slave ship catch us. They say we make you free. If they make us free, they tell true, if they no make us free they tell lie. If America people give us free we glad, if they no give us free we sorry—we sorry for Mendi people little, we sorry for America people great deal, because God punish liars. We want you to tell court that Mendi people no want to go back to Havana, we no want to be killed. Dear friend, we want you to know how we feel. Mendi people think, think, think. Nobody know what he think; teacher he know, we tell him some. Mendi people have got souls. We think we know God punish us if we tell lie. We never tell lie; we speak truth. What for Mendi people afraid? Because they get souls. Cook say he kill, he eat Mendi people—we afraid—we kill Cook. Then captain kill one man with knife, and cut Mendi people plenty. We never kill captain; he no kill us. If court ask who brougt Mendi people to America? We bring ourselves. Ceci held the rudder. All we want is make us free.

Your friend,

KA-LE.

[Mr. Booth, who is a member of the senior class in Yale College, assures the committee that the above letter was wholly composed by Ka-le, assisted by some of the other Africans. They understand many words not in common use, owing to their being instructed so faithfully in the definition of words.]

From the Albany Argus of March 19th.

A Singular Divorce Case.

The records of the proceedings of the Legislatures of some of the states present frequent cases of the dissolution of the marriage contract by legislative enactment, and necessarily, when that mode is resorted to, without strict adherence to any general principle or well settled judicial rule. In this state, the practice has wisely been to confine such applications to the court of chancery, where they are decided upon a uniform and rigid construction of the statute.

A case is now pending before the Senate, however, which is quite peculiar in its features. The common law fixes the "age of consent," as it is termed, at 12 years for a female. Some years since, the statute law of this state varied that age of consent to 14 years, and at the same time declared it a felonious offence to marry a female under that age, without the consent of her parents or guardians. Subsequently, the statute was amended, so as to restore the common law rule of 12 years of age as the period when a female becomes legally marraigeable, but the penalty against clandestinely marrying a female less than 14 years of age, was inadvertently left in force.

During the autumn of 1838, a daughter of a citizen of Stephentown, Rensselaer county, aged about 13 years, attended the common school of the district in which she resided, and when going and returning was in the habit of calling at a neighbor's house on the way. The mistress of this house seems to have been an inveterate match maker, and she so filled the simple girl's mind with notions of matrimony, having reference to a particular young man of her acquaintance, as to prepare her to take that important step at the first convenient opportunity.—In the course of events, the father and mother of the girl were absent from their residence at a funeral, which would detain them for nearly a day, and this occasion was improved by the husband of the officious match maker, and others to persuade their victim (though not without much hesitation on her part) to ride to a clergyman's in the vicinity, and be married to the young man—who would seem, from the statements before the Senate to have played but a secondary part in the affair.

Resulting from the proceedings was the indictment of the conspirators, and the sentence of the husband to the state prison. Meanwhile, the wife is such, in the eyes of the law; although the punishment of the husband pronounces her still under the control of her parents. To put an end to this double and incompatible relation, legislative action seems to be necessary.

A bill for that purpose was reported by Mr. Stroog, from the judiciary, and was before the committee of the whole on Tuesday, but was re-committed on Friday, for the purpose of having the facts spread upon the journals in a formal report, lest the case should be drawn into a precedent.

The Virginia Troubles.—In answer to the demand of Governor Seward upon the Governor of Virginia for the surrender of Robert F. Curry, a fugitive from justice, now confined in jail at Wheeling, Va., the latter has replied that he would most cheerfully when Governor Seward shall have given up the three colored men demanded of New-York by Virginia as fugitves from her justice.—J. of Com.

Since the above we learn from the Norfolk Beacon, that Judge May, offered a resolution in the House Delegates, on Friday, setting forth that the Governor of New-York had demanded of the Governor of Virginia, a fugitive from justice, legally charged with crime in that State, and now confined in this, but that the Governor of Virginia for the purpose of retaliation, had declined for the present, to surrender the fugitive, but that fugitive ought to be surrendered forthwith by Gov. Gilmer, which on motion of Gen. Bayly was laid on the table.

A resolution was then offered, by Mr. Taylor, requesting the Governor of Virginia, to communicate the late Executive order respecting a demand made by the Governor of New-York, for the surrender of a fugitive from justice, and its reasons for refusing to comply with the demand, and also a copy of the demand.

Gov. Gilmor complied with the request on Friday, and the matter was discussed at length on Friday evening, in the House, without coming to a vote.

When on motion of Mr. Bayly the House adjourned.

The House of Delegates took up the subject again on Saturday, and adopted as we learn a resolution condemnatory of the course of Gov. Gilmer, whereupon he immediately resigned his office. The Legislature will probably elect a successor to Gov. G. on to-morrow.

OFFICIAL.

By the President of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas sundry important and weighty matters principally growing out of the condition of the revenue and finances of the country appear to me to call for the consideration of Congress at an earlier day than its next annual session, and thus form an extraordinary occasion, such as renders necessary, in my judgment, the convention of the two Houses as soon as may be practicable, I do, therefore, by this my proclamation, convene the two Houses of Congress, to meet in the Capitol at the city of Washington, on the last Monday, being the thirty-first day of May next. And I require the respective Senators and Representatives then and there to assemble, in order to receive such information respecting the state of the Union as may be given to them, and to devise and adopt such measures as the good of the country may seem to them, in the exercise of their wisdom and discretion, to require.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the seal of the United States, to be hereunto affixed, and signed the same with my hand.

[L. S.] Done at the city of Washington, this seventeenth day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty one, and of the independence of the United States the sixty-fifth.

W. H. HARRISON.

By the President:
DANIEL WEBSTER,
Secretary of State.

ATTEMPT TO BURN A WHALING SHIP.—We are informed by the Newport [R. I.] Mercury, that a letter from Capt. Griswold, of the whaling ship Audley Clark, of Newport, to her owners, dated St. Catharines, Jan. 4th, 1841, states that he had put into that port to put on shore three men for the Consul to send home for trial, they having attempted to burn up the ship. One of the men named Wm. Rankin, alias Bowlan, confessed before the Counsel that he put fire to the train of combustibles at the instigation of Wm. Maxfield and Henry Wood, two seamen belonging to the ship. The fire was communicated through the hole in the forecastle bulk-head, but was fortunately discovered before it had done much damage, and was extinguished in about fifteen minutes.

The only reason given for their diabolical conduct was that they wished to get clear of paying large bills which the ship had against them.

"A Galveston paper of February 4th says; "Congress adjourned on the 4th inst. The private treaty with England guarantees peace between Texas and Mexico in thirty days after its ratification now made, reaches the capital of Mexico. Texas agreeing to pay England, as her part of the debt due Mexico £1,000,000 in fifty years."

We learn from the Worcester, (Mass.) Ægis, that the Selectmen of that town have resolved, officially, that the public good does not require spirituous liquors to be sold in that town.

The N. Y. Courier and Enquirer of Friday, says: 'We are happy to add from an undoubted source, that the personal relations between Mr. Fox, the British Minister, and Mr. WEBSTER, are of the most friendly nature; and that BOTH of them have distinctly said within the last few days, that there is not the SLIGHTEST probability of any thing occurring to disturb the amicable relations existing between England and the United States. The visit of Mr. CRITTENDEN to Lockport, is more for the purpose of exhibiting a proper interest in the trial of McLEOD, than to make any demand for his release. There is nothing in the official communication of Mr. Fox to Mr. Webster of an offensive character.'

THE CASE OF McLEOD.—In consequence of an irregularity in the drawing of a Jury, the trial of ALEXANDER McLEOD will NOT take place at the approaching circuit in Niagara county. The subjoined letter from the District Attorney of Niagara county, which we copy from the Rochester Democrat, explains the reason of this postponement.

LOCKPORT, March 12, 1841.

"DEAR SIR—In consequence of an error of our County Clerk in drawing a Jury for our next Court, the Court will go down, and McLeod will not be tried now. I drop you this line in hopes you will so inform the witnesses, that they may be saved the trouble and expense of coming up. We shall want them by and by at another court. I will let them know when. In haste, &c.

J. L. WOODS.

The Toronto (U. C.) Patriot, states that upward of 15,000 soldiers, horse, foot and artillery, the very ELITE of the British army, are now stationed in the Upper Canadas.

Mitchell King, Esq. who came passenger in the Caledonia, from Liverpool was the bearer of important despatches from our Minister at London, and proceeded to Washington immediately after his arrival here.

The Caledonia brought 25,000 letters—which is 5000 more than was ever before received at Boston by one vessel. The postage on letters to this city alone amounted to $1,992.

Ten new churches are now building in London, and, when completed, will afford sittings for 15,000 persons, of which one half will be free. The new church in Watney-street, Commercial-road East will soon be opened, and afford seats for 1,700 individuals, of which one-half will be free.

In the State Prison at Sing Sing, there are confined 802 males and 70 females--total 872. Since the first of the present month, 3 were discharged by expiration of sentence; 1 has died; and none been pardoned. The prisoners are generally in excellent health.

There are two hundred and six distilleries in the State of New-York, which annually produce 2,740,110 gallons of liquor.

A small dwelling house was consumed in Amherst village, Lorain county, Ohio, on the morning of the 11th inst. Two young ladies, Miss Bivins and Miss Cunningham, perished in the flames.

A Very Melancholly Occurence took place recently at Margaret's Bay, L. C. Mrs. Holland, wife of Thomas Holland, Esq. of that place, and their three children were unfortunately drowned the children were amusing themselves on the ice, in front of the house, when it gave way, Mrs. Holland heard their screams, went to their assistance, and fell in—Mr. Holland hastened to the assistance of them all—and he also fell in, but with much difficulty escaped a similar fate--Montreal Gazette.

Weights and Measures.—In G. Britain a body of learned men have for several years been engaged in digesting a plan for the conversion of the present heterogeneous system of weights, moneys, and measures, into a new one, which shall be uniform and simple. They will probaby be able to report in the course of a few years.

How to Instruct.—Pour in knowledge gently. Plato observed that the minds of children were like bottles with very narrow mouths; if you attempted to fill them too rapidly, much knowledge was wasted, and little received; whereas, with a stream, they were easily filled.—Those who would make young children prodigies, act as wisely as they who would pour a pail of water into a pint measure.

A Canadian, named Murray, has been arrested at Chippewa, and identified as one of the fellows who committed the daring robbery on the premises of Rev. Mr. Anderson, at Waterloo, U. C. a few nights since.—He was in the act of selling a watch obtained in his midnight maraudings.

The Newburyport Herald says that Michael Pearson, of that town, has recently invented a very ingenious cannon, capable of being discharged with three times the speed of the common cannon, and by half the number of men usually required. It is his intention to present it to the department at Washington.

Mr. Clay has been severely sick at Baltimore for several days, but is recovering.

An inquest was held on Tuesday last, at the house of Daniel Sullivan, 100 Ridge st., on the body of his son James, 23 years of age, who died from delirium tremens. Verdict accordingly.

The Trial of Peter Robinson, for the murder of Abraham Suydam at New-Brunswick last December, is now drawing to a close. The testimony is very strong against the prisoner, and there is little doubt of a verdict of Guilty.

P. S. The trial was brought to a close on Wednesday, and the Jury retired about a quarter before 9 o'clock, P. M. after a charge of two and a half hours from the presiding Judge, decidedly against the prisoner. They returned at a quarter past nine, with a verdict of Guilty.

A young man was sentenced to twenty years imprisonmet last week at Middletown, Ct., for an assault upon his father with intent to kill.

Delirium Tremens no Apology for Crime.—In the Court of Common Pleas of this city, as a case has just been tried which involved the question whether a lunatic can be held liable for his acts, in a civil action. From the evidence adduced, it appeared that on the 8th of July last, the plaintiff was passing by defendant's store, who called him in and accused him of having slandered a female member of his family. The plaintiff denied the accusation, and defendant took up a knife and inflicted so dreadful a wound in the plaintiff's neck and arm that he has not yet recovered from the effects of it and probably never will. The defence set up was, that the defendant was insane at the time, and was consequently not responsible for his acts. In proof of this defence, several witnesses were called, from whose evidence it appeared that the defendant was on the occasion in question laboring under delirium tremens. Verdict for plaintiff $500

The Amistad Girls.—On Friday judgment was given at New Haven on the habeas corpus sued out by Mr. Townsend against Mr. Pendleton, in favor of the former—that is, transferring the custody of the girls to him, as their guardian appointed by the Court of Probate. The girls, however, did not like the change at all, and one of them clung with desperate pertinacity to Mrs. Pendleton. Of course this was only the result of ignorance and groundless fear. They will be well taken care of by their new protectors, and soon become as much attached to them as they were to the old. The girls, and also the other Africans, were removed to Farmington, where provision has been made for them.—Com. Adv.

Canada.—An Election for Members of the Colonial Parliament of Upper and Lower Canada, (now united,) has just taken place. The 'Union' party, which includes the Tories, achieved a victory, but loud complaints of violence and foul play are made on the other side. In many districts, the Election of anti-Liberal Members is alleged to have been carried by beating and keeping their opponents from the polls!—More outrage and violence has been committed at this one Election, than at all the Elections in the United States within our remembrance. So much for devotion to Liberty and good order.—New Yorker.

MARRIED,

In Hopkinton, R. I. on the 24 Feb. by Eld. Daniel Coon, Mr. CHARLES MAXSON, of Westerly, and ANN MARIA BARBER, of the former place.

DIED

In this village, on the 30th ult., CAROLINE, daughter of Giles M. and Phebe Langworthy, aged 7 months.

In Stonington, Conn., on the 15th Feb., of the Consumption, THOMPSON WELLS, son of Zebulon and Eunice Stillman, in the 26th year of his age. He made a profession of religion in August 1834. He has maintained a steady walk and gave evidence of having experienced regenerating grace. About 4 years since he went into the state of N. Y. where he remained until his health became impaired, when he returned to his friends, and continued with them until his death. He bore his sickness with christian patience, and when advertised that his departure was at hand, he said, "the Lord's will be done."

"Thus blooming youth are snatched away
By death's resistless hand."

He has left a numerous train of relatives to mourn their loss, while we trust he is at rest. COMM.

In Hopkinton, on the 26th of February, Mrs. SALLY, widow of Jeremiah Thurston, Esq., in the 39th year of her age. Mrs. Thurston was amiable in life, and lovely in death. She was for several years a member of a Congregational Church.

In the same place, on the 1st ult., JACOB D., son of Jacob D. and Eliza Babcock, aged 2 years 1 month.

In the same place, on the 12th ult., Miss ABBY, daughter of John and Alvana Langworthy, in the 66 year of her age. Her friends have nothing to lament but the loss of her usefulness in society. She was a worthy member of the 2nd S. D. B. Church in Hopkinton.

In the same place, on the 13th ult., Mrs. CHAMPLIN, wife of Thomas Champlin, aged about 75. She was a member of the 1st S. D. B. Church in Hopkinton.

In the same place, on the 17th ult., NANCY, daughter of Judeth and Clark Potter, aged 33 years. She was a member of the 2nd S. D. B. Church in Hopkinton.

LIST OF LETTERS

A. L. Clapp, P. M. E. S. Bailey (we will do as you request) R. T. Green, P. M. H. Willson P. M. T. B. Brown, (we will send the desired information.

LIST OF RECEIPTS

Of Theron O Drake ,88. of Ichabod Williams Waite Williams, Joseph L. Perry, $2. each vol. 2 Eld. A. Campbell, $2,27 cr. Perry Burdick, vol. 1 J. R. Butts, $2 vol 2, of T. B Brown, $1. of H. Whitford, $7 cr. A Saunders. C. Saunders, H. Redfield $2,25 each of D. C. Burdick ,25.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ALFRED ACADEMY,
AND
TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

ENCOURAGED by the liberal patronage of the surrounding country, the Trustees hope to meet all reasonable expectations of their patrons by increasing the facilities of intellectual improvement.

The Academic Year for 1841—2 is divided into four terms of 11 weeks each, opening, viz:
1st,—Wednesday, April 28.
2nd.—Wednesday, Aug. 18.
3d,—Wednesday, Nov. 10.
4th,—Wednesday, Feb. 3

Familiar Lectures may be expected, as occasion may require, from the Principal, Mr. W. C. KENYON, and during the fall term by J. R. IRISH, on THE ART OF TEACHING.

TUITION—Varying with Studies, from $2,50 to $3,50.

BOARD—According to accommodations from $1; to $1,25.

M. GREEN,
A. BURDICK, 3d,
J. R. IRISH, } Trustees.

Alfred, March 17th, 1841.

REPRINT OF THE OLD DIVINES.

THIS work willbe devoted to the pnblication of Argumentsr Soummaries of the Sermons and Discourses of the most eminent British Divines,—a complete collection of whose invaluable writings in some instances scarce, in others voluminous and expensive, is rarely to be found in the libraries of the Clergy, while our great public repositories themselves are not unfrequently deficient in this branch of literature.

These Skeletons which are intended as models of Scripture argumentation and composition, selected from the writings of the most distinguished ornaments of the Church, will be found highly acceptable to Clergymen, and more particularly useful to the young Divine, whose studies they are well calculated to facilitate by perusal and consultation.

The work will commence with Summaries of the Discourses of Bishop Sherlock, which will be followed by those of Jeremy Taylor, Dr. Barrow, Tillotson' Beveridge, S Clark, Jewell, Jortin, Ogden, Powell, Fawcett, Cahrnock, Hooper, Bull, Leighton, Hopkins, Howe, Maclaurin, South, Secker, &c. &c.

"A Summary of each discourse is admirably calculated to assist the Divine in the arduous task of Composition for the pulpit."—Observer, London.

"No archetype can be better than Sherlock and Barrow adapted to modern taste."—Gentleman's Magazine.

"To the Christian Minister, at the outset of life and the Theological Student, such a work must prove invaluable."—Exeter Flying Post.

"The mode pursued is to present the skeleton of the discourse only, retaining the order, the arguments and, as it were, the key notes of the original. By this means a great saving of space and money is effected. Judging from the specimen before us, the work will be carefully and skilfully done. The abridgment reads continuously, and preserves the effect of a whole."---Spectator.

The above very valuable work, which has been highly commended by Ministers and Religious Press in Great Britain, the subscriber proposes to republish in this country, if sufficient encouragement is given.

The work was originally published by A. J. Valpy, A. M., editor of the Family Classical Library, Greek Septuagint, &c. &c.---and edited by Rev. T. R. Hughes, B. D., Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Peterborough---late Christian Advocate at Cambridge, Editor of the Continuation of Hume and Smollet's History of England from the reign of George the 2d, to 1835, Author of Travels in Greece, &c. &c. The well established literary reputation of the original editor and publisher will no doubt be a sufficient guaranty that the abridgement has been executed with skill and fidelity.

CONDITIONS.

1. The work will be commenced as soon as 300 subscribers are obtained.
2. It will be printed on paper of very superior quality with type and page similar to the North American Review.
3. It will be Issued quarterly, each number to contain at least, 132 pages, making a volume of 528 octavo pages, anually, with a Title Page, and an Index containig a list of texts, subjects, &c.
4. Price $2 a year, payable on the reception of the 1st number.
5. The work will commence with the republication of the valuable Sermons and Discourses of Sherlock, which will be followed with those of Jeremy Taylor, or Dr. Barrow. The first year will contain the whole of Sherlock and Taylor, or Sherlock and Barrow.

N. B. As the proposals for republishing the above work originates in a want frequently expressed by ministers, no agents will be appointed, as those wishing for the work, by writing a line something similar to the following and getting the Postmaster to sign and frank it, can forward their orders free of expense;---

By request of (here inser your own name,) forward you his name as a subscriber to the "Reprint of the Old Divines." You will direct his copy to (here give your Post Office address) signed,
—— ——, P. M.

It will be understod that no money is expected with the orders for the work, as it will not be published unless 300 subscribers are obtained. It is hoped, however, that so many as design to subsdribe for it, will forward their names immediately. As the number of copies issued will depend upon the number of copies ordered, ministers will perceive the necesity of ordering the work at the commencement.

LITERARY AND THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTIONS.

Officers of Literary and Theological Institutions, who may receive this Prospectus, are respectlully requested to hand it to some active young man, who will exert himself to obtain a list of subscribers in the Institution; and Students, and Beneficiaries of the Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, and christian, Education Societies, will be furnished with the work on the following very low terms, viz: two copies for $3, or seven copies for $10, and a copy gratis to the individual acting as agent.

$5 will pay for two copies of "The Young People's Library," and one copy of the Reprint of the Old Divines," or $10, for five copies of "The young Peoples Library," and one do. of the "Reprint of the Old Divines." Any Minister or Student shall receive the above works on these terms.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

SOLOMON CARPENTER, A. B., Principal.
GILES M. LANGWORTHY, Teacher of Math
A. L. SAUNDERS, M. D., Lecturer on Chemistry.
S. NILES SWEET, Esq. Professor of Elocution.

Ladies Department.
Mrs. L. M. CARPENTER, Preceptress
Miss CAROLINE E. WILLCOX, Teacher.
Miss L. A. ROLLO, Teacher of Music.

This Institution is located in the pleasant and healthful village of De Ruyter. Its buildings are both spacious and commodious. Study rooms of which there are a large number, are furnished with chairs, tables, bedsteads, and stoves; and rented to gentlemen at one shilling per week; or one shilling for each student, the rooms being large enough to accommodate two. Good board is afforded at one dollar and twenty five cents per week, including washing or lodging. One shilling extra, is charged to those who require both.

The institution is furnished with a good Philosophical and chemical apparatus. It is also furnished with a valuable Library. A scientific society connected with the Institute, is furnished with a choice collection of Minerals and Curiosities.

About twenty-one thousand dollars has already been expended on the De Ruyter Institute for the purpose of facilitating the student in his pursuit of scientific knowledge.

It is the object of those to whom the management of the Institute is entrusted, to make the expenses of acquiring a knowledge of the sciences, as light as possible.

And the public may be assured that a strict attention will be paid to the moral cultivation of the student; and the trustees and teachers will spare no reasonable pains to render the time spent at the De Ruyter Institute, as agreeable and profitable to the student as circumstances will admit.

Young gentlemen and ladies wishing to engage in the pursuit of science, are respectfully invited to spend a term or two, at the De Ruyter Institute and satisfy themselves in regard to its merit.

The year is divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each. The first term commenced on the 18th day of September; The second term on the first day of January; and the third term on the seventh day of May.

TUITION.

In the common English branches, - - - -	$3,50
In the Languages and higher English branches,	5,00
In Drawing, - - - - - - - - - -	2,50
In Painting, - - - - - - - - - - - -	2,50
In Drawing and Painting, where both are studied at the same time, or during the term, - -	4,00

Tuition in advance.
Sept. 29, 1840. 50tf

Miscellaneous Department.

THE TRIAL.

(Continued from our last.)

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS' ARGUMENT.

Of course you will not expect from me aught beyond a meagre skeleton of the performance, which I may say, has surpassed the most raised expectations in regard to its interest and power, and the skill with which the argumet has been carried forward to its object. His exordium was in something like the following words:

May it please your honors—

"In rising to address this Court, as one of its attorneys and counsellors, regularly admitted at a great distance of time, I feel that an apology might well be expected for my appearance where I shall perhaps be more likely to exhibit at once the infirmities of age and the inexperience of youth, than to render those services to the individuals whose lives and liberties are at the disposal of this Court which I would most earnestly desire to render. But as I am unwilling to employ one moment of the time of the Court in anything that regards my own personal situation, I shall reserve what few observations I may think necessary to offer as an apology, till the close of my argument on the merits of the question.

I therefore proceed immediately to say, that in a consideration of this case, I derive, in the distress I feel both for myself and my clients, consolation from two sources; first, that the rights of my client to their lives and liberties have already been defended by my learned friend and colleague in so able and complete a manner as leaves me scarcely anything to say, and I feel that such full justice has been done to their interests, that any fault or imperfection of mine will be merely attributed to its true cause; and secondly, I derive consolation from the thought that this is a Court of JUSTICE. And in saying so very trivial a thing, I should not on any other occasion, perhaps, be warranted in asking the Court to consider what Justice is. Justice, as defined in the Institute of Justinian, nearly 2000 years ago, and as it is felt and understood by all who understand human relations and human rights, is

"A constant and perpetual will to render TO EVERY ONE that which is his own."

And in a Court of Justice, where there are two parties present, justice demands that the rights of each party should be allowed to himself, as well as that each party has a right, to be secured and protected by the Court. This observation is important, because I appear here on behalf of thirty-six individuals, the life and liberty of every one of whom depends on the decision of this Court. The Court, therefore, I treust, in deciding this case, will form no lumping judgment on these thirty-six individuals, but will act on the consideration that the life and the liberty of every one of them must be determined by its decision.

They are here, individually, under very different circumstances, and in very different characters. Some are in one predicament, some in another. In some of the proceedings by which they have been brought into the custody, and under the protection of this Court, thirty-two or three of them have been charged with the crime of murder. Three or four of them are female children, incapable in the judgment of our laws, of the crime of murder or piracy, or perhaps, of any other crime. Yet, from the day when the vessel was taken possession of by one of our naval officers, they have all been held as close prisoners, now for the period of eighteen long months, under custody and by authority of the Courts of the United States. I trust, therefore, that before the ultimate decision of this Court is established, its honorable members will pay due attention to the circumstances and condition of every individual concerned.

When I say I derive consolation from the consideration that I stand before a Court of Justice, I am obliged to take this ground, because, as I shall show, another Department of the Government of the United States has taken, with reference to this case, the ground of utter injustice, and these individuals for whom I appear, stand before this Court, awaiting their fate from its decision, under the array of the whole Executive power of this nation against them, in addition to that of a foreign nation. And here arises a consideration, the most painful of all others, in considering the duty I have to discharge, in which, in supporting the motion to dismiss the appeal, I shall be obliged not only to investigate and submit to the censure of this Court, the form and manner of the proceeding of the Executive in this case, but the validity and the motive of the reasons assigned for its interference in this unusual manner in a suit between parties for their individual rights. At an early period of my life, it was my fortune to witness one of the tragedies of the great dramatist of England, I may say the great dramatist of the world, where I heard Lord Surry heaping reproaches upon Cardinal Wolsey, after he had fallen into disgrace with the king, his master, and the Lord Chamberlain interferes to check him; he says, "O, my Lord, press not a falling man too far, 'Twere virtue." I was struck with the sentiment, and have ever looked upon it as a lesson of morals, which I hope to carry to my grave.

It is peculiarly painful to me, under present circumstances, to be under the necessity of arraigning before this Court and before the civilized world, the course of the existing Administration in this case. But I must do it. That Government is still in power, and this subject to the control of the Court, the lives and liberties of all my clients in its hands. And if I should pass over the course it has pursued, those who have not had an opportunity to examine the case, and perhaps the Court itself, might decide that nothing improper had been done, and that the parties I represent had not been wronged by the course pursued by the Executive. In making this charge, or arraignment, as defensive of the rights of my clients, I now proceed to an examination of the correspondence of the Secretary of State, with the ambassador of her Catholic Majesty, as officially communicated to Congress, and published among the national documents.

Mr. Adams then commenced a "searching operation," of unequalled skill and thoroughness, into the proceedings of the Executive, with the reasons assigned. In the letter of Mr. Forsyth, Dec. 18, 1839, in defending the course of the Government against the reproaches heaped upon it by the Spanish Minister, he says that all the proceedings of the government, judicial and executive, have been grounded on the assumption that Ruiz and Montez were alone the parties aggrieved. I ask your honors, said Mr. A., is this justice? The Secretary proceeds to describe the sympathy which actuated Lieut. Gedney and his officers and men, towards the Spanish gentlemen suffering under the lawless violence of their oppressors, and he declares that this sympathetic feeling soon become in a manner national. Here was the motive of the United States for appearing as a party in this suit. And that motive is not justice, it is sympathy with one party, against the other. With too much reason does he call this sympathy national, and it is against this sympathy that I must call upon you even this Court to restrain itself—in the name of justice. One of the judges who presided in some of the preceding trials is said to have called this an anomalous case. It is anomalous said Mr. A., and I know of no law, but one which I am not at liberty to argue before this court, no law, statue or constitution, no code, no treaty, applicable to the proceedings of the Executive or the Judiciary, except that law—(pointing with tremendous emphasis to the copy of the Declaration of Independence, hanging against the pillars of the court-room,) that law, two copies of which are ever before the eyes of your honors. I know of no other law that reaches the case of my clients, but that law of Nature and of nature's God, on which our fathers placed our own national existence. The circumstances are so peculiar, that no code or treaty has provided for such a case. That law in its application the case of my clients, I trust will be the law on which the case will be decided by this court.

To what nation did the Amistad belong when taken possession of by the officers of the U. S.? The Africans were in the possession, and had the presumptive right of ownership, they were in peace with the United States, the courts have decided, and truly that they were not pirates, they were on a voyage to their own native homes, their dulces Argos (1) they had acquired the right, and so far as their knowledge extended they had the power of prosecuting the voyage, the ship was theirs and being in immediate communication with the shore, was, I believe, in the territory of the State of New-York, or, if not, at least half of the number were actually on the soil of New-York, and entitled to all the provisions of the Law of Nations, and to the protection and aid and comfort which the laws of that State secure to every human being within her limits. In this situation Lt. Gedney, without any charge or authority from his government, without warrant of law, by force of fire-arms, seizes and disarms them, then being in the peace of that Commonwealth and of the United States, drives them on board the vessel, seizes the vessel and transfers it against the will of its possessors to another State, I ask in the name of justice, by what law was this? Even admitting that it had been a case of actual piracy, which your courts have properly found it was not, there are questions arising here of the deepest interest to the liberties of the people of this Union, and especially of the State of New-York. Have the officers of the U. S. Navy a right to seize men by force, on the territory of New-York, to fire at them, to overpower them, to disarm them, to put them on board of a vessel and carry them by force and against their will to another State, without warrant or form of law? I am not arraigning Lt. Gedney, but I ask this Court, in the name of justice, to settle it in their minds, by what law it was done, and how far the principle it embraces is to be carried.

In commenting upon the demands first made by the Spanish Minister, Don Calderon de la Barca, Mr. A. adverted to the illustrious standing of his name in the Spanish annals and to his own friendly relations with him while a resident of this country, and begged to be understood as not intending to treat him personally with disrespect while he examined his demands, as they ought to appear in the eyes of an American Court. M. Calderon then demands.—1. that the vessel shall be delivered to her owner—who was killed; 2. that it should be declared by the President that no Court could try the negroes, but that he should keep them safely and send them to Cuba for punishment; & 3. that they should be delivered up to their owners or the latter indemnified. In what position does he place the President of the United States? First, he is to turn jailor and keep these men safely, and then to become a tip-staff and carry them to Cuba, to be tried by the slaveholders of the Barracoons. Was ever such a demand made upon a civilized government? If the President had arbitrary and unlimited power he could not satisfy all these demands. And if he could send 40 Africans beyond the seas by his own lettres de cachet, (1) he could send forty American citizens as well by the same power.

In commenting upon article 9, of the treaty of 1795, on which the United States Government has rested its claim for the restoration of these Africans as merchandise rescued out of the hands of robbers; he said he spoke of his own knowledge with regard to the objects of the Article, having himself negotiated the revisal and renewal of this very treaty, in 1819, and there was never such an idea passed between him and the Spanish minister of that day, as that this clause was to include persons as merchandise. The Courts below have decided no right to consider these Africans as pirates and robbers. If the sympathies of the government and the nation had been impartial, in that light would Ruez and Montez have appeared. These Africans had been torn from their own country, shipped at Lomboko, against the laws of Spain, against the laws of the United States, against the laws of Nations,—as far as the United States, and Spain and Great Britain were concerned—they were in fact and in law on the continuation of the original voyage, they were in a perching condition, dropping dead from day to day, no less than sixteen having died of the treatment they received from Ruiz and Montez before they reached our shores while during the last fourteen months not one has died in the American prison. The moment they were restored to the absolute wants of human nature, furnished by the tenderness of our laws, the mortality ceased, and they have enjoyed perfect health. At the great day of accounts, said Mr. A., who is to be responsible for the souls of those sixteen men that died. Ruiz claims them as his merchandise. Who, in the closing hour of his life, would have those sixteen passing before his eyes exclaiming, "Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow." Who, then, were the oppressors and robbers from whom this vessel was rescued? Certainly not Montez and Ruiz.

The article cannot apply to human beings. It says the ship and merchandise shall be restored entire. Is that treaty made between cannibal nations, and does it intend to stipulate that when human merchandise is restored, the legs and arms shall not be cut off? This single word "entire" is sufficient to exclude human beings from the scope of the Article. But it says merchandise, rescued from robbers. Who are the robbers, and what is the merchandise? According to the construction of the Spanish minister, the merchandise is the robbers, and the robbers are the merchandise; the merchandise was rescued out of its own hand, and the robbers were rescued out of the hand of the merchandise. The Africans are themselves the robbers out of whose hands they themselves have been rescued. Is this the meaning of the treaty?

With regard to Article 10 of the treaty, he showed that if it applied to any party, it was to the Africans, who were in possession of the ship, and who were pursuing a lawful voyage, while that of Ruiz and Montez was clearly unlawful. The treaty says they shall be treated as our own citizens. Suppose the case had been an American vessel, a Baltimore clipper, fitted out for the African slave trade, and had performed its voyage, directly or indirectly, and with fifty-four African victims on board, had been taken possession of by our cruisers, how would our citizens be treated? The captain would have been seized and hung. No appeal before this Court could have saved him. Is that the provision of the 10th Article, which is sought to be applied in behalf of Ruiz and Montez? Perhaps it would be a nearer reward for their merits than the restoration of these poor negroes to their power would be, or any other act enabling them to complete their voyage.

DEATH OF JUDGE BARBOUR.

Feb. 25, 1841.

The proceedings of the Court in this solemn case have been interrupted by the solemn voice of death. One of the learned and honorable judges of the Court, who sat yesterday in his place, listening with profound and patient attention to the argument of a counsellor many years older than himself, reasoning eloquently in behalf of justice on earth, has been summoned to his own dread account, at the bar of eternal justice above. Judge Barbour, of Virginia, the seventh in rank on the bench, died last night in his bed—in his sleep, it is probable, without a groan or a struggle. The servant at his lodgings went at the usual hour this morning to the rooms of the different Judges, to call them to breakfast. As Chief Justice was passing the door of Judge Barbour's room, the man said to him, "Chief Justice, will you please to come here, sir—I think Judge Barbour is dead." Judge Taney went to the bed, and there saw his associate lying on his side, as if in gentle sleep, but dead and cold with the exception of a slight remaining warmth at the chest. Not a muscle was distorted, nor were the bed-clothes in the slightest degree disturbed, so that it is probable his heart ceased to beat in an instant, while he was asleep!

At the usual hour for opening the Court this morning, none of the Judges were seen in the court-room, which was already filled with persons come to hear the continuation of Mr. Adams' speech. At length the Judges came in together, and their countenances looked pale, distressed, and sorrowful. As soon as they had taken their seats, the Crier opened the Court in the usual form, and the Chief Justice addressed the gentlemen of the bar,—"Gentlemen, a painful event has occurred—Judge Barbour died suddenly last night—and the Court is therefore adjourned until Monday."

The Crier then made proclamation to that effect, the Judges all rose, and retired again to the private apartment, and the assembly withdrew.

I did not expect an announcement of so overwhelming a Providence in a manner so severely simple and subdued, but it struck me as eminently appropriate for the Supreme Court of this nation. It was in keeping with the strictest propriety and suitableness. It was sublime.

COMMENTS ON THE SPANISH MINISTER'S LETTER.

After having shown the absurdity of the pretext that the treaty afforded any ground for the surrender of the Africans as merchandize, or as a part of the cargo of the vessel, Mr. Adams proceeded to examine the other arguments urged by M. Calderon de la Barca, upon the American Secretary of State, to induce him to send these unfortunate men to Cuba, to meet the justice of the Barracoons. One was, that if these men were suffered to go unpunished, after what they had done, it would greatly endanger the safety of the Island of Cuba, where the citizens of the United States have so extensive a trade, and where numbers of them own properties, which they cultivate by the labor of slaves. I submit to your honors, said Mr. A., that the Spanish minister has no right to appeal to the courts of this country to pass a particular sentence between parties before them, on the consideration of their personal interest, or that of the other American citizens, in slave property in Cuba. What will become of the liberties of this country, if our courts are to pass sentence affecting individual rights, upon a consideration of the effect their decison may have upon the interests of American citizens in all parts of the world where they are scattered; for if it applies in the case of American interests in Cuba, it is equally applicable in regard to interests in China, Hindostan, or the Fejees Islands. It is no proper argument for the Spanish minister to address to the Secretary of State. It was undoubtedly calculated and designed to appeal strongly to the sympathy, which the Secretary speaks of, and which he says had well nigh become national. It was well calculated to excite and influence the Secretary of State, not only in regard to the supposed American interests in Cuba, but perhaps also in regard to interests that might be supposed to be nearer home. But was it JUSTICE! Was it a ground on which courts will decide causes? I trust not.

The Spanish minister proceeds to say, that the influence of capital punishment inflicted in the country, which it seems not to have entertained a doubt, would be promptly dealt out to these Africans, would not be attended with the same salutary effects, as if inflicted in Cuba. The indemnification, says he, which I officially ask in that cause to the owners of the slaves would be but a slender compensation—for though the property of individuals might be unimpaired the satisfaction due to public justice is not accorded. And that, said Mr. A., is the reason why the President of the United States was to issue his lettres de cachet, and send these unfortunate individuals to Cuba. There are some other passages in this letter, said Mr. A., which I had rather your honors would read when you are together in your apartment for consultation. I hope the Court will read them, but I had rather not trust myself to comment upon them as they deserve. Your honors, in the pursuit of JUSTICE, will read them, and will see why I abstain from doing it.

The Spanish minister concludes by referring to the readiness with which the Spanish authorities would accord to citizens of the United States any fugitive slaves who might be found in the island of Cuba. And was this, said Mr. A., an argument to be addressed to the Secretary of State of the United States? Is it upon these principles that this case is to be decided? Is it by the offer of such an equivalent that our Government is to be persuaded to deliver over these unhappy men? "If you will deliver these negroes to me, for whose blood all the slave traders of Cuba thirst, and any slave from the Southern States who shall take refuge in the island of Cuba, will be readily given up." What is the argument, as addressed to the Secretary of State? It is, that it would be a very easy thing for the Governor-General of Cuba to seize a fugitive slave, or pretended slave from the South, and put him on board of a vessel, and send him to one of the Southern States. It may be so. It appears from one of the authorities read by the learned Attorney-General, that this Governor has royal power—that he is in fact equal to the king, and it may be easy for him to do such a thing to any man, black or white, slave or free. But is that to be done by the President of the United States, or to be required of him? If it is I should hope he would wait for some more explicit stipulations than appear in the treaty of 1795. It was quite enough, one would think, to require the President of the United States to keep these men safely, and send them back speedily, without making this—what shall I call it?—this offer,—to send back the slaves of the South, if the President will deliver up these Africans to the authorities of Cuba.

And now, what answer ought the Secretary of State to have returned to these demands? It was his duty instantaneously to answer the Spanish minister, by telling him that every one of his demands was utterly admissible, and the President of the United States had it not in his power to do any one of all the things he had required. He would not deliver the ship to her owner—he was dead—there was no owner—and there was no duty of the United States to dispose of the vessel in that manner. As to the question of salvage, that depended on the Court, before which the case was pending for trial according to law. The proclamation required of the President, or the declaration that no court of the United States had authority to try the case, was not only inadmissible, but an offensive demand—it was calling upon the President to usurp a control over the judiciary, which he could not exercise but by the overthrow of the whole Constitution, generally and in every particular, all the rights of the nation, and all the rights of the states. And as to the delivering up of the negroes, that was equally inadmissible for the President has no such power to arrest or deliver up any person whatever.

But this demand is insignificant in comparison with the other—that the President should himself send them beyond the sea for trial. He should have called upon the Spanish ambassador to name an instance in the history of nations, where such a demand had been made by any government of another and independent nation. To make the President of the United States, not the head of a nation, but a constable, a catchpole—a character not possible to be named in gentlemanly language! Yet, that is what this demand makes of the President of the United States. And the Secretary should have set the Spanish minister right with regard to the tribunal before which these questions were pending, by showing him that it was not a State Court, but a Court of the United States, sitting in the District of Connecticut. And now, from that day to this, the Secretary of State has never answered one of these demands, nor arrested one of these misapprehensions, nor asserted the rights and honor of the nation against one of these most extraordinary, inadmissible, and insolent demands. He has degraded the country in the face of the whole civilized world, not only by allowing these demands to remain unanswered, but by proceeding, I am obliged to say, throughout the whole transaction, as if the Executive were earnestly desirous to comply with every one of these demands. In the very misrepresentations of those demands, in his instructions to the District Attorney, under which this case is brought here, why does he take such a course? The Spanish Minister pronounced the Court before which the Secretary brought the question, an incompetent tribunal—and this position has been maintained by the Legation of Spain down to this very month, that a letter of Chevalier d'Argaiz officially protests against the jurisdiction of the Courts, before which the Secretary professes to be prosecuting the claims of this very minister!

Why does the Spanish minister persist in such inadmissible pretensions? It is because they were not met in limine in a proper manner—because he was not told instantly, without the delay of an hour, that this government could never admit such claims, and would be offended if they were repeated, or any portion of them. Yet all these claims, monstrous, absurd, and inadmissible as they are, have been urged and repeated for eighteen months, upon our government, and an American Secretary of State evades answering any of them—evades it to such an extent that the Spanish minister reproaches him for not meeting his arguments!

THE PASSPORTS.

Mr. Adams then went into brief but severe examination of the article, said to be from one of the brightest intellects of the south, which appeared in the official Gazette of the Government on the very day that this court convened. He then examined the passport, on which the case was left to turn by the Attorney General. He showed that it was not even valid as a passport, because it contained no description of the person of the individual or individuals to which it was intended to apply,—a matter, he said, which every one who had traveled in those countries where passports are used, knew to be as essential to the very object of those documents. But even if it were good as a passport, it is of no use or force as evidence of property, because it was never designed to have any such force.

ELOQUENT AND AFFECTING CONCLUSION.

In closing, Mr. Adams said:

May it please your Honors:—On the 17th of February, 1804, now more than 37 years ago, my name was recorded on the rolls of this court, as one of its Attorneys and counsellors. Five years afterwards, I appeared before this court in an important cause. Since that time, I have never appeared before this court until the present occasion, and now I stand before this court again. It is this same court, but not the same Judges. At that time these seats were filled with honored men indeed, but not the same. They are all changed. Then there was Chief Justice Marshall, and Judges Cushing, and Chase, and Washington, and Johnson, and Livingston and Wild. Where are they? Where is that able statesman and learned lawyer, who was once my associate counsel, Robert Goodloe Harper? Where is the eloquent counsellor, so long the pride of Maryland and of the American Bar, Luther Martin? Where is the excellent clerk of that day whose name has been inscribed on the shores of Africa, as a monument of his abhorrence of the African Slave trade, Elias B. Caldwell? Where is the Marshal? Where are the criers of the court? Where is one of the very Judges before whom I commenced my argument in the present cause? Gone—gone; all gone. Gone from the services which they rendered to their country, to appear before a tribunal where they must answer for all the deeds done in the body. From the excellent characters which they sustained, so far as I have the means of knowing, I fondly hope that they have gone to receive the rewards of eternal blessedness. In taking, as I suppose, my final leave of this Bar and of this Honorable Court, I can only ejaculate a fervent petition to heaven that every member of it may go to his final account with as little to answer for as these illustrious dead, and that you may every one receive the sentence—"Well done; good and faithful servants, enter into the joy of your Lord."

I need not say that a crowded audience was deeply affected by this solemn close. Many of them shed tears.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

BOOKS! BOOKS!! BOOKS!!!

EDWIN P. BLY,

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of De Ruyter and the public generally, that he has for sale Books of most kinds and descriptions usually called for in any Book Store. The following are a few, viz:—Davies Geometry, do. Surveying, do. Algebra, do. Arithmetic, do. First Lessons in Arithmetic. Also, almost all kinds of Latin, Greek and Italian, Olney's Geography & Atlas, Burnet's Geography of the Heavens.

Common Schools can be supplied with Books for a Library.

BOOK BINDING

Done in a neat and durable manner, and as cheap as can be done in any other place, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany St., De Ruyter.

De Ruyter, November 1st, 1840. 35tf.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

WANTED—Any quantity of RAGS wanted in exchange for BOOKS, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany-st.

De Ruyter, Dec. 16, 1840.

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

Medicines! Medicines!!

TO FAMILIES.

S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public; for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s

MOTHER'S RELIEF.

JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT—

DR. McMUN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—

MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—

DOCT BISHOP'S ANTI BILLIOUS PILLS.

A HIGHLY VALUABLE FAMILY MEDICINE.

FOUND.

ONE Keg of dried PLUMS, on the Turn-Pike near my house, one and a half miles west of this Village. The owner can have them by calling and paying the expenses of this advertisement which is $1.

3w3. ELIAS BENJAMIN.

De Ruyter March 15, 1841.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

GEO. W. SUTTON.

De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin, H. S. Crandall.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcarn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott—Joel Greene, Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneatelss—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Hopkinton.—Joseph Spicer, jun., P. M.
Westerly.—Jonathan Maxson.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh.—Isaac Titsworth
Salem.— David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield.—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson.—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISCONSIN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,

BY

JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 6.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 58.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, APRIL 9, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

MONTHLY SERMONS,

BY

A VILLAGE PASTOR.

(APRIL, 1841.)

NO. IV.—LARGENESS OF HEART.

I. Kings iv. 29.—And God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding exceeding much, and largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the sea-shore.

The glory of Solomon was great. It was so regarded by his courtiers and by his common subjects. The administrators of contemporary governments were astonished to behold it. The Queen of Sheba found that the half had not been told her. The allusions of Christ to the greatness and glory of Solomon, in his expressions, "A greater than Solomon is here," and, "Solomon in all his glory," will readily occur to every mind.

That was an eventful moment when God said to Solomon, "Ask what I shall give thee." The riches, regal glory, and popular reputation which God bestowed upon Solomon, were of little worth compared with that rich boon of intellectual and moral greatness, which, in direct answer to his own special request, he received from the same inexhaustible source.

It should be carefully noticed that the text says, "And God gave Solomon," &c. The precious gifts were from Him from whom cometh down every good and perfect gift. What did God give Solomon? Wisdom, understanding, and largeness of heart. It is the last mentioned gift to which I solicit your attention—viz:

LARGENESS OF HEART.

What proportion of his intellectual resources the wisdom and understanding of Solomon constituted, or what part of his moral character, I shall not attempt to decide: but I must claim, that by his "largeness of heart," we are to understand chiefly, his elevated and expansive moral feelings of soul, which induced him to make a benevolent use of the wealth, intellectual acumen, knowledge and official power which he possessed.

In discussing this theme, we propose to briefly answer this inquiry, viz;

WHAT DOES LARGENESS OF HEART IMPLY?

I. It implies, Regard to the Claims of JEHOVAH.

The heart is influenced by the character of the objects with which it is conversant. If a man permit little things to occupy his heart continually, his heart becomes so contracted in all its emotions and conceptions, that it appears almost utterly destitute of that expansiveness which we have a right to expect will characterize an immortal being. What largeness of heart can there be in that man who is wholly absorbed by thoughts of himself? Self is his home harbor, his sea, and his port; self is compass, chart, ship, and lading.

But regard to Jehovah's claims opens to the visions of the soul all the grand and sublime truths, and ennobling motives, and holy sympathies in the universe of God.

The instruction which Solomon received from David, exhibits the foundation principle of largeness of heart:—"Thou, Solomon my son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart, and with a willing mind." "Keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and his testimonies." Among mere men of the world there may be a kind of generosity of soul, which on certain occasions may assume the appearance of largeness of heart; but it is nothing more than a specious counterfeit, being fitful—not governed by abiding principle. The heart which is moved by the claims of God, has true greatness; it is such as cannot be successfully counterfeited. The inseparable union and reciprocity of influence between largeness of heart and regard to the claims of Jehovah, are most emphatically expressed by the father of Solomon, in that promissory and petitioning resolve which stands recorded in the 32nd verse of the 119th psalm—"I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge my heart."

Largeness of heart implies,

II. Love to the human family.

The man whose heart is enlarged by divine influence, will not only love God supremely, but his neighbor as himself.—When he inquires, "Who is my neighbor?" The unanimous response to him from ten thousand harmonious voices is—"All thy earthly contemporaries are thy neighbors." His heart is too large to exclude those from this catalogue of neighbors, who are severed at a little distance from him by few dales, rocks and mountains—or who utter their thoughts in a different language from his—or who are found with "a skin not colored like his own." No! He indignantly spurns such entrammeling, and cheerfully extends his hand of human fellowship to all the branches of Adam's numerous, multiform, and far-spreading family.—Where he finds a fellow-being, there he finds an object of his benevolent regard.

III. A relinquishment of self-interest for the public good, is also implied. We ought always to hold our own personal interests and schemes subservient to the public welfare. Our unsanctified nature so clings to self, that to be always ready to do what the public good demands, requires "largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the sea-shore."

Largeness of heart implies,

IV. Benevolent plans for the benefit of mankind.

Nothing is more natural than that the 'liberal soul should devise liberal things.' A heart which yields sweet obedience to the claims of God; which loves the human family; relinquishes self for the public good—such a large heart will form extensive plans for removing the misery, and for augmenting the happiness of mankind.—Such an heart was possessed by Howard, Robert Raikes, Wilberforce, Samuel J. Mills, Henry Martyn, and by many a Daniel and Gideon of whom time will not permit us to speak, but whose praise is in all the churches—whose histories are known and read of all men.

That God who is a God of knowledge, and by whom actions are weighed—who searcheth the heart, has seen, and now seeth, many whose largeness of heart is fully manifested to him, by their fervent desires to build the house of the Lord,—they have the work fully in their hearts, but are not called to occupy such conspicuous stations in the prosecution of the work, as to make their names known on earth. But such shall not lose their reward. Their benevolent plans, which clearly evince the state of their hearts, may be amended, enlarged, perfected, and executed by others; but all these shall share together in the benediction, "Well done, good and faithful servants, enter ye into the joys of your Lord."

REFLECTIONS.

1. We may expect that he who possesses largeness of heart will deeply sympathise with the afflicted, and with the oppressed. For all the suffering he will shed a tear; for them offer a prayer. Nor will he content himself with saying, Be ye fed, be ye clothed, be ye set at liberty; he will do what he can to accomplish these desirable objects. He will arouse others to enlist with him in comforting the afflicted, and in letting the oppressed go free.

2. We infer, that largeness of heart confers happiness on its possessor, renders him useful and beloved while living, and perpetuates his usefulness after he leaves this world.

The man of benevolent heart endures many pangs, because he sees sorrows which he cannot relieve. But he enjoys happiness which is not known to the selfish soul; all whom he cannot relieve he can commend unto the tender care of our Heavenly Father. In doing this, he experiences joys which far exceed the highest joys of the "churl." But when the man of large heart finds his desires granted, what tongue or pen can express his ecstacies! He is useful to all around him. Every one who associates with him, receives some happy influence from him. This influence extends to tens—to thousands—to millions. Such a man lives on earth, after earth encloses his body; he lives by his permanent and extending influence. "He being dead, yet speaketh."

Ages after ages shall call him blessed. The benevolent impulses which he excited in the breasts of others, while he toiled on earth, will exist in heaven, and there they will awake other benevolent emotions, not merely in one heart, but in "ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands" of redeemed, and also of angelic hearts. Thus it is that the holiness and joys of all the inhabitants of heaven, may be eternally augmenting, through the perpetuated influence of one benevolent suggestion that was first cherished on earth.

3. The Gospel is perfectly adapted to promote largeness of heart.

The Gospel contains the most powerful and affecting presentation of Jehovah's claims; love to the human family is one of its fundamental principles—"Peace on earth, and good will to men," being its prominent motto, the relinquishment of self for the good of others, and devising schemes for the benefit of mankind, constitute the very spirit of the Gospel. Hear what Paul says to the Corinthians:—"In all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings, in fastings; By pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, by the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armor of righteousness on the right hand and on the left, by honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report: as deceivers, and yet true; As unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and, behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed; As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, yet possessing all things. O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged." (2 Cor. vi. 4—11.) Let it be remembered, that this man who thus wrote to the Corinthians, was once the persecuting Saul of Tarsus—breathing out threatnings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord. His heart was enlarged, not by philosophy, but by the GOSPEL of our LORD JESUS CHRIST.

DR. CHALMERS says—"Let the testimony of God be simply taken in, that on his own Son he has laid the iniquity of us all—and from that point does the humble scholar of Christianity pass into light, and enlargement, and progressive holiness. On the reception of this great truth, there hinges the emancipation of his heart from a thraldom which represses all the spiritual energies of those who live without hope, and therefore live without God in the world,"

4. Our subject teaches us that a narrow selfish spirit is totally opposed to the spirit of the Gospel.

That many who profess the Gospel, manifest such a spirit, is too well known to be concealed, and too mortifying to be dwelt upon. May the Lord grant them "largeness of heart." The fact that they do not feel their need of this blessing, should engage us to seek it the more earnestly in their behalf.

5. The hearts of each of us need to be enlarged. We are too selfish in our plans; too contracted in our views. We must look at Jehovah's claims—at the wants of the world—at the Cross of CHRIST.

Let us study the map of this desolated world, with the scenes of Sinai and of Calvary to direct our research, and our heart will be enlarged—our mouth will be open to invite sinners to Jesus. Our heart's desire and prayer to God for our fellow-men, will be, that they may be saved. We shall understand the commision, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature": We shall realize that, "The field is THE WORLD"—'the world that lieth in wickedness.'

6. You who continue to reject Christ, must perceive that you manifest the very opposite of largeness of heart. You have public spirit; you have many generous impulses; you may despise meanness of plan, and of dealing; but, while you reject the benevolent Savior, what genuine benevolence have you? None at all. In heaven they have large hearts; in hell, narrow selfish hearts. It is easy to see for which place you now stand candidates.

Religious Department.

NO BRAVERY AT THE JUDGMENT.—Those who have violated the laws of their country, and of their God by the awful crime of murder, have, in some instances, braved the power of the tribunals that have brought them to answer for their transgression. And even when the sentence of death has been pronounced upon the prisoner, found guilty of a crime, the penalty of which is the forfeiture of life, it has been received with apparent indifference, altho' spectators have been convulsed at the solemnity of the scene, while realizing the consequences of sin and the stern demand of justice. And then when the same guilty individuals have been conducted to the place of execution, with a heart apparently as hard as adamant, and nerves like iron, and a brow set like brass, they have met their fate with that bravery and apparent haughtiness of spirit, that seemed to bid contempt to the claims of justice. But will such appear in this manner when arraigned at the judgment seat of Christ? Will sinners generally be able to appear with fortitude before that God whose just laws they have trampled in the dust? No, they will be filled with shame and everlasting confusion. Then, sinner, repent now, lest thou soon realize the sentence, "Depart ye cursed," and thy guilty soul experience all the horrors of that death that never dies.—Morning Star.

EFFECTS OF FAITH.—The effect of strong faith in the righteousness of Christ, is honorable to the grace, holiness and truth of God; in raising the believer above fear, above guilt, above the love of sin, the love of the world, the fear of death and judgment. He tries to doubt, and can not,—Grace reigns. He looks to the law, his sins, his duties, his heart; and Christ hath the pre-eminence in justifying him. He tries to fear—he would suspect himself—he would think the blessing too great; but grace prevails. The blood and righteousness of Christ overcome, and he overcomes by them. He asks, "what shall I say to these things?" Less than this would leave me in condemnation; more I can not enjoy. It exactly meets my condition; and is worthy the love, the wisdom, the justice and truth of God. If true, it is all I need; if false, I am still miserable; but if the word of God decide, it is full of grace and truth; and I am filled with peace. A soul enjoying its justification, is spiritual in devotion, grateful for mercies, patient in tribulation, resigned under bereavements, zealous for the purity of the gospel, diligent in promoting its reception, affectionate to Christ and his people. In such a soul, the doctrine of justification is full of the power, and increase of God, in humility, purity, joyful hope and admiration of the work of the Savior, the operation of the spirit, and the reign of grace in the Father. The rich, in the enjoyment of this blessing, are secured from the snares of prosperity; doubly happy in their temporal blessings, and liberal to the church. The poor believer, exalted in the righteousness of Christ, enjoys his little earthly good with contentment, submission and gratitude; and becomes a blessing to his family, an example to the church, and faithful in his duties. It sanctifies his temper, fortifies him for trials, secures the improvement of his time, and renders his whole conversation becoming the gospel.—Cooke.

THE BIBLE.—As far as our species are concerned, we may say, one sun! one Bible! Shut that glorious book, blot from the human memory what we have learned from its pages, and you quench the day-spring. The whole world lieth in darkness! To guilty, miserable man, there remains no Savior! no heaven! no guide in life! no support in affliction! no victory over death! The grave becomes a fathomable abyss, and eternity spreads around him like the ocean—dark, illimitable, fearful! But open now again that book, and lo, the sun of righteousness arises with healing in his wings; and all around us, and above us, is love, joy and hope.—Watchman of the South.

TAKE UP YOUR CROSS.—No man hath a velvet cross. The cross is made of what God will have it; yet I dare not say, O that I had liberty to sell Christ's cross! I should also sell with it, comfort, sense of love, patience, and the kind visits of the Redeemer. I have but small experience of suffering for Christ, but I find soul-delighting visits of Christ, in suffering for him and his truth. Grace tried is better than grace: it is glory in its infancy. Who knows the truth of grace without a trial? How soon would faith freeze without a cross? Therefore, bear your cross with joy.—Flavel.

A learned clergyman, in Maine, was accosted in the following manner, by an illiterate preacher who despised education:—"Sir, you have been to College, I suppose?" "Yes sir," was the reply. "I am thankful," rejoined the former, "that the Lord has opened my mouth to preach without any learning." "A similar event," replied the latter, "took place in Balaam's time, but such things are of rare occurrence at the present day."—N. Y. Observer.

From the Morning Star.

BE SHORT.—The writer would inquire, if it would not be well to place the above short sentence in some conspicuous place in every house where public worship is performed? Our blessed Savior was always short in his instructions, admonitions, exhortations, and prayers, as the same are recorded by his apostles. But it is not so with many of his professed followers.—These appear in this particular to have never known, or to have forgotten the example of their Master whom they profess to love, follow and imitate. J. H. H.

Moral Reform Department.

From the Friend of Virtue.

ADVANTAGES OF MORAL REFORM SOCIETIES.

It has frequently been asked, and sometimes tauntingly asked, "What good results from Moral Reform Societies?" We could almost say, in reply, "much, every way." But to name a few particulars. We believe that Moral Reform Societies throw a restraint on profligate youth. Let a licentious young man enter a village, where the mothers, the sisters and the daughters, have formed themselves into a Moral Reform Society, and will he not feel under restraint? Will he not either reform or make his escape? Rather than come in contact with an influence so irresistible, will he not fear, and quake, and hide himself?

Besides, Moral Reform Societies have a happy influence on the minds of children. Their tendency is to lead them to realize the guilt and extent of the evils of licentiousness, to feel their danger, and to watch and strive against this easily besetting sin—to feel the infinite, the unspeakable importance of keeping their hold on virtue. Had these societies been in existence years ago, we believe that many a mother would have been saved the heart-rending agony of weeping over their once promising, but now ruined and fallen daughters—of agonizing over the blighting influence of licentiousness, of seeing their hopes blasted, their fond expectations withered, and every prospect of the usefulness, the comfort, the reputation of their children, cut down as with the hand of death.

Moral Reform Societies lead to a knowledge of the sin of licentiousness. We all have items of knowledge in relation to this subject, and by meeting together and communicating what we know, the amount of information may be considerable. Thus, by gaining information, by being made acquainted with the extent of the evil, we may be induced to feel our personal responsibilities, to feel the importance of making efforts to suppress this evil—may go to work and labor efficiently in the cause of Moral Purity.

But many will say, I have nothing to do with this subject, I am innocent, and my connections and friends are innocent. But soon, full soon, have some of these objectors found, in their own families, those who had joined the ranks in their road to ruin, and were rapidly approaching the vortex of death. But even if our friends are free from sin, and if we are free from it ourselves, are we not bound to do all we can for its suppression? Paul says, "I am debtor both to the Greek and the Barbarian, both to the wise and unwise." And are we not debtors also? Are we not bound to do all we can?—to make efforts for the suppression of every vice, whether we, ourselves, and our friends and connections are guilty of it or not?

Moral Reform Societies lead us to see the holiness and purity of God's law, in relation to the subject of the seventh commandment, and the fearful consequences of neglecting to enforce it. God has said, in relation to the commandments, not excepting the seventh, "Thou shalt teach these things diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in the house, when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." By uniting with Moral Reform Societies, by meeting and conversing on the subject, shall we not see and feel that this command is holy, and that it is a fearful thing, either to violate it, or to neglect to enforce it?

By uniting with Moral Reform Societies we more sensibly realize the danger to which youth are exposed. As the members, from time to time, speak of the wiles and snares, laid to entrap the unwary, as cases of profligacy and seduction are mentioned, as that wide-wasting scourge, Solitary Vice, is brought before them, will they not have a more realizing sense of the dangers to which youth are exposed, and will they not be stimulated to make corresponding efforts?

We believe that Moral Reform Societies are eminently calculated to induce a spirit of prayer in relation to this subject. Would we pray acceptably, we must understand what we are praying about, must feel the importance of the subject, and must feel deeply interested relative to the answer of our prayers. Would our prayers avail for the influences of the Spirit, if we did not feel the need of that Spirit? Would they avail for the salvation of perishing sinners, if we did not in some degree, realize the worth of the soul? and will they avail for the suppression of the sin of licentiousness, if we do not, in some measure, realize the extent and guilt of this sin? Whatever else may be done, we believe this wide-spreading desolation will never be stayed without a great deal of prayer.—How prevalent, how potent is prayer! In answer to the prayers of Moses, the bitter waters were made sweet, the flinty rock was turned into a stream, the plague was stayed in the midst of the whole congregation, and the whole nation of Israel was saved from impending ruin. But time would fail us to speak of Abraham, and Jacob, and Samuel, and Asa, and Daniel, and Nehemiah, and multitudes of others, who prayed like Jacob, and prevailed like Israel. The dispensations of providence, from the Christian era down to the present time, evince, that God is a prayer-hearing God. Even in our own country, volumes of facts might be cited which evince plainly the same great truth. And, as by uniting with Moral Reform Societies, we know more about the extent of the sin of licentiousness, the awful guilt of this sin, and the danger to which youth are exposed, shall we not feel the importance of prayer in relation to the subject—of looking to God for wisdom to direct us in this important enterprise? And here, where not only two or three are agreed as touching this thing, but where numbers are agreed, shall not their united prayers enter into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth? and shall not a blessing descend and rest on the efforts made for the advancement of this cause? Let us therefore pray for those laboring in this cause. Let us pray for those who are exposed to temptation. Let us pray for guardians, and parents, and ministers, and teachers, and let us believe that a blessing will descend in answer to our prayers. Let us, therefore, unite with Moral Reform Societies. Let us remember, that by this means, we may pray more understandingly, more believingly, and more fervently, and that our prayers may avail much for the suppression of this desolating scourge.

Minister's Department.

ENTERTAINMENT OF THE PASTOR.

Some of his kind and worthy parishioners are thrown into an extraordiaary excitement by his arrival. Perhaps it is specially convenient for him to accept their invitation to tea. Instead of their making the most of his visit, and getting as much good as possible from it, as he desires, the kind housewife thinks she must make the most of her powers in providing a suitable repast. She must leave the common track. The good things of the ordinary meal must sink, pro tempore, into oblivion.

"The Minister's come;" is an alarm that flies through all the domestic realms, and whatever there is in them that is rare and precious, or that can be made so by an anxious care of cookery, must be forthcoming. The pastor finds that those he came to visit have vanished, and the wherefore he ascertains by various domestic flourishes. In the solitude to which he is left, he can ruminate upon the bustle and anxiety that so small an affair as his taking a cup of tea with them has excited in the household.—They are so intent upon his reaping of their carnal things, that there is no time or opportunity for their reaping of his spiritual things. They do not seem to understand it so, but their movements give the ungracious intimation that the pastor has called on them for the purpose of getting a good stuffing, and they must do that thing to the very best of their ability. There are, in consequence, noble exploits of housewifery. The various treasures or newly created niceties are served up with the greatest care. The table is presided over with evident anxiety that all should be well, and when the scene closes, the kind matron has the appearance of one that has stood at the helm in a hurricane, rather than one who had been quietly and profitably enjoying a visit of the pastor.

Now we protest against the raising of such a breeze. The pastor did not call for the purpose of peeping into the pantry, or to ascertain how much skill madam had in the mysteries of cookery. He has lost the object of his visit, if he must lose those he visits in the din and bustle of domestic manœuvres. If it is convenient that he tarry at a meal, treat him with frank hospitality. Make him welcome to the common fare of the household. Give him not the pain of seeing that he has turned the domestic world upside down by his visit. Let him know that he has not caused the members of the family to flee in all directions for the purpose of providing him with dainties. This is a grief to a serious and faithful pastor. It is a waste of time on both sides. It hinders the pastor in his work. And the result will be that rather than produce such an excitement in your dwelling, he will cross some other threshold, where hospitality will be known not to produce such a harvest of domestic care and labor.

A HINT TO MINISTERS.

GREATNESS AND GOODNESS.—Would you be a useful minister strive rather to be good than great. Keep down great I, for he will be found a troublesome guest, and one that will throw an insurmountable barrier in the way of yourself and your usefulness to the souls of your fellow-men.—The inquiry is often made: why am I not more useful? May it not be that self has too much to do in all that is done for Christ? Is he not often first in thy study, in the choice of a text, in the structure of thy thoughts, in the pastoral visit, in the sacred desk, and in all thy communications with thy fellow men. There is an attempt to do and be something, which smells so rank of self as to put thy Savior in the shade, and thereby to destroy thy usefulness. Self should be in the dust, and Christ should be "all in all."

Dr. Payson seems to have touched the string, when writing to a young clergyman, he says:—"Some time since, I took up a little work purporting to be the lives of sundry characters, as related by themselves. Two of those characters agreed in saying, that they were never happy until they had ceased striving to be great men. This remark struck me, as you know the most simple remarks will strike us, when heaven pleases. It occurred to me at once, that most of my sorrows and sufferings were occasioned by an unwillingness to be the nothing which I am, and by consequent struggles to be something. I saw if I would but cease struggling, and consent to be anything, or nothing, just as God pleases, I might be happy: you will think it strange that I mention this as a new discovery. In one sense, it was not new—I have known it for years. But I now saw it in a new light. My heart saw it, and consented to it: and I am comparatively happy. My dear brother, if you can give up all desire to be great, and feel heartily willing to be nothing, you will be happy too."

Ah! is there not experience touched here that will be profitable to thyself, if heartily consented to, and practised? It was a lovely trait in thy Savior that "he went about doing good." Let then your highest aim be, to imitate him who lived thy example, as well as died thy sacrifice. Be good rather than great.—Miss. of G. R. Church.

PRAYER AND SIN.—He who prays as he ought, will endeavor to live as he prays. Proverbs 15: 8. He who can live in sin and abide in the ordinary duties of prayer, never prays as he ought.—Cecil.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, April 9, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

Brotherly Love.

"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar."

All genuine religion is founded on the immutable principle of love; this being the soul and essence of all that is excellent in morals, or valuable in Christianity. God is love. All his treatment to his creatures is tempered with love. The sum of all that he requires of them is love. First, love to God, and next to man. This is the amount of all that is required in that perfect law, written by the finger of God on tables of stone, adapted to all circumstances of all men.

This principle will not admit of division or addition. It is fully comprehended in loving what God loves, and hating what he hates. If a man loves what God hates, he transcends the limits which God has prescribed. Thus, to love sin in any of its forms, is to be destitute of the spirit and power of religion, and by consequence lose the favor of God. To hate what God loves, likewise gives evidence of an ignorance of the nature of Christian religion. We conclude, then, that to love God with all the heart, and consequently all his requirements; and to love the people of God, as the Savior commands, and also to love all men, is the best possible evidence of acceptance with God, and fellowship with his Son Jesus Christ.

Love to God and his children is inseperable. The one cannot exist without the other. "And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother also." And again, "By this we know that we love the children of God when we love God, and keep his commandments." Love to the children of God is dependent on love to God; and this is evidenced by loving the way of God and the institutions of his gospel. If we say we have perfect love to God and love not what he has commanded us to do, and love not his people, we deceive ourselves.

This principle affords us the only infallible test, by which to try ourselves, and learn the true state of our hearts in the sight of God. If our religion will not stand this test, it surely will not stand in the day that shall try the secret of all hearts, since we are assured that by this rule we shall be judged---be justified or condemned. The Savior will acknowledge whatever is done to his children, is done to himself. Hear his language while he was teaching on earth; "For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger and ye took me not in; naked, & ye clothed me not; sick and in prison and ye visited me not." And to the inquiry when these things occurred, he answers, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not unto me."

When love to God exists, then will love to men also exist, and it will manifest itself by every consistent effort for the well-being of those who are the objects of it. Whereas a contrary feeling will result in the exercise of ill will, and in a disposition to inflict rather than to repair an injury. 'Love worketh no ill to his neighbor,' and no ill will or desire for the mastery dwells in the hearts of those under the influence of the benevolence of the gospel. Love prompts to the exercise of Christian charity to all the errors that a brother may be guilty of. Hatred will give the worst construction to all acts that it is possible for them to bear. Love will call into exercise every consistent effort to reclaim a wanderer, and will labor to restore him in the spirit of meekness, and is never ready to impugn the motives of those who have imbibed error or fallen into sin. It will seek to strengthen the waivering, confirm the feeble, assist the needy, administer the consolations of the gospel to those ready to perish. It will labor to strengthen the union that exists between brethren, and build up the waste places in Zion.

An Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ says: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world."—He who has the Son of God in his heart feels that all men are his brethren, and his brotherly love embraces them all, and his good wishes and benevolence extend to all who can in way be effected any by his influence. He acknowledges the "world as his field," and feels an unabating sympathy to all who in any way are the subjects of misfortune or cruelty. The christian's feelings for those who are out of Christ are similar to those exercised by the Savior himself, and he is not satisfied till he sees them in the full enjoyment of all that the gospel offers.

We ask those who make high pretensions to religion, how are your hearts affected towards the saints of God? Does any difference of opinion mar your love for them? Does any error in their conduct excite any other feelings than sympathy, and a desire in all meekness to reclaim them? Does any injury that you may have received, or supposed to have received from them, cause you to exercise resentment or revenge?---O, remember, that when the Savior was reviled, he reviled not again.

Sermons by a Village Pastor,

We bespeak for the Monthly Sermons an attentive reading; not because they are labored, or far-fetched, or have any other thing to recommend them than the doctrinal and practical truths contained therein.—The Sermons are not the labored productions of an aged divine, but are the same sermons that are preached by a young minister in the course of his Pastoral labors. There are, doubtless, many of our readers who are not favored with the preaching of the word, to whom these sermons are very acceptable. The devoted ministers of Christ feel it their duty 'to be instant in season and out of season,' that they may win souls to Christ, We trust truths faithfully spread before the mind, from the pulpit or religious print, will have their sanctified effect in bringing souls to God. We, therefore, feel much pleasure in spreading out the Monthly Sermons to our readers.

By the way, we would suggest to those who wish the triumph of the truth, whether it is not possible by a judicious and well written exhibition of the truths of the Gospel, to open the eyes of many to a sense of their lost condition. "A word fitly spoken how good it is"!

A Reflection.

The winter is past. Nature is throwing off her sombre appearance, and will soon deck herself in her loveliest hues. The earth, air, and seas, begin to show signs of animated existence. These all show the handiwork of God, and speak forth his praise. A thousand voices mingle themselves together in saying, "the hand that made us is divine," while nature, in every class, exhibits most worthy praise to God the author of all good.

Awake! O careless sinner! Awake cold-hearted professor, and add another voice to the chorus that is raising higher and still higher the praises of God and the Lamb! A long night of darkness and death has shrouded you in gloom. The chilling winds and storms of iniquity have benumbed and almost destroyed your deathless spirits. Awake! arise! and throw off the chains that bind you to earth, and its fanciful and treacherous scenes. Put on the garments of praise. Lay aside base and sinful things, and join with nature, animate and inanimate, in now swelling the song of gratitude and praise which is due to the great Author of all comfort and blessing, and who now invites you to prepare yourself to sing with saints and glorified spirits in heaven.

Monthly Concert.

Is the Monthly Concert faithfully attended in all our churches? A few years since, we remember the attention of almost every member was directed to the great objects which the Monthly Concert was intended to advance. It was sweet, then, to meet at the concert, and with united heart and voice present the condition of the destitute. The expression on every countenance was indicative of tender, but strong emotions of the heart; and it was not difficult to decypher in many a countenance, the wish, O, that I might be of service in gathering in the outcasts of Israel, and the dispersed of Judah! "Here am I Lord, send me." Do those same emotions possess the heart now? Is the concert-room thronged now? Is there those who long to see the triumph of truth, and are eager to present their requests to God, and bestow their contributions to advance the work? If it is not so, we suggest the propriety of commencing again, and pursuing the object until it shall be accomplished. That these objects will be accomplished, and that the united prayers and contributions of the saints of God will hasten their accomplishment, we are fully assured. The veracity of the Eternal God is pledged. The honor of his Son, the well-being of souls for whom Christ died, is connected with it. And may we not add, that those are culpable whose hearts do not yearn over the perishing millions that are out of Christ, and who do not exercise the benevolence of the Gospel, and are by their prayers and contributions in the extension of truth.

CAUTION.—We caution all respectable persons to beware of those who will take advantage of a Deaf, or Dumb man. We should be unwilling to believe that any person possessed such corruption of heart, were it not true that such treatment has been exercised to a person in our employ.

De Ruyter Institute.

The Winter Term closed this week. The examination was creditable to Teachers and Scholars.

The Summer Term will open on the 7th of May next. We a[illegible]d that an addition is to be made this Spring to the Chemical Apparatus, preparatory to the Summer Lectures on Chemistry by Doct. A. L. SAUNDERS.

Miss MARY SEVERANCE will take the place of Mrs. Carpenter in the Female Department. Her experience and reputation as a Teacher, gives the Trustees the fullest assurance that she is in every respect qualified to take charge of that Department.—Arrangements are also made to supply the place of Mr. Carpenter, and teachers well qualified for every Department of study will be ready to commence with the Term.

Discontinuances.

We remark, again, that we do not complain of any man for discontinuing the Register, but we must insist upon our published rules, viz:—not to discontinue our paper till arrearages are paid. Our subscribers cannot fail to see the propriety of this course, from the fact that it would be next to an impossibility to continue the publication of the Register, were not this rule adopted.

Revival in Salem, N. J.

Br. I. D. Titsworth informs us that the work of the Lord is manifest in converting sinners in the bounds of the Salem Church. Three had followed their Lord and Master into the watery grave. Others are expected to follow soon. The work is a progressive one, and we join in the wish of our brother that "it might progress and spread from heart to heart, and from church to church, until it shall reach all the churches in our denomination."

Integrity and Renown.

The young man who firmly adheres to the dictates of conscience by making it the rule of action in all cases whatsoever, places himself upon the proud eminence of INTEGRITY, where the impassioned multitude, tho' they for a season envy his calmness, will, upon the sober second thought of minds refreshed from the tree of knowledge, strive to excel each other in paying tribute to his worth. VIRTUE IS THE SURE PATH TO RENOWN. L.

Will the Editor of the Register oblige a brother by making an enquiry through the medium of his paper, for the several S. D. Baptist Settlements in the Western States & Territories? Please give the answers an insertion, as said brother has an inclination to make a tour to the "far West," and designs visiting all those settlements which he can find. P.

We here insert such information relative to the location of S. D. Baptists in the West as we have on hand, and request others who may have further information to furnish it for the Register. In some of these places are single individuals; in others several families.

Kingsville, Ashtabula Co.,	Ohio.
Perry, Lake Co.,	"
Newport, Washington, Co.,	"
New Concord, Muskingum Co.,	"
Butlerville, Warren Co.,	"
Farfield, Greene Co.,	"
Northampton, Clark Co.,	"
Quincy, Logan Co.,	"
Port Jefferson, Shelby Co.,	"
Jackson, "	"
Bloomfield, Pickaway Co.,	"
Tallmadge,	Michigan.
Oporto,	"
Marshall,	"
Fontana, Woolworth Co.,	Wisconsin.
Milton, Rock Co.,	"
Cuba, Fulton Co.,	Illinois.
Trivolia, Peoria Co.,	"
Udina, Kane Co.,	"
Kankakee, Laporte Co.,	Indiana.

Notice to the Citizens of De Ruyter.

A meeting of the citizens of De Ruyter generally is requested at the Seventh-day Baptist Meeting-House, on TUESDAY, the 13th inst., at 2 o'clock, P. M., for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of opening a new BURYING-PLACE, which is now offered on the land immediately in the rear of that place The different Religious Societies are requested to participate in the arrangement, if they think proper, as the lot will accommodate them as Societies or as individuals.

It is a fact well known that the public Burying-ground in this village is small, and cannot be extended to any advantage, and is now nearly filled up. This will make the opening of a new one absolutely necessary soon; and the proposed spot is so eligible, and the soil so suitable, that a better opportunity, it is thought, will not soon occur.

The ground is laid out in lots of convenient size for families or Societies, at a price that will assure the public that a speculation has not been the object. If this meeting shall determine to open the ground, it will be done immediately. If the present opportunity is not improved, the proposition will be abandoned.

April 6, 1841.

Controversial Papers.

For the Register.
WEEDSPORT, CAYUGA CO.,
March 28, 1841.

MR. EDITOR.—I noticed in the Register of March 19, with gratitude, a declaration of your willingness that "the subject of Unitarianism should be discussed in your columns." Also, the proposition of Br. Joseph R. Johnson to reply to me, "if I will mention some reasons why I regard it inconsistent for me as a conscientious believer in the proper unity of God, to embrace also the doctrine of the Trinity."

I am gratified with these communications, not for the sake of arguing, or the display of talent, or the love of controversy; nor because I would strive for the mastery, or carry any point which I have adopted, if not agreeable to the word of God: but because I regard the subject in question as one of the most important of all subjects, and because I believe a fair and thorough discussion will be advantageous to the cause of truth and Christian union. Much, indeed, has been written and published already; but this is no argument against further investigation. So long as Christians remain divided, continued efforts of this kind will be required. I am gratified also, at unexpectedly finding so much liberality in the conducting of the Register. I do not, however, regard this as evidence of indecision upon the point at issue on the part of the Editor: but only as evidence of a willingness to have every doctrine thoroughly tested, and to allow to others of different views the liberty of speaking for themselves. This, in my opinion, is as it should be. The increased willingness of Christians, which, at present, prevails, to canvass the points of difference among them, augurs much for the furtherance of the Gospel and the introduction of the period when "the watchman shall see eye to eye."

When I speak of "the proper unity of God," I do not mean to be understood to impute to Trinitarians the denial of God's unity. In their sense of the term, they stedfastly maintain it. But to Unitarians a belief in the proper unity of God seems utterly inconsistent with a belief in a Trinity of co-equal persons. It will be incumbent on me to show reasons why I regard the latter position inconsistent with the former: which I shall endeavor to do with plainness and candor, and with as much expedition as shall be practicable. And I doubt not that the reply of the above-named Brother will be conducted in a similar manner. I trust we shall mutually avoid any thing personal, or unkind, and every thing which will tend to give just offense to our brethren. To write for the public perusal is a serious matter, and ought to be undertaken with a deep and prayerful conviction of supreme accountability to God, and under a proper sense of a correspondent accountability to the church.

It will only be necessary further to premise that it is considered as a conceded point that this controversy is to be decided by the Scriptures. My brother will not allege that the Trinity is a doctrine of natural religion; but will maintain that it is of revealed religion. On the ground, therefore, of Scripture evidence I shall be free and happy to meet him. "To the law and to the testimony," let this solemn and momentous subject be referred.

In my next, the Lord permitting, I shall proceed to develop the reasons which are demanded by the nature of the subject.

Yours truly,
JABEZ CHADWICK.

P. S. I have just removed my family from Union Springs to this place, viz,—Weedsport, Cayuga Co., where I expect to remain. You will, therefore, be careful to direct the Register accordingly. Other friends will please address me here.

J. C.

News of the Day.

Message of Governor Seward,

Transmitting Resolutions of the Legislature of Mississippi, and other papers, in relation to the controversy between Virginia and New-York.

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, Albany, March 20, 1841.

To the Legislature:

I transmit resolutions of the Legislature of Mississippi, concerning the decision of the Executive of this State declining to comply with a requisition made by the Lieutenant Governor of Virginia, in 1839, for the surrender of certain persons represented to be fugitives from justice, charged with the constructive offence of stealing a negro slave. I avail myself of the occasion to lay before the Legislature certain other proceedings affecting the same question.

On the 24th of February last, I issued a requisition to the Executive of Virginia for the surrender of Robert F. Curry, a fugitive from justice, charged with an aggravated crime of forgery. His Excellency, the Governor of Virginia, admits the regularity of the requisition & acknowledges that the fugitive has been arrested and is in actual custody in that Commonwealth upon the charge contained in the requisition. Nevertheless, he deems it proper to make his compliance with the requisition dependant upon a reversal of the decision heretofore made by the Executive of this State in the case before referred to, and to detain the fugitive in custody six months to afford time to the Executive of this State to reconsider that subject. By the documents transmitted, it will be seen that I have deemed it my duty, under these extraordinary circumstances, to inform the Governor of Virginia without delay, that the decision in the question cannot be reversed.

It appears from the public prints, and is undoubtedly true that an act has been passed by the Legislature of Virginia, designed to subject vessels owned or navigated by citizens of this State and departing from Virginia, to inspections, and attempting to impose onerous and offensive restrictions upon citizens of this State carrying on commerce with the State of Virginia. It is understood to be among the provisions of this law, that it shall take effect after the first day of May 1842; but that his Excellency the Governor of that Commonwealth, may suspend the operation until the end of the succeeding session of the Legislature of Virginia, whenever he shall be officially informed that the Executive of New-York has consented to surrender the supposed fugitives before mentioned, and that the law of the State of New-York, passed May 6th, 1840 entitled "An act to extend the right of trial by jury," has been repealed. A full copy of said act of the Legislature of New-York, as contained in the public prints, is herewith laid before you.

It will belong to the Legislature to decide whether the law that seems to have given offences to the Legislature of Virginia shall be repealed; but I trust it will not be deemed improper for me to state, that although I supposed the trial by jury was already effectually secured to persons claimed as fugitive slaves without the passage of the act in question, and therfore believed it unnecessary, yet I cheerfully deferred in that respect to the better judgement of the Legislature, and approved the law, the repeal of which is thus demanded; in my judgement, the law could not now be repealed, and especially under the singular circumstances presented, without raising a presumption that the Legislature intended to deprive our own citizens, or other persons claimed as fugitive slaves, of the right of trial by jury. Believing that the right is invaluable as a protection to personal liberty, is peculiarly proper in cases where persons are exposed to the loss of liberty without even a charge of crime, and that it is important to every human being within our jurisdiction, in proportion to the humbleness and defencelessness of his condition, I cannot recommend the repeal of the act. If it became my place to speculate concerning the probabilities of legislative action, and if I supposed it possible, which I certainly do not that any disposition existed in the Legislature to repeal the act, I should deem it my duty to remonstrate against the measure.

Unwilling to leave any ground or expectation in regard to the Executive of this State, that convictions of duty which have prevailed, notwithstanding the very elaborate arguments presented by the Executive and Legislature of Virginia can be removed by any injurious measures adopted by that State, I deem it proper to repeat in the most solemn manner, that the humble individuals who are pursued by the Governor of Virginia as felons for the offence of being seamen on board a ship in which a negro secreted himself in order to escape from slavery, if they yet remain in this State, are under the protection of its constitution and laws, and cannot be surrendered to the State of Virginia by Executive authority, on the pretence set up for that purpose, without a deliberate violation of both, and that this conviction, adopted after most mature and impartial deliberation, and srengthened by subsequent reflection, is in no degree affected by the recent proceedings & authorities of Virginia.

Without intending any disrespect to the State of Virginia, and cheerfully leaving its authorities to adopt all such proceedings as may seem to them right and proper in regard to the subject, I avail myself of the occasion to declare that measures of retaliation, injury and reprizal, are deemed equally unworthy the dignity of this State, and inconsistent with its federal relations. The Executive of this State, therefore, will not, although such a course has the sanction of the example of his Excellency the Governor of Virginia; offer large rewards to induce persons to seize within the jurisdiction and in violation of the laws of Virginia, fugitives from the justice of this State, requisitions for whose delivery to the authorities of this State have been denied by the Executive of Virginia, but will be content to put forth the legal powers with which he is entrusted.

The Executive of this State will not appeal to the supposed interests and sympathies in other States, and attempt to combine one portion of the Union against another, but will cheerfully abide for his cause the test of time and free investigation. The constitutional demands of the Executive of Virginia upon the Executive of this State will in all cases be allowed as fully as if the Governor of Virginia has met his own obligations in the same manner, nor will measures of retaliatory legislation be recommended. On the contrary, the Executive of this State confiding in the Constitution and laws of the United States, as affording ample remedies for any injuries the citizens of this State may suffer from unconstitutional proceedings on the part of the State of Virginia, is satisfied that it may be safely left to the magnanimity of Virginia, and her own experience of the injurious consequences of those proceedings to secure an early relinquishment of them and a due acknowledgment and performance of all her constituted obligations.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

President Harrison was taken suddenly ill on Saturday evening last and for a time threatened with severe and protracted if not dangerous indisposition. (His disease is entitled by the doctors Pneumonia.) On Tuesday evening, however, the virulence of the disorder had been almost entirely subdued, and sanguine expectations were entertained of his speedy recovery.—New-Yorker.

New-York and Virginia.—We understand that on Monday last, the day after the duties of Governor devolved on him as Lieutenant Governor, Mr. Patton issued his warrant for the surrender of Robert F. Curry, the fugitive from justice from New-York, in compliance with the demand made by the Gov. of New-York. He had previously in his capacity of Councillor, advised the surrender when the subject was submitted to the Council for their advice by Governor Gilmer. His own sense of duty therefore, required of him to pursue the course he has so promptly taken. He has, we understand, enclosed the warrant to Governor Seward in a brief letter, containing a strong and decided remonstrance against the conduct of the Governor and Legislature of New-York as to fugitives from justice, and fugitive slaves, with an earnest but respectful appeal to them to arrest the unhappy and dangerous collissions which must ensue from a perseverance in their assaults upon the rights of the State of Virginia and the other Southern States.—Richmond Whig.

California Expeditions.—At a late meeting in Independence, Jackson county, fifty-eight persons nineteen of whom will take their families with them, registered their names as members of the expedition which is to leave this spring for Upper California. Persons intending to migrate, are recommended to meet at Sapling Grove on the Old Santa Fe route, on the 10th of May next; where officers will be elected. Various resolutions for the safety, comfort and good government of those engaged in the enterprise, were adopted; and we observe a specific resolve that no person will be allowed to take any spirituous liquors, except for medical purposes, the quantity to be determined at the general meeting at the rendezvous. A cannon has been presented to the company, and it is to be mounted and made ready for service—Salt River (Mo.) Journal.

Shocking Calamity.--In North Stonington, on the night of Friday, the 5th instant, two sons of Mr. George Geer were burnt to death. They went out about 10 o'cock, P. M., as usual, to watch a coal pit, and not returning at the usual time in the morning, another little son of Mr. Geer was sent for them. He came running to the house saying, they were burnt to death. The father immediately started for the pit, and a few of the bones were found where the cabin had been situated. One of them was aged 19, and the other 11 years.—Norwich Aurora.

A Shower of Ashes.—The last number of Silliman's Journal contains the following memorandum, handed in by Rev. Peter Parker, M. D., who was a passenger in the ship Niantic, from Canton, for New-York.

"Ship Nantic, L. F. Doty, master, April 5th, 1840, being in lat. 7 deg 5 min. north, lon. 121 deg. 10 min. east, at 2h. A. M., sixty miles west from Mindanao, one of the Phillipine islands, came up a fine breeze from the northeast, which was attended with a shower of dust, resembling that of ashes. It came so thick that it obscured the moon and stars, which were all out very clear before; it filled the sailor's eyes so full that they were obliged to retreat from the deck below; it lasted about one hour, and cleared away. At daylight, the Niantic looked like an old furnace, completely covered, from the royal mast head down to the water's edge. The decks I should judge were one quarter of an inch thick with the ashes; we took up one half bushel, and might have saved three or four.—It fell in small quantities at different times, for two or three days after. On the 14th April, spoke the English banque Margaret, Whaler; reported likewise on the 5th of April had a similar shower of ashes, being at the time three hundred miles north-northeast of us; he informed me that on the 12th of April, he visited several villages on the island of Madura, entirely deserted by the people, from one of which he had taken two brass cannon, and several other articles. This led us to think that some volcanic eruption had lately happened in that neighborhood. After the 9th, perceived no more in proceeding northward."

Privilege of the Ladies in Leap Year.—In an ancient Anglo-Saxon law, which still remains in force, it is enacted: "Albeit as often as Leape Yeare dothe occurre, the woman holdeth prerogative over the menne, in matter of courtshippe, love, and matrimonie; soe that when the ladie proposeth, it shall not be lawful for menne to say her nae; but she shall receive the propoll in all good courtesie.

Anti-Rent Meeting.—The Schoharie Patriot of Tuesday has the following item of news:

"A meeting of about three hundred of the tenants on Livingston's patent, in this county, assembled at Livingstonville on Saturday last, and unanimously resolved not to pay any more rent. We believe it is contended by the tenants that there is some defect in the landlord's title."

The United States and Great Britain.—The Madisonian asserts that the official advices from England by the late steamer are entirely pacific in their tone and character.

The duelling mania seems to prevail. Judge Smith of the Supreme Court of Illinois, and Mr. McClernand Secretary of State, went out at Alton on the 4th inst., to fight a duel with rifles—but were arrested on the way.

Alcoholic drinks have been reduced, the last year, in Ireland, 3,500,000 gallons; and the te-totalers now number 3,300,000.

American Copper.—A late number of the Wisconsin Enquirer says, that Messrs. W. Alford and P. W. Thomas, of New Baltimore, in that territory, have met with complete success in their experiments on smelting copper ore. They constructed a very simple furnace, which cost only ten dollars, in which they smelted, on the 28th of September last, 2508 lbs. of ore, from which they obtained nearly 700 lbs. of good pig copper, pronounced by competent judges to be superior to the South American pig copper. The time occupied in procuring from the ore the above amount of copper was only nine hours. Neither Mr. Alford nor Mr. Thomas had any experience in the business of smelting, and the result is justly deemed a matter of great consequence to that territory, which abounds in rich copper ore.

The Freshet at the South.—We learn from L. O. Reynolds, Esq., engineer-in-chief, who was in Macon at the time of the flood, that it did immense damage to the planters in the vicinity, of the Oconee, Ocmulgee, and Ogechee rivers. On Commissioners' Creek, ten mills have been carried away. Many other mills on other streams have been swept off. Numbers of cattle have been drowned. On one island in the Oconee 700 head of cattle were destroyed, and several persons have lost 100 head. Valuable lands on the rivers have been much impaired in value, if not totally destroyed, by the washing of sand over the surface.—Savannah Georgian.

Singular Robbery.—On the 16th inst., a gentleman residing at Covington, Ky., being in Cincinnati, went to the river, and called for a ferry boat to take him across. Two men approached in a skiff—he got in, and after arriving in the middle of the river, they turned down stream—robbed him of his watch, money, &c., and landed him on the same side from which he started, about five miles below.

The Slave Trade.—Capt. Lenist, of ship Carolina, arrived at this port, left at St. Helena, 14th ult., three slavers which had been brought in by British cruisers. One of them had landed three hundred negroes; the others had their slaves on board—about half of them had died of small pox since their arrival.—Boston Courier.

Mr. Darg's Slave.—It was whispered about with no little industry, that as soon as Mr. Darg obtained possession of his slave, he would immediately hurry him off to the South, and sell him to some planter, and thus separate him forever from his family. While passing through Centre street we met a well-dressed, good-looking Mulatto man, whose countenance recalled to our recollection that we had seen him before, under extraordinary circumstances. Presently, we recognized him as Tom Hughs, who had robbed his master and absconded, and was retaken and sent to the State Prison, from which he has been recently discharged. We were not a little surprised to see him walking the streets of New York at full liberty, and asked him one or two questions; in reply to which, he informed us that his master had not only forgiven his offense, but brought his wife and family on here from the South,—treats more kindly than ever, and entrusts him to go from home as he would any ordinary servant.—In proof of which, he was then going to purchase some articles for Mr. Darg's family.—Jour. of Commerce.

Sentence of Robinson.—This person was brought into Court on Thursday at 12 o'clock, M., by direction of the bench to receive his sentence. On being asked by the Chief Justice if he had any thing to say why the judgment of the law should not be pronounced against him, he with complete indifference replied, "I have nothing to say." He was then sentenced to be hung on the 16th of April.

During the delivery of the sentence, and at its close, while the whole audience were moved with feeling, and many affected to tears, the prisoner, preserved the greatest composure and indifference. He confessed, it is said, to one of his counsel before the trial, all the particulars of the murder.

The counsel for the prisoner, says the Newark Advertiser, informed the Court that they intended to petition to the Chancellor for a writ of Error to remove the case to the Supreme Court for its decision upon the legal objections taken by them to the indictment; but as this is a writ of grace, not of right, and as it is understood that the Chancellor usually consults the Supreme Court before allowing it, there appears to be no reason to fear that the just sense of the law will be suspended.

Highway Robbery.—A few nights since, as Mr. Joseph Seagraves, Jr., of Providence, R. I., was standing in Broadway, at the corner of Anthony-st., about 9 o'clock, three men approached him, and hit his hat on one side, as with an intent to knock it off. He suddenly drew his hand from his pocket, in which it had been thrust, to replace his hat, when one of the fellows, a black named Joseph Morrison, alias Butcher Joe, a well known thief and burner, quick as lightning, forced his hand into Mr. Seagrave's pocket, and drawing out his pocket book, containing $710 in bank bills, sundry valuable papers, and free passage tickets in the Stonington Rail road and the Providence Steamboat line—and with their plunder they then escaped.

Justice, however, was quickly at their heels, for officers A. M. C. Smith, Stephens, Walker, and James L. Smith, from the description given by Mr. Seagraves, arrested Butcher Joe, and found in a drawer of a bureau in his house, corner of Church and Anthony sts., the identical pocket book of Mr. Seagraves, which he at once recognized as his. They also arrested a mulatto man named Richard Staines, who had recently served out a long term in the State Prison, and a white man named Mathew L. Burron, who has been repeatedly charged with offences of a higher grade, and the three were committed to prison to answer the charge. Mr. Seagraves identified the prisoners as those who robbed him.—N. Y. Express.

Canal across the Isthmus of Darien.—Advices have been received from Panama, that the obstacles heretofore interposed, by the clashing of the local and General Governments, with regard to the proposed canal across the isthmus, have deen effectually removed; and that the work seems at length in a fair way to be accomplished through the medium of the Franco-Gradian Company, established at Paris. The funds are already provided, and operations will soon be commenced.

From the Charleston Patriot March 24.

Burning of the Creole—twenty-five persons destroyed.—The following, from the Natchez Free Trader, furnishes the particulars of the burning of the Creole, of which a brief account has already appeared in the papers.

The Burning Steamer.—The steamer Creole, met the other day by the Sultana below the mouth of the Red River, a burning mass of cinders, had the misfortune to have her tiller ropes first burnt off. She was therefore unmanageable, and was left at the mercy of her mad engineery, which kept on working more and more furiously, as the heat of the burning mass became more intense. The boat first struck the shore, at Barker's, where one or more threw themselves off and gained the bank; the rebound of the boat turned her brow another way, and she took directly across the river again. It is a lamentable fact, that nearly all who threw themselves from the boat into the river, sunk to rise no more.

There were two great deficiencies in this boat: first, chain tiller cables, that would have enabled the pilot to hold the boat to her course, and run her ashore—and second, a few life preservers, which would have ensured the escape of those who threw themselves into the river.

It will probably never be known with certainty how many perished in this fierce, brief struggle with fire and water.

In the Republican we find a letter containing the following names of passengers known to be missing.

Mr. Celqushon, cashier of the City Bank, Natchitoches.

Miss Norman, daughter of Dr. Norman.

Miss Cuney, daughter of Mrs. P. Cuney. Mrs. C. is safe.

A family of negroes belonging to Mr. Benoist.

Mr. Norman, of Norman's landing, Avoyelles.

Capt. Dalman and all the officers are saved, Mr. George Sweeny, mate of the Creole, handed me a package of letters, written after the accident. I have marked all thus "from the wreck of the Creole," to be delivered without delay. All the remainder of the passengers have gone on the steamboat Monroe to New Orleans—some were almost without clothes. Mr. Sweeny told me that he could not tell the number missing, or who they were,—he said there were about seventy passengers in all, and supposes some 20 or 30 to be missing. The Monroe was only alongside the Hannibal 2 or 3 minutes, and the above is all that I could glean from Mr. Sweeny, of the accident. JAMES BRADISH.

Arrest of Rail Road Robbers.—The robbers who have been long preying upon travelers on the Syracuse and Auburn Rail Road are at length arrested. Three gentlemen, Messrs. Wilkie, Strong and Clark, on arriving at Albany, found that they had been robbed of considerable sums of money, and on comparing recollections, became satisfied that the robberies were committed in the baggage car, between Auburn and Syracuse. They therefore returned to that place on Sunday, accompanied by Messrs. Young and Williams, Rail Road Superintendents. Suspicion fell so strongly upon Richard Graves, Collector on the A. & S. Road, and George Wall, Porter to the S. & U. Road, that they were both arrested. An examination failed to elicit any facts against Graves who was discharged. Mr. Strong, however, went with Graves to Auburn, keeping an eye on his movements. Mr. Clark took Wall into a room at the Syracuse House, and after locking the door, commenced a conversation which continued seven or eight hours, and resulted in a full confession of the robberies and the recovery of all the money. Mr. Clark drew Wall by degrees into familiar conversation, and in undertaking to account for various sums of money which had been traced to him, he got entangled in a labyrinth of contradictions. While thus embarrassed and alarmed, Mr. C. informed him that a mysterious box which had been made for him, had been found, and that $900 had been found at his boarding house. He then confessed that this $900 was part of a package of $1,700, belonging to Messrs. White and Williams, of Buffalo, which he had stolen from E. Norton, Esq., last fall, and that the box referred to contained $500 more of the same money.

Wall, finding himself cornered, said that he and Graves were in company; that on the night of the last robbery, he started from Auburn locked alone in the car next to the baggage; that after the engine started he went into the baggage car with a dark lanthorn, and by means of false keys unlocked several trunks, took packages of money from those of Messrs. Clark, Strong and Wilkie; that after their arrival at Syracuse, he divided the money with Graves, (who came in the same train as Collector,) and after arranging it in such a manner as to preserve it, they secreted it in the basement wall of the Presbyterian church, where, on examination, it was found, one of the packages having "R. Graves" on it, and the other being marked, "G. Wall."

Wall is an old offender, having been twice in the State Prison. He had been suspected and discharged, but kept around the Depot in temporary employment.

Graves is extensively known at the South and the North. He has led a roving life, and has been more or less suspected for several years.

Trial of McLeod—On the 22d ult., before the Court of Oyer and Terminer, McLeod was arraigned, and pleaded not guilty to the indictment against him. His counsel, Messrs. Gardner and Bradley, then moved the court for two commissions to issue—one for the examination of Mr. Webster, Secretary of State, and Mr. Fox, the British Minister, at Washington,—the other to examine McNabb and others, in Upper Canada. This was granted, with the condition that the people might join in the commission. An application was then made to remove the cause from the Oyer and Terminer to the Supreme Court, on an affidavit setting forth some of the circumstances of the offense charged to have been committed, and that difficult and complicated questions of law would arise on the trial. The counsel urged that at the Oyer and Terminer, the presiding judge might be overruled by the county judges, and that it was proper in this case, for that reason, that this cause should be tried in the Circuit Court, rather than in the Oyer and Terminer. The circuit judge declined allowing the certiorari upon that ground, as there was no allegation of improper bias on the part of the county judges, and our statute has provided the means of correcting any error in the proceedings of the Oyer and Terminer, by a bill of exceptions.

The counsel asked for time to add an affidavit in relation to the excitement which had existed in the county upon the subject, and the reason why it was believed a fair trial could not be had. This was granted, and the court adjourned over to the afternoon, to give an opportunity to serve the writ if allowed. During the intermission the affidavits were prepared, the certiorari allowed, and served on the court on their going in, in the afternoon. This gives McLeod's counsel an opportunity to move the supreme court to change the venue to some other county.—Albany Argus.

Louisiana Purchase.—Jefferson gave eleven millions of dollars for Louisiana, and the government have received, since the purchase, $14,539,271 for the sales of public lands—three and a half millions better than the purchase money, besides, having on hand six millions of acres yet to sell, within the boundaries of the State. The sales of public lands in Louisiana, from January 1, 1839, to January 1, 1840, footed as follows: 509,307 11-100 acres, amounting to $822,080 45; the Natchitoches land office, exceeding in sales the other four offices, (Opelousas, New Orleans, Ouachita and Groensburg,) in the State.

The ensuing nine months, from January 1, 1840, to October 1st, of the same year, the sales at the Ouachita office exceed any other in the State. The total at all the offices for the nine months, was—acres of land, 159,071 26-100, amounting to $189,875 04.—Vicksburg Free Trader.

Mormon City Nauvoo.—As this city is in some respects a curiosity, we have watched its proceedings with interest. From the "Times and Seasons," we learn the following facts in regard to it. The city Council have prohibited any person from selling whiskey in a less quantity than one gallon; and any other liquor in less than a quart, unless on the prescription of a physician. The University of Nauvoo has been duly organized by the election of a Chancellor and Trustees.—James Kelly, A. M., as Alumnus, of Trinity College, Dublin, has been elected President of the University. The Nauvoo Legion has been also organized, and officers have been elected. The council have passed a vote of thanks to the State Government, for the favors it has conferred, and to the citizens of Quincy, for the protection received, when driven from Missouri.—St. Louis Gaz.

Every one has influence.—On the morning of the 18th, a number of citizens applied at the Temperance Rooms to sign the pledge; among these was a fine built, but poorly clad son of Erin. When asked what was his object in taking the pledge? his eye sparkled and in his native brogue, he said, "he had seen that nice company of fellows yesterday, and among them was John Bryne. I have had many of a drunken frolic with him. Last year on St. Patrick's day we were drunk together. Now he is as much of a gentleman as any one in Albany. If I live until next St. Patrick's day, I will have as good clothes as John Bryne, and be as much respected as he is." As "one sinner destroys much good," so one correct act prevents and remedies much evil.—Temp. Rec.

The Proscribed Subject.—John Quincy Adams has published in the National Intelligencer, a list of 139 petitions, which he was prevented from offering to the House, in consequence of the rule of that body, restricting the time for that presentation. Most of them relate to the question of slavery, in some of the various forms under which that subject is open to the legislation of Congress. The diligence and fidelity of Mr. Adams, in relation to petitions entrusted to his care, are worthy of the highest praise.

Blowing Up.—Last week a son of the Emerald Isle left Dayton in a wagon, by the Union road. He had a fur cap on his head, and in the cap a half a pound of gun powder done up in a paper. He lighted his pipe on the commencement of his journey, and smoked along the road until he was satisfied with the recreation, when he pulled off his cap, and having deposited the pipe along with the powder, replaced it upon his head. In a few minutes the powder exploded, blew off the cap, singed nearly all the hair off his head, and burned his forehead and cheeks most wofully.—Dayton Journal.

The Common Council of Boston offer a reward of $2000 for the detection and conviction of persons engaged in the daring robberies in that city.

According to the Albany Argus, the trial of McLeod cannot take place until the 1st Monday in October, unless a special Court be held for the purpose, which, under the Revised Statutes, can be ordered either by the Legislature or by the Circuit Judge.

The British and Foreign Bible Society, have placed at the disposal of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, 10,000 copies of the New Testament in the New Zealand language.

Sir John Harvey, Governor of New-Brunswick, has been recalled. Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke is spoken of as his successor. Capt. Prescott, R. N. Lieut. Gov. of Newfoundland, has tendered his resignation, and expects to be relieved in May or June.

An official letter has been issued from the Department of State, to each of the other departments of government, signifying the wish of the President that no officer employed by the government should at all interfere in elections, and that any attempts to do so will procure the removal of the person.

Mr. Patton, Lieut. Governor of Virginia, has issured his warrant for the surrender of Curry, whom Gov. Gilmer refused to give up to this State.

Prof. Jamieson of Edinburgh, in a letter recently published, remarked that "the American Dictionary of Dr. Webster, is as great an improvement on Johnson's Dictionary, as the latter was on those of his predecessors."

A hundred thousand Bibles printed in Spanish have been circulated in Spain by English agents, since the 1st of September. For the first time, the London Bible Societies have found free access into the bosom of the unity of the Spanish Catholic Church.

Temperance sermons are delivered every Sunday evening to crowded houses, in the Odeon, at Boston.

There are 206 distilleries in the State of New York, which annually produce 2,710,110 gallons of liquor.

The Sherbrooke (Canada,) Gazette states that a suit has been brought by the Government against the British American Land Company, for £80,000, and judgment obtained by default. The Company had paid £36,000 to the Government, and expended most part of the balance in improving the country, making roads, building churches, market-houses, &c. for which they were not allowed any credit.

The Hon. Daniel Webster arrived in this city on Monday evening, in company with Mrs. Webster, on what is feared may be a last visit to her aged father, Herman Le Roy, who we regret to hear is dangerously ill.

The entire number of newspapers printed in the kingdom of Great Britain, is set down in a recent report at 519.

The steamboat Utica, Capt. Shultz, forced her way through the ice to Albany on the 26th inst. The passengers on board met, and passed a vote of thanks to Capt. S., and resolved to raise money enough to purchase for him a fine telescope.

It is said that in Ohio, eighteen millions of bushels of wheat, and thirty millions of bushels of Indian corn are produced.

It is stated in the correspondence of the Journal of Commerce, that the President was unwell on Sunday. Fear has been expressed that the late excitements will prove too much for him.

Population of the City of New York:

In 1731	8,622	In 1810	96,276
" 1756	10,381	" 1820	123,700
" 1773	21,876	" 1825	166,086
" 1786	23,614	" 1830	202,580
" 1790	33,131	" 1840	312,883
" 1800	60,489

Encouragement to the Faithful Teacher.—A gentleman has put in our hands the following extract from a blank leaf of a female Sunday School Teacher's Question book.

"Since I became a teacher in the S. S., in 1818, I have had about fifty different scholars; and of that number, about thirty-five have professed faith in Christ."

Such is the result of the labors of one obscure, humble, but faithful female teacher.

News has been received in this country from the London Police Office, that the most artful robber they ever had to contend with, is now in the United States.

More Testimony.—Rev. Jared Curtis, chaplain of the Massachusetts State Prison, says in his report, "Intemperance ever has been, and still continues to be, the fruitful source of more vice and crime than all other known causes combined."

Attempted Suicide.—On the 27th inst., a young married woman, at 312 West street, in this city, attempted to destroy herself by taking laudanum, but was prevented by the timely interposition of a physician. The only reason she assigned for the rash act, was the constant intoxication of her husband, and that she had rather die than live with him. Such a feeling is more to be lamented than wondered at.

Death of Mr. Chitty.—This distinguished law writer, whose works on Pleading, Bills of Exchange and Practice, have been so extensively used in our country, died on the 17th of February, 1841, in Southampton Street, Fitzroy Square, London, in the 66th year of his age.

Extra Sessions.—The following extra sessions of Congress have been called since the organization of our gov[illegible]

"John Adams was inaugu[illegible] 4th of March, 1797. He con[illegible] gress May 16, 1797. His fir[illegible] dress was delivered Nov. 2[illegible]

Thomas Jefferson was [illegible] 4th of March 1801. He [illegible] session Oct. 17, 1803.

James Madison was in[illegible] 4th of March, 1809. He [illegible] gress May 23, 1809, als[illegible] May, 1813.

Martin Van Buren was [illegible] 4th of March, 1837. He [illegible] gress, Sept. 4, 1837."

According to the official a[illegible] population of St. Petersburgh, [illegible] 1840, was 470,202, of whom only [illegible] 590 were females.

It appears from the United States census, that if 60,000 is adopted as the ratio of representation in the popular branch of the National Legislature, the slave-holding States will lose five, and the non-slave-holding states gain 12 members.

Serious Accident.—On Thursday last, as the wife of Mr. Allen Fisk, and son, were riding on the Owasco lake, the ice unexpectedly gave way, precipitating the whole directly into the water, at a place where, as we understand, it is no less than 30 feet deep. As the team sank, the son bounded on the ice, and then, by an effort worthy of an older head, succeeded in rescuing his mother from a watery grave. The horses were drowned, and we learn have since, together with the sleigh, &c., been recovered.—Auburn Journal.

Traveling.—The steamboat North America, on her passage down on Monday evening, is said to have had between 600 and 700 passengers. The same boat left New York on Tuesday afternoon with 550 passengers.—Argus.

Irwington, (Ala.) March 17.

The Freshet.—Never before has it been our lot to witness such a mighty rushing of the waters and destruction of property as we did last week. On Monday and Tuesday of last week, the rain poured in torrents, and, in a short time, the Chattaboochee began to rise and threaten destruction to every thing within its reach. A large amount of cotton was taken from the warehouse at this place, and the ware house belonging to Dr. Sheppard, was swept downward by the swelling flood. The river continued to rise until Saturday evening, when it reached a height never before known. The plantation of Mr. Harrison, on the opposite side of the river, was fully two-thirds covered with water, and we learn that plantations on each side of the river, below and above, have suffered greatly from the inundation. A negro woman belonging to Mrs. Fort, was unfortunately drowned on Friday, by being capsized while in a batteau catching cotton. Considerable damage has been done to the butment of the Irwington bridge, on the Georgia side—the foundation having been washed from under the pier, when it was forced to give way. We regret, also, to learn that the Florence bridge, on the Alabama side, received a similar injury. The Irwington Bride Company have set about repairing the bridge, and it will be ready for crossing in a few days.

We learn that the Columbus bridge and the Factory bridge above Columbus have both been swept away, the river having risen above the piers to the body of the bridges, when, as a matter of course, they were forced to yield to the irresistible torrent.

The warehouse at Fort Gaines, we understand, has also been swept off, together with a large amount of cotton which was stored in it.

The great destruction of property occasioned by this flood is incalculable, and it will be some time before the loss can be fully known.

In the interior of Alabama, so far as we learn, the extent of damages was much more limited.

President's Family.—Mrs. General Harrison is herself expected to preside at the White House, but will not assume her station earlier than May. She will be assisted by her daughter, Mrs. Wm. Harrison.—The "cabin" at North Bend will be occupied by Dr. Thornton, a son-in-law of the President; the farm having been rented to an experienced agriculturist.

The husband of Mrs. Wm. Harrison died about three weeks since. It is probably true, that Mrs. Taylor, of Virginia, a niece of the President and mother of his son-in-law, will be associated with the ladies of the White House. Mr. Findlay, relict of the late Gen. James Findlay, of this city, and aunt of Mrs. Wm. Harrison, and an old and intimate friend of the President's family, is expected likewise to be a member of the same domestic circle, for at least the ensuing year, Of these ladies, the Mrs. Taylors are members of the Episcopal Church. The Mrs. Harrisons, and Mrs. Findlay, have long been connected with the First Presbyterian Church of our city, under the pastoral care of the venerable Joshua L. Wilson, D. D.—Cincinnati Daily Republican.

Murder most Foul.—A man named Hezekiah Lounsbury, was this morning arraigned and committed for the murder of his wife, at Westville, (a parish of this town,) yesterday afternoon, by striking her with a bar of iron, in a quarrel excited by intemperance. A Jury of Inquest returned a verdict of wilful murder, and we are informed that the unhappy man has confessed the crime. It is most melancholy that he is in the sear and yellow leaf, being nearly 70 years of age, and his wife was both aged and infirm. We refrain from detailing the circumstances as related to us, since the case must undergo a judicial decision, when all the facts will be fully developed.—New H[illegible] Herald.

[illegible] Outrage by a British Cruiser.—[illegible] Register informs us that let-[illegible] received from the brig Rich-[illegible] Salem, which state that [illegible] been overhauled by a Brit-[illegible] Richmond was on her [illegible] Salem to St. Helena, and [illegible]ubique; and a few weeks [illegible] at St. Helena, when off [illegible] Thomas, on the coast of [illegible] brought to by a British brig [illegible]ces and other papers were [illegible] examined, and she was fi-[illegible] to proceed on her voyage, [illegible] found to justify a seizure.—[illegible] the fifth Salem vessel that has been searched by English cruisers within a few months.—Boston Morning Post.

Narrow Escape.—As the train of cars was coming towards the city yesterday, from New-York, on the west-side of the Delaware, near Bristol, one of the wheels struck the end of an iron rail which was loose, and erected in a manner generally called a snake's head. The bar passed through the bottom of the car, and between the legs of a passenger, Mr. Yates, of Albany, tearing his cloak in pieces, grazing his ear, and thence passed out at the top of the car. The escape of Mr. Y. seems almost miraculous. An inch difference in his position on the seat, and he must have been killed. Great care should be taken to keep down these obtruding ends of the rails; for as soon as they are erected over a certain height, instead of the wheel passing over, it passes under them, to the imminent danger of persons in the car.—

The First Step.—The N. Y. Observer says that thus far, no attempt has been made to show that a pen or a tongue was ever moved on the subject of a Temperance reform, before Dr. Benjamin Rush employed the powers of his gifted mind, so early as 1804, to rouse the patriotism and humanity of his countrymen in this cause.

POST-SCRIPT !

News by this Morning's Mail.

DEATH OF GEN. HARRISON!

Wednesday noon, April 7.

We stop the Press to announce the death of Gen. WILLIAM H. HARRISON, which occurred on Sunday last at 12 o'clock noon. It is officially announced by his Cabinet at Washington, in the absence of the President of the Senate, intelligence of which has this moment reached us in an Extra from the Commercial Record office, Philadelphia. We defer particulars until next week.

MARRIED,

In Independence, on the 11th ult. by the Rev. S. Coon, Mr. GEORGE POTTER, of Genesee and FANNY GREEN, of Independence; also, at the same time and place, Mr. DECATUR M. CLARKE, and Miss MARIA A. GREEN of the former place

DIED,

In this village, on the 6th inst., CALEB MAXSON, in the 89th year of his age. Some particulars will be given in an obituary next week.

In Alfred, on the 5th ult. at the residence of his Son, Joshua Vincent jr. Mr. JOSHUA VINCENT, in the 79th year of his age, in full faith and hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave.

LIST OF LETTERS.

Jabez Chadwick, N. Y. Hull' (next week.) J. & E. Norton, W. Ennis, P. M. (it is done.) Ebenezer Davis, (we will send them.) Isaac D. Titsworth, (you have our thanks.) H. Wilson, (the direction is altered) Jonathan F. Randolph.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Oliver Hart, $2, vol. 2. Leonard J. Wheelock, $1, vol. 1 A. H. Burdick $2, cr. Charles Benjamin, vol. 2. Of J. D Titsworth, $10, cr. S. Hall, $2,25. Jonathan Davis, $2, vol. 1. Reuben Davis, Solomon Hall, R. T. & E. F Randolph, $2, each vol. 2. Of E. Davis $4, cr. self, and M. F. Randolph $2, each vol. 2. J. P. Livermore, $3, cr. S. S. Clark $2, E. B. Green, $1, vol. 1. Of Jonathan F. Randolph $5, cr self, & Jesse F Randolph, $2, each. vol. 2. Asa Davis, $1, vol. 1.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO RENT,

A SUIT of rooms convenient for one of two small families in the building with the Printing Office. Inquire at this office
April, 9th 1841.

List of Letters

REMAINING in the Post Office at De Ruyter, April 1st, 1841.

Allen John
Ackley Chauncey
Babcock Sarah Ann
Byram Joseph
Barber Alvah
Beebe Lorenzo D.
Burdick Rowland S.
Coon Jonathan
Church Ward R. R.
Coon Luke
Carpenter J. T.
Carpenter Jesse
Coon Solomon
Converse Adolphus
Carpenter Sarah Ann
Cochran Wm. D.
Down Mrs. P.
Dean Enos
Darling Mr.
Davis Otis R.
Fairbank J. N.
Fenton John H.
Gibson Alonzo
Greenman Perry
Gifford David
Gage Mary (Widow)
Gifford Eliza Ann
Gifford Joseph
Gage R. W.
Gage Levantia C.
Green John D.
Harkell Simeon
Hoag Marble
Hogan John
Johnson Jabish 2
Kanover Benjamin
Knowlton George
Levisee Walter
Lewis Charles G.
McDougall Lucretia
Merchant Ebenezer
Nye Joseph
O. Bryon Mary
Olin Schuyler
Olin Jonathan
Richmond Roswell
Reed Mr. B.
Rider Sally
Rhodes Juston
Rice Joseph F.
Reynolds Cary G. 2
Ryneck Sarah E.
Starr John
Stillman Diana M.
Swift Heman 2
Shepherd John
Snyder John
Shields John 2
Stone George W.
Vincent Joshua.

GEORGE SEARS, P. M.

POETRY.

Stanzas.

BY REV. W. B. O. PEABODY.

Oh! steal not my faith away,
Nor tempt to doubt the trusting mind—
Let all that earth can yield decay,
But leave this heavenly gift behind;
Our life is but a meteor gleam,
Lit up amid surrounding gloom
A dying lamp, a fitful beam,
Quenched in the cold and silent tomb.

Yet if, as holy men have said,
There lie beyond that dreary bourne
Some region where the faithful dead
Eternally forget to mourn:
Welcome the scoff, the sword, the chain,
The burning wild, the black abyss,—
I shrink not from the path of pain,
Which endeth in a world like this.

But oh! if all that nerves us here,
When grief assails and sorrow stings,
Exist but in the shadowy sphere
Of Fancy's weak imaginings;
If hopes, though cherished long and deep,
Be bold and baseless mockeries;
Then welcome that eternal sleep,
Which knoweth not of dreams like these.

Yet hush! thou troubled heart! be still;
Renounce thy vain philosophy;
Like morning on the misty hill,
The light of Truth will break on thee.
Go—search the prophet's deathless page—
Go—question thou the radiant sky,
And learn from them, mistaken sage!
The glorious words—"Thou shalt not die."

Miscellaneous Department.

A POPISH PRIEST REFUTED.

THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM'S CURIOUS METHOD OF REFUTING A POPISH PRIEST.

King James II. hearing that the Duke of Buckingham was somewhat out of order, thought that it was a proper season for working up his credulity, and making a convert of him to popery; and accordingly sent Fitzgerald, an Irish Priest, to him to use his utmost endeavors for that purpose. The Duke had been apprized of the intended visit, as also of the motive to it, and was constantly prepared for the reception of the Priest, was no sooner informed of his arrival than he gave orders for his introduction, with great ceremony, which the father thought a happy omen; and the usual compliments having been passed, he desired him to sit down. An inquiry into the Duke's health followed then of course; and he owning himself greatly concerned about his future welfare, declared the design of his coming, and by whose order he came. His Grace pretended great willingness to be better instructed if he was in any error; but he desired that they might drink a glass of wine together previous to their entering into a conference, to which the Priest agreeing, a bottle was called for, and brought. But, guess the poor father's surprise when, after having drunk a glass or two of wine, the Duke, (a man of incomparable sense, and celebrated wit,) taking the cork out of the bottle, and stroking it several times with great gravity, asked him very seriously how he liked that horse. He was confounded to the last degree at such a question; and yet more so when his grace finding him continue silent, repeated it again without changing his countenance in the least; but persisting, on the contrary, in stroking the cork, in calling it a horse, and launching into the most extravagant encomiums on its goodness and beauty; he at last, however, answered:—He found his Grace had a mind to be merry, and that he had chosen an unseasonable time, would therefore come again when his grace was better disposed to hear what he had to offer.

Merry! cries the Duke, in a seeming surprise—I assure your reverence I was never more serious in all my days. What fault can you find with it?

I beg your Grace would compose yourself a little, and consider, says the priest.

Consider what? answered the Duke—what objection have you against him?

Ah! my lord, replies the father, do you not see that it is but a cork? and do you not know that you took it but a few minutes ago out of that bottle?

A very pretty story indeed, says the Duke. What! would you persuade me that this fine courser, whom I have been so long commending, and stroking, is but a mere cork, and that I am under the delusion?

Nothing more certain, my Lord, answers the father.

I would not be positive about any thing, replied the Duke, calmly—perhaps my illness may have discomposed me more than I am aware; but I wish you could convince me that I am mistaken. I say this is a horse; you affirm it is a cork; how do you prove it is so?

Very easily, my lord; if I look at it, I see it is a cork; if I take it in my hand, I feel it is a cork; and if I smell it, I find it is but cork; and if I bite with my teeth, I am assured it is but the same; so that I am every way convinced thereof, by the evidences of all my senses.

I believe your reverence may be in the right, says the Duke, (as just recovering from a dream,) but I am subject to whims; and let us talk no more of it, but proceed to the business that brought you hither.

This was just what the father wanted, and of course entered upon the most controverted points between the papists and us; when the Duke cutting him short, told him what was more difficult of digestion with him was their doctrine of transubstantiation, and if he could but prove this single article, all the rest would soon be got over. Hereupon the priest not doubting but that he could make the Duke a proselyte, enters upon the common topics used by those of his persuasion on such occasions, insisting, above all, greatly upon the words of consecration, 'This is my body,' and 'This is my blood,' &c. To all which the Duke replied, that these were but figurative expressions, and no more to be understood literally, than those others, 'I am the vine,' and 'I am the door;" besides which continued he, the bread and wine still remain unchanged as before, after the words of consecration.

No, my lord, cries the father, with humble submission, there is only the form or appearance of these elements; for they are actually changed into the very real body and blood.

Nay, says the Duke, I will convince you to the contrary, father, by your own argument;—I look upon it, and see it is bread; I touch it and feel it is bread; and I taste it, and find it is bread; mere bread still! REMEMBER THE CORK, father—remember the cork! This silenced the father.

TIME—This is the most indefinable, yet paradoxical of things; the past is gone, the future is not come, and the present becomes the past even while we attempt to define it and like the flash of lightning at once exists and expires. Time is the measure of all things, but is itself immeasurable, and the grand discloser of all things, but is itself undisclosed. Like space, it is incomprehensible, because it has no limits, and it would be still more so if it had. It is more obscure in its sources than the Nile, and in its termination than the Niger;—and advances like the swiftest tide, but retreats like the swiftest terror. It gives wings of lightning to pleasure, but feet of lead to pain, and lends expectation a curb, but enjoyment a spur. It robs beauty of her charms to bestow them on her picture, and builds a monument to merit but denies it a house; it is the transient and deceitful flatterer of falsehood, but tried and final friend to truth. Time is the most subtle yet the most insatiable of all depredators, and by appearing to take nothing, is permitted to take all; nor can it be satisfied until it has stolen the world. It constantly flies, yet overcome all things by might, and although it is the present ally, it will be the future conqueror of death. Time, the cradle of hope, but the grave of ambition, is the stern corrector of fools, but the salutary counselor of the wise, bringing all the dread to the one, and all the desire to the other; but, like Cassandra, it warns us with a voice that even the sagest discredit it too long, and silliest believe it too late. Wisdom walks before it and repentance behind it; he that has made it his friend will have little to fear from his enemies, but he that has made it his enemy, will have but little to hope from his friends.—Lacon.

AN IMPORTANT LEGAL QUESTION.—The senior editor of this paper was indicted for a libel against a Mr. A. H. Parsons of Buffalo, for publishing in the Evangelist, in March, 1838, an extract from the Minutes of the Niagara Presbytery, at the request of the Stated Clerk. The case was tried on the 8th inst., in the Recorder's Court, Buffalo. Mr. Johnson, in the original publication, did not consider himself as vouching for the correctness of the Presbyterial decision, but as simply reporting what the Presbytery did. He, therefore, in his defense, pleaded that the publication of the decisions of an ecclesiastical court, in circumstances not admitting the possibility of malicious intent, was a privileged act, and could not be construed as libelous. The argument was conducted with great ability by J. G. Masten, Esq., in his behalf, and altho' the Recorder took a different view of the law, the jury returned a verdict of "Not Guilty." The question is one of considerable importance to religious editors, and indeed to all ecclesiastical bodies. The Recorder was very decided, and we doubt not, perfectly honest in rejecting the argument. We are certain, however, that the verdict given by the jury, is based on a true construction, and is perfectly accordant with the spirit and intent of the law. As our opinion may not be considered quite impartial, it is proper to add, that we are sustained in our opinion and position by most profound civilians, whose views have been consulted. —N. Y. Evangelist.

Female Department.

FEMALE INFLUENCE

BY DANIEL WEBSTER.

It is by the promulgation of sound morals in the community, and more especially by the training and instruction of the young, that woman performs her part towards the preservation of a free government. It is now generally admitted, that public liberty, the perpetuity of a free constitution, rests on the virtue and intelligence of the community which enjoys it. How is that virtue to be inspired, and how is that intelligence to be communicated? Bonaparte once asked Madame Campan in what manner he could most promote the happiness of France.—Her answer was full of poetical beauty.—She said—"Instruct the mothers of the French people." Because the mothers are the affectionate and effective teachers of the human race. The mother begins this process of training with the infant in her arm. It is she who directs, so to speak, its first mental and spiritual pulsations. She conducts it along the impressible years of childhood and youth; and hopes to deliver it to the rough contests and tumultuous scenes of life, armed by those good principles which her child has first received from maternal care and love.

If we draw within the circle of our contemplation the mothers of a civilized nation, what do we see? We behold so many artificers working, not on frail and perishable matter, but on the immortal mind, moulding and fashioning beings who are to exist forever. We applaud the artist whose skill and genius presents the mimic man upon the canvas—we admire and celebrate the sculptor who works out that same image in enduring marble—but how insignificant are these achievements though the highest and fairest in all the departments of art, in comparison with the great vocation of human mothers! They work not upon the canvas that shall fail, or the marble that shall crumble into dust—but upon mind, upon spirit, which is to last forever, and which is to bear, for good or for evil, throughout its duration, the impress of a mother's plastic hand.

I have already expressed the opinion, which all allow to be correct, that our security for the duration of the free institutions which bless our country, depends upon the habits of virtue and the prevalence of knowledge and of education. Knowledge does not comprise all which is contained in the larger term of education. The feelings are to be disciplined—the passions are to be restrained—true and worthy motives are to be inspired—a profound religious feeling is to be instilled, and pure morality inculcated, under all circumstances. All this is comprised in education. Mothers who are faithful to this great duty, will tell their children that neither in political nor in any other concerns of life, can man ever withdraw himself from the perpetual obligations of conscience and of utility; that in every act, whether public or private, he incurs a just responsibility: and that in no condition is he warranted in trifling with important rights and obligations. They will impress upon their children the truth, that the exercise of the elective franchise is a social duty, of as solemn a nature as man can be called upon to perform; that a man may not innocently trifle with his vote; that every free elector is a trustee as well for others as himself; and that every man and every measure he supports, has an important bearing on the interest of others as well as on his own. It is in the inculcation of high and pure morals such as these, that in a free Republic, woman performs her sacred duty, and fulfils her destiny. The French are remarkable for their fondness for sententious phrases, in which much meaning is condensed into a small space. I noticed lately, on the title-page of one of the books of popular instruction in France, this motto: "Pour instruction on the heads of the people; you owe them that baptism."—And certainly, if there be any duty which may be described by a reference to that great institute of religion, a duty approaching it in importance, perhaps next to it in obligation, it is this.

Children's Department.

Fading, Still Fading.!

FADING, still fading, is written on all;
Over life's pathway still lingers the pall.
Joy for the youthful Fills high the brim—
Ere it be tasted,
Pale death enters in.
Bright flower unfold
At the dawning of light;
Where are those flowers
At the coming of night?

Fading, still fading, is written on all;
Over life's pathway still lingers the pall,
Beauty, like sunlight,
Gleams out for a breath,
Glittering with gems
For the bridal of death,
The warrior in mail
To the battle speeds on;
Death is the victor!
The battle is won,

Fading, still fading, is written on all;
Over life's pathway still lingers the pall;
Fame sound thy trumpet,
And fill the broad skies;
Fame! 'tis meteor,
The echo replies,
Grave it in marble,
The deeds of the past;
'Tis writing in dust,
Sweep away by the blast.
Fading still fading, is written on all!
Over life's pathway still lingers the pall

THE CHILDREN AND THE LION.

There was once a father who had two children whom he loved exceedingly. They were a little girl and boy, and they were good and obedient children. For many years, ever since they were born, they had lived in the middle of a great town, and had never seen the open fields and the beautiful flowers, and birds and woods, except sometimes when their father took them out in a carriage with him for an hour or two; and those were happy times. One day when the little girl was seven, and the boy nine, years old, the father called them to him, and said to them, "My dear children I am going to take you away from this house in which you have been used to live, and to take you into another house where you will have a beautiful garden, in which you can play about amongst the flowers, and hear the birds sing all day long, and see the bright butterflies, which you have seen when I have taken you out in the carriage."

CHILD.—How pleased the little boy and girl must have been to go to such a beautiful house; from the midst of the dark town where they had lived before.

F.—Yes, they were greatly pleased, and when the next day they came to this house, and looked out of its windows, and saw the green grass looking fresh and bright, and gay butterflies flying over it up and down, and the painted feathers of all sorts of birds which flew in and out of the bushes, or strayed to warble in the thickets, they longed to run straight out of doors and sing too; they were so happy; and thought that they should never tire of gathering the flowers, and playing with the bright yellow gourds which they could see growing here and there in the beds, and watching the birds and butterflies. But just as they were running out, their father called them to him with a very grave face, so grave as to be almost sad, and said to them, "My dearest children, before you go into that beautiful garden, listen well to what I am going to tell you. In that garden there is a fierce and hungry lion, who is always walking up and down, to find some one to devour. There are reasons which you cannot understand, why I cannot turn this lion out;—and why, much as I love you, I have yet brought you to live in this garden, near such a savage beast—but if you will remember my words, he can never hurt you. What you must do is this: keep in mind that he is ever near you; that he is waiting to spring on you, and when the sun is the brightest, and birds the gayest, and all is most beautiful around you, and you are the happiest yourselves, then think that he is near you, and watch carefully, lest he should spring on you unseen; for if, when you see him, you call on me to help you, you will find me always near you, and he will fly away from you. Do not stay to think how I can hear you when you do not see me, but call at once on me, and I shall be always by your side, and you will be safe. But if in your play you cease to watch for the lion, and so are not ready to call on me, he will creep close to you when you least expect it, and spring on you and devour you."

The children looked very grave and thoughtful; each took the other's hand and they walked quite sadly down into the garden, trembling & afraid, as though thinking at every turn the great lion would spring out upon them. But they saw nothing of him; and as the birds hopped round them, and the gay butterflies floated up and down in the air, and the sun sparkled in the stream that ran amongst flowers, they began to forget that there was such a thing as a lion in the world; and soon they were playing and laughing as merrily and loud as if they had never heard that he was near them. But just when they were the gayest, they heard their father's voice, saying, sadly and seriously, "Remember!" They started and looked round, but they could not see him; the voice seemed to come from the air; but the little girl thought directly of the lion; and as she looked into the bushes, which were quite white with their bright blossoms, she saw something creeping softly towards her; and in a moment her eyes were fixed on the fierce fiery eyes of the savage lion. She had hardly breath left to call upon her father, but at the first call he stood by her side; and she could see the lion turn from her, and spring away and hide himself in the thicket. Her father took her in his arms, and told her not to fear, for that she was quite safe in his keeping; and he bid her remember, that if she had not watched, and seen the lion, and called on His name, the evil beast would have sprung upon her, and she would have been his prey.

Day after day passed away, and the children became more and more watchful, and even in their sport and play, they were sober and mindful of the lion; and when he was stealing near to them, they called always on their father, and he ever stood beside them, and saved them from his fangs.

Now do you remember any thing like this in the Bible?

Yes, I remember the text which says, "Be sober, be vigilent, because your adversary the devil goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." I suppose that he is the lion.

F.—Yes, my dear children, he is; and who is the kind father who is ever near to hear when they call?

C.—Is not that God whom we are taught to call our heavenly Father?

F.—Yes, it is God, and Jesus Christ our Saviour, who is ever near those who trust in them, and who will hear as soon as ever they call, and who will help and deliver you from the devil and his snares.

So that you see, my dear children, how you must watch; if you would be kept safe from this great enemy. You must "watch and pray;" watch that you may pray, and pray that you may be safe.—Wilberforce's Sunday stories.

ELLEN AND THE BIRD.

BY A LITTLE GIRL.

ONE day Ellen was standing at the window, playing with a bird in a cage. It belonged to her brother Thomas, who had as many as four. She happened to look up, and saw a little girl of her acquaintance looking at her, very much amused, her name was Mary; Ellen did not like her very well, and wishing to show her what she could do, she said. 'Mary, I can open the door of the cage, and the bird will not fly out.' 'I should like to see you,' replied Mary. Ellen had done so before, but this time she kept it open too long, and before she thought of it, the bird was gone. Mary laughed triumphantly; this provoked Ellen, and she shut down the window, and began to think what she should do. Thomas had a very bad temper, and she knew she should have a scolding and perhaps a slap, She was frightened at what she had done, and she thought she might conceal it. The more she thought of it, the more she liked the plan, but still she felt something whispering that it was wrong; this was her conscience, and if she had minded it, all would have been well, but her fear overcome it, and she waited impatiently till Thomas should find it out, which he did soon, and run over the house crying out, where is my bird?' Ellen declared she knew nothing about it, and got off very well; but she was to be found out in a way she little expected. Mary had told it about in school, and it reached Thomas's ears; he came home, and saluted his sister with a push, which knocked her down and cut her head against a chair, then slapping her, he went away saying, 'learn not to touch my things.' Ellen got up and told her mother; this led, however, to the disclosure of her falsehood. Their mother much shocked at the behavior of her children, punished them both severely.

From this it may be seen that a falsehood can never do any good in the end, however it may seem at first; and that a person who tells one, cannot be believed afterwards. There is no person among children and grown people who is so much despised as a liar. No one can put any trust in such an one, and she is universally disliked.

The longest life is a parcel of moments.

CHILDREN, YOUR TEACHERS LOVE YOU.—"The one I love is sick," were the words of a Sabbath School teacher. And who do you think was sick? His mother?—No. His brother? No. But it was his beloved scholar.

Dear children, repay your teachers' love by obeying them, and they will have the satisfaction of knowing they do not labor in vain.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ALFRED ACADEMY,
AND
TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

ENCOURAGED by the liberal patronage of the surrounding country, the Trustees hope to meet all reasonable expectations of their patrons by increasing the facilities of intellectual improvement.

The Academic Year for 1841—2 is divided into four terms of 11 weeks each, opening, viz:
1st,—Wednesday, April 28.
2nd.—Wednesday, Aug. 18.
3d,—Wednesday, Nov. 10.
4th,—Wednesday, Feb 3

Familiar Lectures may be expected, as occasion may require, from the Principal, Mr. W. C. KENYON, and during the fall term by J. R. IRISH, on THE ART OF TEACHING.

TUITION—Varying with Studies, from $2,50 to $3,50.

BOARD—According to accommodations from $1, $1,25.

M. GREEN,
A. BURDICK, 3d, } Trustees.
J. R. IRISH,

Alfred, March 17th, 1841.

WANTED—Any quantity of RAGS wanted in exchange for BOOKS, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany-st.
De Ruyter, Dec. 16, 1840.

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.
A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

JOB PRINTING.
BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

REPRINT OF THE OLD DIVINES.

THIS work will be devoted to the publication of Argumentsr Soummaries of the Sermons and Discourses of the most eminent British Divines,—a complete collection of whose invaluable writings in some instances scarce, in others voluminous and expensive, is rarely to be found in the libraries of the Clergy, while our great public repositories themselves are not unfrequently deficient in this branch of literature.

These Skeletons which are intended as models of Scripture argumentation and composition, selected from the writings of the most distinguished ornaments of the Church, will be found highly acceptable to Clergymen, and more particularly useful to the young Divine, whose studies they are well calculated to facilitate by perusal and consultation.

The work will commence with Summaries of the Discourses of Bishop Sherlock, which will be followed by those of Jeremy Taylor, Dr. Barrow, Tillotson' Beveridge, S. Clark, Jewell, Jortin, Ogden, Powell, Fawcett, Cahrnock, Hooper, Bull, Leighton, Hopkins, Howe, Maclaurin, South, Secker, &c. &c.

"A Summary of each discourse is admirably calculated to assist the Divine in the arduous task of Composition for the pulpit."—Observer, London.

"No archetype can be better than Sherlock and Barrow adapted to modern taste."—Gentleman's Magazine.

"To the Christian Minister, at the outset of life and the Theological Student, such a work must prove invaluable."—Exeter Flying Post.

"The mode pursued is to present the skeleton of the discourse only, retaining the order, the arguments and, as it were, the key notes of the original. By this means a great saving of space and money is effected. Judging from the specimen before us, the work will be carefully and skilfully done. The abridgment reads continuously, and preserves the effect of a whole."—Spectator.

The above very valuable work, which has been highly commended by Ministers and Religious Press in Great Britain, the subscriber proposes to republish in this country, if sufficient encouragement is given

The work was originally published by A. J. Valpy, A. M., editor of the Family Classical Library, Greek Septuagint, &c. &c.—and edited by Rev. T. R. Hughes, B. D., Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Peterborough—late Christian Advocate at Cambridge, Editor of the Continuation of Hume and Smollet's History of England from the reign of George the 2d, to 1835, Author of Travels in Greece, &c. &c. The well established literary reputation of the original editor and publisher will no doubt be a sufficient guaranty that the abridgement has been executed with skill and fidelity.

CONDITIONS.

1. The work will be commenced as soon as 300 subscribers are obtained.
2. It will be printed on paper of very superior quality with type and page similar to the North American Review.
3. It will be Issued quarterly, each number to contain at least, 132 pages, making a volume of 528 octavo pages, anually, with a Title Page, and an Index containig a list of texts, subjects, &c.
4. Price $2 a year, payable on the reception of the 1st number.
5. The work will commence with the republication of the valuable Sermons and Discourses of Sherlock, which will be followed with those of Jeremy Taylor, or Dr. Barrow. The first year will contain the whole of Sherlock and Taylor, or Sherlock and Barrow.

N. B. As the proposals for republishing the above work originates in a want frequently expressed by ministers, no agents will be appointed, as those wishing for the work, by writing a line something similar to the following and getting the Postmaster to sign and frank it, can forward their orders free of expense;—

By request of (here inser your own name,) forward you his name as a subscriber to the "Reprint of the Old Divines." You will direct his copy to (here give your Post Office address.) signed,
—— ——, P. M.

It will be understod that no money is expected with the orders for the work, as it will not be published unless 300 subscribers are obtained. It s hoped, however, that so many as design to subsdribe for it, will forward their names immediately. As the number of copies issued will depend upon the number of copies ordered, ministers will perceive the necesity of ordering the work at the commencement.

LITERARY AND THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTIONS.

Officers of Literary and Theological Institutions, who may receive this Prospectus, are respectfully requested to hand it to some active young man, who will exert himself to obtain a list of subscribers in the Institution; and Students, and Beneficiaries of the Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, and christian, Education Societies, will be furnished with the work on the following very low terms, viz: two copies for $3, or seven copies for $10, and a copy gratis to the individual acting as agent.

$5 will pay for two copies of "The Young People's Library," and one copy of the Reprint of the Old Divines." or $10, for five copies of "The young People's Library," and one do. of the "Reprint of the Old Divines." Any Minister or Student shall receive the above works on these terms.

BOOKS! BOOKS !! BOOKS!!
EDWIN P. BLY,

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of De Ruyter and the public generally, that he has for sale Books of most kinds and descriptions usually called for in any Book Store. The following are a few, viz:—Davies Geometry, do. Surveying, do. Algebra, do. Arithmetic, do. First Lessons in Arithmetic. Also, almost all kinds of Latin, Greek and Italian, Olney's Geography & Atlas, Burnet's Geography of the Heavens.

Common Schools can be supplied with Books for a Library.

BOOK BINDING

Done in a neat and durable manner, and as cheap as can be done in any other place, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany St., De Ruyter.
De Ruyter, November 1st, 1840. 35tf

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6
S. D. DELLAY.

Medicines! Medicines!!
TO FAMILIES.

S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public; for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s
MOTHER'S RELIEF.
JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT—
DR. McMUN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—
MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—
DOCT. BISHOP'S ANTI BILLIOUS PILLS: A HIGHLY VALUABLE FAMILY MEDICINE.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
GEO. W. SUTTON.
De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick.
Belivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman.
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin, H. S. Crandall.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott—Joel Greene, Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Hopkinton.—Joseph Spicer, jun., P. M.
Westerly.—Jonathan Maxson.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh.—Isaac Titsworth
Salem.—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Genera—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport.—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield.—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson.—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISCONSIN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher, free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 8.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 60.
TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, APRIL 23, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

The Ruins of Time.

BY HENRY GOODWIN.

Of the many subjects upon which the mind of man is led to dwell with deep and thrilling interest, none present to our view a more spacious field for solemn contemplation, or a fairer region for the fancy-flight of imagination, than the Ruins of Time.—When we consider the transitory existence of all human works; the splendid productions of genius, which are but as so many monuments of decay, and behold the fairest fabrics ever reared by human hands defaced or destroyed by the desolating hand of Time; how is it possible to avoid feeling a deep and lively interest in things which concern us so nearly!

When we turn our eyes to the East, the land of holy writ, with what deep and mingled emotions of wonder and awe do we behold the remains of those cities which were once the emporium and center of the civilized world, where were assembled the great, the rich and the powerful of every clime and nation, now mouldering in ruins! With what a melancholy interest do we linger around the antiquated ruins of Palmyra, and survey the remains of the once mighty Thebes, the grandeur and magnificence of whose ruins have for centuries excited the wonder and admiration of mankind! And with what feelings of solemnity do we gaze upon Petrea, the ancient capital of Edom, whose destruction was foretold by the Most High, in the following terrible denunciation: "Oh! thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rocks, that holdest the heights of the hill, though thou shouldst make thy nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down from thence; and thorns shall come up in her palaces, nettles and brambles in the fastnesses thereof, and it shall be a habitation for dragons, and a court for owls." How forcibly are we impressed with the truth of the words of the inspired penman, written when this was one of the most magnificent, populous, and powerful cities in the world. But where are the inhabitants? the young, the gay, the beautiful, and the high ones of this now desolate city? They have long since passed to their eternal home; and her splendid palaces and magnificent temples have crumbled to the dust. Her streets, which were once crowded with the busy throng, are now lonely and silent; nought disturbs the stillness of its ruins save the wild beast, or the still wilder Arab, as he wanders in search of some hidden treasure. And as the traveler gazes upon her wide-spread ruins, his mind is irresistibly carried back to the time,

When in this silent place
Far other sounds were heard,—
Sounds of man's pleasure and distress,
The living, frequent, tread.
But where are they! This wilderness
Shows scarce a single shed;
And save the shepherd to the fold,
Or, mountain passing, fen behold
This city of the dead.
Peace to their sleep! from year to year
How quietly they slumber here!

Let us now turn from contemplating the remains of Eastern magnificence, and cast a passing glance upon Greece—once lovely Greece—the land of scholars and of Arts; the home of eloquence and of science; the mother of Philosophers, of Poets and of Orators; that Greece to whose genius and improvement in the arts and sciences mankind are indebted for the knowledge which they possess; whose ancient grandeur and glory are recorded upon the brightest pages of history. But now how changed! Fallen, indeed, is the land of Demosthenes. Her glory has departed; her once splendid temples are in ruins; her monuments are decayed and broken. We no longer behold her sons displaying the bravery and patriotism of Leonidas or Miltiades, or the wisdom of a Solon or Lycurgus; neither do we hear from the rostrum the thundering eloquence of a Demosthenes; nor from her schools the philosophy of a Socrates or a Plato; nor from the pens of her poets the inspired strains of a Homer.

Look for a moment upon Rome—imperial Rome! once the proud mistress of the world, the renown and terror of whose arms spread to the remotest regions of the earth. She, too, has fallen! The golden eagle, which hovered with outstretched wings over the Imperial City, has long since taken its flight and winged its way to a more congenial clime; and Rome, the genius of whose people and wisdom of whose laws have been for succeeding ages the admiration of mankind, now presents nought but one broad expanse of ruin! Her wise statesmen who first formed those laws to which she was indebted for the mighty power which she possessed, and her profound philosophers have passed away. Her Orators, who by the magic of their stirring eloquence could rouse the dormant passions of the human heart, or by a nod bid them—be still—they too have crossed the Stygian wave.

Her poets, "touched by the Muse's fire," rendering immortal each lofty deed of daring which they sung, have long since "hung their harps upon the willow," and their voices are hushed in the eternal stillness of Death. Desolate is the land of the Cæsars. The bright halo of glory which once encircled her proud name is dimmed. Upon her palaces and her lofty domes, and even upon her SEVEN HILLS are inscribed those fearful and fatal words, "PASSING AWAY."

But let us not confine our attention to Time's dark ravages in the old world alone. When we contemplate the condition of our own happy country, and consider that these pleasant fields and populous cities which we every where behold, rising as if by magic, occupy the places of a once dark and tangled forest, the happy home of the red man, we can but say, that Time has indeed dealt heavily with the Aborigines of our land. Their shrill war-whoop is no longer re-echoed upon the mountains. The wild game fly not before the lightning speed of their arrows. Their song and their war-dance is hushed, and their council fires are quenched in the blood of their warriors.—They have left the graves of their ancestors, and are seeking a quiet home in the wilds of the distant west.

On glancing back through the dark vista of the past, we have beheld the desolation of nations and cities; have seen the proudest works and monuments of man laid in ruins by the relentless hand of Time. But 'tis not in past ages alone that Time's fell ravages are displayed; all things around us are marked with the seal of decay. We see our fellow beings departing to their eternal home. The young and the beautiful, with their fair cheeks and sparkling eyes, are mown down like summer flowers. The grey haired veteran, who has braved many a dark storm during the changing vicissitudes of life, passes to the silent tomb. We behold the youth, as he takes his part in the great drama of life, fondly dreaming of future fame, changed to the infirm and aged man. The days of his youth are like the visions of the past. And in our own youthful land, Time will soon bring many and fearful changes. We shall leave these halls buoyant with hope, our hearts glowing with noble aspirations for honor and future glory. But we shall soon have passed away, and "the places that know us now, shall know us no more forever."

De Ruyter Institute, April 7, 1841.

For the Register.

What is the true Aim for Missionary Effort.

It is a well known fact, that while great exertions during many consecutive years have been made for the conversion of the heathen world, and much has transpired to enkindle the ardor of the christian and the philanthropist; yet, in comparison to the amount of life sacrificed, and labor and time spent, the effect has fallen so far short of the desideratum that the Christian may well, yea, should stop and enquire—What is the cause? It is a source of grief to the true Christian that the religion of Jesus Christ, which has the promise of being universal, (as its author is to "reign king of nations as he now reigns king of saints,") makes as yet, even nominally, so slight an impression upon distant and powerful nations of the earth. And if he is truly awake to the subject, and considers that for a great length of time, with a trifling exception, it has made no acquisition of territory, his tears will run more freely.—While the united powers of European and American christians have been bent upon the Asiatic and African shores; upon the isles of the North and South; and upon every nook and corner of the earth, to evangelize and christianize the benighted heathen, but little in comparison has been done for the Jews.

A people so long upheld by supernatural and divine power; so universally scattered among, and yet kept separate from all people; around whom hangs such a halo of faded glory, and upon whom, according to scripture predictions, is to burst such unnumbered beams of light and glory.—A people that are so conspicuously placed in almost every accessible part of the globe; and who are bound by such imperishable ties of interest to the Christian church, may well claim the sympathies, prayers, and labors of the missionary and his supporters; and these, with a few honorable exceptions, they have not received. How few the efforts that have been made to bring the gospel direct to the body of the Jewish people? I would not presume to impugn the wisdom, the piety, or devotion to the cause of the truly excellent of the earth, who, for the last half century have stood forth in bold relief, as the pillars of the cause of missions. Yet, I would humbly ask for consideration upon the subject while I propound a few questions. As man, in his best earthly estate, is but a poor erring creature, may there not have been a wrong direction given to the missionary labor, or at least to the main portion of it? Or if right, formerly, may not the change of times and the development of circumstances require the united efforts of the christian church now to be made in behalf of the Jews? Is it not the case that missions have been the most successful among those people where there were no Jews dispersed? as, for instance, the South Sea Islands, Southern Africa, &c. Is not this an admonition not to neglect them, that is, the Jews? And does not the scripture present to us the idea that the gathering again of the dispersed of Israel into one nation, and to the worship of their God, will be the foundation of the universal gathering of the Gentile world? This I believe to be true; and while in the present day missionary efforts are increasing, yet being spent, in a great measure, in a wrong channel, so far they must necessarily prove abortive. For if it be the case that "the receiving of them again" will be to the church "but as life from the dead," and the time has fully come for "the deliverer to come out of Zion, which shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob;" fruitless must be our expectations while we expend our efforts in a diverse channel. All things around us seem to call upon us to awake fully to the subject of missions. And prophetic writings, the declarations of the Savior and the Apostles, and the gathering interests of the Jewish people, call us earnestly to awake to their situation, their claims on us, and our duty.

Let us, then, so many as love the mission cause, put away the pernicious habit of spiritualizing away the promises of the restoration and conversion of the Jews.—That giving them their literal meaning, we may be able to take hold of the subject aright, and through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, we may prosecute it to the praise of his glory.

E.

Religious Department.

THE DESTROYER OF DEATH.

BY DR. CHALMERS.

When we look at the wide extent and universality of the ravages of death, how hopeless is our escape! We see no exception—it scatters its desolations with unsparing regularity among all the sons and daughters of Adam. It perhaps adds to our despair when we see it extending to the lower animals, or behold the lovely forms of the vegetable creation dissolving into nothing. It carries to our observation all the mutability of a general law; we can look for no mitigation of the incorrigible distemper; we cannot reverse the process of nature, nor bid her mighty elements to retire. Is there no power, then, superior to nature, and which can control it? To us a law of the universe carries the idea of some fixed and unalterable necessity along with it, and of none more strict, more unfailing, and more widely extensive in its operations than the law of death. In the wide circuit of things does there exist no higher authority that can abolish this law?—no power that can overthrow death, that can grapple with this mighty conqueror and break his tyranny to pieces? We never saw that being, but the records of past ages have come down to us, and we there read of the extraordinary visitor who lighted on these realms where death had reigned so long in all the triumphs of extended empire. Wonderful enterprise! He came to destroy death. Vast undertaking! He came to depose nature from this conceived immutability; and a law which embraced within its wide grasp all who live and move on the face of the world, he came to overturn; and he soon gave token of a power commensurate to the mighty undertaking. That nature to whose operations we are so apt to ascribe some stubborn and invincible necessity, gave way at his coming; she felt his authority through all her elements, and she obeyed it. Wonderful period!—when the constancy of nature was broken in upon by him who established it—when the Deity vindicated his honor, and the miracles of a single age, committed to authentic history, gave evidence to all futurity that there is a power above nature and beyond it. What more unchanging than the aspect of the starry heavens—and in what quarter of her dominions does nature maintain a more silent and solemn inflexibility, than in the orbs which roll around us?—Yet at the coming of that mighty Savior, these heavens broke silence—music was heard from their canopy, and it came from a congregation of living voices, which sung the praises of God, and made them fall in articulate language on human ears. After this, who can call nature unalterable? Jesus Christ hath abolished death, he has made perpetual invasion upon nature's constancy, and she never in a single instance resisted the word of his power. "What manner of man is this?" said his disciples, "even the wind and sea obey him!" Philosophers love to expatiate, and they tell us of the laws of the animal and vegetable kingdom. These laws may prove an impassable barrier to us, but in the hand of the omnipotent Savior they were nothing—he reversed or supported them at pleasure; he blasted the fig tree by a single word; and what to us was the basis of high anticipation, he made the subject of his miracles. He restored sight to the blind, he restored speech to the dumb, he restored motion to the palsied, and to crown his triumph over nature and her processes, he restored life to the dead—he laid down his own life, and took it up again. The disciples gave up all for lost when they saw the champion of their hopes made the victim of the very mortality which he promised to destroy. It was alike the contest and victory of nature—but it was only to make his triumph more complete. He entered—

"That undiscovered country from whose bourn
No traveler e'er returns"—

But he did. He broke asunder the mighty barriers of the grave; he entered and he re-animated that body which expired on the cross, and by that most striking of all testimonies he has given us to know that he hath fought against the law of death, and hath carried it.

From the Christian Intelligencer.

GOLDEN LEGENDS.

CAUTION NECESSARY.—When I see the fisherman bait his hook, I think on Satan's subtle malice, who sugars over his poisoned hooks with seeming pleasures. Thus Eve's fruit was candied with divine knowledge—"Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." When I see the fish fast hanged, I think upon the covetous worldling, who leaps at the profit without considering the danger. Thus Achan took the garment, and the gold, but never considered that his life must answer for it. If Satan be such a "fisher of men," it is good to look before we leap. Honey may be eaten, so that we take heed of the sting. I will honestly enjoy my delights, but not buy them with danger.—Warwick.

POWER OF THE GOSPEL.—The scruple is often heard, and sometimes from good men, who have taken but short views on the subject, "What, after all, can you accomplish? Iniquity abounds, and the wicked seem to multiply and wax bolder!" Sadly true; but what would the world become, without restraint?—abandoned to its chosen course, and the reign of indulgence thrown on the neck of every passion?—The Christian religion is healthy and purifying, and is adapted to the temporal, intellectual and moral wants of our race. It harmonizes with the constitution of our physical and moral nature, and if its influences ever become disastrous, it is because by perverting it we have made them such. There is nothing in the united universe that can so elevate and refine the soul.—Take the most degraded from the haunts of vice, and let the spirit of God seal the gospel in his heart, in the assurance that the Lord waits to be gracious, and notwithstanding all his vileness will be reconciled, and remit all, and forgive all his rebellion and ingratitude; and his soul rises at the blessed thought; his bosom will begin to expand with noble impulses, as the love of God in the great scheme of redemption warms his soul. Now he hates his chains, abhors his vileness; his spirit breaks away from his bondage, and he rises to the liberty and purity of the sons of God.—There is an energy and power in crucified love, that when it beams on the soul, melts, and humbles, and exalts it. This mighty motive will yet bring the world of rebellion to submission and obedience, in filial trust and love.—Frelinghuysen.

TIME.—Spend your time in nothing which you know must be repented of.—Spend it in nothing on which you might not pray for the blessing of God. Spend it in nothing which you could not review with a quiet conscience on your dying bed. Spend it in nothing which you might not safely and properly be found doing, if death should surprise you in the act.—Baxter.

PLEASURE.—There are many things that in themselves have nothing that is truly delightful; on the contrary, they have a good deal of bitterness in them; and yet, from our perverse appetites after forbidden objects, are not only ranked among the pleasures, but are made even the greatest designs of life. To pursue such rainbow visions is folly. True pleasure lies in the soul and consists in knowledge, and in that delight which the contemplation of truth carries with it; to which may be added, the joyful reflections on a well spent life, and the assured hopes of a future glorious immortality.—More.

HAVE YOU THE HOLY SPIRIT?—"If you have the Holy Spirit, you have seen the evil of sin; you have repented of sin; you have forsaken sin; you hate sin; you watch and pray against sin; you have received the spirit of love. If you have the Spirit of God, you love God supremely; you love the Father who gave his Son to suffer and die; you love the Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, for what he hath done and suffered on your account. You love all the sincere followers of Jesus Christ, and confine not your regards to a party. You love the human race at large, as children of the same family, and you wish them to know the things that belong to their peace.

You are of a forbearing and forgiving temper; you pity and pray for sinners, who, through blindness and ignorance, oppose at present their own eternal interest; you are of a thankful spirit; you thank God for making to differ, by his grace, from many others; and you praise him for every favor, both of a temporal and spiritual nature;—you are zealous for the honor of God in the world; you desire to rejoice in Christ Jesus, and in all the duties of Christianity; and you esteem the applause, the pleasure, and the wealth of the whole world, as nothing, in comparison of the love and blessing of God, through Christ Jesus.

REPENTANCE.—How long time has thou, sinner? I cannot tell for God hath not revealed it unto me. If he had, I would not tell you of it. I would not be afraid, nor spare to tell it you for the good will I bear you; but I cannot tell how long time you have, for God hath not opened it to me.—But I can tell you that this lenity, this long forbearance and holding of his hand, provoketh us to repent and amend. I can tell, that whosoever contemneth these riches and treasures of God's goodness, of his mercy, his patience, and long suffering, shall have the more grievous condemnation. This I can tell well enough. Paul telleth me thus; and I can tell, that ye have to repent as long as ye live here in this world; but after this life I can make no warrant of any future time to repent.—Therefore, repent and amend while ye be here, for when ye are gone hence, ye are past that. But how long that shall be, within to-morrow or the next day, or twenty years, I cannot tell.—Latimer.

SAINTS IN HEAVEN.—Temptation and Sin have no place in heaven. Those evils belong to earth and hell; but within the gates of heaven nothing must enter that tempteth—nothing that defileth. The mixture of sinful thoughts and idle words, sinful actions and irregular affections, makes our state of holiness so imperfect here below. We groan within ourselves, being burdened. We would be rid of those criminal weaknesses, those guilty attendants of our lives. The Spirits above are under the sweet necessity of being for ever holy. Their natures have put on perfection. The image of God is so far completed in them, that nothing contrary to the divine nature remains in all their frame—for they see God in all the fairest beauties of his holiness, and they adore and love. They behold him without a veil, and are changed into the same image from glory to glory.—Watts.

HARDEN NOT YOUR HEARTS.—The metal of the human soul, so to speak, is like some material substance. If the force which you lay upon it do not break or dissolve it, it will beat into hardness. If the moral argument by which it is plied now, do not so soften the mind as to carry and overpower its purposes, then on another day the argument may be put forth, in terms as impressive, but it falls on a harder heart, and therefore with a more slender efficiency. You have resisted to-day, and by that resistance you have acquired a firmer metal of resistance against the power of every future warning that may be brought to bear upon you. You have stood your ground against the urgency of the most earnest admonition, and against the dreadfulness of the most terrifying menaces.—On that ground you have fixed yourself more immoveably than before; and though on some future day, the same spiritual thunder be made to play around you, it will not shake you out of your obstinacy of your determined rebellion.—Chalmers.

AN INFIDEL'S ADVICE.

A writer in the Western Observer, Bishop McIlvaine, we presume, relates the following remarkable anecdote:

I have recently been in conversation with a gentleman who personally knew Tom Paine, from whom I have learned some particulars, which it may be useful to repeat. This gentleman states, that when a young man he was driving his father's wagon from Sing Sing to a place in Westchester co., N. Y., when Paine, traveling the same way requested to be taken in. The young man consenting, they rode about twenty miles together. The fame and talk about 'Paine's Age of Reason,' had made a sceptical impression on the mind of the youth, and finding himself in the presence of its author, he gladly availed himself of the opportunity to learn more of that sort of reason. In the course of the conversation, Paine positively asserted that he believed the Scriptures to be the word of God, and most seriously charged his auditor not to read his book, or if he did, not suffer it to have any influence on his mind. He said it did not contain the truth; that he wrote it, at first, without the intention of publishing, merely to see what he could do; that he deeply regretted its publication, and would have given any thing had he never written it. Such was the serious earnestness of Paine in these remarks, and so conclusively did he reason against the principles of his 'Age of Reason,' that he entirely removed all sceptical impressions from the mind of the young man, (the present reformant,) so that the latter has ever since retained a grateful recollection of the conversation, and now says, that such was Paine's earnestness to prevent his being injured by his writings, and to eradicate all such evil impressios as they had already made, that he can never lose the remembrance of it. The same gentleman says, that he has heard of several persons who could relate the same observations from Paine to them.

PEACE IN DEATH.—On board an East Indiaman was a pious boatswain whom, on this account, the crew looked upon as a strange man. The ship was overtaken with a storm so dreadful, that after every effort to preserve life, the captain said, "All that could be done had been done—it was impossible the vessel could weather it."—The ship seemed sinking—the captain withdrew into the cabin—the men were some on their knees, and others with horror hanging on parts of the rigging. All expected the vessel would founder. The boatswain had been very active, and apparently unalarmed, during the whole of the gale. At this moment, when a heavy sea struck the ship, and seemed as if it would instantly sink, looking up with a smile he exclaimed, "Blessed be God, all is right!" and began to sing. The storm afterwards abated, and the vessel was saved. Thus, amidst the storms of life, on the dark ocean of death, and amidst the terrors of the judgment day, the Christian may still smile and exultingly exclaim, "Blessed be God, all is right!"

Children's Department.

WHEN WILL YOU LOVE GOD?

One Sabbath morning I had been talking to a class at the Sunday School, about the love of God in giving up his only Son to die for us. The children were all very attentive: at length I said, "Since God has shown so much love for us, ought we not to love him in return;" I waited for an answer, but no one replied. I then turned to one little girl, and said, "What do you think about it, Fanny?"

'I cannot love God now,' the little girl replied.

'Cannot love him, my dear!' I said:—'why cannot you? God gave Jesus to die for you; and, besides this, it is he that gives you your friends, your food, clothing, and every other blessing which you receive; and, if I am not very much mistaken, you love your mother in return for her kindness to you, and why cannot you love God in return for his kindness?"

'I cannot love him now, teacher,' the little girl replied.

'And why not now?' I asked. 'If you cannot now, when will you love him?'

'I will love him when I get to heaven, teacher,' said Fanny.

'But nay, dear child, if you do not love him now, do you think God will take you to heaven? O no! you must love him now, and thus, when you get to heaven, you will love him much more.'

'And when, my dear, will you love God?" said I, turning to another little girl.

'Oh! teacher,' said the little girl, and the tears started into her eyes, "I do love him a little now, but I want to love him more.'

'And what must you do if you want to love him more.'

'I must pray to God to help me ma'am.'

'Yes,' I replied, 'and he will help you; he delights in the prayers even of a child, and he will hear your prayers, if you pray in sincerity.'

I then turned to another, and said, 'When will you love God, Emma?'

'I love him now, teacher; and thus when I die, I shall go to heaven, and I shall see little William; for mother says that he is gone to heaven.'

I had no time to reply, for the signal was now given to close the school; but as I was collecting the books, Fanny said, 'I will love God now, teacher; I will pray to him to help me."

'Do pray to him,' I replied, "and he will help you.'

And now, my young readers, I will put the same question to you—'When will you love God?' Do not put it off, and think you cannot love him now, for you have great cause to love him. If you had committed a crime for which you were to be severely punished, and one came forward and begged to take the punishment which was due to you upon himself, would you not love him in return? would you not fear to offend him? How much more, then, ought you to love God, seeing that he has given up his only Son to die to save you from the punishment which was due to you for your sins! O for such love to guilty sinners, can you do less than love him in return? Give him your heart; seek to please him, to serve him, and love him now; and when you die, you will go to heaven, and love him for ever.—London Child's Companion.

Could we but look into many domestic circles, with all their outward show of finery, what scenes of misery would present themselves to our view, all originating in the senseless rage for gentility, or the silly ambition of figuring in a higher station than that to which they belong.

Nothing annoys an enemy more than kindness. It is an arrow that generally hits the mark. It is the most severe, yet the most noble mode of treatment.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, April 23, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

De Ruyter Institute.

The Trustees of De Ruyter Institute are happy to announce to their patrons that they have secured the services of Mr. JOSEPH A. BADGER, as Teacher of Languages, &c. Mr. Badger's recommendations are a sufficient guaranty that he will be fully able to give perfect satisfaction to all who may be placed under his instruction.

CAMPBELL'S CARRIAGE, SIGN & ORNAMENTAL PAINTING: 120 pp. octavo.

The above work has just been issued from our press. We have the fullest assurance that it will be of great service to the class of artists for whom it was designed. The author was a practical painter, of no mean repute. His work is scientific, and the author exhibits a thorough acquaintance with the art. Eld. Campbell having died just before the work went to press, it was purchased by R. R. LEWIS, of Scott, by whose direction it is published. The book, we learn, is selling rapidly, and is very highly esteemed.

National Fast.

By reference to the Proclamation in another column, it will be seen that President TYLER has recommended a day of fasting to be religiously observed throughout the country. This we trust will meet a glad response throughout the land. The country deeply feels the loss of her President. Our exchanges, almost without exception, are clad in the habiliments of mourning.—The heat of party zeal is lost in deep sorrow for the death of the officer of highest rank in the nation. We especially hope that this Proclamation will meet a hearty response in every Christian's heart, and in all the churches. We have much need to humble ourselves in view of our national sins, and implore the continuance of that care which has brought us thus far in our national course. Our country has been most highly favored of Heaven. Our institutions have flourished; our battles have been fought, and peace and plenty have almost invariably attended us. But, like Israel, we have forgotten God to a great extent, and laid a heavy yoke upon many who were made for the enjoyment of freedom.

Br. S. M. BURDICK informs us that there have been six added to the church in Lincklaen within a few weeks past. Four of whom have lately embraced Christ, and one of these is a convert to the Sabbath of the Bible.

From the Ravenna (Ohio,) Cabinet and Visiter.

There can be no mistaking of the fourth command of the decalogue, Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. This is a clear, positive, plain, explicit and direct command, and by it, we are clearly bound to keep the Sabbath, religiously, as a day of rest, and abstinence from the ordinary pursuits of the world. The only exception granted, is that contained in the New Testament, for works of necessity and mercy, involving relief to the immediate wants and distresses of man and beast. He who made the Sabbath day, and commanded it to be kept holy, knew all things, and foreseeing all things, knew what inducement there would be to violate this particular command in this particular respect, yet it seems it did not comport with the wisdom of his plan to make any exception, or to grant any indulgence, save the one above mentioned. How then can any one doubt as to the path of duty in this matter—how can any one of God's children hesitate to make the strict observance of HIS SABBATH, a point of exact conscientious duty? It is to be feared that the fashion of the times and the laws of the land, together with the natural inclination of the heart, have more to do, in shaping the conduct of professed disciples, than do "the statutes of the Lord." This is a matter of great moment, and one which it well behooves the church seriously to examine, for in so far as the laws of God are observed, so far, and so far only, may we look for prosperity. In conclusion, we may add, that the light which the Scriptures clearly shed upon this subject, can neither be added to, or diminished by the sophistry of man.

The foregoing we take from the Western Reserve Cabinet and Family Visiter, published at Ravenna, Ohio. We feel most grateful for the sentiments expressed in this article. When the convenience system governs religious creeds, so much as at the present day, we are most happy to find any contending with such zeal for the law of the Lord. It is a matter of great grief to the friends of the Redeemer, to see the word of the Lord trampled under foot by the professed friends of purity and truth, and to see the "innovations of the man of sin" supersede the commands of the Most High. The Church can never triumph in the convenience system. It must come back again to its pristine purity, and men must "call the Sabbath a delight," and refrain from doing their pleasure on God's holy day. No subject can be made plainer than is the subject of the Sabbath in the scriptures, and we think, with our brother of the Cabinet, that "there can be no mistaking the fourth command of the Decalogue." Here is a Sabbatic law—a "thus saith the Lord." To the christian, there is no higher authority than the word of God. The heavens and earth may pass away, but God's word shall never pass away.

All time is the same with God. All time, past or to come, is present with him; and when he speaks of time without limiting it, he speaks of eternity. So it is in the law mentioned in the above extract,—"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." This word, is, comprehends all time. It is no where limited. It refers back to the seventh-day of time, and forward as long as seven days of time shall remain.

Having these facts before us, we deeply lament when we see men professedly pious setting aside this holy law, and adopting a convenience system. It is time to stand in defense of God's holy law, and to contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the saints. Men must learn obedience to God if they would see his truth triumph over error. We exhort a return to pristine purity and obedience.—We are anxious to see the time when all shall walk by the same rule, and when there shall be but one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and one Sabbath.

By the way, we would suggest to our brother of the Cabinet, whether obedience to the Sabbatic law which he so much loves, would not require a change in his practice? The phraseology is very specific, and in no way ambiguous. It can not be misunderstood.

Extracts from Letters.

Extract of a letter from Br. L. A. DAVIS, dated, Port Jefferson, Ohio, April 2d, 1841.

"The three churches are in a flourishing condition. We have had some trials since you left us, but a happy state of union still prevails. We have had some additions and a number more expected soon. The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Extract of a letter from Br. J. GOODRICH, dated, Milton, Rock Co., Wiskonsan Territory, March 25th, 1841.

"Your Register is well liked in this place by all who have read it, and I am extremely sorry that there should be any falling off among its supporters, and I hope I shall be able soon to send on names to increase the subscription.

"The people here are all well, and are of the opinion that they are located in the best part of the world; surely, we have a good heritage. We have not had any rain since the middle of November, until within a few days, and then not much.

"Yours in haste."

Missionary Department.

For the Register.

The American S. D. B. H. M. Society.

It is generally known that I was appointed a Missionary to travel within the bounds of the denomination, for the purpose of supplying as many of the destitute churches with preaching, as I could, whilst I was instructed to visit the more highly favored churches for the purpose of receiving their contributions in aid of the funds of the society. In accordance with this appointment, I came home, arranged my business, and commenced my labors. I went to Persia, Cattaraugus Co., where I remained nearly two weeks, but the weather was very stormy, and the roads in such a state that the people, generally, could not get out to meetings. I came home, and after some time I went to Alfred, where I expected to receive a considerable sum in aid of the cause. But I found that there was so much dissatisfaction resting in the minds of all the brethren with whom I conversed, with regard to the constitution of the Society, and the manner in which the affairs of the Society had been conducted, that there was no prospect of raising money enough to pay traveling expenses, over and above what would be raised in the regular mode; and being aware that it was not expected that the Mission would add to the debt already due by the Society, I thought it expedient to call upon the Executive Committee for advice, whether it would be better to proceed any farther or to stop. They accordingly met; and after having deliberated upon the subject, informed me that in their opinion it would be better to go no farther in the matter. Under these circumstances, I gave up all idea of prosecuting the Mission, and I write this for the purpose of letting the churches know the situation of affairs; so that they may take measures to advance the welfare of the cause, without waiting for a visit from me, as their Missionary.

I have only further to say, that if ever there was a time when we, as a denomination, were loudly called upon to enter vigorously into the Home Missionary enterprize, it is now. The Lacedemonian cry is heard from all quarters, "Come over and help us," especially from the west; and I am sure that if many of our brethren who are rolling in the lap of luxury, both as it regards temporal and spiritual things, could hear the pathetic appeal for help that have been lately made, and see the spiritual dearth that exists in many portions of the land, they would not give "sleep to their eyes, nor slumber to their eye-lids," until they had given up that portion of the property which they hold in possession, which ought long ere this, to have been consecrated to this glorious cause.

JAMES H. COCHRAN.

Controversial Papers.

For the Register.

Reasons for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity.

NO. II.

MR. EDITOR.—My second reason for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity, is that our Lord Jesus Christ expressly and repeatedly acknowledges the Father to be his God, as well as his Father, and that he is also so represented by the Apostles and Prophets.

This acknowledgment is made, not in reference merely to an inferior nature, or office; but in reference to his entire person, or being. It is manifestly made on the same ground that God is declared to be the God and Father of his people. Thus, when on the cross, he cried out, "my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Mark xv. 34. And, after his resurrection, he said to Mary, "I ascend to my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God," John xx. 17, placing himself in the same dependent relation to God which belonged to that disciple.

Again, he says, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God," Rev. iii. 12, and "Lo, I came to do thy will O God." Heb. x. 7. Will it be said that he speaks thus as man and mediator only? Where, I ask, is it said, or intimated that he spake thus, otherwise than in his entire person—his very self, which must include his entire being? Where, in all the sacred volume, is it said, that he spake certain things as man, and other things as God? There is no example of any such thing. This turning from Divinity to humanity, and from humanity to Divinity, to explain what is predicated of Christ, has no countenance, as I can find, from his scriptures. Besides; do not Trinitarians consider him, in his capacity as mediator, both God and man, or, as it is frequently expressed, 'God-man;' 'God-incarnate;' 'man-divine?' In that case, he must make these declarations as God, as well as man; which is palpably inconsistent. Moreover; God is represented to be his God in the character, or capacity of Lord, which is the highest that he sustains. Paul calls him "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." Eph. i. 3. "And the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory," verse 17.

Again, he says, "that ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. xv. 6. Again, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ knoweth that I lie not." 2 Cor. xi. 31. Peter also styles him "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Epist. i. 3. The prophet Micah also says, "he shall stand and feed in the strength of the Lord, in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God," ch. v. 4. And David, ascribing to him, according to the common version, the title, God, speaks of him in the same connection as having a God. "Therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." Ps xlv. 6, 7. Also, in a number of places where we meet with the phrase in the common version, "God and the Father," the full sense of the original requires it to be rendered, "the God and Father," identifying God and the Father, and showing that he is as truly the God of Jesus Christ, as he is of any man, or angel; and that he is the God of him in his highest character and dignity. The only difference is, that Christ is "the First-born among many brethren," and "made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they." Exalted to universal Lordship, he still takes the attitude of a child, and a subject of the living God, saying "my Father and your Father, my God and your God." Hence, believers are represented as being "joint-heirs with him of God,"—Rom. viii. 17, which implies that he is an heir of him too; and, therefore, cannot be the God whom he is the heir of. Whoever heard, or conceived of any one's being heir of himself? Besides; what is the meaning of the expressions, "the God of our Lord," and "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," if he possess a nature of which God is not the God?

Moreover; the highest glory which he receives, according to Phil. ii. 11, is to the glory of God the Father. It does not terminate on himself; but passes from him to a superior, and that superior is the Father. Whereas, the homage which the supreme God receives is not to the glory of another; but terminates on himself. Jesus Christ is to be universally worshipped as Lord; but never as the supreme God.—To affirm this, is not lowering his true character. God forbid that I should withhold from him his due. It can be no virtue to place him higher than the Father and himself have estimated him. Awarding to their estimation of him, he is the First-born Son of God; but as truly a Son as any other, though inconceivably the greatest of all creatures; and made Lord by gift and appointment—all which evinces a dependence on the alone Supreme; and which dependence he, on all occasions, either expressly, or impliedly confessed. Accordingly, he prayed to the Father, John 17 ch., acknowledged the glory which he had with him before the world was, to be a gift, verse 22, 24; and prayed to be restored to it, verse 5. He gave thanks to God, Mat. xi. 25, and John xi. 41, 42; sang praises to him, Heb. ii. 12; trusted in him, &c., and worshipped him, John iv. 21, 22. Yea; he was the Father's servant, appointed, sustained and rewarded by him, Isa. xlii. 1—8. He "came forth from God," "not to do his own will; but the will of him that sent him," John vi. 38. "And though a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered," Heb. v. 8.

This view, therefore, of Christ, which there is nothing in the scriptures really to contradict, (which will be hereafter shown,) presents a valid reason for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity.

Yours in the Lord,
JABEZ CHADWICK.

Weedsport, April, 1841.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The news by the Acadia, down to the 19th ult., affords but little additional information. The excitement produced by the reception of Pickens' report, was still existing; and the probabilities of a war between England and this country, were greatly talked of, even in the most intelligent circles.

Warlike Preparations.

The Portsmouth Journal says:—"We have this day learnt that our government, in order to prepare for any emergency that may spring out of the case of M'Leod, (and if the Republic execute him, we do not think there is a man in this United Kingdom, but will demand justice,) have directed six regiments to hold themselves in readiness to embark for America—two of which are the 19th and 84th regiments now in Ireland. It is also stated in private letters from the first circles in Paris, that Lord Granville officially announced to M. Guizot, that the English government would find it necessary to send ten sail of the line to the same quarter. Of course, a fleet of steamers will form a part of such an expedition."

The opinion of the leading journals is, however, that notwithstanding the menacing aspect of things, there will be no war.

The Boy Jones in the Palace Again.

The Sun, of the 16th says:—"Yesterday evening the boy Edward Jones, who about three months ago, found his way into Buckingham Palace, and had the satisfaction of inspecting the Queen's apartments, and hearing the Princess Royal cry, paid another visit to the Palace, but, luckily for the peace of its inmates, he was soon discovered and taken into custody. He had effected an entrance unobserved by the guards and police stationed in the Palace and its vicinity; but before he had time to intrude far, his progress was arrested by a sergeant of police. He was instantly conveyed to the station house, where he remained all night, and to-day was brought to Bow street. The prisoner only came out of Tothill-fields House of Correction this day fortnight. It was intended to ship him on board of a man-of-war to keep him out of the way. Jones declares that his only object in going to the Palace was to hear the conversation of her Majesty and Prince Albert, in order to 'write a book,' which, he says, must be read with great interest.

The Chartists.

Several Chartist meetings have been held in various town, but they were thinly attended. A grand convention of Chartists is to be held in London, on the 12th inst. Their object is to devise plans for the restoration of Frost, Williams and Jones, for the release of all Chartist prisoners, and for making the charter the law of the land. The convention will sit for two weeks, and each delegate is to be paid £3 per week; the expenses to be defrayed by a weekly subscription of one half-penny from each Chartists.

France.

The French papers are principally occupied with articles upon the renewed difficulties growing out of the Eastern Question, and the probability of a war between England and America. These troubles produce the greatest excitement in Paris. Rumors had gained strength that a protocol had been signed in London, which was originally said to have had for its intention, the termination of the isolation of France, but it is now announced in the Paris journals, that France has refused her signature, on account of the hard conditions recently imposed to Mehemet Ali.—Negotiations are, however, still going on.

The Temps says that the Prince de Joinville is to be sent to the Chinese seas, where it is necessary that the French flag should be in a state of observation.

Eastern Question Re-Opened!

Alexandria is again the scene of troublesome negotiations. Three firmans arrived from the Sultan on the 20th of Feb. conveying the Pachalic of Egypt to Mehemet Ali, with succession to his descendants, on certain conditions. These conditions are both numerous and stringent, and in case of the non-performance of any one of them, the inheritance would be revoked.

It is stated that Mehemet Ali absolutely rejected two of them, declaring, at the same time, that he looked to England, on whose good faith he always relied, to save him from the danger and disgrace involved in them.

Com. Napier remained at Alexandria, in hopes of assisting to bring the new dispute to an amicable termination.

China.

The report of Admiral Elliott's resignation from ill health is confirmed, and he had arrived at Singapore, on the 17th of Dec., and left that port on the 20th following, whereby Commodore Sir James Gordon Bremer takes the command of the squadron.

Persia.

The whole of Persia is in a most unsettled state. It is stated that the son of the late King of Persia is determined to strike for the throne: all the chiefs, and those in the south-west of Persia, as well as the chief of the Chaub Arabs, and the people of Kerman, are in his favor, and will join him; besides this, he has all the priesthood of Persia with him.

Foreign Items.

The King of Hanover is carrying on his suit against Queen Victoria, for the Crown Jewels, and other valuable property.

Several papers contradict the announcement made by the London Globe, respecting the "situation" of the Queen.

Admiral Patterson died on the 10th ult., at the advanced age of 85.

Rear-Admiral Parker is appointed to take charge of the China fleet, and is to proceed overland for that purpose. This officer did service at the capture of the Marengo and the Belle Poule.

The Lord Chancellor had so far recovered from his recent illness, as to be able to take his seat in the Chancery Court.

The English funds, which had been for several days very much depressed, continued in the same languid situation after the American news was published. It was conjectured that thus they would remain till after the arrival of the steamer President.

News of the Day.

President Tyler's Address.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE U. S.

FELLOW CITIZENS.—Before my arrival at the seat of Government the painful communication was made to you by the officers presiding over the several Departments, of the deeply regretted death of William Henry Harrison, late President of the United States. Upon him you had conferred your suffrages for the highest office in your gift, and had selected him as your chosen instrument to correct and reform all such errors and abuses as had manifested themselves from time to time in the practical operations of Government. While standing at the threshold of this great work, he has, by the dispensation of an all-wise Providence, been removed from among us and by the provisions of the Constitution the efforts to be directed to the accomplishment of this vitally important task have devolved upon myself. The same occurrence has subjected the wisdom and sufficiency of our institutions to a new test.

For the first time in our history, the person elected to the Vice Presidency of the United States, by the happening of a contingency provided for in the Costitution, has had devolved upon him the Presidential office. The spirit of faction which is directly opposed to the spirit of a lofty patriotism, may find in this occasion for assaults upon my administration. And in succeeding, under circumstances so sudden and unexpected, and to responsibilities so greatly augmented, to the administration of public affairs I shall place in the intelligence and patriotism of the People my only sure reliance. My earnest prayer shall constantly be addressed to the all-wise and all-powerful Being who made me, and by whose dispensation I am called to the high office of President of this Confederacy, understandingly to carry out the principles of that Constitution which I have sworn to 'protect, preserve and defend.'

The usual opportunity which is afforded to a Chief Magistrate upon his induction to office of presenting to his countrymen an exposition of the policy which would guide his administration, in the form of an Inaugural Address, not having, under the peculiar circumstances which have brought me to the discharge of the high duties of President of the United States, been offered to me, a brief exposition of the principles which will govern me in the general course of my administration of public affairs, would seem to be due, as well to myself as to you, in regard to foreign nations, the groundwork of my policy will be justice, on our part to all, submitting to injustice from none.—While I shall sedulously cultivate the relations of peace and amity with one and all, it will be my most imperative duty to see that the honor of the country shall sustain no blemish. With a view to this the condition of our military defences will become a matter of anxious solicitude. The Army which has in other days covered itself with renown and the Navy, not inappropriately termed the right arm of the public defence, which has spread a light of glory over the American Standard, in all the waters of the earth, shall be rendered replete with efficiency.

In view of the fact, well avouched by history, that the tendency of all human systems is to concentrate power in the hands of a single man, and that their ultimate downfall has proceeded from this cause, I deem it of the most essential importance that a complete separation should take place between the sword and the purse. No matter where or how the public moneys shall be deposited, so long as the President can exert the power of appointing and removing at his pleasure, the agent selected for their custody, the Commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy is in fact the Treasurer. A permanent and radical change should therefore be decreed. The patronage incident to the Presidential office, already great, is constantly increasing. Such increase is destined to keep peace with the growth of our population, until without a figure of speech, an army of office holders may be spread over the land. The unrestrained power exerted by the selfishly ambitious man, in order either to perpetuate his authority, or to hand it over to some favorite as his successor, may lead to the employment of all the means within his control to accomplish his object.

The right to remove from office, while subjected to no just restraint, is inevitably destined to produce a spirit of crouching servility with the official corps, which in order to uphold the hand which feeds them, would lead to direct and active interference in the election, both State and Federal, thereby subjecting the course of State legislation to the direction of the Chief Executive officer, and making the will of that officer absolute and supreme. I will, at a proper time, invoke the action of Congress upon this subject, and shall readily acquiesce in the adoption of all proper measures which are calculated to arrest these evils, so full of danger in their tendency. I will remove no incumbent from office, who has faithfully and honestly acquitted himself of the duties of his office, except in such cases where such officer has been guilty of an active partisanship, or by secret means—the less manly, and therefore the more objectionable—has given his official influence to the purposes of party, thereby bringing the patronage of the Government in conflict with the freedom of elections. Numerous removals may become necessary under this rule. These will be made by me through no acerbity of feeling. I have had no cause to cherish or indulge unkind feelings towards any, but my conduct will be regulated by a profound sense of what is due to the country and its institutions; nor shall I neglect to apply the same unbending rule to those of my own appointment. Freedom of opinion will be tolerated, the full enjoyment of the right of suffrage will be maintained as the birthright of every American citizen, but I say emphatically to the official corps, "thus far and no farther." I have dwelt the longer upon this subject, because removals from office are likely often to arise, and I would have my countrymen to understand the principle of the Executive action.

In all public expenditures, the most rigid economy should be resorted to, and, as one of its results, a public debt in time of peace, be sedulously avoided. A wise and patriotic constituency will never object to the imposition of necessary burdens for useful ends, and true wisdom dictates the resort to such means, in order to supply deficiencies in the revenue rather than to those doubtful expedients, which, ultimating in a public debt, serve to embarrass the resources of the country, and to lessen its ability to meet any great emergency which may arise. All sinecures should be abolished. The appropriations should be direct and explicit, so as to leave as limited a share to the disbursing agents, as may be found compatible with the public service. A strict responsibility on the part of all the agents of the Government should be maintained, and peculation or defalcation visited with immediate expulsion from office, and the most condign punishment.

The public interest demands that, if any war has existed between the Government and the currency, it shall cease. Measures of a financial character, now having the sanction of legal enactment, shall be faithfully enforced until repealed by the legislative authority. But I owe it to myself, to declare that I regard existing enactments, as unwise and impolitic, and in a high degree oppressive. I shall promptly give sanction to any constitutional measure which, originating in Congress, shall have for its object the restoration of a sound circulating medium so essentially necessary to give confidence in all the transactions of life, to secure to industry, its just and adequate rewards, and to re-establish the public prosperity. In deciding upon the adaptation of any such measure, to the end proposed as well as its conformity to the Constitution, I shall resort to the Fathers of the great Republican school, for advice and instruction, to be drawn from their sage views of our system of government and the light of their ever-glorious example.

The institutions under which we live, my countrymen, secure each person in the perfect enjoyment of all his rights. The spectacle is exhibited to the world, of a Government deriving its powers from the consent of the governed, and having imparted to it only so much power as is necessary for its successful operation.—Those who are charged with its administration, should carefully abstain from all attempts to enlarge the range of powers thus granted to the several departments of the Government, other than by an appeal to the People for additional grants, lest by so doing they disturb that balance which the patriots and statesmen who framed the Constitution designed to establish between the Federal Government and the States composing the Union.

The observance of these rules is enjoined upon us by the feeling of reverence and affection which finds a place in the heart of every patriot for the preservation of union, and the blessings of union, for the good of our children's children, through countless generations. An opposite course could not fail to generate factions, intent upon the gratification of their selfish ends; to give birth to local and sectional jealousies, and to ultimate either in breaking asunder the bonds of union, or in building up a central system, which would inevitably end in a bloody sceptre and an iron crown.

In conclusion, I beg you to be assured that I shall exert myself to carry the foregoing principles into practice during my Administration of the Government, and, confiding in the protecting care of an ever-watchful and overruling Providence, it shall be my first and highest duty to preserve unimpaired, the free institutions under which we live, and transmit them to those who shall succeed me, in their full force and vigor.

JOHN TYLER.

WASHINGTON, April 9, 1841.

By a report of Mr. Hawley, the Treasurer, to the Legislature, it appears that the Utica & Schenectady Rail Road has earned 71 per cent, on the cost in the last four and a half years, and has for the same time divided to the stockholders 13 1-2 per cent. per annum by carrying passengers only.

The Vicksburg Sentinel of the 31st ult. says: "This city is now crowded with blacklegs. One of our principal hotels, we have learned, is literally crammed with them and their gambling apparatus."

At the charter election in Penn Yan, on the 5th inst. the Temperance ticket, composed of both parties, succeeded. The question was, "license or no license," and the majority for the no-license ticket was 75.

Madison Johnson, a youth scarcely of age, has been sentenced to death in North Carolina, for murder.

A lad of fifteen, having been discharged from jail in New-Haven, immediately stole a pair of shoes for the purpose of being sent back. He had no means of livelihood and was willing to find food and shelter even in a prison.

The dwelling house of Mrs. Martha Wood, of Westmoreland, N. H., was destroyed by fire on the 3d instant, and Mrs. W. perished in the flames. She was 81 years old.

The cannon fired at the Washington Navy Yard on the day of the funeral, were charged on Saturday week for receiving the President at the yard which he contemplated visiting.

The aggregate depth of snow which fell at New Haven during the past winter, is 8 feet—exclusive of the storm just finished, which added another foot to the grand total.

The Pawnee Indians, which number 6,241, have as yet adopted no habits of civilization—not even intemperance, for they will not use intoxicating drinks.

President TYLER is fifty-one years of age. He is therefore younger than any President we have ever had.

The body of a girl, 18 or 20 years of age, named Jane McAllister, who had been missing from Owego several weeks, was a few days since found in the river near Skinner's Eddy, in Luzerne county, Penn. There was marks of violence on her person, and suspicion rests on different individuals. The body has since been recognised by the mother of the lost girl.

Fires out.—We understand that the largest distillery, probably, in New-York, and perhaps in the United States, is about to be closed for want of market at home and abroad for its fiery products. The owner says the movements in temperance have ruined his business.

Lead in Iowa and Wisconsin.—Dr Owen, who was appointed by the government of the United States to explore the mineral regions of Iowa and Wisconsin Territories, states that they now produce as much lead as the whole of Europe, G. Britain excepted; and are capable of yielding as much lead as the whole of Europe, Great Britain including.

Public Schools in Poland.—In the city of Poland,—one of the most beautiful towns, and most intelligent in its populationion of any in the Union there are eighteen public schools, attended by 2541 pupils. The cost to the city is $9,131. The expense for each scholar is less than four dollars. What town or city who wishes well to the country and well to the rising generation would object to such a tax.

New-York City Election.—The election held last Tuesday in this city for Charter officers passed off with unusual quietness. Robert H. Morris the Van Buren candidate, (late Recorder,) is elected Mayor by a majority of between 600 and 700. The official returns were not published at the time of our going to press. The Whigs have gained two members in each of the Boards. In the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, seventh and fifteenth wards the Whig alderman and assistant are elected. In the remaining ten wards Van Buren members are chosen.

Wiskonsan.—Congress has officially settled the orthography of the fine territory lying between the Mississippi river and Lake Michigan, to be Wiskonsan—in conformity with the pronunciation that prevails in the territory, to accent being on the second syllable. Mr. Doty, its representative, is making an effort to secure an appropriation to open a steamboat navigation through it from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi, by a canal only 7,739 feet long, to connect the Wiskonsan and Fox rivers. This would open a water communication from New-Orleans to New-York, making a charming summer route. Wiskonsan will soon make a State.

Progress of the Mormons.—The disciples of Joe Smith have recently obtained three charters from the Legislature of Illinois; one incorporating the city of Nauvoo; another a great University, and a third the Nauvoo Military Legion. They do not intend to be driven out of Illinois, as they were from Missouri. They have commenced operations under their city charter, Dr. Dennett, Qr. Master General of Illinois, through the appointment of Governor Carlin, being their Mayor.

Charles F. Mitchell.—We learn that this individual committed a forgery in the name of a gentleman of our city to the amount of $1400, some two years ago. When the fact was discovered by the gentleman in question, he promised, out of regard to Mitchell and his connections, to keep the affair a secret—and he did so up to the time of hearing that Mitchell was an applicant up for the office of Navy Agent for New-York. He then very properly communicated the circumstances to the Hon. Mr. Grinnell, who thereupon opposed the defeated Mitchell's application.

It appears that the amount of forged cheques disposed of by Mitchell in Wall street was about $1300, and it further appears that similar cheques were sold by him in Philadelphia to the amount of some $2000 more.—Sylvester's Philadelphia Reporter.

Five young men are now in jail in Brooklyn, for committing a most atrocious rape on a married woman, in Myrtle lane. They were of a gang of fifteen, and strong hopes are entertained that those now at large will soon be secured. The poor woman, we understand, is dead. No punishment can be too severe for these inhuman rascals.

EXECUTION.—PETER ROBINSON, the murderer of Abraham Suydam was executed at New Brunswick, at five o'clock yesterday afternoon. The thousand stories afloat in his last sayings and doings, we are assured, are all false or exaggerated. They were put afloat merely to gratify the morbid passions of those who love to revel in murder, and for the purpose of making a penny at the expence of a public execution. The following comes from a reliable source, and, as will be seen, is in every way different from the stories afloat:—N. Y. Express.

NEW BRUNSWICK, April 14, 1841.

I have just been in with Peter Robinson, and am happy to say that he appears to be truly penitent; so much so that he says he freely forgives all his enemies, and that the People did just what they ought to have done: that his sentence is just, and he hopes to die in peace with all mankind. He read several portions of Scripture to me, viz: Psalm 51, Isaiah 1st, with several other portions. I then sung the hymn beginning, "How tedious and tasteless the hours," in which he joined and sung in a very clear voice. When we came to the words "And prisons shall palaces prove, if Jesus will dwell with me there," he said—yes, 'if Jesus is with me' all will be well; but I have a hope that he will. There is nothing grieves me so much as the destruction I have brought on myself and others by not having the government of my passions.—Had I been led by my bible this would not have happened. Had I been guided by my wife's counsels I should have been a happy man to-day; but I am glad she knew nothing of this." Such was his conversation with me.

The officers are now building a fence in front of the jail to screen the execution, which will take place on Friday noon, from the public.

Yours, respectfully,

FREDRICK PILCH.

The Governor has issued his proclamation, ordering an election for a member of the twenty-seventh Congress, for the twenty-sixth district, to take place on the 11th of May, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Granger.

The Irish Temperance Society in Lowell rallies nearly 2000 members.

The Baptists have in Liberia, six churches and 288 members; 32 were added the past year.

The Savannah Republican says, that during the nine years that Major Farnum has been Collector of that port, he has not had occasion to sue a single bond for duties, nor has the government lost a single dollar by an importer. The average collections have been $175,000 yearly.

Mr. Lewis Peck, of Schenectady, has been fined $100, and sentenced to be imprisoned 20 days in the county jail, for striking John Brotherson, Esq, in open court.

The duties received at the Custom House of Liverpool, in the year 1840, amounted to £4,700,000.

A new marble building, intended for the General Postoffice, is in progress at Washington, the cost of which will exceed half a million of dollars.

We are informed by the Cashier of the institution, that an injunction ordered by the Chancellor, was served upon the Bank of Western New York at Rochester, on the 6th inst., which as a matter of course, stops all its operations for the present, in the redemption of its bills or otherwise.

The Newark Daily Advertiser of the 7th inst. says:—"We regret to learn, this morning, that Mr. Southard, who has been some time indisposed, was not able to reach Washington in season to attend the funeral, and that he was under the necessity of stopping at Trenton."

Mr. Stratton, a constable of Boston, is under bonds for $100, to appear at the Municipal Court, for kicking the wife of a prisoner whom he was taking to the watch-house. The kind woman had come to bring her husband his hat, and received this unmanly salute for her pains.

Official notice has been given that the canals of this State will be opened for navigation on the 24th inst.

Drake, the murderer of Mr. James Scott and family, in Southampton Co., Va., some few months since, was tried on the 2nd inst. and the case given to the jury in the evening of that day, who, after an absence of ten minutes, brought in a verdict of "guilty of murder in the first degree."

Letters from Richmond, Va., recently received, state that the banks of that city have suspended specie payments on all their responsibilities.

Great Expected Emigration to America.—The Evening Star mentions that letters from Europe announce an immense emigration of persons from Europe the ensuing spring and summer. Great preparations are making in Germany and Holland; whole communities are holding meetings preparatory to setting out, under the direction of intelligent persons, selected to direct the efforts of these emigrants after they arrive here. Considerable purchases have been made in Delaware and Ulster counties, N. Y., for account of French agriculturalists. Many settlements of Scotch farmers have been made in Delaware county with great success. The emigrants begin to find they can do better on farms in New York, than in the far West, both as to profit and health, besides affording them an opportunity of seeing their relatives and friends twice a year, without the labor, risk and expense of traveling 2000 miles. This is one of the early results of the policy of making the Erie Railroad.

Campbellites.—A writer in the Christian World gives the number of this sect in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois and Missouri, at between eighty and ninety thousand members, which includes, he conjectures, more than half of their whole number in the United States. On this supposition, the number of Campbellites in the United States, would be about one hundred and fifty thousand.—Cross and Journal.

Correspondence of the U. S. Gazette.

Washington, April 9, 1841.

The members of General Harrison's family, who had resided with him since his inauguration, were to leave, and, I believe, they left the city to-day, on their return to North Bend. As soon as Mr. Tyler arrived, he despatched a polite note to them, condoling with them on the heavy loss which the will of Providence had required them to bear, and requesting that they would not think of quitting the Executive Mansion, for the present, but would permit him to consider himself as indebted to their hospitality when he entered it, or that they would gratify him by remaining as his guest.

That they felt the kindness of his offer, they have no hesitation in acknowledging; but a sense of the duty they owed to the bereaved widow prevailed over every other consideration, and induced them to make the speediest arrangements for a journey to the West. Great apprehensions are felt as to the effect which will be produced on the health of Mrs. Harrison, when the news of her bereavement reaches her.—'Heaven tempers the wind to the shorn lamb;' but in her weak state of health, clinging to her husband, as she did, with an affection which years had not abated, it will surprise few if she should sink under the violence of the shock.

OFFICIAL.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

A Recommendation.

When a Christian People feel themselves to be overtaken by a great public calamity, it becomes them to humble themselves under the dispensation of Divine Providence, to recognise His righteous government over the children of men, to acknowledge his goodness in time past, as well as their own unworthiness, and to supplicate His merciful protection for the future.

The death of WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON, late President of the United States, so soon after his elevation to that high office, is a bereavement peculiarly calculated to be regarded as a heavy affliction, and to impress all minds with a sense of the dependence of Nations, as well as of individuals, upon our Heavenly Parent.

I have thought, therefore, that I should be acting in conformity with the general expectation and feelings of the community in recommending, as I now do, to the people of the United States, of every religious denomination, that, according to their several modes and forms of worship, they observe a day of Fasting and Prayer, by such religious services as may be suitable on the occasion; and I recommend Friday, the fourteenth day of May next, for that purpose; to the end that, on that day, we may all with one accord join in humble and reverential approach to HIM, in whose hands we are, invoking him to inspire us with a proper spirit and temper of heart and mind, under these frowns of His providence, and still to bestow His gracious benedictions upon our Government and country.

JOHN TYLER.

Washington, April 13, 1841.

LAST LETTER OF GEN. HARRISON.

Washington, 26th March, 1841.

"Dear Sir.—The bearer hereof, Mr. Thomas Tucker, a veteran seaman, came with me from Carthagena, as the mate of the brig Montidia, in the year 1829. In an association of several weeks, I imbibed a high opinion of his character—so much so that (expressing a desire to leave the sea,) I invited him to come to North Bend and spend the remainder of his days with me. Subsequent misfortune prevented his doing so, as he was desirous to bring some money with him to commence farming operations. His hard fortune still continues, having been several times shipwrecked within a few years. He says that himself and family are in such a situation, that the humblest employment would now be acceptable to him, and I write this to recommend him to your favorable notice. I am pursuaded that no one possesses in a higher degree the virtues of fidelity, honesty, and indefatigable industry; and I might add of indomitable bravery, if that was a quality necessary for the kind of employment he seeks.

"Yours very truly,

"W. H. HARRISON.

"EDWARD CURTIS, Esq.,
"Collector, &c., New York."

[Mr. Curtis, we are glad to learn, immediately appointed Mr. Tucker, an Inspector of Customs.]

St. Augustine, April 3.

Extract of a letter received in this city, from an officer of rank, dated "Camp Eojotka, 45 miles from Tampa, March 22, 1831:"

"I arrived here this day with Wild Cat. His people are collecting, and will be emigrated in six weeks. A detachment of my regiment is now on the march with Cosa Tustenuggee, to Tampa. I doubt whether another shot will be fired."

Sugar.—By a document concerning the cultivation of sugar, transmitted by the Legislature of Louisiana to Congress, it appears there are 525 sugar estates in that state, employing 40,000 hands, and 10,000 horses, and that the average crop is equal to 70,000 hhds. of 1,000 lbs., or 70,000,000, lbs. sugar, and 350,000 gallons of molasses; the average value of sugar is six cents per lb., and molasses 20 cents per gallon.

Counterfeiters Arrested.—Two men were recently arrested at Princeton, N. J., on a charge of passing counterfeit ten dollar notes on the Merchants' Exchange Bank of New York. On arresting one, the other slipped out of the hotel into a back building, where was immediately discovered a roll of counterfeit tens on the Merchants' Exchange Bank, and fives on the Salem Bank. The counterfeits on the Merchants' Exchange Bank are not very well executed; the coloring is very light, and the engraving indistinct. They are marked letter B, payable to James Kent, and dated June 20, 1840. The signature of Peter Stagg, President, is well done; for the name of W. M. Vermilye, the cashier, they have W. M. Yumilur.

Dangerous position of a French Frigate—and total loss of an American Brig on the Coast of Africa.—The Paris Moniteur contains a report of Capt. Bonard, of the French brig of war Volage, which encountered a violent tempest in the roads of Mogador, (Morocco,) on the 5th ult. The vessel was secured in six fathoms water by three anchors, when the breeze set in from the south and south-west, and rendered it impossible for her to put to sea without abandoning them. The captain, besides, was instructed to remain in the roads as long as possible, and he had accordingly taken every precaution to enable him to do so with security. The breeze in the mean time continued to increase, the barometer was going down, and the storm was raging with redoubled fury. An American brig, the William Tell, unable to hold to her mooring, about 3 o'clock in the morning of the 6th, fired several signals of distress.—Capt. Bonard sent him his large boat, with an officer and two men, and established a communication by means of a cable between the two vessels, in order at least to save her crew.

The captain having given notice to M. Bonard that he would endeavor to clear out as a last resource, if he had three hands more on board, the latter immediately sent him six of his best seamen. The operation, however, failed, and in less than half an hour the William Tell disappeared, having been dashed to pieces by the breakers. The situation of the Volage was becoming every moment more critical. The two last anchors were thrown out, but to no effect; she continued to drag her anchors, and was within 100 yards of the breakers, when the captain, seeing no hope of salvation, resolved on running the vessel aground on a sand beach, while it was yet practicable for him with a chance of success. He accordingly threw overboard all his carronades, only keeping two guns on deck, which he hoped to be able to land on the beach to protect himself against the Bedouins, who had repaired in vast numbers from the mountains to the shore. He secured, with the same view, muskets and ammunition in the poop. He then caused all the empty casks to be brought up from the hold and well stopped, with which to form safety buoys, and took every other measure for security possible under those circumstances.

Everything being thus prepared, he determined on waiting events, ordered all his men to the stern, and apprising them of the danger to which they were exposed, recommended them to hold themselves in readiness to execute his orders. They remained in that position until the 7th at noon, the men remaining on deck all the while; the whistling of the wind, the noise of the waves, and the cries of the Bedouins who were watching their prey, were only interrupted by the commands of the officers; the lieutenant repeatedly verified if every one was at his post, to effect the running aground, which the captain was several times on the point of ordering, when, on the 7th, the glass slightly rose, and the wind suddenly fell. The position was, however, as perilous as ever; waves mountain high washed over her; the men were kept constantly working at the pumps the water penetrating into the hold through several apertures.

On the 8th, at day break, the sea becoming less agitated, the captain made the necessary preparations to get out at the first favorable moment; and early on the 9th he mounted into the only boat which he had left, and went to inform the French consul that it was impossible for him to remain any longer in the roads of Mogador. He at the same time offered the American consul to take on board the crew of the William Tell, the captain and one seamen of which had perished. At nine o'clock p. m., he had recovered two of his anchors, seventy fathoms of small cable, and seventy-two fathoms of the largest cable, which were all that could be saved. At two in the morning, the wind having shifted to the S. E., he sailed for Cadiz, where he arrived on the 4th.

From the North American

Jewish Passover.—This festival in the Hebrew church commenced on the 4th instant, corresponding to the 14th of the ancient month, Nisan, when the Jewish Passover or feast of unleavened bread began.—During the period of one week, the Synagogues in this city were opened, and this feast, which is regularly and rigidly observed by the Jews throughout the world, was celebrated. The unleavened bread is made of the finest wheat and is baked in thin cakes. In taste and appearance it resembles common crackers. The exercises in the Synagogues are usually conducted in Hebrew. Every member has a light sash thrown over his shoulders, and responses from the audience are constantly made, as in the Episcopal church. They sit covered, and no particular order is observed about entering or leaving the room whenever the auditor chooses. The exercises are recited in a chanting tone, while the audience stand or sit as suits their fancy. The sexes are separated, the females occupying the galleries, and the males the lower portion of the Synagogue. The peculiar features and complexion which mark the descendants of Abraham the world over and which tend to keep up the distinctive characteristics of the race, are visible to the most superficial observer. In witnessing their exercises the other day, although unintelligible, there was something exceedingly impressive, when their history and customs were remembered. How remarkably the prophetic declaration of the Scriptures are verified in the past and present condition of this people. If nothing more was adduced, these prophecies are conclusive evidence that the Bible was written by holy men, guided by the finger of Divine inspiration.

The following description of the Hearse, constructed to carry the remains of the late President to the receiving tomb, says the Providence Journal, was furnished us by a citizen who was present, and witnessed the grand and solemn pageant:—

The Car consisted of a table or area oblong, eight feet wide, twelve feet long, about five feet from the ground; this was entirely covered with black silk velvet, with a rich mourning fringe reaching nearly to the ground, entirely concealing the wheels. The pendant curtain was festooned at both sides and both ends with crape; on the centre of the table, was a pedestal nine inches elevated and oblong, four feet wide, eight feet long;—this also was covered with black velvet and upon this lay the coffin, with a black silk velvet pall, trimmed with gold—on the top of the coffin lay the scroll of the Constitution bordered with black. Hyacinths and other spring flowers were strewed over the coffin. The car or hearse, was drawn by six beautiful white horses in deep mourning, led by six black men, one to each horse. There were in Eastern costume, of white turbans, interlaced with black crape, loose white trowsers and tunics to the knees, and broad black scarfs. There was nothing superfluous or gaudy. It is said to have been a la Napoleon. The body will probably preserve its present form half a century or more; it is enclosed in two separate leaden coffins, both exhausted of air, and hermetically sealed, and then enclosed again in a mahogany sarcophagus covered with fine black broadcloth. The face can be seen, as a glass was so secured as to shut out the air, leaving all the features plainly to be seen.

Northern Rail Road.—We have read with much interest the speech of Mr. Beckwith, in the House of Assembly of this State, on the subject of a Rail Road between Ogdensburgh and Lake Champlain. It is proposed that the State should make the road and receive the tolls; but whatever may be the views or action of the Legislature upon that point, the importance of the road is rendered evident by the statistical facts set forth by Mr. B. The testimony of Gen. Scott, Gen. Macomb, and Col. Worth are given, as to the immense value of the road in case of a war with Great Britain. But Mr. B. goes much farther, and exhibits the wealth and business of the country which would contribute to this road, in a manner to enforce the conviction that it would be a very profitable investment, and sure to pay a good interest.—Long Island Star.

POST-SCRIPT!

By this Morning's Mail.

FIRE AT NORTH BEND!

Wednesday noon, Apr. 21.

The mails of this morning bring us the melancholy intelligence of the total destruction of the mansion house of our late President Harrison, at North Bend, by fire on the night of the 11th inst. We make extracts as follows:

Correspondence of the N. Y. Express.

REPUBLICAN OFFICE,
Cincinnati, April 12th, 1841.

FIRE AT NORTH BEND!

The Captain of the steamer New-York reports that when he passed North Bend at at 6 o'clock last night, the west wing of the Mansion House of Gen. Harrison was on fire—the roof was covered with persons with axes and buckets of water,—the windows of the house were broken out, and the furniture had all been removed out upon the green in the front of the house. The Captain thinks the main building will be saved.

P. S. The house is burnt to the ground.

Yours, &c. J. B. RUSSEL.

Correspondence of the Courier and Enquirer.

BALTIMORE, April 16, 1841.

Mr. Crittenden has passed through Baltimore, on his way to Kentucky, to make arrangements to remove his family to Washington.

NORTH BEND BURNED.—Afflictions never come alone. By the Western Mail this morning, we have the following letter from the Assistant Post Master at Wheeling.

P. O. WHEELING, April 14.

We learn by this morning's mail from the West, that the residence of Gen. Harrison, at North Bend, Ohio, was burned to the ground on Sunday night last, the 11th inst.

L. P. DELAPLAIN, Ass't P. M.

FLORIDA, April 4, 1841.

Gentlemen:—An express has this morning arrived at Pilatka from Fort King, stating that the Indians have exhibited an hostile attitude this day within a mile of Fort King. A party of seven warriors suddenly emerging from the hammock, attacked a small party of soldiers who were out hunting, fired upon them and killed private Thompson, company "H," 2d Infantry. This occurrence took place at 12 M. A detachment of the command of Fort King immediately left in pursuit. Another item to add to the pleasing prospect of closing the war. The Indians are supposed to be of the same party which left Fort Clinch yesterday about the time the express rider started for Fort King. It is now the full of the moon and you may expect shortly to insert in your columns an article headed "bloody massacre."

Yours, &c.

WASHINGTON, April 15, 1841.

No New-York appointments have been acted upon. The President has appointed Mr. Taylor, the son-in-law of General Harrison, who was to be his Private Secretary, Post Master of Cincinnati. A young gentleman who had been acting as his Private Secretary, and who was his nephew, Mr. Harrison has been appointed Register of the Land Office at Dubuque. Thus the relations of General Harrison fare much better now than if the General had lived, for it was his intention, it is said, to appoint none of them to office.

There is no other news of interest. The members of the Cabinet are indefatigable in their work, night and day, they bring much to pass, as will be seen in the Extra Session.

MARRIED,

In Truxton, on the 29th inst., by the Editor, Mr. LORENZO P. AYRES, of De Ruyter, and Miss ESTHER P., daughter of Caleb W. Church, of the former place.

In De Ruyter, on the 15th inst., by Z. T. Bentley, Esq. Mr. CLARK BURDICK, of Lincklaen, and Miss ANNA HUNT, daughter of Elihu Hunt of the former place.

In Westerly, R. I., April 4th, by Eld. Daniel Coon, Mr. SAMUEL SWEET, of South Kingston, and Miss ABBY PECKHAM of the former place.

In Rodman, on the 8th inst., by Rev. E. S. Bailey, Mr. BENJAMIN COATES, of Adams, and Miss LOIS WHITFORD, daughter of Maj. Edward Whitford of the former place.

DIED,

In Adams, on the 10th inst., of the consumption, Mr. E. W. RICHARDS, aged 25. Mr. Richards joined the S. D. B. Church in Adams last summer, and was a worthy member while he lived, and died triumphantly.

In Sangerfield, on the 25th ult., JESSE COLLINS, son of Clark T. and Nancy Rogers, aged 3 years 1 month and 25 days.

LIST OF LETTERS.

D Fox, P M. E S Bailey, (we will do it.) J A Badger, D G York, J G Maxson, M S Curtis, D Hardin, (it is done.) J Grant, P M, Alvan Richardson, P M, (we will do it.) Rev. L A Davis, A R Hathaway, P M. J Goodrich.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

J. Goodrich, $10, cr. Stephen Maxson, $2,25, self, $7,75. E S Bailey, $14, cr. Edward Whitford, $4, David Maxson, Elihu Cleveland, Maxson Whitford, each $2, Vol 2. Harvey Maxson, $1,50, Vol 1. D Dery, 50 cents, Vol 2. B T Bliss, $2, Vol 2. Joseph Spicer, $6, cr. Benj. Potter, John D Langworthy, $2 each, Vol 2. Peleg Maxson, $2, Vol 1 & 2. J Kingerman, Jr., $2, cr. Nelson Bowen. J Grant, $1, cr. S H Sperry. D Hardin, $2, cr. P B Burch, Vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

De Ruyter, April 22, 1841.

SHERIFFS SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Supreme Court of Judicature of the State of New York, and to me delivered. I have levied upon the right, title and interest of Stephen G. Sears in and to a certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the Village of De Ruyter, county of Madison, and bounded as follows: on the north by the turnpike road, on the east by lands owned by Noah B. Foote, on the south by lands owned, or in possession of, John Starr, on the west by lands owned by Marvin M. Hamilton, which I shall expose to sale at public Vendue, as the Law directs, at the house of Wm C. Gage, on Saturday, the 22d day of May next, at 1 o'clock, P. M.

Dated, De Ruyter, April 10, 1841. 59w6

ISAAC BROWN, SHERIFF.

By T. ORVILLE ELMORE, Deputy.

NOTICE.

WHEREAS EPHRAIM C. DAVIS, a lad 17 years 7 months old, bound to Rogers Davis as Apprentice, has left his home, without my consent on the 27th day of March, inst., this is to forbid any person trusting or harboring said Ephraim on our accounts after this date, as we will not pay any of his contracts. 59w3

Brookfield, 30th March, 1841.

ROGERS DAVIS,
ALBERT CLARK.

POETRY.

From the Madison County Eagle.

Spring.

Hail! lovely Spring, with thy endearing charms,
And welcome all thy train of beauties fair.
Thou com'st to cheer and fertilize the earth
And clothe creation in a beauteous garb
Of richest texture.
Upon thy brow we see the smile of peace,
And shining dew drops glist'ning on thy head,
Thy tresses fair come mantling round thy neck,
Rich blooming garlands gird thy graceful form;
Sweet scented odors issue from thy breath,
And balmy breezes speak thy near approach.
Nature, too, rejoices, when from tropic
Climes thou com'st exulting in thy beauty.
The forest smiles with gladness; the streams which
Winter bound in icy fetters, now resume
Their wonted course; the feathered tribe once more
Attune their voice, to sing in sweetest strains
Thy coming.
The husbandman with cheerful heart delights,
To see thy dawn, and in thy smiling face
He views the bud—fair emblem of the fruit.
The weather-beaten mariner, who long
Has braved the fury of the wintry winds,
And grasp'd the icy rope with strongest nerve,
Looks delighted, singing, 'welcome Spring',
The youthful maiden, too, of sprightly form,
Goes forth to meet thee smiling, and gather from
Thy rosy bower, a wreath of sweetest flowers.
Thy prattling infant now, with ruddy cheek,
Walks out t' enjoy thy sweet regaling winds;
And many a truant lad, forth issuing from
His tiresome task, rejoices in "A TRAIN."
Bright Sol, ascending up the azure sky,
Look gladly down on nature's blooming face,
And far around o'er hill and dale, upon
The mountain wave, and on the placid lake,
Profusely pours his golden beams of light.
To irrigate and dry the thirsty land,
The nightly dews of heaven are sent; or in
More copious flowing show'rs the rain descends
Attended by the zigzag lightning's glare,
Rending with thunder-tones th' inflated air;
Then passing off at random, shoots away unseen.
Delightful Spring! Thou'rt ever welcome here;
For when thou com'st, creation smiles with joy;
All nature, with her twice ten thousand tongues,
Breaks forth in strains of charming melody;
And chanting sweet in harmonious lays,
Sings the loud anthem of Creative Power.
But short, alas! will be thy vernal reign,
For soon the flowers that decorate thy brow
Will fade; thy charms will cease to win the heart;
Thy mellow voice will change its dulcet tones,
And Summer, fruitful Summer come, to bring
The choicest treasures of a warmer clime. M.

Miscellaneous Department.

From the New York Mirror.

THE DYAKS IN THE ISLAND OF BORNEO.

BORNEO is the third largest island in the world—it is embosomed in a great cluster of islands, surrounded by seas, so shut in by land that their waters are as smooth as those of a lake. Its western coast is scarcely two days' sail from Singapore, which is becoming the great mart for trade between India the Western World and China. The Dutch have several small establishments upon the coast.

The population of the island, which is estimated at 3,500,000, is composed of various tribes. Some are Malays, others Bugis—both of these are Mahomedans—in a partially civilized state, and engaged in trade, although the Malays especially seem greatly to prefer piracy. A people called Dyaks, whose numbers are supposed to be about 2,000,000, occupy the whole interior of the island, which is chiefly mountainous, and are its original inhabitants. They are still savages Some of their tribes are, however, more barbarous than others. These rove about like wild beasts. They go out and hunt them for amusement. The men taken in these incursions are invariably killed; but the women, if young, are commonly spared. The children of these wild Dyaks, it is said, cannot be tamed. In consequence, when taken they have one of their feet cut off by their captors, that they may not run away to their native forests; their services being still available for paddling in their canoes, &c.

Many of the Dyaks are engaged in agriculture, and collecting the produce of their country, such as camphor, bees-wax, gold-dust, etc. for sale. But the occupation for which they are most notorious is that of 'HEAD-HUNTING.' The men must procure at least one head before they can marry; they preserve also the heads and skulls of persons they have slain, as trophies and ornaments. They seek for heads as we would seek wealth or honor, as these constitute their wealth and honor. The Dyak head-hunter cherishes no enmity toward the person he kills, either private or national. It is neither more nor less than a wretched custom, one of the many of a similar kind that exists in countries where Satan—the destroyer—reigns supreme. This custom, and the feelings of the heart necessarily connected with it, form the most odious trait in this people's character. They have, however, many good qualities. They are generally inclined to cultivate the soil, are a fine race of people, and very honest. Their vices are those of barbarians who know no better. Some of the leading natives have already expressed their readiness to relinquish the practice of head-hunting, if Europeans would only come and settle among them. They seem generally to have no religious belief. At all events they have no religion to which they are strongly attached, which, of course is a favorable circumstance toward their reception of the true religion.

Scarcely any efforts have yet been made to introduce Christianity among these people. The Americans are, as we have said, now turning their attention to the island. From the journal of the two missionaries who have recently returned from a tour in the country we make the following extracts:

At one village they observe, "The Dyaks here still continue the practice of cutting off heads, and boast of bringing in two or three fresh ones every year. In the verandah where we have our lodgings there are fifteen or twenty, and some suspended immediately over the place assigned us to sleep in. How many heads are now in their possession we cannot learn, but we are told they are numerous, or to use their own language, 'many tens.' Here we may remark that the Dyaks, in general appear to know nothing of numbers above ten; hence they give us their reckonings in this way. The warriors of this village sally forth every year on a beheading expedition. They seem not to have the least compunction of conscience on this subject. They laugh at us when we express our astonishment at the practice, and ridicule us when we attempt to teach them its cruelty and wickedness. It does appear that the Dyak character is made up of extremes. As we see them, they are mild, and gentle, and 'given to hospitality.' But when they exchange their domestic habits for those of the warrior, their greatest delight seems to be to revel in human blood, and their greatest honor to ornament their dwellings with human heads, which are the trophies of their human barbarity. Shocking as it may appear, they carry about with them tokens of the number of persons they have killed. This they effect by inserting locks of human hair corresponding to the number of persons decapitated, in the sheath of their war-knife, which they always carry with them when from home. We fell in with a man this evening, just returning from his labor, with a basket in which he had carried out the necessaries for the day, and to which was attached a lock of human hair. The hair was ten inches or a foot long. He informed us that it was a token of his having cut off a head during the past year. How true it is that these dark places of earth are full of inhabitants of cruelty."

Upon another occasion, a recent writer remarks:

"Here we discovered the first indication of religion among the Dyaks. Upon our arrival the first thing which attracted our attention was several small wooden images placed under a shelter. Upon inquiry we were informed that these images are mementoes of their old men who had distinguished themselves by daring exploits, the number of heads they had cut off, etc. Whenever such persons die they make a wooden image, rude indeed, yet in the form of a man, varying in length from twenty inches to the feet. Around this they all gather and hold a feast of consecration, after which it is placed among the others. These are all considered patron gods, whose peculiar province it is to watch over and prosper their cultivation of rice. At the time of planting the rice they are removed to or near the field, with their fences in that direction. Here they are left till the crop is gathered, when they are again brought into their dwellings. As far as we could learn, the only act of worship paid to these images is that of offering them food once a month, such as rice, pork, fowls etc.

"Human heads hang all around us, and some are suspended over our sleeping-place. We tried hard to obtain one of the heads; but the bare expression of the wish was met by a prompt and decisive 'No; we cannot part with them.' The same was the case with the wooden images. On no condition whatever would they consent to part with either. The only reason assigned was that sickness would be the inevitable consequence. The heads are considered charms to ward off evils and procure blessings, and believing this, it is no matter of surprise that they are loth to part with them."

The writers of the above journal spent about four weeks on the island, during which time they traveled one hundred and seventy miles on foot going about sixty miles into the interior. The general impression produced on their minds by what they observed during their visit, was of so favorable a character, that it has been determined to commence a mission in Borneo at once and to establish two or three stations. Six American missionaries and their wives were expected to proceed from Singapore to the island during last summer.

THE DEAF, DUMB, AND BLIND GIRL.

In an appendix to the late annual Report of the Trustees of the Perkins Institution for the Blind—an establishment from which we trust that the Legislature in their zeal for economy, will not withhold their customary aid—is a most interesting account, written by Dr. S. G. Howe, the able superintendant of that Institution, of Laura Bridgman, and who is deaf, dumb, and blind, and whose only mode of communication with objects around her, is by the touch, which is remarkably acute.

The following extract describing the meeting of Laura with her mother, after an absence of several months, is exceedingly interesting and touching—and proves that she possesses the affections in all their strength and purity:

"During this year, and six months after she had left home, her mother came to visit her, and the scene of their meeting was an interesting one.

The mother stood some time, gazing with overflowing eyes upon her unfortunate child, who, all unconscious of her presence, was playing about the room. Presently Laura ran against her, and at once began feeling of her hands, examining her dress, and trying to find out if she knew her; but not succeeding here, she turned away as from a stranger, and the poor woman could not conceal the pang she felt that her beloved child did not know her.

She then gave Laura a string of beads which she used to wear at home, which were recognized by the child at once, who, with much joy, put them around her neck, and sought me eagerly, to say she understood the string was from her home.

The mother now tried to caress her; but poor Laura repelled her, preferring to be with her acquaintances.

Another article from home was given her, and she began to look much interested; she examined the stranger much closer, and gave me to understand that she knew she came from Hanover; she even endured her caresses, but would leave her with indifference at the slightest signal. The distress of the mother was now painful to behold; for although she had feared that she should not be recognized, the painful reality of being treated with cold indifference by a darling child, was too much for woman's nature to bear.

After awhile, on the mother taking hold of her again, a vague idea seemed to flit across Laura's mind, that this could not be a stranger; she therefore felt of her hands very eagerly, while her countenance assumed an expression of intense interest—she became very pale, and then suddenly red—hope seemed struggling with doubt and anxiety, and never were contending emotions more strongly painted upon the human face. At this moment of painful uncertainty, the mother drew her close to her side, and kissed her fondly, when at once the truth flashed upon the child, and all mistrust and anxiety disappeared from her flushed face, as, with an expression of exceeding joy, she eagerly nestled in the bosom of her parent, and yielded herself to her fond embraces.

After this, the beads were all unheeded; the playthings which were offered to her were utterly disregarded; her playmates, for whom but a moment before she gladly left the stranger, now vainly strove to pull her from her mother; and though she yielded her usual instantaneous obedience to my signal to follow me, it was evidently with painful reluctance. She clung close to me, as if bewildered and fearful; and when, after a moment, I took her to her mother, she sprang to her arms, and clung to her with eager joy.

I had watched the whole scene with intense interest, being desirous of learning from it all I could, of the workings of her mind; but I now left them to indulge, unobserved, those delicious feelings, which those who have known a mother's love may conceive, but which cannot be expressed."

The subsequent parting between Laura and her mother, showed alike the affection, the intelligence, and the resolution of the child; and was thus noticed at the time:

"Laura accompanied her mother to the door, clinging close to her all the way, until they arrived at the threshold, where she paused and felt around, to ascertain who was near him. Perceiving the matron, of whom she is very fond, she grasped her with one hand, holding on convulsively to her mother with the other, and thus she stood for a moment,—then she dropped her mother's hand,—put her handkerchief to her eyes, and turned round, clung sobbing to the matron, while her mother departed, with emotions as deep as those of her child."

LAST MOMENTS OF MEN OF GENIUS.—Rosseau, when dying ordered his attendants to place him before the window that he might once more behold his garden and bid adieu to nature. Roscommon uttered at the moment he expired, two lines of his own version of Dies iræ. Haller died feeling his pulse, and when he felt it almost gone turning to his brother physician, said, 'My friend, the artery ceases to beat,' and died. Petrarch was found dead in his library, leaning on a book. Bede died in the act of dictating. Herder closed his career writing an ode to the Deity, his pen on the last line. Walter died repeating some line of Virgil. Tasso's dying request of Cardinal Cynthia was indicative of the gloom which haunted him through life. He had one favor, he said, to request of him, which was that he would collect his works and commit them to the flames, especially his 'Jerusalem delivered.' Leibnitz was found dead in his chamber with a book in his hand. Clarendon's pen dropped from his fingers when he was seized with the palsy, which terminated his life. Chaucer died ballad making. His last production he entitled 'A Ballad, made by Geoffrey Chaucer on his death-bed, lying in great anguish. Wycherly, when dying, had his young wife brought to his bedside and having taken her hand, in a very solemn manner said he had but one request to make of her, and that was, that she would never marry an old man again. Keats, a little before he died, when his friend asked how he did, replied in a low voice, 'Better, my friend, I feel the daisies growing over me.'

A LOFTY POND.—We see it stated in the Farmer's Monthly Visitor that about one thousand feet below the highest point of Mount Washington, and between that and Mount Monroe, is the pond or the spring which gathers into a body of clear pellucid waters, the innumerable fountains gushing from the rocks above, the highest sources of the Amonoosuck river which discharges itself into the Connecticut some forty miles to the south-west. Such is the abundance of water collected from less than one-third of the surface of the two highest mountain tops, that the water discharging itself from this high reservoir at all seasons, would be quite sufficient at the height of more than four thousand feet from the mountain base, to do the work of a factory of several thousand spindles.

A REFLECTION.—When I look upon the tombs of the great, every emotion of envy dies in me. When I read the epitaphs of the beautiful, every inordinate desire goes out. When I meet with the grief of parents upon a tomb-stone, my heart melts with compassion. When I see the tomb of the parents themselves, I consider the vanity of grieving for those whom we must quickly follow. When I see kings lying by those who deposed them—when I see rivals placed side by side, or holy men, that divided the world with their contests and disputes, I reflect with sorrow and astonishment on the little competitions, factions and debates of mankind. When I read the several dates of the tombs, of some that died as yesterday, and some of six hundred years ago, I consider that great day when we shall all of us be cotemporaries, and make our appearance together.—Addison.

INDEPENDENCE HALL.

This room is visited by thousands yearly. The old State House stands on the south side of Chestnut st. between 5th and 6th. It is a large two story plain brick edifice and bears the marks of age. It is kept by Mr. Thomas Downing (familiarly called Tommy) and under the control of the City Common Council. The wings of either end are occupied as County offices. The main building has but two ground rooms, separated by a large hall which runs through the building north and south. The west room is occupied as a court room, and the one on the east end is the identical room in which our Declaration of Independence was adopted, and received the signatures of the founders of our Republic, the only alteration being the removal of the gallery, and seats. A statue of Washington occupies the place formerly assigned to the Speaker of Congress. He is represented as standing on a platform, on the front side of which is inscribed the well known motto: "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen;"—is dressed in plain citizen's costume—a roll under one foot,—another in his right hand, and a volume under his arm. At the request of a friend who accompanied me, Mr. Downing related to me the following incident, and as it gives a good description of this statue, I will give his own words, as near as I can recollect:

"Some six or seven years ago," said he, "one of the members of the City Council introduced to this room a gentleman, who was an officer in His Majesty's Navy, and requested me to give him a description of it. I thought I must show him all the pretty things, and led him in front of that statue. That, sir, said I, is a statue of General George Washington, carved on wood, by Mr. Richard Rush of this city. That roll under his foot is an emblem of the instrument which bound these Colonies to England. He tramples on it. The one in the right hand, is the Declaration of Independence; and that volume under his arm is emblematical of the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America. He fought for, obtained, and then preserved them. That, sir, is a good representation of Washington, carved when he was about 60 years of age.

"The officer remarked that "he had always supposed that Washington was a large corpulent man," and stepping up to the statue, he commenced a closer examination. Taking hold of his ankle, I heard him say, in a low voice, "what a calf." I thought as he was an English officer, I would not let him leave the room without a rejoinder. "No, sir," said I, "Gen. Washington was no calf. I sat in the same church with him almost every Sunday, for several years knew him well, both in public and private life and knew him to be a brave General, a good Statesman, and an honest man."

Behind this statue there hangs in a frame, the Declaration of Independence, with fac simile signatures. On the left side of the door as you enter the room from the middle hall hangs a large painting represeting Wm. Penn, in the act of treating with the Indians; and on the right of the entrance another painted by Mr. Sully representing Lafayette, about three miles from this city, reviewing the company of Washington Gray's who went out to escort him in. Mr. Downing gave me the following account of this picture.

"When it was ascertained that Lafayette was about entering the city, the last time he was in this country, the Washington Gray's went out to escort him in, and met him about three miles out of the city. While reviewing the company he accidentally saw on one of the knapsacks, the letters W. G. He stood looking at them for some moments, and then was overheard to say, "I wish I were a member of that company." The roll was immediately unfurled, and his name added to it. These are the circumstances which led to the drawing of that picture, and which give that company the right to be represented on the painting."

Such is a brief outline of the present appearance of "INDEPENDENCE HALL." There is no exorbitant display of architecture in its construction, no gaudy curtains or dazzling chandelier; but its appearance is at once calculated to carry the mind of the beholder back to the infant days of our republic, and it stands as a monument of the simplicity and economy of our forefathers who sat in that hall, while surrounded by the blood-hounds of war, and declared this people free and independent, and with heart and hand, united in vowing to maintain such Declaration with "fortune, lives, and sacred honor." BUCKINGHAM.

PHILADELPHIA, March 15th 1811.

MOUNTAIN SCENERY.—"There is something in the wilderness and sublimity of mountain scenery that tends to remind us rather of eternity than decay. The perishable works of men are no where to be seen. No city lies in gloomy ruins to show the outline of faded greatness; no remnant of a sanctuary here stands, to show the worship that has passed away. We see no falling records of the glorious deeds of those whose names are learned in history's page. We stand upon the mountain, and we scarce know that man exists upon the earth. This is not the land where arts have died or science been forgotten; those rocks never echoed the eloquence of orators, or the song of poets; these waters never bore the proud ships of the merchant; the soil never yielded to man the fruit of his industry. It is not here that the finger of time can be recognized.—In vain would he set his mark on snows that never fall nor disturb the fast bound form of adamantine ice. In vain he stretches out his hand where the rustling torrent and the wavering waterfall, blest with an eternity of youth, dash on their headlong course, regardless of the blighting power that withers strength, or lulls to rest the creations and the creatures of mortality. Here we may pause and say that Time has lost power. Here we may view the faint efforts of time overthrown in an instant. Changes they are; but the work of an hour has defeated the slow progress of decay. The lightning of the thunder storm, the blowing tempest, the engulfing flood, the overspreading avalanche have effaced from the surface of nature the impress of time, and left naught in the change to remind us of age. Surely there are scenes in life which seemed created to awaken in mankind the recollection that even time can lose its power. Who will not feel the nothingness of the pleasures, the cares, yea, or even the sorrows of our petty span, when for a moment he dwells with his heart and soul upon the thoughts of an eternity! Yes, it will sober the gay—it will comfort the grieved."—Edward Everett.

EMMET'S LAST MOMENTS.—One day, previous to the trial, as the governor was going his rounds, he entered Emmett's room rather abruptly; and observing a remarkable expression in his countenance he apologized for the interruption. He had a fork affixed to his little deal table, and appended to it there was a tress of hair. 'You see,' said he to his keeper, 'how innocent I am occupied. This little tress has long been dear to me, and I am plating it to wear on my bosom on the day of my execution.' On the day of that fatal event, there was found, sketched by his own hand, with a pen and ink upon that very table, an admirable likeness of himself, the head severed from the body which lay near it, surrounded by the scaffold, the axe, and all the paraphernalia of a high treason execution.—what a strange union of tenderness, enthusiasm and fortitude do the above traits exhibit! His fortitude, indeed, never forsook him. On the night previous to his death he slept as sound as ever; and when the fatal morning dawned, he arose, kneeled down and prayed, ordered some milk which he drank, wrote two letters, one to his brother in America and the other to Secretary of State enclosing it, and a desire for the Sheriff to be informed that he was ready. When they came into the room he said he had two requests to make—one, that his arms might be left as loose as possible, which was humanly and instantly acceeded to 'I make the other,' said he, 'not under any idea that it can be granted, but that it may be held in remembrance that I have made it; it is that I may be permitted to die in my uniform.'* This of course, could not be allowed; and the request seemed to have no other object than to show that he gloried in the cause for which he was to suffer. A remarkable example of his power over himself and others, occurred at this melancholy moment. He was passing out attended by the sheriffs, and proceeded by the executioneer—in one of the passages stood the turnkey, who had been personally assigned to him during his confinement; this poor fellow loved him in his heart, and the tears were streaming from his eyes in torrents. Emmet paused for a moment; his hands were not at liberty—he kissed his cheek—and the man who had been an inmate of a dungeon, habituated to the scenes of horror and hardened against their operation, fell senseless at his feet. Before his eyes had opened again upon this world, those of the youthful sufferer had closed on him forever."

---

*The color of the rebel uniform was green.

FATHER MATHEW.—Father Mathew's opponents who have denounced him as wishing to make money, will be somewhat surprised to learn that, so far from making himself rich in his benevolent mission, he has been involving himself in pecuniary responsibilities; and that a brother and a brother-in-law, each of whom had distilleries, had lost immensely since the commencement of his temperance movement. Father Mathew stated at Cork on New Year's Day, that he was now 1,500*l*, poorer than on the day when he entered on the Temperance reform; that he was indebted 1,100*l* for medals in Birmingham and elsewhere; and that to meet these demands upon him he could not boast of having money in any bank or any where else.—Leeds Mercury.

There is said to be iron enough in the blood of 42 men, to make a ploughshare weighing 24 pounds.—The brass in their faces cannot be ascertained with so much accuracy.

A great Boat in the Great West.—The Cincinnati Gazette has a notice of the new steamboat Missouri, which lately laid half a day at the Broadway wharf, and was visited by a large number of the citizens. The Missouri is the largest boat that has ever been on the Western waters, and is said to be one of the handsomest. Her length on deck is 233 feet; width of hull 30 feet, and including guards 59 feet. Her wheels are 32 feet in diameter; and her cylinders are 26 inches in diameter, with a 12 foot stroke. The Missouri carries 600 tons. She was built at Pittsburgh for Capt. Swan, of St. Louis, at a cost of $45,000; and is intended for a regular trader between St. Louis and New-Orleans.

The Brothertown Indians, about 45 miles from Green Bay, Wisconsin, have been admitted to citizenship in that Territory, and are substantial farmers. The Stockbridge Indians are settled 36 miles south of Green Bay. Neither of these tribes permit ardent spirits to be sold within their reservations. Among both there has recently been a very interesting revival of religion.

The Burning Coal Mines.—The Pottsville (Pa.) Emporium states that another coal mine in that region has taken fire, and continues to burn with increased fury.—The vein is a very large one—we believe the Mammoth vein—and consequently must prove very disastrous to the proprietors of the land. The mine beyond Newcastle, which we have so frequently noticed, continues burning as usual, and the craters upon the summit of the mountain are still increasing in size and number.

Medicines! Medicines!!
TO FAMILIES.

S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public; for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s
MOTHER'S RELIEF.
JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT—
DR. McMUN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—
MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—
DOCT. BISHOP'S ANTI BILLIOUS PILLS A HIGHLY VALUABLE FAMILY MEDICINE

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
GEO. W. SUTTON.
De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

BOOKS! BOOKS!! BOOKS!!
EDWIN P. BLY,

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of De Ruyter and the public generally, that he has for sale Books of most kinds and descriptions usually called for in any Book Store. The following are a few, viz:—Davies Geometry, do. Surveying, do. Algebra, do. Arithmetic, do. First Lessons in Arithmetic. Also, almost all kinds of Latin, Greek and Italian, Olney's Geography & Atlas, Burnet's Geography of the Heavens.

Common Schools can be supplied with Books for a Library.

BOOK BINDING

Done in a neat and durable manner, and as cheap as can be done in any other place, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany St., De Ruyter.
De Ruyter, November 1st, 1840. 35tf

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. A certain cure in all cases. Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6
S. D. DELLAY.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman.
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin. H. S. Crandall.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Horace Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick
Scott—Joel Greene, Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Hopkinton.—Joseph Spicer, jun., P. M.
Westerly.—Jonathan Maxson.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth
Salem— David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield.—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson.—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISCONSIN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 8.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 60.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, APRIL 23, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

The Ruins of Time.

BY HENRY GOODWIN.

Of the many subjects upon which the mind of man is led to dwell with deep and thrilling interest, none present to our view a more spacious field for solemn contemplation, or a fairer region for the fancy-flight of imagination, than the Ruins of Time.—When we consider the transitory existence of all human works; the splendid productions of genius, which are but as so many monuments of decay, and behold the fairest fabrics ever reared by human hands defaced or destroyed by the desolating hand of Time; how is it possible to avoid feeling a deep and lively interest in things which concern us so nearly!

When we turn our eyes to the East, the land of holy writ, with what deep and mingled emotions of wonder and awe do we behold the remains of those cities which were once the emporium and center of the civilized world, where were assembled the great, the rich and the powerful of every clime and nation, now mouldering in ruins! With what a melancholy interest do we linger around the antiquated ruins of Palmyra, and survey the remains of the once mighty Thebes, the grandeur and magnificence of whose ruins have for centuries excited the wonder and admiration of mankind! And with what feelings of solemnity do we gaze upon Petrea, the ancient capital of Edom, whose destruction was foretold by the Most High, in the following terrible denunciation: "Oh! thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rocks, that holdest the heights of the hill, though thou shouldst make thy nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down from thence; and thorns shall come up in her palaces, nettles and brambles in the fastnesses thereof, and it shall be a habitation for dragons, and a court for owls." How forcibly are we impressed with the truth of the words of the inspired penman, written when this was one of the most magnificent, populous, and powerful cities in the world. But where are the inhabitants? the young, the gay, the beautiful, and the high ones of this now desolate city? They have long since passed to their eternal home; and her splendid palaces and magnificent temples have crumbled to the dust. Her streets, which were once crowded with the busy throng, are now lonely and silent; nought disturbs the stillness of its ruins save the wild beast, or the still wilder Arab, as he wanders in search of some hidden treasure. And as the traveler gazes upon her wide-spread ruins, his mind is irresistibly carried back to the time,

When in this silent place
Far other sounds were heard,—
Sounds of man's pleasure and distress,
The living, frequent, tread.
But where are they? This wilderness
Shows scarce a single shed;
And save the shepherd to the fold,
Or, mountain passing, fen behold
This city of the dead.
Peace to their sleep! from year to year
How quietly they slumber here!

Let us now turn from contemplating the remains of Eastern magnificence, and cast a passing glance upon Greece—once lovely Greece—the land of scholars and of Arts; the home of eloquence and of science; the mother of Philosophers, of Poets and of Orators; that Greece to whose genius and improvement in the arts and sciences mankind are indebted for the knowledge which they possess; whose ancient grandeur and glory are recorded upon the brightest pages of history. But now how changed! Fallen, indeed, is the land of Demosthenes. Her glory has departed; her once splendid temples are in ruins; her monuments are decayed and broken. We no longer behold her sons displaying the bravery and patriotism of Leonidas or Miltiades, or the wisdom of a Solon or Lycurgus; neither do we hear from the rostrum the thundering eloquence of a Demosthenes; nor from her schools the philosophy of a Socrates or a Plato; nor from the pens of her poets the inspired strains of a Homer.

Look for a moment upon Rome—imperial Rome! once the proud mistress of the world, the renown and terror of whose arms spread to the remotest regions of the earth. She, too, has fallen! The golden eagle, which hovered with out-stretched wings over the Imperial City, has long since taken its flight and winged its way to a more congenial clime; and Rome, the genius of whose people and wisdom of whose laws have been for succeeding ages the admiration of mankind, now presents nought but one broad expanse of ruin. Her wise statesmen who first formed those laws to which she was indebted for the mighty power which she possessed, and her profound philosophers have passed away. Her Orators, who by the magic of their stirring eloquence could rouse the dormant passions of the human heart, or by a nod bid them—be still—they too have crossed the Stygian wave.

Her poets, "touched by the Muse's fire," rendering immortal each lofty deed of daring which they sung, have long since "hung their harps upon the willow," and their voices are hushed in the eternal stillness of Death. Desolate is the land of the Cæsars. The bright halo of glory which once encircled her proud name is dimmed. Upon her palaces and her lofty domes, and even upon her SEVEN HILLS are inscribed those fearful and fatal words, "PASSING AWAY."

But let us not confine our attention to Time's dark ravages in the old world alone. When we contemplate the condition of our own happy country, and consider that these pleasant fields and populous cities which we every where behold, rising as if by magic, occupy the places of a once dark and tangled forest, the happy home of the red man, we can but say, that Time has indeed dealt heavily with the Aborigines of our land. Their shrill war-whoop is no longer re-echoed upon the mountains. The wild game fly not before the lightning speed of their arrows. Their song and their war-dance is hushed, and their council fires are quenched in the blood of their warriors.—They have left the graves of their ancestors, and are seeking a quiet home in the wilds of the distant west.

On glancing back through the dark vista of the past, we have beheld the desolation of nations and cities; have seen the proudest works and monuments of man laid in ruins by the relentless hand of Time. But 'tis not in past ages alone that Time's fell ravages are displayed; all things around us are marked with the seal of decay. We see our fellow beings departing to their eternal home. The young and the beautiful, with their fair cheeks and sparkling eyes, are mown down like summer flowers. The grey haired veteran, who has braved many a dark storm during the changing vicissitudes of life, passes to the silent tomb. We behold the youth, as he takes his part in the great drama of life, fondly dreaming of future fame, changed to the infirm and aged man. The days of his youth are like the visions of the past. And in our own youthful land, Time will soon bring many and fearful changes. We shall leave these halls buoyant with hope, our hearts glowing with noble aspirations for honor and future glory. But we shall soon have passed away, and "the places that know us now, shall know us no more forever."

De Ruyter Institute, April 7, 1841.

For the Register.

What is the true Aim for Missionary Effort.

It is a well known fact, that while great exertions during many consecutive years have been made for the conversion of the heathen world, and much has transpired to enkindle the ardor of the christian and the philanthropist; yet, in comparison to the amount of life sacrificed, and labor and time spent, the effect has fallen so far short of the desideratum that the Christian may well, yea, should stop and enquire—What is the cause? It is a source of grief to the true Christian that the religion of Jesus Christ, which has the promise of being universal, (as its author is to "reign king of nations as he now reigns king of saints,") makes as yet, even nominally, so slight an impression upon distant and powerful nations of the earth. And if he is truly awake to the subject, and considers that for a great length of time, with a trifling exception, it has made no acquisition of territory, his tears will run more freely.—While the united powers of European and American christians have been bent upon the Asiatic and African shores; upon the isles of the North and South; and upon every nook and corner of the earth, to evangelize and christianize the benighted heathen, but little in comparison has been done for the Jews.

A people so long upheld by supernatural and divine power; so universally scattered among, and yet kept separate from all people; around whom hangs such a halo of faded glory, and upon whom, according to scripture predictions, is to burst such unnumbered beams of light and glory.—A people that are so conspicuously placed in almost every accessible part of the globe; and who are bound by such imperishable ties of interest to the Christian church, may well claim the sympathies, prayers, and labors of the missionary and his supporters; and these, with a few honorable exceptions, they have not received. How few the efforts that have been made to bring the gospel direct to the body of the Jewish people? I would not presume to impugn the wisdom, the piety, or devotion to the cause of the truly excellent of the earth, who, for the last half century have stood forth in bold relief, as the pillars of the cause of missions. Yet, I would humbly ask for consideration upon the subject while I propound a few questions. As man, in his best earthly estate, is but a poor erring creature, may there not have been a wrong direction given to the missionary labor, or at least to the main portion of it? Or if right, formerly, may not the change of times and the development of circumstances require the united efforts of the christian church now to be made in behalf of the Jews? Is it not the case that missions have been the most successful among those people where there were no Jews dispersed? as, for instance, the South Sea Islands, Southern Africa, &c. Is not this an admonition not to neglect them, that is, the Jews? And does not the scripture present to us the idea that the gathering again of the dispersed of Israel into one nation, and to the worship of their God, will be the foundation of the universal gathering of the Gentile world? This I believe to be true; and while in the present day missionary efforts are increasing, yet being spent, in a great measure, in a wrong channel, so far they must necessarily prove abortive. For if it be the case that "the receiving of them again" will be to the church "but as life from the dead," and the time has fully come for "the deliverer to come out of Zion, which shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob;" fruitless must be our expectations while we expend our efforts in a diverse channel. All things around us seem to call upon us to awake fully to the subject of missions. And prophetic writings, the declarations of the Savior and the Apostles, and the gathering interests of the Jewish people, call us earnestly to awake to their situation, their claims on us, and our duty.

Let us, then, so many as love the mission cause, put away the pernicious habit of spiritualizing away the promises of the restoration and conversion of the Jews.—That giving them their literal meaning, we may be able to take hold of the subject aright, and through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, we may prosecute it to the praise of his glory. E.

Religious Department.

THE DESTROYER OF DEATH.

BY DR. CHALMERS.

When we look at the wide extent and universality of the ravages of death, how hopeless is our escape! We see no exception—it scatters its desolations with unsparing regularity among all the sons and daughters of Adam. It perhaps adds to our despair when we see it extending to the lower animals, or behold the lovely forms of the vegetable creation dissolving into nothing. It carries to our observation all the mutability of a general law; we can look for no mitigation of the incorrigible distemper; we cannot reverse the process of nature, nor bid her mighty elements to retire. Is there no power, then, superior to nature, and which can control it? To us a law of the universe carries the idea of some fixed and unalterable necessity along with it, and of none more strict, more unfailing, and more widely extensive in its operations than the law of death. In the wide circuit of things does there exist no higher authority that can abolish this law?—no power that can overthrow death, that can grapple with this mighty conqueror and break his tyranny to pieces? We never saw that being, but the records of past ages have come down to us, and we there read of the extraordinary visitor who lighted on these realms where death had reigned so long in all the triumphs of extended empire. Wonderful enterprise! He came to destroy death. Vast undertaking! He came to depose nature from this conceived immutability; and a law which embraced within its wide grasp all who live and move on the face of the world, he came to overturn; and he soon gave token of a power commensurate to the mighty undertaking. That nature to whose operations we are so apt to ascribe some stubborn and invincible necessity, gave way at his coming; she felt his authority through all her elements, and she obeyed it. Wonderful period!—when the constancy of nature was broken in upon by him who established it—when the Deity vindicated his honor, and the miracles of a single age, committed to authentic history, gave evidence to all futurity that there is a power above nature and beyond it. What more unchanging than the aspect of the starry heavens—and in what quarter of her dominions does nature maintain a more silent and solemn inflexibility, than in the orbs which roll around us?—Yet, at the coming of that mighty Savior, these heavens broke silence—music was heard from their canopy, and it came from a congregation of living voices, which sung the praises of God, and made them fall in articulate language on human ears. After this, who can call nature unalterable? Jesus Christ hath abolished death, he has made perpetual invasion upon nature's constancy, and she never in a single instance resisted the word of his power. "What manner of man is this?" said his disciples, "even the wind and sea obey him!" Philosophers love to expatiate, and they tell us of the laws of the animal and vegetable kingdom. These laws may prove an impassable barrier to us, but in the hand of the omnipotent Savior they were nothing—he reversed or supported them at pleasure; he blasted the fig tree by a single word; and what to us was the basis of high anticipation, he made the subject of his miracles. He restored sight to the blind, he restored speech to the dumb, he restored motion to the palsied, and to crown his triumph over nature and her processes, he restored life to the dead—he laid down his own life, and took it up again. The disciples gave up all for lost when they saw the champion of their hopes made the victim of the very mortality which he promised to destroy. It was alike the contest and victory of nature—but it was only to make his triumph more complete. He entered—

"That undiscovered country from whose bourn
No traveler e'er returns"—

But he did. He broke asunder the mighty barriers of the grave; he entered and he re-animated that body which expired on the cross, and by that most striking of all testimonies he has given us to know that he hath fought against the law of death, and hath carried it.

From the Christian Intelligencer.

GOLDEN LEGENDS.

CAUTION NECESSARY.—When I see the fisherman bait his hook, I think on Satan's subtle malice, who sugars over his poisoned hooks with seeming pleasures. Thus Eve's fruit was candied with divine knowledge—"Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." When I see the fish fast hanged, I think upon the covetous worldling, who leaps at the profit without considering the danger. Thus Achan took the garment, and the gold, but never considered that his life must answer for it. If Satan be such a "fisher of men," it is good to look before we leap. Honey may be eaten, so that we take heed of the sting. I will honestly enjoy my delights, but not buy them with danger.—Warwick.

POWER OF THE GOSPEL.—The scruple is often heard, and sometimes from good men, who have taken but short views on the subject, "What, after all, can you accomplish? Iniquity abounds, and the wicked seem to multiply and wax bolder!" Sadly true; but what would the world become, without restraint?—abandoned to its chosen course, and the reign of indulgence thrown on the neck of every passion?—The Christian religion is healthy and purifying, and is adapted to the temporal, intellectual and moral wants of our race. It harmonizes with the constitution of our physical and moral nature, and if its influences ever become disastrous, it is because by perverting it we have made them such. There is nothing in the united universe that can so elevate and refine the soul.—Take the most degraded from the haunts of vice, and let the spirit of God seal the gospel in his heart, in the assurance that the Lord waits to be gracious, and notwithstanding all his vileness will be reconciled, and remit all, and forgive all his rebellion and ingratitude; and his soul rises at the blessed thought; his bosom will begin to expand with noble impulses, as the love of God in the great scheme of redemption warms his soul. Now he hates his chains, abhors his vileness; his spirit breaks away from his bondage, and he rises to the liberty and purity of the sons of God.—There is an energy and power in crucified love, that when it beams on the soul, melts, and humbles, and exalts it. This mighty motive will yet bring the world of rebellion to submission and obedience, in filial trust and love.—Frelinghuysen.

TIME.—Spend your time in nothing which you know must be repented of.—Spend it in nothing on which you might not pray for the blessing of God. Spend it in nothing which you could not review with a quiet conscience on your dying bed. Spend it in nothing which you might not safely and properly be found doing, if death should surprise you in the act.—Baxter.

PLEASURE.—There are many things that in themselves have nothing that is truly delightful; on the contrary, they have a good deal of bitterness in them; and yet, from our perverse appetites after forbidden objects, are not only ranked among the pleasures, but are made even the greatest designs of life. To pursue such rainbow visions is folly. True pleasure lies in the soul and consists in knowledge, and in that delight which the contemplation of truth carries with it; to which may be added, the joyful reflections on a well spent life, and the assured hopes of a future glorious immortality.—More.

HAVE YOU THE HOLY SPIRIT?—"If you have the Holy Spirit, you have seen the evil of sin; you have repented of sin; you have forsaken sin; you hate sin; you watch and pray against sin; you have received the spirit of love. If you have the Spirit of God, you love God supremely; you love the Father who gave his Son to suffer and die; you love the Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, for what he hath done and suffered on your account. You love all the sincere followers of Jesus Christ, and confine not your regards to a party. You love the human race at large, as children of the same family, and you wish them to know the things that belong to their peace.

You are of a forbearing and forgiving temper; you pity and pray for sinners, who, through blindness and ignorance, oppose at present their own eternal interest; you are of a thankful spirit; you thank God for making to differ, by his grace, from many others; and you praise him for every favor, both of a temporal and spiritual nature;—you are zealous for the honor of God in the world; you desire to rejoice in Christ Jesus, and in all the duties of Christianity; and you esteem the applause, the pleasure, and the wealth of the whole world, as nothing, in comparison of the love and blessing of God, through Christ Jesus.

REPENTANCE.—How long time has thou, sinner? I cannot tell for God hath not revealed it unto me. If he had, I would not tell you of it. I would not be afraid, nor spare to tell it you for the good will I bear you; but I cannot tell how long time you have, for God hath not opened it to me.—But I can tell you that this lenity, this long forbearance and holding of his hand, provoketh us to repent and amend. I can tell, that whosoever contemneth these riches and treasures of God's goodness, of his mercy, his patience, and long suffering, shall have the more grievous condemnation. This I can tell well enough. Paul telleth me thus; and I can tell, that ye have to repent as long as ye live here in this world; but after this life I can make no warrant of any future time to repent.—Therefore, repent and amend while ye be here, for when ye are gone hence, ye are past that. But how long that shall be, within to-morrow or the next day, or twenty years, I cannot tell.—Latimer.

SAINTS IN HEAVEN.—Temptation and Sin have no place in heaven. Those evils belong to earth and hell; but within the gates of heaven nothing must enter that tempteth—nothing that defileth. The mixture of sinful thoughts and idle words, sinful actions and irregular affections, makes our state of holiness so imperfect here below. We groan within ourselves, being burdened. We would be rid of those criminal weaknesses, those guilty attendants of our lives. The Spirits above are under the sweet necessity of being for ever holy. Their natures have put on perfection. The image of God is so far completed in them, that nothing contrary to the divine nature remains in all their frame—for they see God in all the fairest beauties of his holiness, and they adore and love. They behold him without a veil, and are changed into the same image from glory to glory.—Watts.

HARDEN NOT YOUR HEARTS.—The metal of the human soul, so to speak, is like some material substance. If the force which you lay upon it do not break or dissolve it, it will beat into hardness. If the moral argument by which it is plied now, do not so soften the mind as to carry and overpower its purposes, then on another day the argument may be put forth, in terms as impressive, but it falls on a harder heart, and therefore with a more slender efficiency. You have resisted to-day, and by that resistance you have acquired a firmer metal of resistance against the power of every future warning that may be brought to bear upon you. You have stood your ground against the urgency of the most earnest admonition, and against the dreadfulness of the most terrifying menaces.—On that ground you have fixed yourself more immoveably than before; and though on some future day, the same spiritual thunder be made to play around you, it will not shake you out of your obstinacy of your determined rebillion.—Chalmers.

AN INFIDEL'S ADVICE.

A writer in the Western Observer, Bishop McIlvaine, we presume, relates the following remarkable anecdote:

I have recently been in conversation with a gentleman who personally knew Tom Paine, from whom I have learned some particulars, which it may be useful to repeat. This gentleman states, that when a young man he was driving his father's wagon from Sing Sing to a place in Westchester co., N. Y., when Paine, traveling the same way requested to be taken in. The young man consenting, they rode about twenty miles together. The fame and talk about 'Paine's Age of Reason,' had made a sceptical impression on the mind of the youth, and finding himself in the presence of its author, he gladly availed himself of the opportunity to learn more of that sort of reason. In the course of the conversation, Paine positively asserted that he believed the Scriptures to be the word of God, and most seriously charged his auditor not to read his book, or if he did, not suffer it to have any influence on his mind. He said it did not contain the truth; that he wrote it, at first, without the intention of publishing, merely to see what he could do; that he deeply regretted its publication, and would have given any thing had he never written it. Such was the serious earnestness of Paine in these remarks, and so conclusively did he reason against the principles of his 'Age of Reason,' that he entirely removed all sceptical impressions from the mind of the young man, (the present reformant,) so that the latter has ever since retained a grateful recollection of the conversation, and now says, that such was Paine's earnestness to prevent his being injured by his writings, and to eradicate all such evil impressios as they had already made, that he can never lose the remembrance of it. The same gentleman says, that he has heard of several persons who could relate the same observations from Paine to them.

PEACE IN DEATH.—On board an East Indiaman was a pious boatswain whom, on this account, the crew looked upon as a strange man. The ship was overtaken with a storm so dreadful, that after every effort to preserve life, the captain said, "All that could be done had been done—it was impossible the vessel could weather it."—The ship seemed sinking—the captain withdrew into the cabin—the men were some on their knees, and others with horror hanging on parts of the rigging. All expected the vessel would founder. The boatswain had been very active, and apparently unalarmed, during the whole of the gale. At this moment, when a heavy sea struck the ship, and seemed as if it would instantly sink, looking up with a smile he exclaimed, "Blessed be God, all is right!" and began to sing. The storm afterwards abated, and the vessel was saved. Thus, amidst the storms of life, on the dark ocean of death, and amidst the terrors of the judgment day, the Christian may still smile and exultingly exclaim, "Blessed be God, all is right!"

Children's Department.

WHEN WILL YOU LOVE GOD?

One Sabbath morning I had been talking to a class at the Sunday School, about the love of God in giving up his only Son to die for us. The children were all very attentive: at length I said, "Since God has shown so much love for us, ought we not to love him in return;" I waited for an answer, but no one replied. I then turned to one little girl, and said, "What do you think about it, Fanny?"

'I cannot love God now,' the little girl replied.

'Cannot love him, my dear!' I said:—'why cannot you? God gave Jesus to die for you; and, besides this, it is he that gives you your friends, your food, clothing, and every other blessing which you receive; and, if I am not very much mistaken, you love your mother in return for her kindness to you, and why cannot you love God in return for his kindness?"

'I cannot love him now, teacher,' the little girl replied.

'And why not now?' I asked. 'If you cannot now, when will you love him?'

'I will love him when I get to heaven, teacher,' said Fanny.

'But nay, dear child, if you do not love him now, do you think God will take you to heaven? O no! you must love him now, and thus, when you get to heaven, you will love him much more.'

'And when, my dear, will you love God?' said I, turning to another little girl.

'Oh! teacher,' said the little girl, and the tears started into her eyes, "I do love him a little now, but I want to love him more.'

'And what must you do if you want to love him more.'

'I must pray to God to help me ma'am.'

'Yes,' I replied, 'and he will help you; he delights in the prayers even of a child, and he will hear your prayers, if you pray in sincerity.'

I then turned to another, and said, 'When will you love God, Emma?'

'I love him now, teacher; and thus when I die, I shall go to heaven, and I shall see little William; for mother says that he is gone to heaven.'

I had no time to reply, for the signal was now given to close the school; but as I was collecting the books, Fanny said, 'I will love God now, teacher; I will pray to him to help me."

'Do pray to him,' I replied, "and he will help you.'

And now, my young readers, I will put the same question to you—'When will you love God?' Do not put it off, and think you cannot love him now, for you have great cause to love him. If you had committed a crime for which you were to be severely punished, and one came forward and begged to take the punishment which was due to you upon himself, would you not love him in return? would you not fear to offend him? How much more, then, ought you to love God, seeing that he has given up his only Son to die to save you from the punishment which was due to you for your sins! O for such love to guilty sinners, can you do less than love him in return? Give him your heart; seek to please him, to serve him, and love him now; and when you die, you will go to heaven, and love him for ever.—London Child's Companion.

Could we but look into many domestic circles, with all their outward show of finery, what scenes of misery would present themselves to our view, all originating in the senseless rage for gentility, or the silly ambition of figuring in a higher station than that to which they belong.

Nothing annoys an enemy more than kindness. It is an arrow that generally hits the mark. It is the most severe, yet the most noble mode of treatment.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, April 23, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

De Ruyter Institute.

The Trustees of De Ruyter Institute are happy to announce to their patrons that they have secured the services of Mr. JOSEPH A. BADGER, as Teacher of Languages, &c. Mr. Badger's recommendations are a sufficient guaranty that he will be fully able to give perfect satisfaction to all who may be placed under his instruction.

CAMPBELL'S CARRIAGE, SIGN & ORNAMENTAL PAINTING: 120 pp. octavo.

The above work has just been issued from our press. We have the fullest assurance that it will be of great service to the class of artists for whom it was designed. The author was a practical painter, of no mean repute. His work is scientific, and the author exhibits a thorough acquaintance with the art. Eld. Campbell having died just before the work went to press, it was purchased by R. R. Lewis, of Scott, by whose direction it is published. The book, we learn, is selling rapidly, and is very highly esteemed.

National Fast.

By reference to the Proclamation in another column, it will be seen that President Tyler has recommended a day of fasting to be religiously observed throughout the country. This we trust will meet a glad response throughout the land. The country deeply feels the loss of her President. Our exchanges, almost without exception, are clad in the habiliments of mourning.—The heat of party zeal is lost in deep sorrow for the death of the officer of highest rank in the nation. We especially hope that this Proclamation will meet a hearty response in every Christian's heart, and in all the churches. We have much need to humble ourselves in view of our national sins, and implore the continuance of that care which has brought us thus far in our national course. Our country has been most highly favored of Heaven. Our institutions have flourished; our battles have been fought, and peace and plenty have almost invariably attended us. But, like Israel, we have forgotten God to a great extent, and laid a heavy yoke upon many who were made for the enjoyment of freedom.

Br. S. M. Burdick informs us that there have been six added to the church in Lincklaen within a few weeks past. Four of whom have lately embraced Christ, and one of these is a convert to the Sabbath of the Bible.

From the Ravenna (Ohio,) Cabinet and Visiter.

There can be no mistaking of the fourth command of the decalogue, Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. This is a clear, positive, plain, explicit and direct command, and by it, we are clearly bound to keep the Sabbath, religiously, as a day of rest, and abstinence from the ordinary pursuits of the world. The only exception granted, is that contained in the New Testament, for works of necessity and mercy, involving relief to the immediate wants and distresses of man and beast. He who made the Sabbath day, and commanded it to be kept holy, knew all things, and foreseeing all things, knew what inducement there would be to violate this particular command in this particular respect, yet it seems it did not comport with the wisdom of his plan to make any exception, or to grant any indulgence, save the one above mentioned. How then can any one doubt as to the path of duty in this matter—how can any one of God's children hesitate to make the strict observance of His Sabbath, a point of exact conscientious duty? It is to be feared that the fashion of the times and the laws of the land, together with the natural inclination of the heart, have more to do, in shaping the conduct of professed disciples, than do "the statutes of the Lord." This is a matter of great moment, and one which it well behooves the church seriously to examine, for in so far as the laws of God are observed, so far, and so far only, may we look for prosperity. In conclusion, we may add, that the light which the Scriptures clearly shed upon this subject, can neither be added to, or diminished by the sophistry of man.

The foregoing we take from the Western Reserve Cabinet and Family Visiter, published at Ravenna, Ohio. We feel most grateful for the sentiments expressed in this article. When the convenience system governs religious creeds, so much as at the present day, we are most happy to find any contending with such zeal for the law of the Lord. It is a matter of great grief to the friends of the Redeemer, to see the word of the Lord trampled under foot by the professed friends of purity and truth, and to see the "innovations" of the man of sin supersede the commands of the Most High. The Church can never triumph in the convenience system. It must come back again to its pristine purity, and men must "call the Sabbath a delight," and refrain from doing their pleasure on God's holy day. No subject can be made plainer than is the subject of the Sabbath in the scriptures, and we think, with our brother of the Cabinet, that "there can be no mistaking the fourth command of the Decalogue." Here is a Sabbatic law—a "thus saith the Lord." To the christian, there is no higher authority than the word of God. The heavens and earth may pass away, but God's word shall never pass away.

All time is the same with God. All time, past or to come, is present with him; and when he speaks of time without limiting it, he speaks of eternity. So it is in the law mentioned in the above extract,—"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." This word, is, comprehends all time. It is no where limited. It refers back to the seventh-day of time, and forward as long as seven days of time shall remain.

Having these facts before us, we deeply lament when we see men professedly pious setting aside this holy law, and adopting a convenience system. It is time to stand in defense of God's holy law, and to contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the saints. Men must learn obedience to God if they would see his truth triumph over error. We exhort a return to pristine purity and obedience.—We are anxious to see the time when all shall walk by the same rule, and when there shall be but one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and one Sabbath.

By the way, we would suggest to our brother of the Cabinet, whether obedience to the Sabbatic law which he so much loves, would not require a change in his practice? The phraseology is very specific, and in no way ambiguous. It can not be misunderstood.

Extracts from Letters.

Extract of a letter from Br. L. A. Davis, dated, Port Jefferson, Ohio, April 2d, 1841.

"The three churches are in a flourishing condition. We have had some trials since you left us, but a happy state of union still prevails. We have had some additions and a number more expected soon. The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Extract of a letter from Br. J. Goodrich, dated, Milton, Rock Co., Wiskonsan Territory, March 25th, 1841.

"Your Register is well liked in this place by all who have read it, and I am extremely sorry that there should be any falling off among its supporters, and I hope I shall be able soon to send on names to increase the subscription.

"The people here are all well, and are of the opinion that they are located in the best part of the world; surely, we have a good heritage. We have not had any rain since the middle of November, until within a few days, and then not much.

"Yours in haste."

Missionary Department.

For the Register.

The American S. D. B. H. M. Society.

It is generally known that I was appointed a Missionary to travel within the bounds of the denomination, for the purpose of supplying as many of the destitute churches with preaching, as I could, whilst I was instructed to visit the more highly favored churches for the purpose of receiving their contributions in aid of the funds of the society. In accordance with this appointment, I came home, arranged my business, and commenced my labors. I went to Persia, Cattaraugus Co., where I remained nearly two weeks, but the weather was very stormy, and the roads in such a state that the people, generally, could not get out to meetings. I came home, and after some time I went to Alfred, where I expected to receive a considerable sum in aid of the cause. But I found that there was so much dissatisfaction resting in the minds of all the brethren with whom I conversed, with regard to the constitution of the Society, and the manner in which the affairs of the Society had been conducted, that there was no prospect of raising money enough to pay traveling expenses, over and above what would be raised in the regular mode; and being aware that it was not expected that the Mission would add to the debt already due by the Society, I thought it expedient to call upon the Executive Committee for advice, whether it would be better to proceed any farther or to stop. They accordingly met; and after having deliberated upon the subject, informed me that in their opinion it would be better to go no farther in the matter. Under these circumstances, I gave up all idea of prosecuting the Mission, and I write this for the purpose of letting the churches know the situation of affairs; so that they may take measures to advance the welfare of the cause, without waiting for a visit from me, as their Missionary.

I have only further to say, that if ever there was a time when we, as a denomination, were loudly called upon to enter vigorously into the Home Missionary enterprize, it is now. The Lacedemonian cry is heard from all quarters, "Come over and help us," especially from the west; and I am sure that if many of our brethren who are rolling in the lap of luxury, both as it regards temporal and spiritual things, could hear the pathetic appeal for help that have been lately made, and see the spiritual dearth that exists in many portions of the land, they would not give "sleep to their eyes, nor slumber to their eye-lids," until they had given up that portion of the property which they hold in possession, which ought long ere this, to have been consecrated to this glorious cause. JAMES H. COCHRAN.

Controversial Papers.

For the Register.

Reasons for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity.

NO. II.

Mr. Editor.—My second reason for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity, is that our Lord Jesus Christ expressly and repeatedly acknowledges the Father to be his God, as well as his Father, and that he is also so represented by the Apostles and Prophets.

This acknowledgment is made, not in reference merely to an inferior nature, or office; but in reference to his entire person, or being. It is manifestly made on the same ground that God is declared to be the God and Father of his people. Thus, when on the cross, he cried out, "my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Mark xv. 34. And, after his resurrection, he said to Mary, "I ascend to my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God," John xx. 17, placing himself in the same dependent relation to God which belonged to that disciple.

Again, he says, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God," Rev. iii. 12, and "Lo, I came to do thy will O God." Heb. x. 7. Will it be said that he speaks thus as man and mediator only? Where, I ask, is it said, or intimated that he spake thus, otherwise than in his entire person—his very self, which must include his entire being? Where, in all the sacred volume, is it said, that he spake certain things as man, and other things as God? There is no example of any such thing. This turning from Divinity to humanity, and from humanity to Divinity, to explain what is predicated of Christ, has no countenance, as I can find, from his scriptures. Besides; do not Trinitarians consider him, in his capacity as mediator, both God and man, or, as it is frequently expressed, 'God-man;' 'God-incarnate;' 'man-divine?' In that case, he must make these declarations as God, as well as man; which is palpably inconsistent. Moreover; God is represented to be his God in the character, or capacity of Lord, which is the highest that he sustains. Paul calls him "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." Eph. i. 3. "And the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory," verse 17.

Again, he says, "that ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. xv. 6. Again, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ knoweth that I lie not." 2 Cor. xi. 31. Peter also styles him "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Epist. i. 3. The prophet Micah also says, "he shall stand and feed in the strength of the Lord, in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God," ch. v. 4. And David, ascribing to him, according to the common version, the title, God, speaks of him in the same connection as having a God. "Therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." Ps xlv. 6, 7. Also, in a number of places where we meet with the phrase in the common version, "God and the Father," the full sense of the original requires it to be rendered, "the God and Father," identifying God and the Father, and showing that he is as truly the God of Jesus Christ, as he is of any man, or angel; and that he is the God of him in his highest character and dignity. The only difference is, that Christ is "the First-born among many brethren," and "made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they." Exalted to universal Lordship, he still takes the attitude of a child, and a subject of the living God, saying "my Father and your Father, my God and your God." Hence, believers are represented as being "joint-heirs with him of God,"—Rom. viii. 17, which implies that he is an heir of him too; and, therefore, cannot be the God whom he is the heir of. Whoever heard, or conceived of any one's being heir of himself? Besides, what is the meaning of the expressions, "the God of our Lord," and "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," if he possess a nature of which God is not the God?

Moreover; the highest glory which he receives, according to Phil. ii. 11, is to the glory of God the Father. It does not terminate on himself; but passes from him to a superior, and that superior is the Father. Whereas, the homage which the supreme God receives is not to the glory of another; but terminates on himself. Jesus Christ is to be universally worshipped as Lord; but never as the supreme God.—To affirm this, is not lowering his true character. God forbid that I should withhold from him his due. It can be no virtue to place him higher than the Father and himself have estimated him. Awarding to their estimation of him, he is the First-born Son of God; but as truly a Son as any other, though inconceivably the greatest of all creatures; and made Lord by gift and appointment—all which evinces a dependence on the alone Supreme; and which dependence he, on all occasions, either expressly, or impliedly confessed. Accordingly, he prayed to the Father, John 17 ch., acknowledged the glory which he had with him before the world was, to be a gift, verse 22, 24; and prayed to be restored to it, verse 5. He gave thanks to God, Mat. xi. 25, and John xi. 41, 42; sang praises to him, Heb. ii. 12; trusted in him, &c., and worshipped him, John iv. 21, 22. Yea; he was the Father's servant, appointed, sustained and rewarded by him, Isa. xlii. 1—8. He "came forth from God," "not to do his own will; but the will of him that sent him," John vi. 38. "And though a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered," Heb. v. 8.

This view, therefore, of Christ, which there is nothing in the scriptures really to contradict, (which will be hereafter shown,) presents a valid reason for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity.

Yours in the Lord,
JABEZ CHADWICK.

Weedsport, April, 1841.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The news by the Acadia, down to the 19th ult., affords but little additional information. The excitement produced by the reception of Pickens' report, was still existing; and the probabilities of a war between England and this country, were greatly talked of, even in the most intelligent circles.

Warlike Preparations.

The Portsmouth Journal says:—"We have this day learnt that our government, in order to prepare for any emergency that may spring out of the case of M'Leod, (and if the Republic execute him, we do not think there is a man in this United Kingdom, but will demand justice,) have directed six regiments to hold themselves in readiness to embark for America—two of which are the 19th and 84th regiments now in Ireland. It is also stated in private letters from the first circles in Paris, that Lord Granville officially announced to M. Guizot, that the English government would find it necessary to send ten sail of the line to the same quarter. Of course, a fleet of steamers will form a part of such an expedition."

The opinion of the leading journals is, however, that notwithstanding the menacing aspect of things, there will be no war.

The Boy Jones in the Palace Again.

The Sun, of the 16th says:—"Yesterday evening the boy Edward Jones, who about three months ago, found his way into Buckingham Palace, and had the satisfaction of inspecting the Queen's apartments, and hearing the Princess Royal cry, paid another visit to the Palace, but, luckily for the peace of its inmates, he was soon discovered and taken into custody. He had effected an entrance unobserved by the guards and police stationed in the Palace and its vicinity; but before he had time to intrude far, his progress was arrested by a sergeant of police. He was instantly conveyed to the station house, where he remained all night, and to-day was brought to Bow street. The prisoner only came out of Tothill-fields House of Correction this day fortnight. It was intended to ship him on board of a man-of-war to keep him out of the way. Jones declares that his only object in going to the Palace was to hear the conversation of her Majesty and Prince Albert, in order to 'write a book,' which, he says, must be read with great interest.

The Chartists.

Several Chartist meetings have been held in various town, but they were thinly attended. A grand convention of Chartists is to be held in London, on the 12th inst. Their object is to devise plans for the restoration of Frost, Williams and Jones, for the release of all Chartist prisoners, and for making the charter the law of the land. The convention will sit for two weeks, and each delegate is to be paid £3 per week; the expenses to be defrayed by a weekly subscription of one half-penny from each Chartists.

France.

The French papers are principally occupied with articles upon the renewed difficulties growing out of the Eastern Question, and the probability of a war between England and America. These troubles produce the greatest excitement in Paris. Rumors had gained strength that a protocol had been signed in London, which was originally said to have had for its intention, the termination of the isolation of France, but it is now announced in the Paris journals, that France has refused her signature, on account of the hard conditions recently imposed to Mehemet Ali.—Negotiations are, however, still going on.

The Temps says that the Prince de Joinville is to be sent to the Chinese seas, where it is necessary that the French flag should be in a state of observation.

Eastern Question Re-Opened!

Alexandria is again the scene of troublesome negotiations. Three firmans arrived from the Sultan on the 20th of Feb. conveying the Pachalic of Egypt to Mehemet Ali, with succession to his descendants, on certain conditions. These conditions are both numerous and stringent, and in case of the non-performance of any one of them, the inheritance would be revoked.

It is stated that Mehemet Ali absolutely rejected two of them, declaring, at the same time, that he looked to England, on whose good faith he always relied, to save him from the danger and disgrace involved in them.

Com. Napier remained at Alexandria, in hopes of assisting to bring the new dispute to an amicable termination.

China.

The report of Admiral Elliott's resignation from ill health is confirmed, and he had arrived at Singapore, on the 17th of Dec., and left that port on the 20th following, whereby Commodore Sir James Gordon Bremer takes the command of the squadron.

Persia.

The whole of Persia is in a most unsettled state. It is stated that the son of the late King of Persia is determined to strike for the throne: all the chiefs, and those in the south-west of Persia, as well as the chief of the Chaub Arabs, and the people of Kerman, are in his favor, and will join him; besides this, he has all the priesthood of Persia with him.

Foreign Items.

The King of Hanover is carrying on his suit against Queen Victoria, for the Crown Jewels, and other valuable property.

Several papers contradict the announcement made by the London Globe, respecting the "situation" of the Queen.

Admiral Patterson died on the 10th ult., at the advanced age of 85.

Rear-Admiral Parker is appointed to take charge of the China fleet, and is to proceed overland for that purpose. This officer did service at the capture of the Marengo and the Belle Poule.

The Lord Chancellor had so far recovered from his recent illness, as to be able to take his seat in the Chancery Court.

The English funds, which had been for several days very much depressed, continued in the same languid situation after the American news was published. It was conjectured that thus they would remain till after the arrival of the steamer President.

News of the Day.

President Tyler's Address.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE U. S.

Fellow Citizens.—Before my arrival at the seat of Government the painful communication was made to you by the officers presiding over the several Departments, of the deeply regretted death of William Henry Harrison, late President of the United States. Upon him you had conferred your suffrages for the highest office in your gift, and had selected him as your chosen instrument to correct and reform all such errors and abuses as had manifested themselves from time to time in the practical operations of Government. While standing at the threshold of this great work, he has, by the dispensation of an all-wise Providence, been removed from among us and by the provisions of the Constitution the efforts to be directed to the accomplishment of this vitally important task have devolved upon myself. The same occurrence has subjected the wisdom and sufficiency of our institutions to a new test.

For the first time in our history, the person elected to the Vice Presidency of the United States, by the happening of a contingency provided for in the Costitution, has had devolved upon him the Presidential office. The spirit of faction which is directly opposed to the spirit of a lofty patriotism, may find in this occasion for assaults upon my administration. And in succeeding, under circumstances so sudden and unexpected, and to responsibilities so greatly augmented, to the administration of public affairs I shall place in the intelligence and patriotism of the People my only sure reliance. My earnest prayer shall constantly be addressed to the all-wise and all-powerful Being who made me, and by whose dispensation I am called to the high office of President of this Confederacy, understandingly to carry out the principles of that Constitution which I have sworn to 'protect, preserve and defend.'

The usual opportunity which is afforded to a Chief Magistrate upon his induction to office of presenting to his countrymen an exposition of the policy which would guide his administration, in the form of an Inaugural Address, not having, under the peculiar circumstances which have brought me to the discharge of the high duties of President of the United States, been offered to me, a brief exposition of the principles which will govern me in the general course of my administration of public affairs, would seem to be due, as well to myself as to you, in regard to foreign nations, the groundwork of my policy will be justice, on our part to all, submitting to injustice from none.—While I shall sedulously cultivate the relations of peace and amity with one and all, it will be my most imperative duty to see that the honor of the country shall sustain no blemish. With a view to this the condition of our military defences will become a matter of anxious solicitude. The Army which has in other days covered itself with renown and the Navy, not in appropriately termed the right arm of the public defence, which has spread a light of glory over the American Standard, in all the waters of the earth, shall be rendered replete with efficiency.

In view of the fact, well avouched by history, that the tendency of all human systems is to concentrate power in the hands of a single man, and that their ultimate downfall has proceeded from this cause, I deem it of the most essential importance that a complete separation should take place between the sword and the purse. No matter where or how the public moneys shall be deposited, so long as the President can exert the power of appointing and removing at his pleasure, the agent selected for their custody, the Commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy is in fact the Treasurer. A permanent and radical change should therefore be decreed. The patronage incident to the Presidential office, already great, is constantly increasing. Such increase is destined to keep peace with the growth of our population, until without a figure of speech, an army of office holders may be spread over the land. The unrestrained power exerted by the selfishly ambitious man, in order either to perpetuate his authority, or to hand it over to some favorite as his successor, may lead to the employment of all the means within his control to accomplish his object.

The right to remove from office, while subjected to no just restraint, is inevitably destined to produce a spirit of crouching servility with the official corps, which in order to uphold the hand which feeds them, would lead to direct and active interference in the election, both State and Federal, thereby subjecting the course of State legislation to the direction of the Chief Executive officer, and making the will of that officer absolute and supreme. I will, at a proper time, invoke the action of Congress upon this subject, and shall readily acquiesce in the adoption of all proper measures which are calculated to arrest these evils, so full of danger in their tendency. I will remove no incumbent from office, who has faithfully and honestly acquitted himself of the duties of his office, except in such cases where such officer has been guilty of an active partisanship, or by secret means—the less manly, and therefore the more objectionable—has given his official influence to the purposes of party, thereby bringing the patronage of the Government in conflict with the freedom of elections. Numerous removals may become necessary under this rule. These will be made by me through no acerbity of feeling. I have had no cause to cherish or indulge unkind feelings towards any, but my conduct will be regulated by a profound sense of what is due to the country and its institutions; nor shall I neglect to apply the same unbending rule to those of my own appointment. Freedom of opinion will be tolerated, the full enjoyment of the right of suffrage will be maintained as the birthright of every American citizen, but I say emphatically to the official corps, "thus far and no farther." I have dwelt the longer upon this subject, because removals from office are likely often to arise, and I would have my countrymen to understand the principle of the Executive action.

In all public expenditures, the most rigid economy should be resorted to, and, as one of its results, a public debt in time of peace, be sedulously avoided. A wise and patriotic constituency will never object to the imposition of necessary burdens for useful ends, and true wisdom dictates the resort to such means, in order to supply deficiencies in the revenue rather than to those doubtful expedients, which, ultimating in a public debt, serve to embarrass the resources of the country, and to lessen its ability to meet any great emergency which may arise. All sinecures should be abolished. The appropriations should be direct and explicit, so as to leave as limited a share to the disbursing agents, as may be found compatible with the public service. A strict responsibility on the part of all the agents of the Government should be maintained, and peculation or defalcation visited with immediate expulsion from office, and the most condign punishment.

The public interest demands that, if any war has existed between the Government and the currency, it shall cease. Measures of a financial character, now having the sanction of legal enactment, shall be faithfully enforced until repealed by the legislative authority. But I owe it to myself, to declare that I regard existing enactments, as unwise and impolitic, and in a high degree oppressive. I shall promptly give sanction to any constitutional measure which, originating in Congress, shall have for its object the restoration of a sound circulating medium so essentially necessary to give confidence in all the transactions of life, to secure to industry, its just and adequate rewards, and to re-establish the public prosperity. In deciding upon the adaptation of any such measure, to the end proposed as well as its conformity to the Constitution, I shall resort to the Fathers of the great Republican school, for advice and instruction, to be drawn from their sage views of our system of government and the light of their ever-glorious example.

The institutions under which we live, my countrymen, secure each person in the perfect enjoyment of all his rights. The spectacle is exhibited to the world, of a Government deriving its powers from the consent of the governed, and having imparted to it only so much power as is necessary for its successful operation.—Those who are charged with its administration, should carefully abstain from all attempts to enlarge the range of powers thus granted to the several departments of the Government, other than by an appeal to the People for additional grants, lest by so doing they disturb that balance which the patriots and statesmen who framed the Constitution designed to establish between the Federal Government and the States composing the Union.

The observance of these rules is enjoined upon us by the feeling of reverence and affection which finds a place in the heart of every patriot for the preservation of union, and the blessings of union, for the good of our children's children, through countless generations. An opposite course could not fail to generate factions, intent upon the gratification of their selfish ends, to give birth to local and sectional jealousies, and to ultimate either in breaking asunder the bonds of union, or in building up a central system, which would inevitably end in a bloody sceptre and an iron crown.

In conclusion, I beg you to be assured that I shall exert myself to carry the foregoing principles into practice during my Administration of the Government, and, confiding in the protecting care of an ever-watchful and overruling Providence, it shall be my first and highest duty to preserve unimpaired, the free institutions under which we live, and transmit them to those who shall succeed me, in their full force and vigor.

JOHN TYLER.

WASHINGTON, April 9, 1841.

By a report of Mr. Hawley, the Treasurer, to the Legislature, it appears that the Utica & Schenectady Rail Road has earned 71 per cent, on the cost in the last four and a half years, and has for the same time divided to the stockholders 13 1-2 per cent. per annum by carrying passengers only.

The Vicksburg Sentinel of the 31st ult. says: "This city is now crowded with blacklegs. One of our principal hotels, we have learned, is literally crammed with them and their gambling apparatus."

At the charter election in Penn Yan, on the 5th inst. the Temperance ticket, composed of both parties, succeeded. The question was, "license or no license," and the majority for the no-license ticket was 75.

Madison Johnson, a youth scarcely of age, has been sentenced to death in North Carolina, for murder.

A lad of fifteen, having been discharged from jail in New-Haven, immediately stole a pair of shoes for the purpose of being sent back. He had no means of livelihood and was willing to find food and shelter even in a prison.

The dwelling house of Mrs. Martha Wood, of Westmoreland, N. H., was destroyed by fire on the 3d instant, and Mrs. W. perished in the flames. She was 81 years old.

The cannon fired at the Washington Navy Yard on the day of the funeral, were charged on Saturday week for receiving the President at the yard which he contemplated visiting.

The aggregate depth of snow which fell at New Haven during the past winter, is 8 feet—exclusive of the storm just finished, which added another foot to the grand total.

The Pawnee Indians, which number 6,241, have as yet adopted no habits of civilization—not even intemperance, for they will not use intoxicating drinks.

President TYLER is fifty-one years of age. He is therefore younger than any President we have ever had.

The body of a girl, 18 or 20 years of age, named Jane McAllister, who had been missing from Owego several weeks, was a few days since found in the river near Skinner's Eddy, in Luzerne county, Penn. There was marks of violence on her person, and suspicion rests on different individuals. The body has since been recognised by the mother of the lost girl.

Fires out.—We understand that the largest distillery, probably, in New-York, and perhaps in the United States, is about to be closed for want of market at home and abroad for its fiery products. The owner says the movements in temperance have ruined his business.

Lead in Iowa and Wisconsin.—Dr Owen, who was appointed by the government of the United States to explore the mineral regions of Iowa and Wisconsin Territories, states that they now produce as much lead as the whole of Europe, G. Britain excepted; and are capable of yielding as much lead as the whole of Europe, Great Britain including.

Public Schools in Poland.—In the city of Poland,—one of the most beautiful towns, and most intelligent in its populationion of any in the Union there are eighteen public schools, attended by 2544 pupils. The cost to the city is $9,131. The expense for each scholar is less than four dollars. What town or city who wishes well to the country and well to the rising generation would object to such a tax.

New-York City Election.—The election held last Tuesday in this city for Charter officers passed off with unusual quietness. Robert H. Morris the Van Buren candidate, (late Recorder,) is elected Mayor by a majority of between 600 and 700. The official returns were not published at the time of our going to press. The Whigs have gained two members in each of the Boards. In the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, seventh and fifteenth wards the Whig alderman and assistant are elected. In the remaining ten wards Van Buren members are chosen.

Wiskonsan.—Congress has officially settled the orthography of the fine territory lying between the Mississippi river and Lake Michigan, to be Wiskonsan—in conformity with the pronunciation that prevails in the territory, to accent being on the second syllable. Mr. Doty, its representative, is making an effort to secure an appropriation to open a steamboat navigation through it, from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi, by a canal only 7,739 feet long, to connect the Wiskonsan and Fox rivers. This would open a water communication from New-Orleans to New-York, making a charming summer route. Wiskonsan will soon make a State.

Progress of the Mormons.—The disciples of Joe Smith have recently obtained three charters from the Legislature of Illinois; one incorporating the city of Nauvoo; another a great University; and a third the Nauvoo Military Legion. They do not intend to be driven out of Illinois, as they were from Missouri. They have commenced operations under their city charter, Dr. Dennett, Qr. Master General of Illinois, through the appointment of Governor Carlin, being their Mayor.

Charles F. Mitchell.—We learn that this individual committed a forgery in the name of a gentleman of our city to the amount of $1400, some two years ago. When the fact was discovered by the gentleman in question, he promised, out of regard to Mitchell and his connections, to keep the affair a secret—and he did so up to the time of hearing that Mitchell was an applicant up for the office of Navy Agent for New-York. He then very properly communicated the circumstances to the Hon. Mr. Grinnell, who thereupon opposed the defeated Mitchell's application.

It appears that the amount of forged cheques disposed of by Mitchell in Wall street was about $1300, and it further appears that similar cheques were sold by him in Philadelphia to the amount of some $2000 more.—Sylvester's Philadelphia Reporter.

Five young men are now in jail in Brooklyn, for committing a most atrocious rape on a married woman, in Myrtle lane. They were of a gang of fifteen, and strong hopes are entertained that those now at large will soon be secured. The poor woman, we understand, is dead. No punishment can be too severe for these inhuman rascals.

EXECUTION.—PETER ROBINSON, the murderer of Abraham Suydam was executed at New Brunswick, at five o'clock yesterday afternoon. The thousand stories afloat in his last sayings and doings, we are assured, are all false or exaggerated. They were put afloat merely to gratify the morbid passions of those who love to revel in murder, and for the purpose of making a penny at the expence of a public execution. The following comes from a reliable source, and, as will be seen, is in every way different from the stories afloat:—N. Y. Express.

NEW BRUNSWICK, April 11, 1841.

I have just been in with Peter Robinson, and am happy to say that he appears to be truly penitent; so much so that he says he freely forgives all his enemies, and that the People did just what they ought to have done: that his sentence is just, and he hopes to die in peace with all mankind. He read several portions of Scripture to me, viz: Psalm 51, Isaiah 1st, with several other portions. I then sung the hymn beginning, "How tedious and tasteless the hours," in which he joined and sung in a very clear voice. When we came to the words "And prisons shall palaces prove, if Jesus will dwell with me there," he said—yes, 'if Jesus is with me' all will be well; but I have a hope that he will. There is nothing grieves me so much as the destruction I have brought on myself and others by not having the government of my passions.—Had I been led by my bible this would not have happened. Had I been guided by my wife's counsels I should have been a happy man to-day; but I am glad she knew nothing of this." Such was his conversation with me.

The officers are now building a fence in front of the jail to screen the execution, which will take place on Friday noon, from the public.

Yours, respectfully,
FREDRICK PILCH.

The Governor has issued his proclamation, ordering an election for a member of the twenty-seventh Congress, for the twenty-sixth district, to take place on the 11th of May, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Granger.

The Irish Temperance Society in Lowell rallies nearly 2000 members.

The Baptists have in Liberia, six churches and 288 members; 32 were added the past year.

The Savannah Republican says, that during the nine years that Major Farnum has been Collector of that port, he has not had occasion to sue a single bond for duties, nor has the government lost a single dollar by an importer. The average collections have been $175,000 yearly.

Mr. Lewis Peck, of Schenectady, has been fined $100, and sentenced to be imprisoned 20 days in the county jail, for striking John Brotherson, Esq, in open court.

The duties received at the Custom House of Liverpool, in the year 1840, amounted to £4,700,000.

A new marble building, intended for the General Postoffice, is in progress at Washington, the cost of which will exceed half a million of dollars.

We are informed by the Cashier of the institution, that an injunction ordered by the Chancellor, was served upon the Bank of Western New York at Rochester, on the 6th inst., which as a matter of course, stops all its operations for the present, in the redemption of its bills or otherwise.

The Newark Daily Advertiser of the 7th inst. says:—"We regret to learn, this morning, that Mr. Southard, who has been some time indisposed, was not able to reach Washington in season to attend the funeral; and that he was under the necessity of stopping at Trenton."

Mr. Stratton, a constable of Boston, is under bonds for $100, to appear at the Municipal Court, for kicking the wife of a prisoner whom he was taking to the watch-house! The kind woman had come to bring her husband his hat, and received this unmanly salute for her pains.

Official notice has been given that the canals of this State will be opened for navigation on the 24th inst.

Drake, the murderer of Mr. James Scott and family, in Southampton Co., Va., some few months since, was tried on the 2nd inst. and the case given to the jury in the evening of that day, who, after an absence of ten minutes, brought in a verdict of "guilty of murder in the first degree."

Letters from Richmond, Va., recently received, state that the banks of that city have suspended specie payments on all their responsibilities.

Great Expected Emigration to America.—The Evening Star mentions that letters from Europe announce an immense emigration of persons from Europe the ensuing spring and summer. Great preparations are making in Germany and Holland; whole communities are holding meetings preparatory to setting out, under the direction of intelligent persons, selected to direct the efforts of these emigrants after they arrive here. Considerable purchases have been made in Delaware and Ulster counties, N. Y., for account of French agriculturalists. Many settlements of Scotch farmers have been made in Delaware county with great success. The emigrants begin to find they can do better on farms in New York, than in the far West, both as to profit and health, besides affording them an opportunity of seeing their relatives and friends twice a year, without the labor, risk and expense of traveling 2000 miles. This is one of the early results of the policy of making the Erie Railroad.

Campbellites.—A writer in the Christian World gives the number of this sect in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois and Missouri, at between eighty and ninety thousand members, which includes, he conjectures, more than half of their whole number in the United States. On this supposition, the number of Campbellites in the United States, would be about one hundred and fifty thousand.—Cross and Journal.

Correspondence of the U. S. Gazette.

Washington, April 9, 1841.

The members of General Harrison's family, who had resided with him since his inauguration, were to leave, and, I believe, they left the city to-day, on their return to North Bend. As soon as Mr. Tyler arrived, he despatched a polite note to them, condoling with them on the heavy loss which the will of Providence had required them to bear, and requesting that they would not think of quitting the Executive Mansion, for the present, but would permit him to consider himself as indebted to their hospitality when he entered it, or that they would gratify him by remaining as his guest.

That they felt the kindness of his offer, they have no hesitation in acknowledging; but a sense of the duty they owed to the bereaved widow prevailed over every other consideration, and induced them to make the speediest arrangements for a journey to the West. Great apprehensions are felt as to the effect which will be produced on the health of Mrs. Harrison, when the news of her bereavement reaches her.—'Heaven tempers the wind to the shorn lamb;' but in her weak state of health, clinging to her husband, as she did, with an affection which years had not abated, it will surprise few if she should sink under the violence of the shock.

OFFICIAL.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

A Recommendation.

When a Christian People feel themselves to be overtaken by a great public calamity, it becomes them to humble themselves under the dispensation of Divine Providence, to recognise His righteous government over the children of men, to acknowledge his goodness in time past, as well as their own unworthiness, and to supplicate His merciful protection for the future.

The death of WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON, late President of the United States, so soon after his elevation to that high office, is a bereavement peculiarly calculated to be regarded as a heavy affliction, and to impress all minds with a sense of the dependence of Nations, as well as of individuals, upon our Heavenly Parent.

I have thought, therefore, that I should be acting in conformity with the general expectation and feelings of the community in recommending, as I now do, to the people of the United States, of every religious denomination, that, according to their several modes and forms of worship, they observe a day of Fasting and Prayer, by such religious services as may be suitable on the occasion; and I recommend Friday, the fourteenth day of May next, for that purpose; to the end that, on that day, we may all with one accord, join in humble and reverential approach to HIM, in whose hands we are, invoking him to inspire us with a proper spirit and temper of heart and mind, under these frowns of His providence, and still to bestow His gracious benedictions upon our Government and country.

JOHN TYLER.

Washington, April 13, 1841.

LAST LETTER OF GEN. HARRISON.

Washington, 26th March, 1841.

"Dear Sir.—The bearer hereof, Mr. Thomas Tucker, a veteran seaman, came with me from Carthagena, as the mate of the brig Montidia, in the year 1829. In an association of several weeks, I imbibed a high opinion of his character—so much so that (expressing a desire to leave the sea,) I invited him to come to North Bend and spend the remainder of his days with me. Subsequent misfortune prevented his doing so, as he was desirous to bring some money with him to commence farming operations. His hard fortune still continues, having been several times shipwrecked within a few years. He says that himself and family are in such a situation, that the humblest employment would now be acceptable to him, and I write this to recommend him to your favorable notice. I am pursuaded that no one possesses in a higher degree the virtues of fidelity, honesty, and indefatigable industry; and I might add of indomitable bravery, if that was a quality necessary for the kind of employment he seeks.

"Yours very truly,
"W. H. HARRISON.

"EDWARD CURTIS, Esq.,
"Collector, &c., New York."

[Mr. Curtis, we are glad to learn, immediately appointed Mr. Tucker, an Inspector of Customs.]

St. Augustine, April 3.

Extract of a letter received in this city, from an officer of rank, dated "Camp Eojotka, 45 miles from Tampa, March 22, 1831:"

"I arrived here this day with Wild Cat. His people are collecting, and will be emigrated in six weeks. A detachment of my regiment is now on the march with Cosa Tustenuggee, to Tampa. I doubt whether another shot will be fired."

Sugar.—By a document concerning the cultivation of sugar, transmitted by the Legislature of Louisiana to Congress, it appears there are 525 sugar estates in that state, employing 40,000 hands, and 10,000 horses, and that the average crop is equal to 70,000 hhds. of 1,000 lbs., or 70,000,000, lbs. sugar, and 350,000 gallons of molasses; the average value of sugar is six cents per lb., and molasses 20 cents per gallon.

Counterfeiters Arrested.—Two men were recently arrested at Princeton, N. J., on a charge of passing counterfeit ten dollar notes on the Merchants' Exchange Bank of New York. On arresting one, the other slipped out of the hotel into a back building, where was immediately discovered a roll of counterfeit tens on the Merchants' Exchange Bank, and fives on the Salem Bank. The counterfeits on the Merchants' Exchange Bank are not very well executed; the coloring is very light, and the engraving indistinct. They are marked letter B, payable to James Kent, and dated June 20, 1840. The signature of Peter Stagg, President, is well done; for the name of W. M. Vermilye, the cashier, they have W. M. Yumilur.

Dangerous position of a French Frigate—and total loss of an American Brig on the Coast of Africa.—The Paris Moniteur contains a report of Capt. Bonard, of the French brig of war Volage, which encountered a violent tempest in the roads of Mogador, (Morocco,) on the 5th ult. The vessel was secured in six fathoms water by three anchors, when the breeze set in from the south and south-west, and rendered it impossible for her to put to sea without abandoning them. The captain, besides, was instructed to remain in the roads as long as possible, and he had accordingly taken every precaution to enable him to do so with security. The breeze in the mean time continued to increase, the barometer was going down, and the storm was raging with redoubled fury. An American brig, the William Tell, unable to hold to her mooring, about 3 o'clock in the morning of the 6th, fired several signals of distress.—Capt. Bonard sent him his large boat, with an officer and two men, and established a communication by means of a cable between the two vessels, in order at least to save her crew.

The captain having given notice to M. Bonard that he would endeavor to clear out as a last resource, if he had three hands more on board, the latter immediately sent him six of his best seamen. The operation, however, failed, and in less than half an hour the William Tell disappeared, having been dashed to pieces by the breakers. The situation of the Volage was becoming every moment more critical. The two last anchors were thrown out, but to no effect; she continued to drag her anchors, and was within 100 yards of the breakers, when the captain, seeing no hope of salvation, resolved on running the vessel aground on a sand beach, while it was yet practicable for him with a chance of success. He accordingly threw overboard all his carronades, only keeping two guns on deck, which he hoped to be able to land on the beach to protect himself against the Bedouins, who had repaired in vast numbers from the mountains to the shore. He secured, with the same view, muskets and ammunition in the poop. He then caused all the empty casks to be brought up from the hold and well stopped, with which to form safety buoys, and took every other measure for security possible under those circumstances.

Everything being thus prepared, he determined on waiting events, ordered all his men to the stern, and apprising them of the danger to which they were exposed, recommended them to hold themselves in readiness to execute his orders. They remained in that position until the 7th at noon, the men remaining on deck all the while; the whistling of the wind, the noise of the waves, and the cries of the Bedouins who were watching their prey, were only interrupted by the commands of the officers; the lieutenant repeatedly verified if every one was at his post, to effect the running aground, which the captain was several times on the point of ordering, when, on the 7th, the glass slightly rose, and the wind suddenly fell. The position was, however, as perilous as ever; waves mountain high washed over her; the men were kept constantly working at the pumps the water penetrating into the hold through several apertures.

On the 8th, at day break, the sea becoming less agitated, the captain made the necessary preparations to get out at the first favorable moment; and early on the 9th he mounted into the only boat which he had left, and went to inform the French consul that it was impossible for him to remain any longer in the roads of Mogador. He at the same time offered the American consul to take on board the crew of the William Tell, the captain and one seamen of which had perished. At nine o'clock p. m., he had recovered two of his anchors, seventy fathoms of small cable, and seventy-two fathoms of the largest cable, which were all that could be saved. At two in the morning, the wind having shifted to the S. E., he sailed for Cadiz, where he arrived on the 4th.

From the North American.

Jewish Passover.—This festival in the Hebrew church commenced on the 4th instant, corresponding to the 14th of the ancient month, Nisan, when the Jewish Passover or feast of unleavened bread began.—During the period of one week, the Synagogues in this city were opened, and this feast, which is regularly and rigidly observed by the Jews throughout the world, was celebrated. The unleavened bread is made of the finest wheat and is baked in thin cakes. In taste and appearance it resembles common crackers. The exercises in the Synagogues are usually conducted in Hebrew. Every member has a light sash thrown over his shoulders, and responses from the audience are constantly made, as in the Episcopal church. They sit covered, and no particular order is observed about entering or leaving the room whenever the auditor chooses. The exercises are recited in a chanting tone, while the audience stand or sit as suits their fancy. The sexes are separated, the females occupying the galleries, and the males the lower portion of the Synagogue. The peculiar features and complexion which mark the descendants of Abraham the world over and which tend to keep up the distinctive characteristics of the race, are visible to the most superficial observer. In witnessing their exercises the other day, although unintelligible, there was something exceedingly impressive, when their history and customs were remembered. How remarkably the prophetic declaration of the Scriptures are verified in the past and present condition of this people. If nothing more was adduced, these prophecies are conclusive evidence that the Bible was written by holy men, guided by the finger of Divine inspiration.

The following description of the Hearse, constructed to carry the remains of the late President to the receiving tomb, says the Providence Journal, was furnished us by a citizen who was present, and witnessed the grand and solemn pageant:—

The Car consisted of a table or area oblong, eight feet wide, twelve feet long, about five feet from the ground; this was entirely covered with black silk velvet, with a rich mourning fringe reaching nearly to the ground, entirely concealing the wheels. The pendant curtain was festooned at both sides and both ends with crape; on the centre of the table, was a pedestal nine inches elevated and oblong, four feet wide, eight feet long;—this also was covered with black velvet and upon this lay the coffin, with a black silk velvet pall, trimmed with gold—on the top of the coffin lay the scroll of the Constitution bordered with black. Hyacinths and other spring flowers were strewed over the coffin. The car or hearse, was drawn by six beautiful white horses in deep mourning, led by six black men, one to each horse. There were in Eastern costume, of white turbans, interlaced with black crape, loose white trowsers and tunics to the knees, and broad black scarfs. There was nothing superfluous or gaudy. It is said to have been a la Napoleon. The body will probably preserve its present form half a century or more; it is enclosed in two separate leaden coffins, both exhausted of air, and hermetically sealed, and then enclosed again in a mahogany sarcophagus covered with fine black broadcloth. The face can be seen, as a glass was so secured as to shut out the air, leaving all the features plainly to be seen.

Northern Rail Road.—We have read with much interest the speech of Mr. Beckwith, in the House of Assembly of this State, on the subject of a Rail Road between Ogdensburgh and Lake Champlain. It is proposed that the State should make the road and receive the tolls; but whatever may be the views or action of the Legislature upon that point, the importance of the road is rendered evident by the statistical facts set forth by Mr. B. The testimony of Gen. Scott, Gen. Macomb, and Col. Worth are given, as to the immense value of the road in case of a war with Great Britain. But Mr. B. goes much farther, and exhibits the wealth and business of the country which would contribute to this road, in a manner to enforce the conviction that it would be a very profitable investment, and sure to pay a good interest.—Long Island Star.

POST-SCRIPT!

By this Morning's Mail.

FIRE AT NORTH BEND!

Wednesday noon, Apr. 21.

The mails of this morning bring us the melancholy intelligence of the total destruction of the mansion house of our late President Harrison, at North Bend, by fire on the night of the 11th inst. We make extracts as follows:

Correspondence of the N. Y. Express.

REPUBLICAN OFFICE,
Cincinnati, April 12th, 1841.

FIRE AT NORTH BEND!

The Captain of the steamer New-York reports that when he passed North Bend at at 6 o'clock last night, the west wing of the Mansion House of Gen. Harrison was on fire—the roof was covered with persons with axes and buckets of water,—the windows of the house were broken out, and the furniture had all been removed out upon the green in the front of the house. The Captain thinks the main building will be saved.

P. S. The house is burnt to the ground.

Yours, &c. J. B. RUSSEL.

Correspondence of the Courier and Enquirer.

BALTIMORE, April 16, 1841.

Mr. Crittenden has passed through Baltimore on his way to Kentucky, to make arrangements to remove his family to Washington.

NORTH BEND BURNED.—Afflictions never come alone. By the Western Mail this morning, we have the following letter from the Assistant Post Master at Wheeling.

P. O., WHEELING, April 14.

We learn by this morning's mail from the West, that the residence of Gen. Harrison, at North Bend, Ohio, was burned to the ground on Sunday night last, the 11th inst.

L. P. DELAPLAIN, Ass't P. M.

FLORIDA, April 4, 1841.

Gentlemen:—An express has this morning arrived at Pilatka from Fort King, stating that the Indians have exhibited an hostile attitude this day within a mile of Fort King. A party of seven warriors suddenly emerging from the hammock, attacked a small party of soldiers who were out hunting, fired upon them and killed private Thompson, company "H." 2d Infantry. This occurrence took place at 12 M. A detachment of the command of Fort King immediately left in pursuit. Another item to add to the pleasing prospect of closing the war. The Indians are supposed to be of the same party which left Fort Clinch yesterday about the time the express rider started for Fort King. It is now the full of the moon and you may expect shortly to insert in your columns an article headed "bloody massacre."

Yours, &c.

WASHINGTON, April 15, 1841.

No New-York appointments have been acted upon. The President has appointed Mr. Taylor, the son-in-law of General Harrison, who was to be his Private Secretary, Post Master of Cincinnati. A young gentleman who had been acting as his Private Secretary, and who was his nephew, Mr. Harrison has been appointed Register of the Land Office at Dubuque. Thus the relations of General Harrison fare much better now than if the General had lived, for it was his intention it is said, to appoint none of them to office.

There is no other news of interest. The members of the Cabinet are indefatigable in their work, night and day, they bring much to pass, as will be seen in the Extra Session.

MARRIED,

In Truxton, on the 20th inst., by the Editor, Mr. LORENZO D. AYRES, of De Ruyter, and Miss ESTHER P., daughter of Caleb W. Church, of the former place.

In De Ruyter, on the 15th inst., by Z. T. Bentley, Esq. Mr CLARK BURDICK, of Lincklaen, and Miss ANNA HUNT, daughter of Elihu Hunt of the latter place.

In Westerly, R. I., April 4th, by Eld. Daniel Coon, Mr SAMUEL SWEET, of South Kingston, and Miss ABBY PECKHAM of the former place.

In Rodman, on the 8th inst., by Rev. E. S. Bailey, Mr BENJAMIN COATES, of Adams, and Miss LOIS WHITFORD, daughter of Maj. Edward Whitford of the former place.

DIED,

In Adams, on the 10th inst., of the consumption, Mr. E. W. RICHARDS, aged 25. Mr. Richards joined the S. D. B. Church in Adams last summer, and was a worthy member while he lived, and died triumphantly.

In [illegible], on the 25th ult., JESSE COLLINS, son of Clark T. and Nancy Rogers, aged 3 years 1 month and 25 days.

LIST OF LETTERS.

D Fox, P M. E S Bailey, (we will do it.) J A Badger, D G York, J G Maxson, M S Curtis, D Hardin, (it is done.) J Grant, P M, Alvan Richardson, P M, (we will do it.) Rev. L A Davis, A R Hathaway, P M. J Goodrich.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

J. Goodrich, $10, cr. Stephen Maxson, $2,25, self, $7,75. E S Bailey, $14, cr. Edward Whitford, $4, David Maxson, [illegible] Cleveland, Maxson Whitford, each $2, Vol. 2. Harvey Maxson, $1,50, Vol 1. D Dew, 50 cents, Vol. 2. B T Bliss, $2, Vol. 2. Joseph Spicer, $6, cr. Benj. Potter, John D Langworthy, $2 each, Vol. 2. Peleg Maxson, $2, Vol 1 & 2. J Kingerman, Jr., $2, cr. Nelson Bowen. J Grant, $1, cr S H Sperry. D Harlow, $2, cr. P B Burch, Vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before; where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received.
No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.
De Ruyter, April 22, 1841.

SHERIFFS SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Supreme Court of Judicature of the State of New York, and to me delivered, I have levied upon the right, title and interest of Stephen G. Sears in and to a certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being, in the Village of De Ruyter, county of Madison, and bounded as follows: on the north by the turnpike road, on the east by lands owned by Noah B. Foote, on the south by lands owned, or in possession of, John Starr, on the west by lands owned by Marvin M. Hamilton, which I shall expose to sale at public Vendue, as the Law directs, at the house of Wm C. Gage, on Saturday, the 22d day of May next, at 1 o'clock, P. M.

Dated, De Ruyter, April 10, 1841. 59w6
ISAAC BROWN, SHERIFF.
By T. ORVILLE ELMORE, Deputy.

NOTICE.

WHEREAS EPHRAIM C. DAVIS, aged 17 years 7 months old, bound to Rogers Davis as Apprentice, has left his home, without my consent on the 27th day of March, inst., this is to forbid any person trusting or harboring said Ephraim on our accounts after this date, as we will not pay any of his contracts. 59w3

Brookfield, 30th March, 1841.
ROGERS DAVIS,
ALBERT CLARK.

POETRY.

From the Madison County Eagle.

Spring.

Hail! lovely Spring, with thy endearing charms,
And welcome all thy train of beauties fair.
Thou com'st to cheer and fertilize the earth
And clothe creation in a beauteous garb
Of richest texture.
Upon thy brow we see the smile of peace,
And shining dew drops glist'ning on thy head,
Thy tresses fair come mantling round thy neck,
Rich blooming garlands gird thy graceful form;
Sweet scented odors issue from thy breath,
And balmy breezes speak thy near approach.
Nature, too, rejoices, when from tropic
Climes thou com'st exulting in thy beauty.
The forest smiles with gladness; the streams which
Winter bound in icy fetters, now resume
Their wonted course; the feathered tribe once more
Attune their voice, to sing in sweetest strains
Thy coming.
The husbandman with cheerful heart delights,
To see thy dawn, and in thy smiling face
He views the bud—fair emblem of the fruit.
The weather-beaten mariner, who long
Has braved the fury of the wintry winds,
And grasp'd the icy rope with strongest nerve,
Looks delighted, singing, 'welcome Spring',
The youthful maiden, too, of sprightly form,
Goes forth to meet thee smiling, and gather from
Thy rosy bower, a wreath of sweetest flowers.
Thy prattling infant now, with ruddy cheek,
Walks out t' enjoy thy sweet regaling winds;
And many a truant lad, forth issuing from
His tiresome task, rejoices in "A TRAIN."
Bright Sol, ascending up the azure sky,
Look gladly down on nature's blooming face,
And far around o'er hill and dale, upon
The mountain wave, and on the placid lake,
Profusely pours his golden beams of light.
To irrigate and dry the thirsty land,
The nightly dews of heaven are sent; or in
More copious flowing show'rs the rain descends
Attended by the zigzag lightning's glare,
Rending with thunder-tones th' inflated air;
Then passing off at random, shoots away unseen.
Delightful Spring! Thou'rt ever welcome here;
For when thou com'st, creation smiles with joy;
All nature, with her twice ten thousand tongues,
Breaks forth in strains of charming melody;
And chanting sweet in harmonious lays,
Sings the loud anthem of Creative Power.
But short, alas! will be thy vernal reign,
For soon the flowers that decorate thy brow
Will fade; thy charms will cease to win the heart;
Thy mellow voice will change its dulcet tones,
And Summer, fruitful Summer come, to bring
The choicest treasures of a warmer clime. M.

Miscellaneous Department.

From the New York Mirror.

THE DYAKS IN THE ISLAND OF BORNEO.

BORNEO is the third largest island in the world—it is embosomed in a great cluster of islands, surrounded by seas, so shut in by land that their waters are as smooth as those of a lake. Its western coast is scarcely two days' sail from Singapore, which is becoming the great mart for trade between India the Western World and China. The Dutch have several small establishments upon the coast.

The population of the island, which is estimated at 3,500,000, is composed of various tribes. Some are Malays, others Bugis—both of these are Mahomedans—in a partially civilized state, and engaged in trade, although the Malays especially seem greatly to prefer piracy. A people called Dyaks, whose numbers are supposed to be about 2,000,000, occupy the whole interior of the island, which is chiefly mountainous, and are its original inhabitants. They are still savages Some of their tribes are, however, more barbarous than others. These rove about like wild beasts. They go out and hunt them for amusement. The men taken in these incursions are invariably killed; but the women, if young, are commonly spared. The children of these wild Dyaks, it is said, cannot be tamed. In consequence, when taken they have one of their feet cut off by their captors, that they may not run away to their native forests; their services being still available for paddling in their canoes, &c.

Many of the Dyaks are engaged in agriculture, and collecting the produce of their country, such as camphor, bees-wax, gold-dust, etc. for sale. But the occupation for which they are most notorious is that of 'HEAD-HUNTING.' The men must procure at least one head before they can marry; they preserve also the heads and skulls of persons they have slain, as trophies and ornaments. They seek for heads as we would seek wealth or honor, as these constitute their wealth and honor. The Dyak head-hunter cherishes no enmity toward the person he kills, either private or national. It is neither more nor less than a wretched custom, one of the many of a similar kind that exists in countries where Satan—the destroyer—reigns supreme. This custom, and the feelings of the heart necessarily connected with it, form the most odious trait in this people's character. They have, however, many good qualities. They are generally inclined to cultivate the soil, are a fine race of people, and very honest. Their vices are those of barbarians who know no better. Some of the leading natives have already expressed their readiness to relinquish the practice of head-hunting, if Europeans would only come and settle among them. They seem generally to have no religious belief. At all events they have no religion to which they are strongly attached, which, of course is a favorable circumstance toward their reception of the true religion.

Scarcely any efforts have yet been made to introduce Christianity among these people. The Americans are, as we have said, now turning their attention to the island. From the journal of the two missionaries who have recently returned from a tour in the country we make the following extracts.

At one village, they observe, "The Dyaks here still continue the practice of cutting off heads, and boast of bringing in two or three fresh ones every year. In the verandah where we have our lodgings there are fifteen or twenty, and some suspended immediately over the place assigned us to sleep in. How many heads are now in their possession we cannot learn, but we are told they are numerous, or to use their own language, 'many tens.' Here we may remark that the Dyaks, in general appear to know nothing of numbers above ten; hence they give us their reckonings in this way. The warriors of this village sally forth every year on a beheading expedition. They seem not to have the least compunction of conscience on this subject. They laugh at us when we express our astonishment at the practice, and ridicule us when we attempt to teach them its cruelty and wickedness. It does appear that the Dyak character is made up of extremes. As we see them, they are mild, and gentle, and 'given to hospitality.' But when they exchange their domestic habits for those of the warrior, their greatest delight seems to be to revel in human blood, and their greatest honor to ornament their dwellings with human heads, which are the trophies of their human barbarity. Shocking as it may appear, they carry about with them tokens of the number of persons they have killed. This they effect by inserting locks of human hair corresponding to the number of persons decapitated, in the sheath of their war-knife, which they always carry with them when from home. We fell in with a man this evening, just returning from his labor, with a basket in which he had carried out the necessaries for the day, and to which was attached a lock of human hair. The hair was ten inches or a foot long. He informed us that it was a token of his having cut off a head during the past year. How true it is that these dark places of earth are full of inhabitants of cruelty."

Upon another occasion, a recent writer remarks:

"Here we discovered the first indication of religion among the Dyaks. Upon our arrival the first thing which attracted our attention was several small wooden images placed under a shelter. Upon inquiry we were informed that these images are mementoes of their old men who had distinguished themselves by daring exploits, the number of heads they had cut off, etc. Whenever such persons die they make a wooden image, rude indeed, yet in the form of a man, varying in length from twenty inches to the feet. Around this they all gather and hold a feast of consecration, after which it is placed among the others. These are all considered patron gods, whose peculiar province it is to watch over and prosper their cultivation of rice. At the time of planting the rice they are removed to or near the field, with their fences in that direction. Here they are left till the crop is gathered, when they are again brought into their dwellings. As far as we could learn, the only act of worship paid to these images is that of offering them food once a month, such as rice, pork, fowls etc.

"Human heads hang all around us, and some are suspended over our sleeping-place. We tried hard to obtain one of the heads; but the bare expression of the wish was met by a prompt and decisive 'No; we cannot part with them.' The same was the case with the wooden images. On no condition whatever would they consent to part with either. The only reason assigned was that sickness would be the inevitable consequence. The heads are considered charms to ward off evils and procure blessings, and believing this, it is no matter of surprise that they are loth to part with them."

The writers of the above journal spent about four weeks on the island, during which time they traveled one hundred and seventy miles on foot going about sixty miles into the interior. The general impression produced on their minds by what they observed during their visit, was of so favorable a character, that it has been determined to commence a mission in Borneo at once and to establish two or three stations. Six American missionaries and their wives were expected to proceed from Singapore to the island during last summer.

THE DEAF, DUMB, AND BLIND GIRL.

In an appendix to the late annual Report of the Trustees of the Perkins Institution for the Blind—an establishment from which we trust that the Legislature in their zeal for economy, will not withhold their customary aid—is a most interesting account, written by Dr. S. G. Howe, the able superintendant of that Institution, of Laura Bridgman, and who is deaf, dumb, and blind, and whose only mode of communication with objects around her, is by the touch, which is remarkably acute.

The following extract describing the meeting of Laura with her mother, after an absence of several months, is exceedingly interesting and touching—and proves that she possesses the affections in all their strength and purity:

"During this year, and six months after she had left home, her mother came to visit her, and the scene of their meeting was an interesting one.

The mother stood some time, gazing with overflowing eyes upon her unfortunate child, who, all unconscious of her presence, was playing about the room. Presently Laura ran against her, and at once began feeling of her hands, examining her dress, and trying to find out if she knew her; but not succeeding here, she turned away as from a stranger, and the poor woman could not conceal the pang she felt that her beloved child did not know her.

She then gave Laura a string of beads which she used to wear at home, which were recognized by the child at once, who, with much joy, put them around her neck, and sought me eagerly, to say she understood the string was from her home.

The mother now tried to caress her; but poor Laura repelled her, preferring to be with her acquaintances.

Another article from home was given her, and she began to look much interested; she examined the stranger much closer, and gave me to understand that she knew she came from Hanover; she even endured her caresses, but would leave her with indifference at the slightest signal. The distress of the mother was now painful to behold; for although she had feared that she should not be recognized, the painful reality of being treated with cold indifference by a darling child, was too much for woman's nature to bear.

After awhile, on the mother taking hold of her again, a vague idea seemed to flit across Laura's mind, that this could not be a stranger; she therefore felt of her hands very eagerly, while her countenance assumed an expression of intense interest—she became very pale, and then suddenly red—hope seemed struggling with doubt and anxiety, and never were contending emotions more strongly painted upon the human face. At this moment of painful uncertainty, the mother drew her close to her side, and kissed her fondly, when at once the truth flashed upon the child, and all mistrust and anxiety disappeared from her flushed face, as, with an expression of exceeding joy, she eagerly nestled in the bosom of her parent, and yielded herself to her fond embraces.

After this, the beads were all unheeded; the playthings which were offered to her were utterly disregarded; her playmates, for whom but a moment before she gladly left the stranger, now vainly strove to pull her from her mother; and though she yielded her usual instantaneous obedience to my signal to follow me, it was evidently with painful reluctance. She clung close to me, as if bewildered and fearful; and when, after a moment, I took her to her mother, she sprang to her arms, and clung to her with eager joy.

I had watched the whole scene with intense interest, being desirous of learning from it all I could, of the workings of her mind; but I now left them to indulge, unobserved, those delicious feelings, which those who have known a mother's love may conceive, but which cannot be expressed."

The subsequent parting between Laura and her mother, showed alike the affection, the intelligence, and the resolution of the child; and was thus noticed at the time:

"Laura accompanied her mother to the door, clinging close to her all the way, until they arrived at the threshold, where she paused and felt around, to ascertain who was near him. Perceiving the matron, of whom she is very fond, she grasped her with one hand, holding on convulsively to her mother with the other, and thus she stood for a moment,—then she dropped her mother's hand,—put her handkerchief to her eyes, and turned round, clung sobbing to the matron, while her mother departed, with emotions as deep as those of her child."

LAST MOMENTS OF MEN OF GENIUS.—Rosseau, when dying ordered his attendants to place him before the window that he might once more behold his garden and bid adieu to nature. Roscommon uttered at the moment he expired, two lines of his own version of Dies iræ. Haller died feeling his pulse, and when he felt it almost gone turning to his brother physician, said, 'My friend, the artery ceases to beat,' and died. Petrarch was found dead in his library, leaning on a book. Bede died in the act of dictating. Herder closed his career writing an ode to the Deity, his pen on the last line. Walter died repeating some line of Virgil. Tasso's dying request of Cardinal Cynthia was indicative of the gloom which haunted him through life. He had one favor, he said, to request of him, which was that he would collect his works and commit them to the flames, especially his 'Jerusalem delivered.' Leibnitz was found dead in his chamber with a book in his hand. Clarendon's pen dropped from his fingers when he was seized with the palsy, which terminated his life. Chaucer died ballad making. His last production he entitled 'A Ballad, made by Geoffrey Chaucer on his death-bed, lying in great anguish. Wycherly, when dying, had his young wife brought to his bedside and having taken her hand, in a very solemn manner said he had but one request to make of her, and that was, that she would never marry an old man again. Keats, a little before he died, when his friend asked how he did, replied in a low voice, 'Better, my friend, I feel the daisies growing over me.'

A LOFTY POND.—We see it stated in the Farmer's Monthly Visitor that about one thousand feet below the highest point of Mount Washington, and between that and Mount Monroe, is the pond or the spring which gathers into a body of clear pellucid waters, the innumerable fountains gushing from the rocks above, the highest sources of the Amonoosuck river which discharges itself into the Connecticut some forty miles to the south-west. Such is the abundance of water collected from less than one-third of the surface of the two highest mountain tops, that the water discharging itself from this high reservoir at all seasons, would be quite sufficient at the height of more than four thousand feet from the mountain base, to do the work of a factory of several thousand spindles.

A REFLECTION.—When I look upon the tombs of the great, every emotion of envy dies in me. When I read the epitaphs of the beautiful, every inordinate desire goes out. When I meet with the grief of parents upon a tomb-stone, my heart melts with compassion. When I see the tomb of the parents themselves, I consider the vanity of grieving for those whom we must quickly follow. When I see kings lying by those who deposed them—when I see rivals placed side by side, or holy men, that divided the world with their contests and disputes, I reflect with sorrow and astonishment on the little competitions, factions and debates of mankind. When I read the several dates of the tombs, of some that died as yesterday, and some of six hundred years ago, I consider that great day when we shall all of us be cotemporaries, and make our appearance together.—Addison.

INDEPENDENCE HALL.

This room is visited by thousands yearly. The old State House stands on the south side of Chestnut st. between 5th and 6th. It is a large two story plain brick edifice and bears the marks of age. It is kept by Mr. Thomas Downing (familiarly called Tommy) and under the control of the City Common Council. The wings of either end are occupied as County offices. The main building has but two ground rooms, separated by a large hall which runs through the building north and south. The west room is occupied as a court room, and the one on the east end is the identical room in which our Declaration of Independence was adopted, and received the signatures of the founders of our Republic, the only alteration being the removal of the gallery, and seats. A statue of Washington occupies the place formerly assigned to the Speaker of Congress. He is represented as standing on a platform, on the front side of which is inscribed the well known motto: "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen;"—is dressed in plain citizen's costume—a roll under one foot,—another in his right hand, and a volume under his arm. At the request of a friend who accompanied me, Mr. Downing related to me the following incident, and as it gives a good description of this statue, I will give his own words, as near as I can recollect:

"Some six or seven years ago," said he, "one of the members of the City Council introduced to this room a gentleman, who was an officer in His Majesty's Navy, and requested me to give him a description of it. I thought I must show him all the pretty things, and led him in front of that statue. That, sir, said I, is a statue of General George Washington, carved on wood, by Mr. Richard Rush of this city. That roll under his foot is an emblem of the instrument which bound these Colonies to England. He tramples on it. The one in the right hand, is the Declaration of Independence; and that volume under his arm is emblematical of the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America. He fought for, obtained, and then preserved them. That, sir, is a good representation of Washington, carved when he was about 60 years of age.

"The officer remarked that "he had always supposed that Washington was a large corpulent man," and stepping up to the statue, he commenced a closer examination. Taking hold of his ankle, I heard him say, in a low voice, "what a calf." I thought as he was an English officer, I would not let him leave the room without a rejoinder. "No, sir," said I, "Gen. Washington was no calf. I sat in the same church with him almost every Sunday, for several years knew him well, both in public and private life and knew him to be a brave General, a good Statesman, and an honest man."

Behind this statue there hangs in a frame, the Declaration of Independence, with fac simile signatures. On the left side of the door as you enter the room from the middle hall hangs a large painting represeting Wm. Penn, in the act of treating with the Indians; and on the right of the entrance another painted by Mr. Sully representing Lafayette, about three miles from this city, reviewing the company of Washington Gray's who went out to escort him in. Mr. Downing gave me the following account of this picture.

"When it was ascertained that Lafayette was about entering the city, the last time he was in this country, the Washington Gray's went out to escort him in, and met him about three miles out of the city. While reviewing the company he accidentally saw on one of the knapsacks, the letters W. G. He stood looking at them for some moments, and then was overheard to say, "I wish I were a member of that company." The roll was immediately unfurled, and his name added to it. These are the circumstances which led to the drawing of that picture, and which give that company the right to be represented on the painting."

Such is a brief outline of the present appearance of "INDEPENDENCE HALL." There is no exorbitant display of architecture in its construction, no gaudy curtains or dazzling chandelier; but its appearance is at once calculated to carry the mind of the beholder back to the infant days of our republic, and it stands as a monument of the simplicity and economy of our forefathers who sat in that hall, while surrounded by the blood-hounds of war, and declared this people free and independent, and with heart and hand, united in vowing to maintain such Declaration with "fortune, lives, and sacred honor." BUCKINGHAM.

PHILADELPHIA, March 15th 1841.

MOUNTAIN SCENERY.—"There is something in the wilderness and sublimity of mountain scenery that tends to remind us rather of eternity than decay. The perishable works of men are no where to be seen. No city lies in gloomy ruins to show the outline of faded greatness; no remnant of a sanctuary here stands, to show the worship that has passed away. We see no falling records of the glorious deeds of those whose names are learned in history's page. We stand upon the mountain, and we scarce know that man exists upon the earth. This is not the land where arts have died or science been forgotten; those rocks never echoed the eloquence of orators, or the song of poets; these waters never bore the proud ships of the merchant; the soil never yielded to man the fruit of his industry. It is not here that the finger of time can be recognized.—In vain would he set his mark on snows that never fall nor disturb the fast bound form of adamantine ice. In vain he stretches out his hand where the rustling torrent and the wavering waterfall, blest with an eternity of youth, dash on their headlong course, regardless of the blighting power that withers strength, or lulls to rest the creations and the creatures of mortality. Here we may pause and say that Time has lost power. Here we may view the faints efforts of time overthrown in an instant. Changes they are; but the work of an hour has defeated the slow progress of decay. The lightning of the thunder storm, the blowing tempest, the engulfing flood, the overspreading avalanche have effaced from the surface of nature the impress of time, and left naught in the change to remind us of age. Surely there are scenes in life which seemed created to awaken in mankind the recollection that even time can lose its power. Who will not feel the nothingness of the pleasures, the cares, yea, or even the sorrows of our petty span, when for a moment he dwells with his heart and soul upon the thoughts of an eternity! Yes, it will sober the gay—it will comfort the grieved."—Edward Everett.

EMMET'S LAST MOMENTS.—One day, previous to the trial, as the governor was going his rounds, he entered Emmet's room rather abruptly; and observing a remarkable expression in his countenance he apologized for the interruption. He had a fork affixed to his little deal table, and appended to it there was a tress of hair. 'You see,' said he to his keeper, 'how innocent I am occupied. This little tress has long been dear to me, and I am plating it to wear on my bosom on the day of my execution.' On the day of that fatal event, there was found, sketched by his own hand, with a pen and ink upon that very table, an admirable likeness of himself, the head severed from the body which lay near it, surrounded by the scaffold, the axe, and all the paraphernalia of a high treason execution.—what a strange union of tenderness, enthusiasm and fortitude do the above traits exhibit! His fortitude, indeed, never forsook him. On the night previous to his death he slept as sound as ever; and when the fatal morning dawned, he arose, kneeled down and prayed, ordered some milk which he drank, wrote two letters, one to his brother in America and the other to Secretary of State enclosing it, and a desire for the Sheriff to be informed that he was ready. When they came into the room he said he had two requests to make—one, that his arms might be left as loose as possible, which was humanly and insantly acceeded to 'I make the other,' said he, 'not under any idea that it can be granted, but that it may be held in remembrance that I have made it; it is that I may be permitted to die in my uniform.'* This of course, could not be allowed; and the request seemed to have no other object than to show that he gloried in the cause for which he was to suffer. A remarkable example of his power over himself and others, occurred at this melancholy moment. He was passing out attended by the sheriffs, and proceeded by the executioneer—in one of the passages stood the turnkey, who had been personally assigned to him during his confinement; this poor fellow loved him in his heart, and the tears were streaming from his eyes in torrents. Emmet paused for a moment; his hands were not at liberty—he kissed his cheek—and the man who had been an inmate of a dungeon, habituated to the scenes of horror and hardened against their operation, fell senseless at his feet. Before his eyes had opened again upon this world, those of the youthful sufferer had closed on him forever."

---

*The color of the rebel uniform was green.

FATHER MATHEW.—Father Mathew's opponents who have denounced him as wishing to make money, will be somewhat surprised to learn that, so far from making himself rich in his benevolent mission, he has been involving himself in pecuniary responsibilities; and that a brother and a brother-in-law, each of whom had distilleries, had lost immensely since the commencement of his temperance movement. Father Mathew stated at Cork on New Year's Day, that he was now 1,500*l*, poorer than on the day when he entered on the Temperance reform; that he was indebted 1,100*l* for medals in Birmingham and elsewhere; and that to meet these demands upon him he could not boast of having money in any bank or any where else.—Leeds Mercury.

There is said to be iron enough in the blood of 42 men, to make a ploughshare weighing 24 pounds.—The brass in their faces cannot be ascertained with so much accuracy.

A great Boat in the Great West.—The Cincinnati Gazette has a notice of the new steamboat Missouri, which lately laid half a day at the Broadway wharf, and was visited by a large number of the citizens. The Missouri is the largest boat that has ever been on the Western waters, and is said to be one of the handsomest. Her length on deck is 233 feet; width of hull 30 feet, and including guards 59 feet. Her wheels are 32 feet in diameter; and her cylinders are 26 inches in diameter, with a 12 foot stroke. The Missouri carries 600 tons. She was built at Pittsburgh for Capt. Swan, of St. Louis, at a cost of $45,000; and is intended for a regular trader between St. Louis and New-Orleans.

The Brothertown Indians, about 45 miles from Green Bay, Wisconsin, have been admitted to citizenship in that Territory, and are substantial farmers. The Stockbridge Indians are settled 36 miles south of Green Bay. Neither of these tribes permit ardent spirits to be sold within their reservations. Among both there has recently been a very interesting revival of religion.

The Burning Coal Mines.—The Pottsville (Pa.) Emporium states that another coal mine in that region has taken fire, and continues to burn with increased fury.—The vein is a very large one—we believe the Mammoth vein—and consequently must prove very disastrous to the proprietors of the land. The mine beyond Newcastle, which we have so frequently noticed, continues burning as usual, and the craters upon the summit of the mountain are still increasing in size and number.

Medicines! Medicines!!
TO FAMILIES.
S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public; for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found
G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s
MOTHER'S RELIEF.
JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT—
DR. McMUN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—
MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—
DOCT. BISHOP'S ANTI BILLIOUS PILLS
A HIGHLY VALUABLE FAMILY MEDICINE.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.
ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
GEO. W. SUTTON.
De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

BOOKS! BOOKS!! BOOKS!!
EDWIN P. BLY,
WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of De Ruyter and the public generally, that he has for sale Books of most kinds and descriptions usually called for in any Book Store. The following are a few, viz:—Davies Geometry, do. Surveying, do. Algebra, do. Arithmetic, do. First Lessons in Arithmetic. Also, almost all kinds of Latin, Greek and Italian, Olney's Geography & Atlas, Burnet's Geography of the Heavens.
Common Schools can be supplied with Books for a Library.

BOOK BINDING
Done in a neat and durable manner, and as cheap as can be done in any other place, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany St. De Ruyter.
De Ruyter, November 1st, 1840. 35tf

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,
FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. A certain cure in all cases [illegible] Many certificates can be shown, and will be [illegible] to place this inestimable specific as a [illegible] beyond a doubt. Also,
ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,
For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heels occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.
For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6
S. D. DELLAY.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russell, P. M.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Darkondville—Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. [illegible], P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. [illegible] Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, R. Willson, P. M. Daniel [illegible]
Hounsfield—Wm Greene.
Independence—Joel P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin. H. S. Crandall.
New-York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—[illegible]
New London—[illegible]
Petersburg—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Horace Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick
Scott—Joel Greene, Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Noel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Isaac Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Hopkinton—Joseph Spicer, jun., P. M.
Westerly—Jonathan Maxson.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—H. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jephtha F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson—Lewis A. Davis.
Jackson—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISCONSIN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorized Agents within three months from the receipt of the first numbers, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most favorable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 9.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 61.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, APRIL 30, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Religious Department.

NO TEMPLE IN HEAVEN.

There is no idol temple there.—Idolatry very soon entered into our world, and there were "gods many, and lords many." In the absence of revelation, it is hardly to be wondered at, that the heavenly bodies, especially such a useful creature as the sun, should have been worshiped. But gods were made out of human beings, and generally made, not for their moral virtues, but at best for some physical qualities, and often for even their passions and their vices; and they "changed the glory of the incorruptible body, to an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four footed beasts and creeping things;" and made gods out of the works of their own hands, and thus they mocked the Owner, the Upholder of all things from age to age, was pushed from his own works, and saw his glories given to another. And how long has this custom continued? How wide has it spread? How many of these temples to devils and not to God—O eternal infamy! are there now standing, found even under our own dominion, to some of which thousands annually repair, in the service of which thousands are destroyed, the taxes of whose worshipers are collected by British officers, the income arising from which, after the expenses of Juggernaut and other devils are defrayed, goes to the support of the British government in the East!

There is no temple there for heresy and error.—How many Mohammedan temples are there now, where Jesus the Son of God is placed below the false prophet!—How many anti-christian temples are there now, in which "the man of sin," (I use the word of revelation,) "the son of perdition, exalteth and opposeth himself to all that is called God; so that he sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself to be God!" How many temples are there, where the Lord of glory, and he whom all the angels of heaven adore, is degraded to the level of a mere creature and a mere man, and where his precious atonement which put away sin, which finished transgression, which brought in everlasting righteousness, is considered as the grossest corruption of Christianity! How many temples are there now, where men are made to be their own saviors, where they are expressly taught to go about to establish their own righteousness, instead of submitting themselves to the righteousness which is of God! And there are temples, where people are told that sin cannot hurt a believer, where sanctification as much as justification is a business merely of imputation—where ungodly men (for the scriptures use no ceremony here, but call them by their proper name, ungodly men) turn the grace of our God into lasciviousness. O what a blessed power, when through all the compass of Immanuel's land, there will not be one of such temples found—and how blessed when in the approach to it, the Lord shall be king over all the earth, and in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name Wonderful.

There is no party temple there.—Now, even the followers of Christ cannot see eye to eye. Well "let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind." As population increases, of course, temples will be necessarily multiplied. There is no harm in this, provided they will love each other and co-operate; but alas! we frequently find altar erected against altar, and the bigotry of the attendants leading them to exclaim, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord are we." Hence, frequently those who worship the same God through the same Mediator, and by the influence of the same Spirit, live estranged from each other as if they did not belong to the same community, and in some cases where there is an accordance in doctrine and in discipline, and where there is only a difference with regard to the mode of the administration of an ordinance, the gift of sprinkling for instance, they cannot live in peace, nor be able to commemorate the dying love of Jesus at the same table. Really, one would sometimes imagine, that each denomination expected that hereafter there would be a party temple of their own, into which all would submissively rest; but they are mistaken, all these differences will then be done away, and we shall be surprised, and, if grief could enter heaven, we should be grieved, that we have attached ourselves so exclusively to our distinctions here. When the corn is carried home to the same garner, no inquiry is made whether it grew in this field or that field before the harvest.—Children may differ in age, in size, in dress, and in schooling, but they are all one family. Do we believe this? Do we believe that the perfection of the future state is such, that there will be no party temple there? My dear hearers, you never find in the scriptures such a command as this, "Take heed where you learn," though you read "take heed what you hear, and take heed how you hear." You will not hereafter have the question addressed to you, where did you worship? but, whether you have worshiped the Father in spirit and in truth. But is this true? Will there be no party temple? Do we believe this? Do we believe that the perfections of heaven arise from him? Surely it is desirable to approach as nearly to that state now, in disposition, as possible. O I shall be saved, not as a member of a particular church, but as a member of the church universal. I feel myself a thousand times more dignified and honored by the name of a Christian, which comprehends us all, than I should by the name of an Episcopalian, a Dissenter, an Independent, a Baptist or a Methodist.—Rev. W. Jay.

JOINED TO IDOLS.

"Let him alone!" The phrase is evidently elliptical, and leaves something to be supplied. It is addressed to some one or more, but to whom expressly it is not said. It is spoken to intelligences we do not see, and it is heard and attended to, probably, by those of whom we have no knowledge—invisible agencies and unearthly forms!—Suppose we stand amidst the hallowed circle and obedient hosts, and notice only such as we either know or have been instructed to consider or personify as the instruments of the Almighty's purpose, hearkening to the word, and accomplishing all his will and pleasure? Suppose it said,

Angels! let him alone. Stand no longer "in the path of this son of Bozor, who so loveth the wages of unrighteousness." Let not his foot be crushed against the wall, but let him reap the harvest that he soweth.—Let him proceed "as the ox to the slaughter," and as the fool to the correction of the stocks; let his way be dark and slippery, and let his steps take hold on hell.

Providences! let him alone. Adverse and afflictive as ye are esteemed when often "kind heralds sent in love," ye shall no longer call him "in the day of adversity to consider." Break not upon the slumber of his soul; let him no more be scared by visions, nor disquieted by dreams; let no terrors make him afraid, nor corrections make him humble, nor disappointments keep him safe. Let him alone to pull down his barns and build greater, and interrupt him not in the requiem he is singing to his soul. Let him alone to "prosper upon the earth, and gain riches in possession." Let him alone to riot by day in the palaces of luxury, and repose at night in the pavilion of magnificence. Let him alone to "crown himself with rose-buds, and chant to the sound of the viol, and boast himself, that to-morrow shall be as this day, and yet more abundant."

Ministers of the sanctuary! let him alone. "Moses and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among his prophets." And to you it hath been spoken—"Pharaoh's heart is hardened;" therefore, ye may say to him at your last interview, "Thou hast well (or truly) said; for I will see thy face no more." And again, "How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, seeing I have rejected him from being king of Israel? And Samuel came no more to see Saul until the day of his death."

And though with the prophet, they cannot cease to mourn for "the ungodly," and (not having received an injunction so particular and express,) we must continue to warn the unruly, to reprove the disobedient, to resist the gainsaying, no less than to invite the unworthy, and entreat even the rebellious; yet if the holy and blessed Spirit of God shall cease to strive with man through these appointed means; if God himself deny his aid, though the arrows of conviction should still continue to be discharged in a rich profusion, and the sword of the Spirit be wielded, and we should still cry, the sword of the Lord and Gideon, these weapons will not enter between the joints of the harness, nor penetrate the shield of the mighty! The trumpet of our jubilee shall not cease to sound, but the captive will not be awakened from his slumber, nor leap to loose his chains! The alarm in Zion may still be heard, and the wind that shall shake the mountains, and the fire that can rend the rocks, may attend it; but if the Lord be not in these, oh, who shall make the sinner tremble; what shall bring him from his cave, and "covered with his own confusion," as with a mantle?

Conscience! let him alone. And the deputy hath heard, and answered, and acquiesced. It hath retired from its post, it hath demolished its reverberating echo; it hath lost its former voice. Thus Felix found conscience let him alone; for often as he heard, it should seem that he trembled only once.

Or, like another deputy, henceforth it is "a Game, caring for none of these things." Even for a season we find, that the heart of David, lately so tender, which troubled and smote him when he offered the least indignity to the worthless Saul, only because he had been the Lord's anointed, now "let him alone" for many months under those complicated crimes, the remembrance of which so embittered the remainder of his days.

Ordinances! let him alone. Ye mountains of Zion, and whither the tribes go up to worship, and thou little Hermon or Mizar among the rest, be ye henceforth to this hypocrite in heart as the mountains of Gilboa, on which there shall be no dew. Or when it shall copiously descend on others, let it be to him as what Gideon saw, that his fleece continues dry! Let the fruitful land become a wilderness, and to him let the well of salvation be without water, and the cloud that returns have neither refreshment nor rain! Need we seek for instances to illustrate this? We refer once for all, and beyond all this, to the head-astounding and heart-appalling malediction on the sacrifices of Doeg and of Judas—"And let his prayer be turned into sin," Ps. cix. 7.—Williams.

True Religion.—Religion is the love of God. The obedience of the believer is an obedience, not of constraint, but of free and hearty choice.

LAST HOURS OF CELEBRATED INFIDELS.

But to speak more directly of the morals of leading infidels: Bolingbroke was a libertine of intemperate habits and unrestrained lust. Temple was a corrupter of all that came near him; given up to ease and pleasure. Emerson, an eminent mathematician, was "rude, vulgar, and frequently immoral." Intoxication and profane language were familiar to him. Towards the close of life, being afflicted with the stone, he would crawl about the floor on his hands and knees, sometimes praying, sometimes swearing." The morals of the Earl of Rochester are well known. Godwin was a lewd man by his confession, as well as the unblushing advocate of lewdness. Shaftsbury and Collins while endeavoring to destroy the gospel, partook of the Lord's Supper, thus professing the Christian faith for admission to office!—Woolston was a gross blasphemer—Blount solicited his sister-in-law to marry him, and being refused, shot himself. Tindall was originally a protestant, then turned papist, then protestant again, merely to suit the times, and was at the same time infamous for vice in general, and total want of principle. He is said to have died with this prayer in his mouth: "If there is a God, I desire that he may have mercy on me."—Hobbes wrote his Leviathan to serve the cause of Charles I; but finding him fail of success, he turned it to the defence of Cromwell, and made a merit of this fact to the usurper; as Hobbes himself unblushingly declared to Lord Clarendon. Need I describe Voltaire—prince of scoffers, as Hume was prince of skeptics; in childhood initiated into infidelity; in boyhood, infamous for daring blasphemy; in manhood, distinguished for a malignant and violent temper, for cold-blooded disruptions of all the ties and decencies of the family circle; for the ridicule of whatever was affecting, and the violation of whatever was confidential! Ever increasing in duplicity and hypocritical management, with age and practice: those whom his wit attracted and his buffoonery amused, were either disgusted or polluted by his loathsome vices.—Lies and oaths in their support were nothing to his maw. Those whom he openly called his friends, he took pains, secretly, to calumniate; flattering them to their faces, ridiculing and reviling them behind their backs. Years only added stiffness to the disgusting features of his impiety, coldness to his dark malignity, and fury to his impetuous temper.—Throughout life he was given up "to work all uncleanness with greediness." Such was the witty Voltaire, who, in the midst of all his levity, had feeling and seriousness enough to wish he had never been born.
—Dwight on Infidel Philosophy.

The Heights of Zion.—On the means for the attainment of these higher graces of the spiritual life, we might have expatiated, but we must close our remarks without almost one glance of the heights of Christian experience, or those loftier attainments after which we are ever doomed to aspire, but with hardly ever the satisfaction in this world of having realized them; and for which it would almost appear indispensable that the spiritual life should be nourished in solitude, and that afar from the din, and the broil, and tumult of ordinary life, the candidate for heaven should give himself up to the discipline of prayer and of constant watchfulness. It is indeed most humbling to reflect on the paltry ascent that we have yet made along that hidden walk, by which it is that the pilgrim travels towards Zion; and how short we are, after years of something like earnestness, from those untouched and untrodden eminences which are so far above us.—Where, may most of us ask, is our delight in God? Where is the triumph of our serene confidence in him over all the anxieties of this world? Where that love to Christ and rejoicing in him, which in the days of primitive Christianity were so often exemplified by the believer, and formed in truth the hourly and familiar habits of his soul? Do we count it enough in the absence of this world's smiles, and when the whole sunshine of them is withdrawn from the bosom, that we still live amid the bright anticipations of faith with the protection of heaven above us, and the full radiance of eternity before us? These are the achievements to which we must yet press onward.—Chalmers.

A Death Scene Realized.—While we hold out this triumphant prospect to those who entertain the overtures of reconciliation, we would urge all, even those who have not yet been visited with a spirit of concern and inquiry, to bestow one single thought on the great practical importance of the subject. The very sound of such words as life and death, judgment and immortality, should reduce you to sacredness—should set you to the work of serious reflection on this subject. We have the vantage ground of your own experience on which to stand, while we endeavor thus to urge you. For your experience at least tells you thus much—that the time that is past, when you look back to it, appears as if it were nothing; and you may believe from this, that the time which is to come, will come as quickly, and appear as little, and as unworthy to be suffered to tempt you away from eternity by its pleasures, which are but for a season, as the period of your life that is already gone. The very moment of your final farewell, if you are not previously cut short by death, which is a very possible thing, that moment will come, and old age will come, and the last sickness will come, and the dying bed will come, and the last look you shall ever cast upon your relations will come, and the agony of the parting breath will come, and the time that you will be stretched a lifeless corpse before the eyes of your weeping relations will come, and the coffin that is to enclose you will come, and that hour when the company assembles to carry you to the church-yard will come, and that moment when you are put into the grave will come, and the throwing in of the earth upon it, all—all will come on every living creature who now hears me. And in a few little years, the minister who now addresses you, and each one who now listens, will be carried to their long home:—now all this will come; and the day of reckoning will come; and the appearance of the Son of God in heaven, and his holy angels around him will come; and the opening of the books will come; and the appearance of every one of you before the judgment seat will come; and the solemn passing of the sentence which is to fix you for eternity will come; and if you refuse to be reconciled to God in the name of Christ, now that he is beseeching you to repent, and if you refuse to turn from the evil of your ways, and to do and to be what your Savior requires you to be and to do, I must tell you what the sentence is: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."
—Dr. Chalmers.

Expostulation with a Sinner.—It was for thy sake that the Judge did suffer unspeakable pains, such as were sufficient to reconcile all the world to God. And to consider that thou hast, for thine own particular, made all this vain, and ineffective; that Christ thy Lord and Judge should be tormented for nothing; that thou wouldst not accept felicity and pardon, when he purchased them at so dear a price; it must needs be an infinite condemnation to thee. How shalt thou look upon him that fainted and died for love of thee, and thou didst scorn his miraculous mercies? How shalt thou dare to behold that holy face which brought salvation to thee, and thou didst turn away, and fall in love with death, and deformity, and sin? And yet, in the beholding that face consists much of the glories of eternity. Surely all the pains and the passions, the sorrows and the groans, the humility and poverty, the labors and the watchings, the prayers and the sermons, the miracles and the prophecies, the whip and the nails, the death and the burial, the shame and the smart, the cross and the grave of Jesus, shall be laid upon thy score, if thou hast refused the mercies and designs of their holy ends and purposes. And if thou rememberest what a calamity that was, which broke the Jewish nation in pieces, when Christ came to judge them for their murdering him who was their King, and the prince of life; and considerest, that this was but a dark image of the terrors of the day of judgment, thou mayest then apprehend, that there is some strange unspeakable evil in store for one who refuses the salvation of Jesus, and rather chooses that Satan should rejoice in his destruction, than that Jesus should triumph in his felicity.—Jeremy Taylor.

The folly of Pride.—After all, take some quiet, sober moment of life, and add together the two ideas of pride and of man; behold him, a creature of a span high, stalking through infinite space, in all the gandeur of littleness.—Perched on a speck of the universe, every wind of heaven strikes into his blood the coldness of death; his soul fleets from his body like melody from the string; day and night, as dust on the wheel, he is rolled along the heavens, through a labyrinth of worlds, and all the creations of God are flaming above and beneath. Is this a creature to revel in his greatness? Is this a creature to make to himself a crown of glory; to deny his own flesh, and to mock at his fellow, sprung from that dust to which both will soon return? Does the proud man not err? Does he not suffer? Does he not die? When he reasons, is he never stopped by difficulties? When he acts, is he never tempted by pleasure? When he lives, is he free from pain? When he dies, can he escape the common grave? Pride is not the heritage of man; humility should dwell with frailty, and atone for ignorance, error and imperfection.—Sidney Smith.

Self-will.—There is nothing contrary to God in the whole world, nothing that fights against him, but self-will. This is the strong castle that we all keep garrisoned against heaven, in every one of our hearts, which God continually layeth siege unto; and it must be conquered and demolished before we can conquer heaven. It was by reason of this self-will that Adam fell in paradise; that those glorious angels, those morning stars, kept not their first station, but dropped down from heaven like falling stars, and sunk into this condition of bitterness, anxiety, and wretchedness, in which now they are. They all entangled themselves with the length of their own wings; they would needs will more and otherwise than God would will in them: and, going about to make their wills wider, and to enlarge them into greater amplitude, the more they struggled, they found themselves the faster pinioned, and crowded up into narrowness and servility, insomuch that now they are not able to use any wings at all; but inheriting the serpent's curse, can only creep with their bellies upon the earth. Now our only way to recover God and happiness again, is, not to soar up with our understandings, but to destroy this self-will of ours; and then we shall find our wings to grow again, our plumes fairly spread, and ourselves raised aloft into the free air of perfect liberty, which is perfect happiness.—Cudworth.

Errors Concerning God.—Man naturally looks on God as a great Master, and himself as his servant, who must work and win heaven as his wages. Hence, when conscience is awakened, he thinks that to be saved, he must answer the demands of the law, serve God as well as he can, and pray for mercy wherein he comes short. Thus many go to duties, who never come out of them to Christ.—Boston.

A Christian Life.—You know not the glorious results of a life of piety. It will save you, little as you may think about it now, from a thousand evils, into which otherwise you would assuredly fall. If your influence is exerted on the side of truth and piety, how glorious will be your reward! It will plant upon your brow, a laurel more bright and enduring, than ever decked the brow of an earthly conqueror.

Minister's Department.

SECRET OF MINISTERIAL POWER.

BY REV. DR. GRIFFIN.

I would recommend it to you, my brother, to bathe your soul in Baxter's "Saint's Rest," and to be much in prayer, and make yourself deeply acquainted with the Scriptures. You are kind enough to ask after my course. I believe that an early commencement and pursuit of a systematic study of the Bible, in connexion with a long course of revivals of religion in which I was permitted to be engaged, and an habitual aim, in my ordinary sermons, to reach the conscience, and the heart at every stroke, and the habit of striking out, as I correct my sermons for a new exhibition of them, every clause and word which is not subservient to this end; may be numbered among the most efficacious means of forming my present manner of preaching, such as it is. Perhaps the most powerful circumstance, not yet mentioned, was entering upon the large congregation of Newark, calling for constant and impassioned preaching, and for continual visiting. I made a bad improvement under these advantages; but I am far from thinking with you, my dear sir, that a man cannot be a good preacher and pastor with a great congregation. A great congregation, as rousing to great exertions, is the best field for the formation of such a character. You can never satisfy any people by visiting. The best way to approach, is perhaps to show the people, by a systematic course, that you visit all you can. Besides your social visits, and visits to the sick, I would set apart one day in a week to strictly parochial visits, to be short, and right to the point, and to be closed with prayer. Make the appointment beforehand, and let all know the course.

As to the manner of preaching, the object of every stroke ought to be to do good rather than to gain popularity. That will make us the most divinely eloquent. The little prettiness of thought and expression, which the love of popularity can produce, are nothing to the great and overwhelming thoughts which flow from a mind solemnly impressed with divine things, and earnestly desirous to impress them upon others. Here we may aim high. I doubt the lawfulness of any other high aim in a minister of Christ. Dr. Witherspoon used to advise his pupils to write out one good sermon a week, and let the rest take care of themselves. You cannot, in your situation, write but one. I would recommend it to you to extemporize in the week, to preach from a skeleton in the morning of the Sabbath, and from notes in the afternoon. From your account of your fondness for belles-lettres and poetry, and aversion to metaphysics, I should apprehend that the side on which you are to guard, is a tendency to sprightliness, without sufficient weight and penetrating force. You have a fine imagination, and a fine taste to regulate it. Use both of them as nature dictates, without effort; but let all your effort be to fill your pages with the weight and solemnity of divine truth. Under each head labor to get out that precise view of truth which you had in your most solemn hour on your knees.—Letter to a Friend.

DIFFERENT MODES OF PREACHING.

Bold Manner.—The man who preaches what he feels without fear or diffidence.

Self-Confident.—A man who goes by nobody's judgment but his own.

Rash.—A preacher who says what comes uppermost without any consideration.

Rambling.—A man that says all that pops in his mind without any connexion.

Stiff.—One who pins himself down to think and speak by rule, without any deviation.

Powerful.—The man who preaches from the bottom of his heart, the truths of the gospel with energy to the consciences of his hearers.

Finical.—Minces out fine words with nothing in them.

Sober.—The man who lulls you fast asleep.

Elegant.—The man who employs all his brains upon dressing words, without ever aiming at the heart.

Conceited.—Vainly aims at every thing, and says nothing.

Affectionate.—The happy man who feels for souls tenderly, preaches Christ affectionately, and yearns over souls in the bowels of Jesus Christ.

Dogmatic.—A man who goes by his own brains right or wrong.

Peevish.—One who picks into every body's thoughts, and thinks no one right but himself.

Fanciful.—One who instead of being led by wisdom, runs after a thousand visionary whimsies and conceits.

Self-important.—Thinks nobody like himself.

Noisy.—A loud roar, and nothing in it.

Genteel.—The vain fool that is fond of dressing up words without meaning.—Hill.

Children's Department.

THE PASSIONATE BOY.

Young Frederick had naturally a noble soul, elevated thoughts, and generous notions. His turn of mind was lively, his imagination strong and quick, and his temper cheerful and pleasing. Indeed, the elegance of his person, and his behavior and accomplishments, gained him the respect of every one; but notwithstanding all these amiable qualities, he had one unhappy defect; it was that of giving way too readily to the most violent emotions of passion.

It would frequently happen, that while amusing himself in the circle of his playmates, the most trifling contradiction would ruffle his temper, and fill him with the highest degree of rage and fury, little short of a state of madness.

As he happened to be one day walking about his chamber, and meditating on the necessary preparations for a treat his father had permitted him to give his sister, his dear friend and favorite Marcus, came to him, to advise with him on that business. Frederick, being lost in thought, saw not his friend, who, therefore, having spoken to him in vain, drew nearer to him, and began to pull him by the sleeve. Frederick, angry, and out of patience by these interruptions, suddenly turned round, and gave Marcus such a push, that he sent him reeling across the room, and he at last fell against the wainscot.

Marcus lay motionless on the floor, without the least appearance of life; for, in his fall, he had struck his head against something which had given him a deep and terrible wound, from which issued a great quantity of blood. How shall we describe the situation of poor Frederick, who loved his friend tenderly, and for whom he would, on occasion, have sacrificed his life?

Frederick fell down beside him, crying out most lamentably, "He is dead! he is dead! I have killed my dear friend Marcus!" So great were his fright and consternation, that he had no idea of calling for assistance, but lay by his side, uttering the most dismal groans. Happily, however, his father heard him, and instantly hurrying in, took up Marcus in his arms. He called for some sugar to stop the bleeding of the wound, and having applied some salts to his nose, and some water to his temples, they brought him a little to himself.

Frederick was transported with joy when he perceived symptoms of life in his friend; but the fear of relapse kept him in the greatest anxiety. They immediately sent for a surgeon, who, as soon as he arrived, searched the wound. He found it was not in the temple, but so very close to it, that the tenth part of an inch nearer would probably have made the wound dangerous indeed, if not mortal.

Marcus, being carried home soon became delirious, and Frederick could not be persuaded to leave him. He sat down by the side of his poor friend, wholly absorbed in silence. Marcus, while he remained in that delirious state, frequently pronounced the name of Frederick. "My dear Frederick," he would sometimes say, "what could I have done to deserve being treated in this manner? Yet, I am sure, you cannot be less unhappy than myself, when you wounded me without a cause. However, I would not wish your generous nature should be grieved. Let us forgive each other; I for vexing you, and you for wounding me."

In this manner did Marcus talk, without being sensible that Frederick was near him, though he held him by the hand at the same time. Every word, thus pronounced, in which there could be neither flattery nor deceit, went to the heart of the afflicted Frederick, and rendered his grief almost insupportable.

In ten days' time, however, it pleased God to abate the fever, and he was enabled to get up, to the great joy of his parents; but how can we express the feelings of Frederick on this unhappy occasion! That task must be left for those who may have unfortunately been in a similar situation: his joy now was undoubtedly as great as his sorrow had been.

Marcus at last got perfectly well, and Frederick, in consequence, recovered his former cheerfulness and good humor. He now stood in need of no other lesson, than the sorrowful event that had lately taken place, to break himself of that violence of temper, to which he had been so long a slave. In a little time no appearance of the wound remaining, excepting a small scar near the temple, which Frederick could never look at without some emotion, even after they were both grown up to manhood. Indeed, it ever afterwards was considered as a seal of that friendship, which they never lost sight of.—Looking-Glass.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, April 30, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

Removal and Agency.

REV. A. CAMPBELL has removed to Westerly, R. I., where he will remain a short time. Br. Campbell will act as Agent for the Register in that place, and others which he visits.

Piety.

A uniform reverence for the Divine Being, and a conscientious exercise of personal piety commend themselves to the esteem of all persons, however sceptical. Few, if any, have their judgment so perverted, and their senses so benummed, as not to pay particular regard for those who labor to keep a conscience void of offense towards God and man. Polite accomplishments, and an easy address, may dazzle for awhile. Intellectual acquirements may also excite admiration; but they cannot present so much to admire and love as personal piety. The sceptic feels that his interests are safe in the hands of the pious. And although he may have no love to God, yet he cannot do otherwise than admire and respect those who are governed by this holy principle.

Piety is never out of time or place. It is suited to any rational pursuit or amusement, and is the brightest ornament of all ages and sexes, in all circumstances. The continual exercise of it casts a radiant halo around its possessor, which the lover of pleasure and vain amusements may well covet. The ungodly who have pious companions are aware that they inherit a treasure of which they are unworthy, and are constrained to acknowledge the divine excellency of that religion which exerts so happifying an influence over the heart and conduct. And all who come under the influence of the devotedly pious, have incontrovertible evidence of the divine character of our holy religion. Were it not for this convincing and restraining influence of Christianity, heathen darkness and superstion, like a devastating scourge, would spread over the land, drying up all the fountains of social pleasures, and destroying all interesting and profitable pursuits. The exercise of right feelings towards God, is the mainspring to all benevolent enterprizes, and the foundation on which all things social, moral, political or religious, are based.

Sabbath Schools.

The time has come when Sabbath Schools which have been closed through the winter, should be again opened. If the readers of the Register would be of service to the young, they may find ample room for this in engaging in the Sabbath Scoool. By this means they have the privilege of training the young to habits of virtuous thought and conduct, and of elevating their minds to a contemplation of heavenly things. The parent can have no greater joy than to see his children walking in the truth. The followers of the Lamb can have no greater joy than to see the young giving their attention to the interests of religion. And if there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, how great must be that joy to see those whose minds just begin to expand, giving serious attention to the interests of their souls?

The destinies of the rising generation lie mainly in the hands of christians. It belongs to them to instruct, and give direction to their expanding minds. It is their part to point out the snares which satan has laid to trap the unwary. It belongs to them to raise the warning voice against sin, and point out the paths of virtue, of piety and peace. Habits that are formed in early days, and impressions then made, are almost sure to continue through life, and exert a most important influence in directing the business and pursuits of life. The child that is taught to reverence God and religion, and to observe all the requisitions of God, can find no pleasure in company with the profane and licentious crew, who blaspheme God, and ridicule things sacred and divine. He delights in things manly, and in rational and ennobling pursuits and enjoyments; and the presence of the ungodly and profane is like a pestilential atmosphere, whose presence is pollution, and whose embrace is death.

We ask especial attention to this subject. Let parents remember their duty, to train up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The destinies of the souls of your children are in a great measure in your hands. And it is in your power to bring them under proper influences and instruction. Your encouragement and assistance is necessary to induce them to love the Bible and Sabbath School. If you desire to see your children instructed into the truths of religion, and forming virtuous habits—if you wish to see them the early friends of the Redeemer, we trust you will not neglect to improve the excellent advantages for securing those desirable ends that the Sabbath School offers.

We call upon young men and women who are members of Christ's church, to engage in this work. There are multitudes of children around you who know but little of the value of religious things. Your circumstances are such that you can exert a most uncontrollable influence in bringing them to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, and who has invited little children to come unto him. Here you have a wide field laid open for you. If you have any desire to see the rising generation growing up in the truth—if you desire the salvation of souls—if you have love for that Savior who has redeemed your souls, can you give better evidence of it than to engage in this work. Gather in the children of your vicinity and instruct them in the scriptures, and you will, we doubt not, soon have the pleasure of seeing them initiated into Christ's kingdom. You may find those around you who need your help, and who would not be brought under the influence of gospel truth but by your instrumentality.

We call upon all christians, old or young, to come up to this work. Bring all who come under your influence within this means of grace. There are many amongst us who have ungodly parents who care not for their own souls, or the souls of their children.—These are never instructed to love God, nor are they restrained from the free indulgence of their corrupt propensities. O, how is the christian's heart pained to hear the curses, and see the wicked conduct of children in their early wayward career! But so it is, thousands of such scenes are witnessed around us. Thousands of children in a christian land are growing up in profanity and crime, without any to teach them the right way of the Lord. Let us ask you again to gather in the children of ungodly parents, and all that are in your vicinity, and instruct them in the ways of virtue and religion.

Let us ask our juvenile readers also to engage in the study of the Bible. Come, and learn of him who was once cradled in a manger, and who is now the friend of children. The Bible is full of interest. You can find more there that will be of service to you than elsewhere. Let us urge you to place yourselves under the instruction of teachers who are anxious to tell you of Jesus Christ and his love, and of the reward he will give to children who love him.

Pictorial Illustrations of the Bible.

By reference to another column it will be seen that Mr. A. H. Burdick, of this office, is Agent for the above work in this village. From the partial examination we have given to this work, we feel satisfied that it will be a valuable acquisition to any one who may purchase it. It is highly recommended by most of the Religious journals, of almost every denomination. Any thing that is calculated to give a correct knowledge of the sacred scriptures is of great value. We are of opinion that this work is calculated to do much good in this way.

For the Register.

An Exposition of the latter part of the Seventh of Romans.

The design of our remarks, at this time, will be to ascertain the meaning of the 14th verse; for if this be rightly interpreted it will clearly show the sense of the remaining part of the chapter, because they are essentially connected together, and refer to the same person.

The language of the verse referred to is as follows: "For we know that the law is spiritual: but I am carnal sold under sin." There is no difference of opinion in regard to the first part of this passage, for all know, who have received the Bible as their guide, that the Law is spiritual, that is, it has respect to the heart, as well as to the external conduct, and requires of us spiritual worship; but it is said in the latter part of the verse, "I AM CARNAL SOLD UNDER SIN." Now the great point in question is, how are we to understand the Apostle in this place? Does he, in this language, represent his own christian experience, as it then was, and describe his state as an holy Apostle? We think not, and shall now proceed to show that such a sense of the passage cannot be sustained by enlightened criticism, or sound argument.

It is evidently the design of the Apostle, in the whole chapter under consideration, to represent the inefficiency of the law, as a means of justification or sanctification, and in order to do it more effectually, and to heighten the picture, he employs a figure of speech, frequently used in his writings, by which he more forcibly describes, either his own condition while under guilt and condemnation, or the state of an awakened Jew, groaning and struggling while in bondage to the law, not having yet received the glorious liberty of the gospel. It is evident, therefore, that the representations here made, cannot, in any consistent sense, be the standard of christian experience or gospel holiness.

This view of the subject has been taken by the ablest Commentaries and Theologians of ancient and modern date, among these are some of the most learned of the Calvinistic school, such as Dr. Macknight, and more recently, Professor Stuart, of Andover Theological Seminary, who, in his Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, has, by strong arguments and conclusive reasoning, disproved the allegation that the Apostle, in the seventh chapter, is speaking of his own state as a christian.

But before we introduce quotations from these writers, I wish to show that the terms made use of by the Apostle, can never, in any just sense, be applied to Christian experience, or Apostolical holiness. He says,—"I AM CARNAL SOLD UNDER SIN." It would be sufficient to prove the position here taken, were the word CARNAL only used, but when it is associated with the phrase, "sold under sin," we are bound to consider the language as descriptive of an unregenerated state.

It is assumed, however, by the "Village Pastor," in his third Sermon published in the Register, that the verse which forms the subject of this communication, together with the remaining parts of the chapter, are a representation of christian character and gospel privileges; but is such a construction of this important portion of scripture, consonant with other portions of the Bible? Will he point out to me any place in the Gospel where it is said the CHILDREN OF GOD are "sold under sin"? That is, as the phrase means, wholly given up to it—completely under its person and control. On the contrary, it is plainly declared by the Apostle, in the preceding chapter, when speaking of the privileges of the people of God, "SIN SHALL NOT HAVE DOMINION OVER YOU," and again, "But now BEING MADE FREE FROM SIN and become servants to God, ye have your FRUIT UNTO HOLINESS and the end everlasting life." We will now introduce some extracts from other writers on this subject, which, while they please and edify, will, no doubt, greatly strengthen and fortify the position we have taken.

The first quotation which we will give, is taken from Mr. Fletcher, whose work on Christian Perfection ought to be read and deeply studied by every Christian. He says, "St. Paul no more professes himself actually a carnal man in Rom. vii. 14, than he professes himself actually a liar in Rom. iii. 7, where he says, "But if the truth of God has more abounded through my lie, why am I judged as a sinner?" He no more professes himself a man ACTUALLY SOLD UNDER SIN, than St. James and his fellow believers profess themselves a generation of vipers, and actual cursers of men, when the one wrote and the other read, "The tongue can no man tame: it is full of deadly poison; therewith curse we men." The Apostle says of himself, what he might have said of any other man, or of all mankind, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as a sounding brass." Thrice in three verses he speaks of HIS NOT HAVING CHARITY: and suppose he had done it three hundred times, this would no more have proved that he was really UNCHARITABLE, than his saying, Rom. vii. 14, "I am sold under sin," proves that he "served the law of sin with his body," as a slave is forced to serve the master who bought him."

Dr. Macknight says, in his comment on the phrase, I am carnal, "The word is used 1 Cor. iii. 1, to denote such a state of imperfection in knowledge and goodness, as persons may be in who are newly converted. But in most other passages, it signifies the highest state of alienation from God, Rom. viii. 5—8, and the being carnal is said, Eph. ii. 3, to consist "in fulfilling the desires of the flesh." That the Apostle used the word CARNAL in the worst sense here, is evident from his adding, "being sold under sin."

His comment on the next clause of the verse is as follows:—"'BEING SOLD UNDER SIN.'—That is, sold as a slave to remain under the dominion of sin, and be obliged to do whatever evil actions sinful inclination prompts to. In this sense the phrase is used in scripture, Judges, iii. 8, "He sold them into the hand of the king of Mesopotamia, and the children of Israel served," &c. 1 Kings, xxi. 25, "There was none like unto Ahab, which did sell himself to work wickedness." Now we ask, in view of all that has been said, is it rational to conclude, that such a slavish state of sin and misery, as is here spoken of, did actually belong to the Apostle in his most eminent state as a Christian? We did intend to make some further extracts from other authors, but for fear of making this communication too long, we will omit them for the present.

With your permission, Mr. Editor, and the leave of Divine Providence, we shall, in our next, make some remarks on other portions of the same chapter. In the mean time, let us pray that God may direct us in all our deliberations, by his Holy Spirit.

L. K. REDINGTON.

Cuyler, April 8th, 1841.

FOREIGN NEWS.

SIXTEEN DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP COLUMBIA.

From the Boston Atlas.

The steam ship Columbia, Capt. Jenkins, arrived at the wharf last evening at about seven o'clock.—The Columbia left Liverpool on the afternoon of the 4th inst., and consequently bringing fifteen days later intelligence from Europe. Her intelligence does not appear to be of much importance. Parliament was still in session, but had done nothing of moment. On account of the pacific news carried out by the steam ship Britannia and the packet ship Virginia, and the paupercity of business in Manchester, Cotton had fallen one eighth of a penny.

The money market was heavy. Flour was dull, at lower rates. The Jews Declaration bill had passed in the House of Commons, and a committee had been appointed at the instance of Mr. Parkington, to inquire into the state of Newfoundland. Mr. Parkinton's account describes the Assembly as the most disorderly and corrupt of all legislative bodies.

It is in its negative character that the fresh intelligence from the United States is most remarkable and most satisfactory: no new symptom of hostility has appeared; the hostile tone of the Legislature and the press is not supported; a very summary termination to the negotiations, which it was said the British Minister had been instructed to make, has not been made; Mr. M'Leod is not to be tried at Lockport, the scene of the first outrages upon him; and a rumor obtains, that when his trial comes on, the plea that England is answerable for the act with which he is charged will not be resisted. At an interchange of courtesies with the diplomatic body in Washington, the New President expressed a confident hope that friendly relations with the European Powers, whom those gentlemen presented, will not be broken for ages.

Upon the whole, the aspect of affairs is strongly inclined towards a more peaceful and speedy conclusion of the immediate dispute than at first appeared possible. Brother Jonathan's excitable temper has subsided to a calm; and his vigorous understanding, backed by a sense of his own interests, and probably by a more generous sense of the sin-dislike to war, on its own account which this country has evinced, will help a right settlement of the matter. Mr. M'Leod seems safe; and a cloud of bloodshed, bankruptcy, and ruin, which hung over the inhabitants of both countries passed by without a storm.

The incidents of Court history are not very striking.—The Queen and Prince Albert appeared a good deal in public.

The Great Western did not leave Bristol on the 3d, but was advertised to leave on the 8th. The detention, it is said, was caused by want of passengers.

THE STEAM SHIP PRESIDENT.—The Steam Ship President had not arrived when the Columbia left.—Great anxiety was felt on account of her non-appearance. The Liverpool Mercury says:—"This steam ship, which seems destined every trip she makes, to painfully keep alive public anxiety respecting her safety has not yet made her appearance. The New-York packet ship Virginian, which sailed on the 14th ult., three days after the President, arrived yesterday. The steamer has on board important dispatches from our minister at Washington, and her arrival must be anxiously looked for by the Government as it is by the public.

The appointment of a successor to Admiral Elliot in the Indian command, has given rise to a continued succession of reports and contradictions. The last announcement, is that Sir William Parker has possibly been appointed. If the next intelligence from China be favorable, it is said Sir William will go in the Cornwallis, 72; but otherwise he will proceed by the overland route to India on the 1st of May.

Letters from Beyrout to the 26th February, state that the rebuilding of the city was proceeding with activity. The South of Syria was still unsettled, and the plague was raging in Acre and the vicinity. A party of English sappers and miners still remained at Beyrout.

The Turkish Albanian troops had been recalled from Syria; and Government threatened to punish the perpetrators of outrages committed near Beyrout.

Advices have been received from Alexandria to the 7th instant. Both the Pasha and Commodore Napier had left that city; the Pasha for Cairo, to visit Ibrahim Pasha, and the Commodore for Marmorica.

France.

The French papers state that the Prince de Joinville had been appointed to command the naval station at Newfoundland.

There has been a revolutionary movement in Marseilles The police had been for some time aware of a conspiracy, the object of which was to be to fire the fort. At length they learned that the conspirators had planned some decisive movement, in order to which they were to rendezvous at a wine shop in the town. The police repaired to the place and occupied the road through which the rioters would be likely to pass.

About 11 oclock at night on the 23d, the conspirators began to assemble at the wine shop, arriving in groups of five or six, to the number of 250 or 300. The police were about to surround them; when they were observed, and a gensdarme was fired at. The fire was returned. The conspirators of the house were alarmed, and before the military had arrived they dispersed and fled.

Another Insult of the American Flag by a British Man-of-War.—Capt. Wyse, of the Leonidas, at this port, from Rio de Janeiro, states, that on the 16th of March, in lat. 9 30 S, long. 35 47 W. he was fired into, and brought too, by the British sloop of war Rose; the boat sent on board, the papers demanded and examined, under the plea of supposing that she was a slaver. After detaining him for sometime she was allowed to proceed.—Baltimore American.

News of the Day.

The Brooklyn Murder.—Our readers will remember the murder of young Phelps, some months back, for which three boys, Nesbitt, alias Butcher Bill Cook, and another boy, were arrested. The prisoners were arraigned last week before the Brooklyn Court of Oyer and Terminer, and pleaded not guilty. The District Attorney not being prepared to proceed with the trial of the prisoners at the present term, they were remanded, and a special Court will be held for the purpose. Young Cook, it is stated, will be admitted as State's evidence, in order to furnish sufficient testimony to convict the others, of whom Nesbitt is about 16, and the others much younger.—N. Y. American.

Return of Curry.—This man, who obtained some $2,500 from the Bank of Ithaca by means of forgery, and who has been the subject of much correspondence between Governor Seward and Governor Gilmer of Virginia, passed through town to-day, loaded with irons, on his way to Ithaca. He was in custody of Mr. John D. Dix, of that place, who was deputed by Governor Seward to obtain him from the acting Governor of Virginia, who has surrendered him without restriction of any kind. The prisoner is a fine, gay, bold faced villian, apparently accustomed to his calling, with black eyes and a profusion of whiskers.

Some $2,000 have been recovered in money and effects, which will leave the loss but trifling.—Buffalo Commercial Adv.

Charge of Piracy.—The brig Malek Adhel arrived at the port yesterday from Rio de Janiero, in charge of Lieutenant Ogden of the U. S. Navy. Nine of her crew, viz—the 1st and 2d mates, 6 sailors and a Portuguese boy were sent home in her on a charge of piracy. They were yesterday evening taken before the U. S. Circuit Court and after some preliminary forms were committed for trial by Chief Justice Taney. Z. Collins Lee, Esq. is engaged as counsel for the accused.—Baltimore American.

The Whale Fishery.—The Nantucket Inquirer of the 10th inst. gives the following importation of the sperm and whale oil, into the several ports of the United States, during the month of March last, viz: 15,815 bbls. or 498,172 gallons sperm, and 36,850 bbls. or 1,116,775 gallons whale oil.

Cast Iron Nails.—The Miners' (Pa.) Journal says that the experiment tried in their immediate neighborhood of laying Cast Anthracite Iron Rails, instead of wood faced with iron, has proved completely successful. They have sustained none of the injury which was apprehended from the frost. The Schuylkill Valley Railroad Company have ordered a great quantity of these rails which are offered at $10 to $50 a ton.

Wreck.—Came ashore, on Saturday 17th, at 5 o'clock, P. M., at Montock, 5 miles west of the Point, south side, ship Forrester, Chas. B. Ray, of New Bedford, with a cargo of sperm oil (1500 bbls.) All hands saved—vessel gone to pieces—a part of the cargo will be saved.—Sagharbor Corrector.

An aged Miss.—A Miss Mary Prince, aged 100 years and 1 month, lately died at Philadelphia, having attained that advanced age in a state of "single blessedness."

The officers of the United States Army now in this city paid their respects yesterday in a body to the President of the United States.—National Intelligencer.

A Curiosity.—A Correspondent writes us that the great number of murders and suicides which appeared in the papers during the last fall, induced him, in his usual newspaper reading, to keep a memorandum of them. He accordingly began on the first of January last; but cannot have been but a small portion of the whole number throughout the United States. From that date to the first of April, there have been 74 murders and 63 suicides. Of these, 19 came to sudden death by intemperance; 12 by taking laudanum, and other poisons; 7 by hanging themselvs; 7 by cutting their throats; 8 drowning, and 5 by shooting themselves.

Of the murders, 6 were in New-York, 6 in Ohio, 4 in Georgia, 4 in New Orleans, 2 in Virginia, 2 in Vermont, 2 in New Jersey, 2 in Kentucky, 1 in Arkansas.

Of suicide, 32 were in New-York 8 in Pennsylvania, 7 in Massachusetts, 6 in New Orleans, 2 in Connecticut, 1 in Maine, 1 in Kentucky, 1 in South Carolina, 1 in Wisconsin, 1 in Rhode Island, 3 in Virginia.

Lake Michigan—Low water.—At no period since the spring of 1836, has the water in Lake Michigan been so low as at the present time. The past winter has been excessively dry, with a clear sky a greater portion of the time—in fact, there has been no rain in this region since November last. This, doubtless, has had some influence, though the lake appears to have been declining from other causes for the last two years. The weather is now quite warm. So says the last Milwaukie Advertiser.

Power of Conscience.—Mr. David Silliman of Weston, lately received by Mail a letter without name or date, with $30 enclosed. The writer requested Mr. Silliman to divide this sum among the heirs of David Silliman, who died more than 30 years since.—Bridgeport Standard.

One of the workmen attached to the Baltimore Shot Tower, while passing through Howard's Park, at an early hour Thursday morning, heard a flock of wild geese passing over him, and looking up saw something white descending towards the ground.—He took off his hat containing his handkerchief, and was thus enabled to catch unbroken a large goose egg, which had been sent down by one of the ærial party referred to.—Baltimore American.

Hot water to lobsters is like brandy to to dram-drinkers; it has a tendency to shorten life, by turning their features red.

Funny Reference.—A petition was presented to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, on the 10th inst., asking that a tax might be imposed upon bachelors over the age of thirty years. The document was referred to the Committee on Domestic Manufactures.

For the Rocky Mountains.—The steamer Trapper, belonging to the American Fur Company, left St. Louis on the 7th inst. for the Yellow Stone River. On board were a large number of hunters, all of whom appeared in the highest spirits and the deck was strewed with their paraphernalia. She will be absent about four months.

Sugar.—By a document concerning the cultivation of sugar, transmitted by the Legislature of Louisiana, to Congress, it appears that there are 525 sugar estates in that State, employing 40,000 hands and 10,000 horses, and that the average crop is equal to 70,000 hhds. of 1000 lbs., or 70,000,000 lbs. sugar, and 350,000 gallons molasses; the average value of sugar is six cents per lb. and molasses 20 cents per gallon.

Shipwreck.—The Charleston Courier says the steamer Anson arrived at Georgetown on Wednesday last having in tow the Spanish brig Idefonsa, mentioned in our paper yesterday as being off Pawley's island in distress. The I. was from Havana, with a cargo of sugar and coffee to Hamburgh; she had three feet water in her hold, and was about being abandoned when fallen in with by the Anson.

Rates of Interest.—The following are the rates of interest in the States and Territories of the Union, together with the punishment of usury. It is a valuable statement, and should be preserved.

Maine, 6 per cent—forfeit of the debt or claim.

New Hampshire, 6 per cent—forfeit of three times the amount unlawfully taken.

Vermont, 6 per cent—recovery in action with costs.

Massachusetts, 6 per cent—forfeit of three-fold the usury.

Rhode Island, 6 per cent—forfeit of the money and interest on the debt.

Connecticut, 6 per cent—forfeit of the whole debt.

New York, 7 per cent—forfeit of the whole debt.

New Jersey, 6 per cent—forfeit of the whole debt.

Pennsylvania, 6 per cent—forfeit of the whole debt.

Delaware, 6 per cent—on tobacco contracts 8 per cent. Usurious contracts void.

Virginia, 6 per cent—forfeit double the usury taken.

North Carolina, 6 per cent—contracts for usury void—forfeit double the usury.

South Carolina, 7 per cent—forfeit of interest and premium taken, with costs to debtor.

Georgia, 8 per cent—forfeit of three times the usury and contract void.

Alabama, 8 per cent—forfeit of interest and usury.

Mississippi, 8 per cent—by contract as high as 10—usury recoverable in action of debt.

Louisiana, 5 per cent—bank interest 6—conventional as high as 10—beyond, contract void.

Tennessee, 6 per cent—usurious contracts void.

Kentucky, 6 per cent—usury may be recovered with costs.

Ohio, 6 per cent—usurious contracts void.

Indiana, 6 per cent—on written agreement may go as high as 10—penalty of usury, a fine of double the excess.

Illinois, 6 per cent—three-fold amount of the whole interest.

Missouri, 6 per cent—by agreement, as high as 10—of beyond, forfeit of the whole interest due, and of the usury taken.

Michigan, 7 per cent—forfeit of the usury taken, and the fourth the debt.

Arkansas, 6 per cent—by agreement, any rate not higher than 10. Amount of usury recoverable, but contracts void.

Florida, 8 per cent—forfeit of interest and excess in case of usury.

Wiskonsan, 7 per cent—by agreement not over 12—forfeit treble the excess.

On debts and judgments in favor of the United States, interest is computed at 6 per cent a year.

Death of a Philanthropist.—The Portsmouth Gazette records the death in that town, on Friday evening, of William Ladd, well known throughout this country and in Europe, for his noble and persevering exertions for many years past, to extend the principles of peace. Indeed he has always been active in every good work, which would tend to elevate the character of man, and promote concord, morality and piety among the great human family. But few men during the present century have been more indefatigable in their labors to promote the happiness of mankind—and his death makes a void, which will not be easily filled. Mr. Ladd followed the occupation of a mariner for many years, and always manifested a deep interest in the welfare of seamen. His life was an eventful one—and his biography, if well written, will constitute one of the most interesting and useful books of the age.

The death of this good man was sudden—and caused by a disease of the heart.—On the evening previous to his death, he took part in the temperance meeting at the Marlboro' Chapel, in this city, and appeared in excellent health. So true is it that "in the midst of life we are in death."—Bost. Journal.

The Parliament of the United Province of Canada is summoned for the despatch of business, to meet on the 26th of May.

PRODUCT OF BREAD STUFFS IN THE UNITED STATES.

We have received the returns of the Agricultural Products of the United States compiled from the returns of the Marshals for taking the census, in June last, with the exception of two states and two territories. The aggregate is astonishingly large, and will be viewed with gratification. It will be seen that Michigan takes a front rank among the producing states, and distances most of them, when our population is considered.

In this article, we give only the immense amount of bread stuffs produced, reserving the other important articles for a future number:

	Bushels of Wheat.	Bushels of oth'r grain.
Maine,	848,166	2,630,906
New Hampshire,	442,954	3,084,854
Vermont,	642,963	4,051,818
Massachusetts,	158,923	3,604,082
Rhode Island,	3,088	697,408
Connecticut,	86,980	3,995,175
New York,	11,853,907	39,540,501
New Jersey,	774,023	9,922,044
Pennsylvania,	13,029,756	40,198,521
Delaware,	215,165	3,086,705
Maryland,	3,511,443	12,772,280
Virginia,	10,066,809	50,054,336
South Carolina,	705,925	16,236,512
Georgia,	1,732,956	18,703,310
Ohio,	16,214,260	48,797,112
Tennessee,	4,547,372	49,545,443
Louisiana,	105	6,662,398
Alabama,	746,106	16,146,577
Mississippi,	196,476	13,669,940
Missouri,	906,077	13,840,190
Indiana,	4,154,256	34,036,545
Illinois,	2,740,380	28,351,932
Michigan,	2,189,263	6,152,273
Arkansas,	112,200	4,084,712
Iowa Territory,	157,747	1,559,230
Dist. Columbia,	12,147	60,717
Bushels,	66,089,947	419,776,871

	Bushels of Potatoes.	Population.
Maine,	10,392,380	501,796
New Hampshire,	6,231,901	284,481
Vermont,	8,206 784	291,818
Massachusetts,	5,385,662	737,786
Rhode Island,	904,773	108,836
Connecticut,	3,411,227	310,831
New York,	30,058,000	2,432,835
New Jersey,	2,074,118	373,271
Pensylvania,	8,626,925	1,850,000
Delaware,	200,712	78,120
Maryland,	1,058,919	467,567
Virginia,	2,873,447	1,239,227
South Carolina,	2,697,713	594,439
Georgia,	1,184,386
Ohio,	5,600,589	1,515,695
Tennessee,	2,374,031	/
Louisiana,	845,335	683,314
Alabama,	1,500,700
Mississippi	1,538,628	384,000
Missouri,	681,192	327,781
Indiana,	1,548,190	683,314
Illinois,	1,956,887	357,447
Michigan,	2,051,339	211,705
Arkansas,	290,887	95,612
Iowa Territory,	234,063
Dist. Columbia,	12,035	43,712
Bushels,	102,459,926

There are no returns from North Carolina, Kentucky, Florida and Wisconsin.—When we receive them we shall give them. It will also be observed, that in several States the population is not given, as the returns at Washington were supposed to be so incorrect, that they were sent back to the Marshals for revision.

RECAPITULATION.

Bushels of wheat,	66,089,947
Other grain,	419,776,871
Potatoes,	102,459,926
Bushels,	588,326,744

☞ Over 38 bushels of bread-stuffs for every inhabitant in the United States. Of the various kinds of grain, we find the following:

Wheat,	66,089,947	bushels.
Corn,	297,562,240	"
Rye,	17,082,102	"
Buckwheat,	6,930,929	"
Barley,	3,840,937	"
Potatoes,	102,459,926	"
Oats,	94,461,363	"
For Kentucky, N. Carolina, Wiskonsan Ter., &c. say,	70,000,000	(of all kinds.)
	658,426,744

During the long discussion in England on the subject of the Corn Laws, the necessary quantity of grain required to find an individual with bread, has been closely investigated, and it is estimated that the average consumption, including young and old, is about five bushels to a person, including all kinds of grain. Admitting this estimate to be correct, and putting the population of the United States at seventeen millions, we have a surplus of 33 bushels to an inhabitant. Perhaps one half of the corn, most of the wheat and buckwheat, and three-quarters of the rye is used for bread; and the remainder of the rye and a large part of the corn is manufactured into whiskey, or used in fattening pork. We deduct the barley for brewers, and the oats for stock, although in the western counties of England barley is used for bread, and in Scotland oatmeal is in general use, and we find the resources of the United States will stand as follows:

Wheat,	66,089,947
Buckwheat,	6,930,929
Potatoes,	102,499,926
Corn,	148,000,000
Rye,	12,500,000
For Ken. N. Car. Wiskonsan Ter., &c. say,	30,000,000
Bushels,	366,020,802

Over 22 bushels to an inhabitant.

In viewing the amount of bread-stuffs raised, the farmer can draw his own conclusions, by the foregoing, as the probability of a rise of prices, or conjecture as to a still further decline. Unless there is a great demand for it abroad, we fear the latter. At present, we see nothing to encourage more than a usual exportation.

In making a calculation, it must be recollected that there are about 4,000,000 of people in the West Indies and South America, who now receive their flour from us, and have for many years. Our exports to those countries, amount to near 800,000 barrels annually, and the cotton manufactures of our country consume 100,000 barrels for starch, &c. The past year a new trade has been carried on with the Canadas.

We have taken pains to ascertain the amount as near as we can, as the Western Trade with the British Provinces has commenced within a year or two past.

4000 bbls from Detroit, equal to 20,000 bush.
Bushels of wheat from St. Joseph,	45,000	"
70,995 barrels from Cleveland equal to	351,974	"
Bushels of wheat from Cleveland,	896,550	"
From Grand River, Ohio,	11,000	"
40,000 barrels of flour from Rochester, N. Y.	200,000	"
No returns from Buffalo and other ports on the Lake,
	4,527,425	"

Most of this went to England, as after it once got into the Provinces it passed for Colonial wheat, and entered the ports of Great Britain free of duty.

Melancholy Shipwreck.—Loss of the Brig Opulence, of New York.—Captain Chamberlain, of the schooner Francis, arrived this morning from Pensacola, makes the following report:—

On the 6th inst., lat. 34 30, lon. 73 50, fell in with the upper deck of the brig Opulence; took from Capt. Hawkins, John B. Norton, mate, and A. C. Peters, second mate. When they got on board they were unable to stand. They had been on the wreck three days.

The Opulence sailed from New York on the 28th of March, bound for Apalachicola, and on the 3d inst. was struck by a squall which threw her upon her beam ends; every thing was let go immediately, but she filled and went down in a few moments. As she was sinking, a sea washed off the upper part of the cabin deck, which Capt. Hawkins and the mates succeeded in reaching; the crew, consisting of four men and a cook, and a passenger, was lost.

On the 4th Capt. Hawkins and his companions saw a barque standing South, within three miles of them, but although they had a signal of distress flying, the barque passed on. The sea was at this time washing over them. In the afternoon a schooner passed in the like manner. They were washed from their frail support several times, but succeeded in regaining it, although many sharks were swimming around them. On the 5th no vessel passed in sight, but on the 6th they were observed and rescued by Capt. Chamberlain, to whom they render grateful thanks, not only for saving their lives but for his subsequent kindness and attention.

While floating on the wrecked fragment, they had nothing to subsist on but the flesh of a dog, which got upon it with them, and which they killed. They lost every thing but the clothes they had on when the brig went down.

The following are the names of those on board at the time of the disaster; Mr. G. H. Miller, passenger; Capt. Hawkins; first mate, John B. Norton; second mate, A. C. Peters; P. Hawkins, of New York; H. Thomson, of do.; Isaac Hicks, of do.; Peter, of Manilla, all seamen, and Robert Truxton, steward, of New York.

Atrocious Act.—An act of a singular and diabolical character was perpetrated in Cambridge Port, last week. A young man named Mortimer Tappan, about twenty years old, has been paying his addresses to a young lady by the name of Nancy Felton, the daughter of a poor but a respectable mechanic of Cambridge. The parents of young Tappan, it is said, objected to the match.

On Fast evening, Tappan called on Miss Felton, and invited her to take a walk. During the walk, he observed that he had some excellent figs, and offered her one—which she took and commenced eating. She soon noticed that it tasted very peculiarly, and remarked so to Tappan, who replied that the fruit was a new and a very fine kind. She ate about half of the fig, the other half she preserved. During the walk she began to feel ill, and on her return home, was taken violently sick. A physician was sent for, who, from the symptoms manifested, declared that she had been poisoned. The half of the fig was produced, and on examination, it was found to contain a large quantity of Spanish flies.

On Friday the young lady continued dangerously ill, and on Saturday morning a warrant was issued for the arrest of Tappan. On examination he was bound over in the sum of $500, for his appearance at the next term of the Court of Common Pleas in Middlesex county. We understand that the young lady is still very ill.—Bay State Democrat.

Distressing Casualty.—We learn from the Saco Democrat, that Miss Sarah Hooper of Biddeford, was killed a few days since, by the accidental discharge of a musket in the hands of her brother, a boy of 10 years of age, while at play. The piece was loaded with slugs, which passed through the neck, nearly severing it, and lodged in the abdomen. She expired instantly, uttering but a single groan. Another warning against the practice of keeping loaded fire-arms in houses or shops, as well as against their careless use by children or adults.

Pocket Picking.—A gentleman of this city had his pocket picked at the depot of the Boston rail road, of a copy of the New Testament, which from its size and form, was probably mistaken for a pocket book. The gentleman is reconciled to his loss in the hope that the thief may be benefitted by the book of which he has obtained possession in such an unexpected manner.—Providence Journal.

Romanism and Temperance.—It is stated in the Lutheran Observer that Mr. Reed, the gentleman who had been appointed to deliver the address on the day of the celebration of the Temperance societies in Baltimore, and had accepted the appointment, declined the execution of the task assigned him, because he was unwilling to participate in any proceedings where a religious ministry which he did not recognize was to be employed. Mr. R. is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and the chaplains for the day were two Protestant ministers.

It is said that Gen. Harrison's expenditures connected with his removal to Washington, and a month's occupation of the Executive mansion, were enormous; so much so as to leave his family in a very embarrassed condition. It is to be hoped that Congress will grant them at least his salary to the end of the first year of his term.

Henry D. Gale, of this city, American Consul to Velasco, Texas, was drowned on the passage out.

Officer Bowyer has returned from his pursuit after the Hon. forger, Charles F. Mitchell, without being able to find him. He has probably gone to Europe.

The recent charter election in Albany has resulted in the choice of a Whig Mayer; 14 out of 22 members of the Common Council, and 5 of the 8 city Supervisors are also Whigs.

It cannot be too generally known, that an effectual mode of quickly extinguishing fire in a chimney, is to throw a pound of sulphur, or a few pounds of salt, on the fire in the grate, and to hang a wet blanket in front, so as to prevent any air passing up; the doors and windows should be closed. Both sulphur and salt, when burning, give out a gas which extinguishes fire.

One of the fruits of the revival in Hartford, Ct., is apparent in the discontinuance of the sale of ardent spirits in some of the few houses in that city in which strong drink has been sold. In one instance, a profitable firm engaged in the business has been dissolved for conscience' sake.

At the charter election in Penn Yan, on the 5th inst., the Temperance ticket, composed of both parties, succeeded. The question was, "license or no license," and the majority for the no license ticket was seventy-five.

A wolf was taken a few weeks since, on the Kennebec, of a grizzly gray color, which measured from his nose to the tip of his tail, 6 feet 4 inches. The Maine Cultivator says: "Such an animal must have been a frightful acquaintance to meet in the woods alone."

Grain to the amount of 25,000,000 bushels, is annually converted into intoxicating drink, in the United States. It would be infinitely better if it were cast into the sea. The amount of money thus lost is $40,000,000.

A man named Thomas T. Rowe has been mulcted in $1000 damages, at the suit of Rachael Schemerhorn, of Lockport, for the crime of seduction.

An Oxford, (English,) paper says: "During the present assizes, Mr. Justice Coleridge remarked, "that no single case had ever been brought before him of prisoners charged with the commission of offenses, but what the love of liquor had to do with it one way or the other."

Active exertions are making for the relief of the widow of Rev. E. P. Lovejoy, killed by a mob at Alton, Ill. in Nov. 1837. She is now in Cincinnati, in very destitute circumstances.

Of the six deceased Presidents, four have died on the 4th of the month: Adams, Jefferson, and Monroe, on the 4th of July, and Harrison on the 4th of April.

In Monroe co., N. Y., the stump and roots of an old oak were recently sold for boat knees for $50; the body made 4,840 staves, worth $39; four logs sold for $10, and the top limbs made seven cords of wood. The whole tree sold on the ground for over $100.

The Ruling Passion.—Two of the clergymen of Philadelphia, stated in their respective churches during sermon, on the 11th inst., that recently in Southwark, a poor woman lost her child; her kind neighbors procured a decent coffin and shroud, and had the child prepared for interment; they had no sooner left the house, than the mother removed the child from the coffin, disrobed it of the shroud, and then went out and pawned both articles for rum!

Foxes.—We hear it stated that there have been more than $10,000 worth of Foxes caught in this and the neighboring counties the past winter. They have been unusually plenty. We saw the skin of one, which was caught near the State House in this town which was purchased by one of the fur dealers for $25. It was black and very large.—Augusta (Kennebec) Journal.

The Governor of New Jersey has issued his Proclamation recommending the 14th of May to be observed in that State as a day of fasting and prayer, in consequence of the stroke of Providence that has removed the late venerable President of the United States.

The time honored "bell of Independence" which hangs in the State House at Philadelphia, was tolled on the news of Gen. Harrison's death, for the first time since the death of Gen. Washington.

The Torch-light Procession.—This novel and most imposing part of the obsequies in honor of the late President, took place on Saturday evening. It was arranged under the auspices and direction of the Firemen of Albany—ever ready at the call of duty or patriotism. The procession was composed of the members of the different Companies, in their firemen's dress, accompanied by a full band of music, and bearing the funeral Urn, covered with its pall—the whole illuminated by the light of upwards of 600 torches. It passed through the principal streets of the city, between 8 and 10 o'clock. The night was still and very dark; and the effect produced by the long array of mourners at that unusual hour—the funeral emblems—the solemn music—and the strong red glare of the torches, revealing from the gloom, and lighting up with picturesque effect the houses and crowds of spectators which thronged the windows as they passed, left an impression which will not soon be effaced from the memory of those who beheld the scene.—Alb. Eve. Journal:

The Religious Character of Gen. Harrison.—We learn that in the course of a sermon delivered on Sunday last, by the Rev. Mr. Brainard, of this city, he stated that about two years ago, a friend of his, who was preaching in the broad valley of the West, requested those present who desired to receive the prayers of the congregation, to stand up. Gen. William Henry Harrison, our late Chief Magistrate, was the first to respond to the call, and from that time commenced his religious career.—Phila. Courier.

A lady arrived in this city a few days since from Cincinnati, who for many years was a member of the deceased President's Bible Class. He remained for a long series of years, a devoted teacher in the Episcopal church, and this duty he did not abandon until up to the time when he left Cincinnati.—Phil. N. Amer.

In the night of the Thursday before Gen. Harrison's death, he repeated the following verses from Isaiah, to one of his relations at his side, remarking that it had made an impression on him, which he had never been able to efface, nor fully to comprehend:

Isaiah xxi. chap. 11 and 12 verses.

"He calleth to me out of Seir, Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night?

The watchman said, the morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will inquire, inquire ye: return, come."—Madisonian.

It is said, that on the Sabbath after his Inauguration, many of his political friends called to pay their respects to him, as usual. He said to his family that he disliked this exceedingly, and that "Sunday visiting must be broken up." The next Sunday, some of the foreign ministers called, and he was denied to them. The same evening some of his political friends came in. He could not disguise his annoyance at their general discourse, and very soon made an apology for taking leave of them, saying,—"Gentlemen, I shall be most happy to see you at all times, except on Sunday."

His Love of the Bible.—The following interesting incident which occured at Pittsburgh, while Gen. Harrison was on his way to Washington, is a beautiful illustration of the constancy with which he recognized his duties as an accountable being. It is furnished by a correspondent of the National Intelligencer:

"At the hotel where Gen. Harrison was lodged, a child, in which he manifested a very strong interest was ill, and a well known medical gentleman of Pittsburgh was brought, about 9 o'clock in the evening, to see the little patient. The visit concluded—Dr. —— was notified that General Harrison had desired to be informed of the condition of the little sufferer, and would be anxious to hear his report. Proceeding to the General's chamber, Dr. —— found him deeply occupied with the Bible—so intent upon the page before him, that it was not until accosted, he withdrew his eye from the sacred volume. Begging pardon for the seeming discourtesy, the consequence of a moments abstraction, he listened to the report of his little friend's case; that stated, Dr. —— was about to withdraw, but Gen. Harrison invited him to take a chair, and to the Doctor's expression of surprise that he should be occupied reading, when he must need repose, after the fatigues and annoyances of an entire day devoted to receiving and shaking hands with crowds, that seemed to increase as he met them, he replied—"It has grown to be a fixed habit with me now, to read a portion of the Scriptures every night. I am never so late retiring, or so weary, as to intermit that practice. It has been my habit for twenty years—at first as a matter of duty, but it has now become a pleasure. I read the Bible every night."

President Tyler holds open doors at his lodging at Brown's Hotel, every day, between 10 and 12 o'clock, and crowds of visitors every day repair there to pay their respects to the Chief Magistrate. Without knowing him personally, I have frequently seen him in the Senate and in the public throng. In appearance, he is apparently from fifty-five to sixty years of age—standing up full six feet in height—with a prominent Roman nose and marked countenance—but of mild and benevolent aspect—of courteous and dignified manners—accustomed to the respect of those around him, and evidently an accomplished gentleman. In short, he appears in all respects well calculated to preserve the dignity of his station.—Boston Daily Adv.

Fire at North Bend.—Great uneasiness was caused in this city by a report that Gen. Harrison's dwelling house, at North Bend, had been destroyed by fire. Direct information, however, arrived and quieted all apprehensions. The building was on fire, but only the upper story of the west wing sustained any material damage. The roof and this were destroyed, but without, we understand, the loss of any furniture or seriously inconveniencing the afflicted family.—Cincinnati Gaz.

A Singular Law Suit.—A singular and painful litigation has recently been in progress at Boston. The suit was in replevin—brought by a mother to obtain possession of a watch and portrait formerly belonging to her dead son. The defendant was a young lady to whom the son was betrothed, and it was clearly proved that the watch and picture had been given to her by the deceased just before embarking for the voyage on which he was lost. The verdict was in favor of the betrothed; but one hardly knows whether the most to rejoice with her, or grieve with the mother at the issue of a contest for the sad memorials so highly prized and so eagerly desired by them both.

Texas.—Information has been received from San Antonio, that the Mexicans, 8000 strong, with 20 pieces of artillery, under the command of Arista, are making preparations for a campaign, under pretence of chastising the Indians, but which it is intended, it is said, for the invasion and subjugation of Texas. This statement received but little credit.

Important Seizure.—About three months since, information was received by High Constable Blaney, of this city, that a large quantity of machinery, combining the whole of the apparatus for carrying on coining on a most extensive scale, had been made in France, and had been shipped for this country. Assisted by Peter B. Walker, of the New York Police, Blaney ascertained that the articles in question had arrived in New York, and had been conveyed to the northern section of this state. A few days back, Blaney and Walker proceeded to Tioga county, in this state, and after considerable difficulty succeeded in seizing the whole of the apparatus. Dies of the most finished workmanship for coining dollars, half dollars, quarters, eagles, half eagles, and quarter eagles were discovered. Crucibles, files, a large quantity of metal in sheets, ready for working, and all the necessary articles for coining, were seized and brought down to this city.—Phila. Stand.

War in the west.—The Little Rock [Ark.] Gazette of the 24th states, on the authority of a Gentleman from the Indian territory, that war had commenced between the Choctaw and Kickapoo Indians. It is stated that the Kickapoos have for a number of years, been encroaching on the Choctaw lands, and had been frequently requested to desist, to which they paid no attention. A few weeks since, the Choctaw council deemed it expedient to pass a law commanding them to leave their territory, which the Kickapoos refused to do, but assembled their tribe, numbering twelve hundred warriors, determined to resist the execution of the Choctaw law. They have, in addition to this, sent the war hatchet to the numerous wild and savage tribes who inhabit the extensive tract of country lying between the Choctaw line and the Rocky Mountains.

It is also said, that all the traders who had been residing among the Indians, were busily engaged in removing their goods to the vicinity of Fort Towson for protection.

Jail Breaking at Elyria.—The case of certain negroes who were arrested at Oberlin and taken to the jail at Elyria as fugitive slaves, has excited a good deal of notice. The jail was broken open during the night, and the negroes, with the other prisoners, made their escape. An article was published in the Cleaveland Advertiser, and extensively copied, charging the students and other people of Oberlin with having broken the jail in a mob. The Oberlinites have published a statement, in which they deny that they did any thing of the sort. We annex an extract from a letter from Oberlin, received by a person in this office. The writer says:

"There was not a person from Oberlin in Elyria that night. No person here even dreamed of breaking the jail, nor of rescuing the slaves in any illegal way. The jail was broken by the prisoners within, (white and colored,) and without the least assistance from without, so far as I know; certainly they had no assistance from here. The Executive Committee of the A. S. Society were together making arrangements to take out the slaves on a writ of habeas corpus, at the very hour they helped themselves out. We regret that they did break out, as they could have been taken out on such a writ. And this is all we ever thought of doing. Is it likely that if we had broken the laws, either by mobbing the kidnappers, or by breaking down the jail, we should not be arrested? We have prosecuted the kidnappers, the magistrate and constable, for their illegal proceedings; and there is no small stir about it.

"If we had broken the law in a single particular, would they not prosecute us? But no; we have not. The white prisoners (since arrested,) tell how the jail was broken; and insist that no help was obtained from without; that they all went off on foot when they escaped, and that there was not a person nor a carriage there. The law has not been broken in a single instance by any of our citizens in this whole affair."—N. Y. Jour. of Com.

DIED,

At Otisco, April 16, of consumption, ELIZA, wife of Philetus Clark, and daughter of Thomas Parent, aged 32.

In Preston on the 25th inst., Mr. ETHAN ROGERS Esq., in the 73d year of his age, after a distressing illness of about two weeks, which he bore with christian patience and resignation.

He has left a widow, and 8 children, and 17 Grandchildren, with a large circle of relations and friends to mourn his loss He removed from Conn. to Preston, about 35 years ago, where he lived beloved and respected, and died lamented by all that knew him. He made a profession of religion in early life, united with the people of God, maintained his profession by a well ordered life, and Godly conversation, died in the hope of a blessed immortallity beyond the grave. He was a worthy member of the Seventh Day Baptist Church in Preston, and his loss is deeply felt by all its members.

In Scott, on the 28th ult., ABAGAIL SMALL, aged 73 years. She bore her last illness with christian fortitude, and died in full hope of a glorious immortallity beyond the grave. She often expressed a wish to be gone, but was willing to wait the Lord's time. As her dissolution approached she felt more and more closely connected with the Savior. She spent much of the night previous to her death in prayer; and often exclaimed, "Come Lord Jesus come quickly," Both her life and her death presented the most striking evidence of the meliorating tendency of the christian religion.

LIST OF LETTERS.

A. Maxson, (you did not write what Stillman you wished the paper directed to Please write again.) C. C. Gray, P. M. (the money is not saleable.) H. Greeley, (you have our thanks.) S. E. Day, P. M., A. Maxson, (we have changed the direction according to the request of E. S. B.) Hiram Babcock, R. T. Greene, (we will do it,) A. D. Titsworth, (it is done) Thos. E. Babcock, (your 'commisson' from New-York has been sent to Alfred.) R. R. Lewis, (the work is done.)

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Samuel Justice, $2,25 vol. 1 and 2. Lucius Crandall $10, cr. John D. Titsworth, Abraham D. Titsworth, Phineas F. Randolph, Alexander Dunham, Randolph Dunham, each $2, vol. 2. Henry Olin, $1,06, vol. 2.

Notices.

NOTICE.

An adjourned meeting of the citizens of De Ruyter, friendly to the organization of a BAND OF MUSIC, will be held at the house of Wm. C. Gage, on THURSDAY, the 6th of May, at 7 o'clock, P. M. A general attendance is requested.

By order of the meeting.

J. R. RIDER, Ch'n.

E. P. BLY, Sec'y.

De Ruyter, April 27, 1841.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Eastern Association are to meet on the fifth day before the fourth Sabbath in May next, at the S. D. B. Meeting-house in Salem, N. Jersey, at 10 o'clock, A. M., and an invitation is hereby given to the ministering brethren, and other brethren also, that can conveniently attend. I think it would add much to the meeting to have a number of our western and northern brethren to attend with us.

A. D. TITSWORTH, Cor. Sec.

Metuchen, April 18, 1841.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

200
PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATIONS
OF THE
HOLY BIBLE,
CONSISTING OF VIEWS IN THE HOLY LAND.

BY ROBERT SEARS.

THE FIFTH EDITION of the first volume of the above work is issued from the press of ROBERT SEARS, 122 Nassau Street, New York.

It is a book of 400 large octavo pages, and is done up in the neatest typographical manner, bound in muslin, and lettered in a superior style; containing over 200 engravings of an interesting and beneficial character.

Those wishing to suscribe for the above valuable work can be accommodated by applying to the subscriber, who has the agency for this town and vicinity. A specimen of the Book can be seen at this Office The price is extremely low. for a book of the size, so well stored with interesting and useful matter, and reflects much credit, in every respect, upon its enterprising publisher. Subscriptions are respectfully solcited, and the work will be ordered immediately for as many hundred as may wish to avail themselves of this opportunity of making so rich an addition to their Family Libraries, at so small an expense. Price only TWO DOLLARS.

A. H. BURDICK, Agent.
Register Office, De Ruyter, April 30, 1841.

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 29 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street joining the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village. JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

Head Quarters for BOOTS & SHOES.
Wholesale and retail. As cheap as the cheapest and good as the best.

THE Public are invited to call and examine for themselves. He keeps on hand Fine and Coarse Boots and Shoes, of every description, Ladies French Buskins and single sole Slips, White and Black satin slips, made to order. The Ladies are invited to call and examine the latest New York fashions. ☞Utica St. Sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.
De Ruyter, April 26, 1841. 61tf.

SIX CENTS REWARD!

RANAWAY from the subscriber, on the 16th inst., JOSEPH PRATT, an indented apprentice to the Farming Business. All persons are hereby notified that I shall pay no debts of his contracting, after this date. Said Boy was 16 years of age in March last. Whoever will return said boy shall receive the above reward. 61w3.
MARTILLUS C. WOLCOTT,
Otselic, April 21, 1841.

NOTICE.

WHEREAS EPHRAIM C. DAVIS, a lad 17 years 7 months old, bound to Rogers Davis as Apprentice, has left his home without my consent on the 27th day of March, inst., this is to forbid any person trusting or harboring said Ephraim on our accounts after this date, as we will not pay any of his contracts. 59w3
Brookfield, 30th March, 1841.
ROGERS DAVIS
ALBERT CLARK.

POETRY.

From the Fayetteville Luminary.

The Drunkard's Grave. A Parody.

Not a knell was heard, nor a funeral dirge
As his corse to the graveyard we carried;
Not a vender breathed forth a sorrowing note
O'er the grave where our hero was buried.

A rough hewn coffin enclosed his clay,
Nor in sheet nor in shroud they had wound him,
He was wrappeded in the rags which he wore on the day,
When cold in the snow-drift we found him.

Few and sad were the neighbors who came,
To consign to the cold grave their fellow.
And fast fell our tears as we wept o'er the slain,
And we bitterly thought on the morrow.

We thought, as we hallowed his narrow bed,
And laid him to rest in earth's bosom,
Where now shall the widow and child lay their head,
Since their cottage the sheriff has taken!

We thought how the vender his victim would meet,
In the day when the dead shall awaken;
And we thought how e'en Satan the vender would greet,
And acknowledge how well he had served him.

Slowly and sadly we turned away
From the spot where at rest we had laid him,
And there let him sleep, in peace, till the day
When the Arch-angel's trump shall arouse him.

L. S.

April 9th, 1841.

Miscellaneous Department.

TELESCOPIC APPEARANCE OF THE MOON.

The neighboring moon her monthly round
Still ending, still renewing through mid heaven,
With borrowed light her countenance triform,
Hence fills and empties to enlighten the earth,
And in her pale dominion checks the night.

MILTON.

To an inhabitant of the earth the moon at all times presents an object of the highest interest and attraction, and in all ages of the world "this refulgent lamp of night" has been the subject of the deepest respect. Among the Orientals and the Hebrews in particular, her worship was extensive and famous, and she was more regarded than even the sun. The new moons of the first days of every month were observed as festivals, and were celebrated with sound of trumpets, entertainments, and sacrifice. The full moon, we are informed, was considered favorable to any undertaking by the Greeks, and no motives could induce them to enter upon an expedition, march an army, or attack an enemy till the full of the moon. Plutarch relates that the Athenians entertained terrific ideas of eclipses of the moon, for Nicias and his army, when capable of retreating unobserved from the enemy, refused to embark from Syracuse because the moon became suddenly eclipsed in the dead of night. This ignorant and superstitious conduct proved fatal to that heroic commander and his brave companions, who were all shortly afterwards either slain or taken prisoners.

Although one of the smallest of the heavenly bodies, from her proximity to the earth she is apparently the largest and most brilliant. Her beautiful appearance in the skies, with her regular variations, attracts the notice of the most inattentive and unobservant spectator. She is the inseparable companion of the earth, her satellite, and while she revolves round her primary, revoles also with her round her common centre, the sun.

The diameter of the moon is two thousand one hundred and seventy miles—her distance from the earth is two hundred and forty thousand miles, round which she revolves in about twenty-nine days and a half; hence it would appear that the inhabitants of the moon can only have twelve days in one of our year, but each day is equal to twenty-nine and a half of our days. She rises every night at fifty-two minutes later than on the preceding night, having travelled thirteen degrees towards the east, and travels round the ecliptic in eighteen years and two hundred and twenty-five days.

The moon is an opaque body, shining only with reflected light—such is evident from the different appearances she assumes. If she shone by her own native light, she would always appear full, but as she shines only by reflecting the light of the sun, her luminous parts presents different shapes according to her situation as it respects the earth; sometimes we see her with a full face, bright in every part—sometimes with her western side only bright and again we observe her perhaps during the day like a fleecy cloud, with her western part ragged and torn; and after a little time we have lost her altogether, till at the return of a certain period she makes her appearance. These changes constitute some of the most striking phenomena in the heavens, and the cause that produces them is the rotatory motion of the moon about our earth.

Her orbit like that of the planets is an ellipse, but considerably more eccentric, and its plane does coincide with that of the ecliptic, but is inclined to it at an angle of five degrees; the two points where the moon's orbit intersects the ecliptic are called the moon's modes; that in which the moon passes from the southern side of the ecliptic to the northern, is called the ascending mode, and the other the descending. The moon always turns the same side towards the earth and the earth is as it were a satellite to the moon, and must present a most splendid appearance from the moon, being thirteen times as large as the moon is to us. On that side of the moon, however, which is turned from the earth, that planet cannot be seen, and if a lunarian whose customary place of residence is on the farthest side of the moon, has his curiosity excited by the marvellous tales of the travelers from this side of the lunar surface respecting a large body shining almost continually in the skies; before he can be convinced of the truth by ocular demonstration, he will have to make a journey of about fifteen hundred miles—not always fixedly keeping the same side towards him, or rising and setting as the moon does to us, but presenting all its sides in the course of twenty-four hours of our time. The earth occasionally will present a luminous ring, one occasioned by our eighteen degrees of twilight, and at times a beautiful crescent.

The surface of the moon as a telescopic object, presents a most interesting appearance, indicating that its surface is composed of hills, valleys, and caverns, and perhaps of seas, lakes and rivers, and all the varieties of distribution that are known to be on the surface of the earth, although the actual existence has not yet been ascertained. That there are mountains and hills in the moon, may be inferred with considerable certainty from those parts which are supposed to be elevations casting a shadow opposite to the sun, as well as from the jagged appearance of the edge of the moon when she is horned or gibbous; the valleys and cavernous parts are distinguished by the shadows appearing next to the sun. Some of the mountains form elevated continuous ridges, others are insulaetd & conical, having the precise form of the terrestial volcano. The assertion is startling, but there are lunar volcanos in different stages; Dr. W. Herschell saw them in a state of ignition at the same time—they resembled a small piece of burning charcoal covered by a thin coat of white ashes, and he further noted a large portion of burning matter which he supposes was more than three miles in diameter. The height of the lunar mountains was formerly supposed to exceed very considerably that of the mountains of the earth, but the laborious exertions of Herschell and others have determined the fact, that none of them exceed five miles in height.

The inhabitants of the moon, if the moon be inhabited by beings whose organization resembles our own, must be capable of living with a very small quantity of atmospheric air and little water. It has been a subject of discussion whether or not she is furnished with an atmosphere. Reason and analogy decided in the affirmative, but it is less than a mile high, and is never clouded, so that the sun must shine for a whole fortnight without intermission on the same spot, without having his heat materially moderated either by the interposition of the atmosphere, or by the evaporation of the moisture. That there is very little water in the moon beyond perhaps springs and small rivers, has been inferred from two remarkable circumstances—the absence of clouds, and the irregular appearance of the margin of the moon as seen in a solar eclipse, no part of it being terminated by a line sufficiently regular to allow us to suppose it the surface of a fluid. The light emitted by the moon produces no heat; if her rays are concentrated by a powerful mirror and thrown on the bulb of a thermometer, no effect is perceptible; the light of the full moon is three hundred times less than that of the sun. When the moon is full in the highest or lowest part of her orbit, she does not appear perfectly round; in the former case a trifling deficiency is apparent in the lower edge, and the contrary in the latter, in consequence of our not having a full view of the enlightened side. The moon is of course a spherical body; for a luminous globe though but at a small distance from the eye, will appear like a plain or circular flat surface,—this will be evident to any one who makes the experiment with a cannon ball heated red hot.

Connected with the moon are many important subjects, such as eclipses, tides, etc. An eclipse is the interception of the light of one of the luminaries by the interposition of an opaque, and in respect to their objects are characterised as a solar or lunar eclipse. An eclipse of the moon is occasioned by the intervention of the body of the earth directly between herself and the sun, thus intercepting the sun's rays; or it may be otherwise described as resulting from the passage of the moon through the shadow of the earth, and at the same moment that we observe an eclipse of the moon, the lunarians must witness a solar eclipse. When the moon's entire light is intercepted, it is called total; when only part, it is termed a partial. Eclipses of the moon happen only when that planet is at the full; because then only does the earth intervene between the sun and it; neither do they occur every full moon, nor in those full moons which happen in the modes or very near them. If the moon's orbit was in the plane of the ecliptic, that is, if she moved in the same plane as the earth and sun, there would be an eclipse of the sun, there would be an eclipse of the sun every new moon or change, and an eclipse of the moon every time she was at the full; but these frequent and regular privations of light in the sun and moon prevented by the moon's course being in an oblique direction to the ecliptic, which she only twice intersects in every period. The number of eclipses of the moon is two. The largest duration of a total eclipse is five hours and a half. A remarkable one occurred in 1847, when the figure of the moon could not be seen even with a telescope, although the sky was clear and stars of the sixth magnitude were visible; and in 1454 the moon was eclipsed by a comet. This phenomenon is one of great importance to us, and also to the inhabitants of the moon—if that planet be inhabited by being of similar capabilities and wants as ourselves. By a lunar eclipse the sphericity of the earth is determined, the deduction that the sun is larger than the earth, and that the earth is larger than the moon; for if the sun were not larger than the earth, the shadow could not converge or end in a point; and if the earth were not larger that the moon, the latter could never be totally eclipsed, but the earth's shadow envelopes it at the distance of the lunar orbit—the longitude of places is also ascertained by the same phenomenon.

Those regular ebbs and flows of the sea which are termed tides, are also produced by the influence of the moon in conjunction with the sun. It is reported of the philosopher Aristotle, that he threw himself into the Euripus because he could not ascertain the cause of the flux and reflux of the sea; this may possibly be an idle tale, but we are nevertheless certain that the ebbing and flowing of the sea was one among many of the subjects the ancients were not able fully to comprehend. The appeal which Canute made to the certain irresistible flow of the sea, when he meant to rebuke his flattering courtiers, is a proof that at a very early period of English history the tides had drawn attention, and as no one can notice them for any length of time without perceiving that on the same days of the moon's age they happen at the same place at very nearly the same hours of the day—a connexion between them and the moon could not fail to be traced. It is easy to suppose that although the attractive influences cannot alter the shape of the solid part of the globe, yet it may nevertheless produce certain effects upon the fluid portions.—Thus then it is the ocean is drawn towards the moon, and it is therefore high water at the place perpendicularly under the moon or where the moon crosses the meridian. If we fix a string to the side of a flexible hoop and swing it round in a circle, we may readily conceive how the part next the hand would draw out or swell by the drawing of the spring, and also how the opposite part would fly or swell by the centrifugal force, it being least drawn in, and how the intervening parts of the hoop would become depressed and flattered. It is thus with the ocean: that part which is immediately under the moon is raised by its attraction up into a swell, and that part which lies on the opposite side of the earth is thrown up into a similar swell by the motion of the earth in its orbit, by the centrifugal force.

The sun has also some action on the waters, but only in the proportion of three to ten, in consequence of his great distance from earth compared to that of the moon; sometimes it happens at the full and change of the moon that the sun's attractive force is united with that of the moon and increase it. This union is productive of what are called spring tides; at other times during the half moons, the attractive power of the sun and moon counteract each other, and produce what are termed neap tides—the word neap is derived from the saxon; it signifies low, decrescent, and is used only in reference to the tides.

From the earliest ages an opinion has been entertained that the moon has an influence on the weather and the human constitution; the celebrated Dr. Mead was a believer in this doctrine; it is certainly a fact that insane persons experience an increase of their disorder at the full and change of the moon, and hence their disorder is called lunacy, from the Latin word luna, the moon. Whatever credence may be attributed to this idea, the wisdom and beneficence of the deity to man are very conspicuous in the appointment of this attendant on the earth, the use of which is particularly experienced in the winter, she being much longer above the horizon when most enlightened in that season than in the summer; for at the time of her being full she always moves in a part of the zodiac opposite to the sun, and consequently describes nearly the same circle of diurnal motion when at the full in December, as the sun does in June. The advantages of the harvest moon to the industrious husbandman are very remarkable; for at the autumnal part of the year she rises sooner after sun-setting than she does in any other full moon week in the year.—Thus she affords an immediate supply of light after sun-set, which is very beneficial for those employed in the harvest and gathering in the fruits of the earth.

How cheerless and uncomfortable would be our nights were we destitute of the light which this sister orb, our faithful and inseparable companion, dispenses! How important are even her eclipses in our astronomical, geographical and chronological calculations. How salutary her mechanical influence, which balances the ocean and actuates the world of waters. We see in her—as in all the bright emanations from the divine hand of the Almighty—a manifestation of his wisdom, and a continual exemplification of his Love.

R. S.

YOUNG MEN.

REGULAR EMPLOYMENT—OCCUPATION.

Regular employment is the price of happiness; and the first step in general, after taking leave of our alma nater, is the adoption of a profession. No matter how bountifully Fortune may have showed her gifts, some settled occupation is essential to real enjoyment. Who has ever known a perfectly indolent that was not a miserable man? There is in this country no class of men of fortune, whose only care in life is to kill time and squander money; and who associating together, may keep each other in countenance, though they cannot purchase contentment.

The misery of such a condition was illustrated in the fate of the Frenchman, who with rank and high connexions, ample fortune, youth, health, repute, and "troops of friends," found life without employment so "weary, flat, stale and unprofitable,"—one dull daily routine of rising, dressing, eating, drinking, sleeping—that he preferred death by his own hand, to its longer endurance. Something of the feeling which precipitated the fate of this wretched suicide, must have been experienced by every man who has had the misfortune to live in this world without any thing in the world to do.

Some difference will always exist in the degree of consideration which various occupation enjoy, owing to the unequal degrees of skill and intelligence required by them; but true ambition would rather impart honor to one's profession, than seek to derive respectibility from it. Our country is fortunately exempt from those casts which separate society elsewhere into distinct compartments, to each of which a peculiar occupation or pursuit is by law or custom assigned. Here all professons, trades, and callings are open. The only limitation is imposed by mental or physical inability—and one striking and important benefit of the liberal education you have received is, that it has made you freemen in the most extensive sense; for qualified by it as you are to enter upon any profession, "this world is all before you where to choose."

A man of cultivated mind and real virtue can never have his lustre soiled by any honest vocation, well perused. It is indeed far from being a disadvantage to possess abilities superior to the requisition of one calling. By the proper exertion of these, he is sure of rising to distinction in his pursuits, and of reaping all the benefits he may confer.

Temperance Department.

THE SEVEN WONDERS OF DRUNKENNESS.—1. That any rational being should turn his back on home—"sweet home"—and make the tavern his abiding place, where he is first tempted to spend his hard won money, and then, when it is all gone, be turned out of doors,—Is not this a wonder?

2. That he should voluntarily take the money which should maintain his wife and children, and give it to support and adorn the wife and children of the tavern-keeper, who, in return, gives him ruined health, blighted character, and empty pockets,—Is not this a wonder?

3. That any rational being could listen to the insinuations of those interested in his degradation and ruin, and take for his enemies the persons who would persuade him to look well to his own home, his own wife, his own children, his own health, his own character, and his own pocket,—Is not this a wonder?

4. That brute beasts should drink only pure water, and that only when they are dry, and that man, rational man, should only drink when he is not dry, but should prefer for his beverage liquid fire,—Is not this a wonder?

5. That when men are walking in a way which brings wretchedness on themselves, and trouble and distress on all about them, and they are advised to forsake the path, there should be so much difficulty as is found in getting them to try,—Is not this a wonder?

6. That a human being, wholly dependant on the God that made him, should wantonly, ungratefully, and audaciously fly in the face of his Creator and Redeemer, as the drunkard especially does, and yet be spared, not only days, but sometimes years, before the sentence goes forth, "Cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground,"—Is not this a wonder?

7. That while drunkenness is emptying our churches and schools, crowding our jails and bridewells, and while Total Abstinence Societies are, by the blessing of God, reclaiming many drunkards from their ruinous habits, the vast majority of Christian ministers and other professors of religion should continue to drink those liquors which make men drunkards, and to treat the total abstinence cause with indifference, contempt, or opposition,—Is not this a wonder?—Bockville Recorder.

Diary of a Rum Seller.

MARCH 18, 1840.—This day Norris' wife called to inform me that her husband is not expected to survive until to-morrow. Asked for some food for her family—could not be prevailed upon—must provide for my own household, or I am worse than an infidel—pursued her, however, to buy a quart of brandy for the sick man, which she obtained by plundering her shawl.

March 20, 1840—Norris dead—I thought the last dose would finish him.

April 13, 1840—Old Tompkins died last night—the toughest morsel I have had on my hands for this many a year. I recollect well that when he first came to my groggery, he was in a thriving business and well to do in the world—a smart active wife, and four really interesting children; he has been declining ever since I became acquainted with him; his wife, they say, died of despair and brutality—the children are scattered among strangers—Tompkins himself, has long had no regular home—the poor house has been his usual winter quarters. The old man's drinking was always whiskey, and it is truly surprising the prodigious quantity he could stagger under. Many gallons, poor fellow, has he quaffed here—and I must say he always managed to pay for it. He often swore he would pawn his last shirt, and he sometimes had one sooner than I should be cheated of my due. He was somewhat given to profanity, but I trust that the sin is pardoned.

June 20, 1840.—Jones is really an object, and if he lasts over a week I shall miss my guess—two attacks of delirium tremens and one of apoplexy, are enough to turn any man with his face upwards. Jones, was powerful on beer, and swallowed more dead cats and dogs than any man I know of. And here, though I may differ from any of my craft, and it may all be attributed to prejudice, I cannot refain from speaking highly of strong beer, especially when mixed with hyosciamus, opium, belladona, cocculus indicus, lauro cerassus, tobacco, and other ingredients as may strike one's fancy. "Let a man drink plenty of this, and he will soon become loaded with fat, and snort like a porpoise.—He will go to the grave as a comely gentleman should with all his flesh about him, and not slink there like a lean and slippered pantaloon, who would balk the very worms of a breakfast." The daughter of Jones called at the shop this morning to remonstrate with me on the condition to which, she had the impudence to say, I had reduced her father. Among other harsh impressions, she bolted out—and right before customers—that "although in worn raiment, she had a living heart under it, and could not help feeling for her parent and cursing his destroyer." Fudge has the Ghost says in Hamlet. Can a man as big as a mountain be called reduced? Is the woman deranged? Does she expect that I am going to give up my trade to humor her fancies? and cut off the spigot because Dick Jones was tripped by malt?

June 25, 1840.—Saw Dick Jones shoved into the family oven, and was struck with the resemblance which the coffin had to the beer butt in my cellar.

Sept. 10, 1840.—Young Waldeck is gone.—Only eighteen, and gone. Gone to that place where the temperance people cease to trouble, and where a pains-taking grocer may be at rest. Dear lad, how he loved me! Only a few moments before he died, he called on me and took a glass of gin. I was there in a second, and a stiff horn of Holland besides. He took it and never spoke more. His end was remarkably peaceful.

DISTILLERIES.—Mr. Laing in his "Tour in Sweden," lately published in England informs us that there are in that kingdom 120,000 distilleries, many of them on a small scale and in private families. The consumption of spirits in 1786 amounted in Sweden, and Finland annually to 5,100,000 kanns. At the present time in Sweden alone, the annual consumption is 22,000,000 kanns. The temperance reform was never more needed in any country.

DEFERRED SUMMARY.

Taxation of Clergymen.—The Committee on the Judiciary in the N. Y. Legislature, to whom we referred the petitions for a repeal of the law exempting ministers of the Gospel from taxation, have reported against such a repeal. Before giving the reasons for their conclusion, they state the extent of the case, as follows. The laws of this State regulating the assessment and collection of taxes provide that "the personal property of every minister of the gospel or priest of any denomination, and the real estate of such minister or priest, when occupied by him, provided such real and personal estate do not exceed the value of one thousand five hundred dollars," shall be exempt from taxation. The Constitution of the State adopted in 1777, and amended in 1821, provides that no "minister of the gospel, or priest of any denomination whatever, shall at any time hereafter, under any pretence or description whatsoever, be eligible to, or capable of holding any civil or military office or place within this State." The petitioner ask only for a repeal of the laws exempting clergymen from taxation, and not for an alteration of the Constitution in favor of placing them on an equal footing with other citizens, and therefore the question before the Committee was, whether, without admitting ministers to equal privileges and immunities, it is just or expedient, or required by the genuine principles of a republican government, to subject them to equal burdens and contributions. The Committee were clearly of opinion that, in the first place, it would be glaringly unjust and unequal towards ministers. For, say the Committee, the taxes imposed by the supreme power are of two sorts, the direct and the indirect. The direct include all kinds of State, county and town taxes and are collected by way of duties on imports, or arising from funds in which the people of this State are interested, of which clergymen have to pay their share equally and in common with all others, and from which there neither is nor can be any exemption at all. It is upon the direct taxes imposed by State authority that the exemption of fifteen hundred dollars worth is allowed to ministers. As the constitutional disqualification is only partial, allowing them the privilege of voting, but depriving them of the right of being elected to office, and thus taking away only a part of their rights, there is a propriety in giving only a partial compensation,—in only partially relieving them from taxation. Taxation and representation naturally belong together. The most natural remedy for the total loss of representation, is the total exemption from taxation. So said the fathers of the Revolution, with Lord Chatham and Mr. Burke.—J. of Com.

Baggage at the risk of the owners.—This bug-bear notice stares travellers in the face, from all advertisements and hand bills of the public conveyances. And at this season of the year, when merchants are travelling to and from New-York with baggage of considerable value, it may not be unreasonable to say, that by law and legal decisions, baggage, in public conveyances, is at the risk of the carriers. This is right. They have their pay for the transportation of the passenger and his baggage, and the traveller commits his trunk to their care. In railroad travelling, the trunk is not left in the care of its owner, but is put away under the care of a porter belonging to the company, and admittance to the baggage car is prohibited. Of course, a person would rather take all reasonable care of his trunk, than be put to the trouble of prosecuting for its recovery. But, if the trunk is lost by the carelessness of the public carriers, the owner may and should prosecute for the recovery of its value. The recent robberies on the Auburn and Syracuse railroad, show the propriety of holding the company responsible. Railroad companies should employ trustworthy men, and only such about their business.—Geneva Courier.

Old Subscribers.—The Hartford Courant states that a gentleman called at that office a few days ago, and paid his subscription to the paper, and he remarked that he had taken it 49 years, that his father took it 27 years before him, making the whole time of its existence, 76 years. The Courant adds that it is a very common occurrence to hear persons speak of having taken the paper 30 or 40 years.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store.) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

De Ruyter, April 22, 1841.

SHERIFFS SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Supreme Court of Judicature, of the State of New York, and to me delivered, I have levied upon the right, title and interest of Stephen G. Sears in and to a certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being, in the Village of De Ruyter, county of Madison, and bounded as follows: on the north by the turnpike road, on the east by lands owned by Noah B. Foote, on the south by lands owned, or in possession of, John Starr, on the west by lands owned by Marvin M. Hamilton, which I shall expose to sale at public Vendue, as the Law directs, at the house of Wm C. Gage, on Saturday, the 22d day of May next, at 1 o'clock, P. M.

Dated, De Ruyter, April 10, 1841. 59w6

ISAAC BROWN, SHERIFF.

BY T. ORVILLE ELMORE, Deputy.

WANTED.

IMMEDIATELY wanted a good workman in the business of Wagon making. Also, a Smith acquainted with the business, to whom good encouragement will be given. 56tf

JOHN MAXSON.

April 12th, 1841.

HOUSE TO LET.

A PLEASANT and convenient tenement is still to Let, in the House occupied last year by Mr. Clark on the estate of the late L. B. Goodwin.

JOHN MAXSON.

April 12th, 1841. 59

Medicines! Medicines!!

TO FAMILIES.

S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public; for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co's

MOTHER'S RELIEF.

JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT.

DR. McMUN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—

MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—

DOCT. BISHOP'S ANTI BILLIOUS PILLS A HIGHLY VALUABLE FAMILY MEDICINE.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

GEO. W. SUTTON.

De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

BOOKS! BOOKS!! BOOKS!!

EDWIN P. BLY,

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of De Ruyter and the public generally, that he has [illegible] Books of most kinds and descriptions usually called for in any Book Store. The following are a few, viz.—Davy's Geometry, do. Surveying, do. Algebra, do. Arithmetic, do. First Lessons in Arithmetic. Also, almost all kinds of Latin, Greek and Italian, Olney's Geography & Atlas, Burnet's Geography of the Heavens.

Common Schools can be supplied with Books for a Library.

BOOK BINDING

Done in a neat and durable manner, and as cheap as can be done in any other place, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany St., De Ruyter.

De Ruyter, November 1st, 1840. 35f

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. A certain cure in all cases [illegible]. Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail. He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.

ELISHA STILLMAN.

De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

WANTED—Any quantity of RAGS wanted in exchange for BOOKS, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany-st.

De Ruyter, Dec. 16, 1840.

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,

BY

JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers, who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 10.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 62.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, MAY 7, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Religious Discussion.

For the Register.

Reasons for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity.

NO. III.

Mr. Editor—A third reason for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity is, That Jesus Christ is represented to be a being inferior to the Father; and if he be truly inferior, it will be seen that there can not be a Trinity of co-equal persons in the Godhead. His inferiority to the Father has been already shown, to some extent, in a previous number; but there is further evidence of it to be produced. His own testimony is directly to the point. "If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said I go to the Father; for my Father is greater than I." John xiv. 28.

Again, speaking of the sheep which he had received as a gift from the Father, he says, "my Father which gave them me is greater than all, and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." Ch x. 29. He had previously said that none should pluck them out of his own hand. And still further to evince their security, he says the Father is greater than all, (consequently, greater than himself,) and none is able to pluck them out of his hand. Here, then, we have the plain testimony of Christ, on two occasions, that the Father was greater than himself. If it be said that he spake this as man, and not as to his entire person; I reply, that there is no such qualification or modification of the testimony expressed or intimated in these passages, or any where else in the scriptures. Besides, it is clear from the very face of the text that he spake thus of his entire person; for this must be included in the personal pronoun, I—"my Father is greater than I"—"greater than all." Whatever may be supposed to belong to the person of Christ is embraced in this pronoun; unless there be some exception or limitation, which there is not. It is not seen how he could make a more explicit avowal of his inferiority to the Father.

If it be further plead, that Christ spake this with reference to his office as Mediator, in which he freely engaged, in the economical arrangements of the Trinity, to act an inferior part; I would reply, that the scriptures no where treat of any such arrangements between three co-equal persons. I cannot regard this notion in any other light than that of a human contrivance. The Bible account of redemption is that it originated with one individual, God the Father; and the same was effected through a Mediator which he provided, gave and sustained for that purpose. The objections which have been brought against the other view of this testimony of Christ will lie also against this. Neither is this testimony impaired at all by the words subjoined. "I and my Father are one." The meaning of this declaration is, not that they are one God—one being—or one essence; but one in interest, affection and design; just as he, the Father and believers are one. John xvii. 21—23. Moreover he says, "the Son can do nothing of himself." John v. 19. Again, "I can of mine own self do nothing," verse 30. "The Father which dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." Ch. xiv. 10. If he were the Supreme God, could it be said that he could do nothing of himself? Cannot the Father do things of himself? Who will dare say he cannot?—"With God all things are possible." Is it ever intimated that the Father can not do any thing without the Son? Certainly not. Could the son then say, if he were equal to the Father, that of his own self he could do nothing? Would he ascribe all his miraculous works to another and a superior agent? Surely not. Besides; what does a person's self—his own self, mean, or include? Does it include merely a part of his being? Let common sense decide. Nay; it includes his whole or entire being. Whatever Christ was, is embraced in the term, "myself"—"mine own self." And he declared repeatedly, that of himself he could do nothing, which clearly settles the point of his inferiority.

Again; this point is proved by his acknowledgment that he lives by the Father. "As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." John v. 26. Again, "as the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father; so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me." Ch. vi. 57. Surely that being who lives by another, cannot be self-existent and independent. These passages, therefore, contain an explicit acknowledgment of his inferiority to the Father, and that self-existence is an attribute of the Father only.

The same inferiority to the Father is implied in his praying to him, which was his habitual practice. Why did he pray to the Father, if he were the Supreme God himself? or were possessed of equal power and glory with the Father? Prayer is an acknowledgment of dependence. Will it be said he prayed only as man? It is evident from John, 17 chapter, that the same being prayed who was with the Father before the world was, and he prayed in his whole person, or highest nature or capacity. Besides, the notion that he prayed only as man, and that he was, at the same time, the very and eternal God, makes him pray to himself, which is absurd; or, at least, makes him pray to one-third part of God only, which is equally absurd. If he prayed to the entire God, and was himself a co-equal person with two others in the Godhead, the inference is unavoidable that he prayed to himself, which is a notion utterly inadmissible.

In accordance with the inferiority expressed by his praying to the Father, it may be further observed that he constantly referred his miraculous operations to the power of the Father, (or of the Spirit of God which is the same thing,) and never in a single instance to a Divine nature in himself. This appears from several passages already cited, and is prominently expressed in the following, viz,—"And Jesus lifted up his eyes and said, Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me, and I know that thou hearest me always; but for their sakes which stand by I said it, that they may believe that thou hast sent me. And when he had thus spoken, he said with a loud voice, Lazarus come forth. And he that was dead came forth." John xi. 41—44. This was one of his greatest miracles. And here is an explicit and public acknowledgment that he received the power to perform it from the Father in answer to prayer. And the clause, "and I know that thou hearest me always," implies that he always prayed for power to do his mighty works, and was accordingly helped to do them, which is an express reference of all his miraculous operations to the Father's power. He performed those works as the Father's agent: but in reality—in respect of real and absolute efficiency, it was "God who did them by him." Acts ii. 22. This view of the matter comports with Martha's opinion of him. "Then said Martha unto him, Lord if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died: but I know that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee," verses 21, 22. It is evident she had no idea of his being the Supreme God. She regarded him only as the Son of God, and as having a peculiar and all-prevalent interest at the Father's throne.

Moreover, his power is never spoken of as original, absolute and independent; but always as derived or given. "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Matt. xxviii. 18. Surely, power that is given, is not original and independent. There is but a single passage, which can, with any plausibility, be claimed as ascribing Almighty power to Christ, viz,—"I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty." Rev. i. 8. But here, on examination, it appears that the reference has been improperly made to Christ. It is most certain that it should be made to the Father only. For, in the first place, the style used, "thus saith the Lord," comports exactly with the style in which he was wont to speak by the prophets. And, secondly, the emphatic clause, "which is, and which was, and which is to come," whereby he is described, is the one used in the fourth verse of this chapter; and in the 8th verse of the fourth chapter, to distinguish God from Jesus Christ. Let the last text be read in connection with chap. v. 6, 7. In all other cases, the power of Christ is plainly acknowledged to be given or delegated to him, which shows his inferiority. Connect with this his giving up the kingdom at a future period, and becoming subject himself to the Father, and the point under consideration seems to be established beyond all room for contradiction. "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power—and when all things shall be subdued unto him then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all." 1 Cor. xv. 24—28.

Moreover, his denial that he knew the day of Judgment is directly in point. "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son; but the Father." Mark xiii. 32. "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels; but my Father only." Matt. xxiv. 36. "And he said unto them, it is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power." Acts i. 7.—Christ's being ignorant, therefore, of the time of this great event, shows that he is not omniscient, and consequently that he is inferior to God. If he had known, in any nature, the day of Judgment, he could not have said, without any qualification, that he did not know it. Moreover; his being a Mediator—a middle person between God and men, evinces his inferiority to him. 1 Tim. ii. 5. His being the way to God evinces the same. How can he be the way to God, and yet that very God whom he is the way to? It is evinced also by his "coming from God" and "going to God." John xiii. 3. And by his "appearing in the presence of God for us," and "sitting on his right hand." Heb. ix. 24, and Col. ii. 1. How is it possible for one to appear in his own presence, and to set on his own right hand? It is further evinced, by the gift of the Holy Spirit to him. Surely, if he were the Supreme God, the holy spirit could not be given to him, nor received by him. In that case, it would be his own spirit. Moreover; he is expressly declared to be "the beginning of the creation of God," Rev. iii. 14, and "the first born of every creature," Col. i. 15, which necessarily implies his inferiority to God. Its being said that "all things were created by him," affects not this argument in the least; for they were not of him, but only by him. "God created all things by Jesus Christ." Eph. iii. 9. "By whom also he (God,) made the worlds." Heb. i. 3. And although he is the First of the creation, it is manifest that he is not included in the all things which were created by him, just as "it is manifest, when it is said all things are put under him, that he is excepted that put all things under him." 1 Cor. xv. 27. So that he did not create himself, as is sometimes objected to this view of the subject. This inferiority is further evinced by his being called the Son of God. It is conceded by many learned Trinitarians that this title implies both inferiority and posteriority of being, and hence they base it on his humanity merely.

From these and many other considerations which might be named, it appears to me exceedingly evident that our Lord Jesus Christ is inferior to the Father, and hence that the doctrine of the Trinity cannot be true. He was but a super-angelical being, inconceivably the greatest of all derived, or created existence. And for the glory of God and the salvation of men, his exalted spirit, being divested of the glory which he had with the Father before the world was, came down from heaven to earth, and dwelt in a human body, miraculously conceived by the Virgin Mary, and was born of her, and hence became her Son; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death; and was then raised and exalted at God's own right hand; receiving the homage of men and angels. But all this homage is "to the glory of a superior, which is God the Father." Phil. ii. 11.

Yours very respectfully,
JABEZ CHADWICK.
Weedsport, April 18, 1841.

Religious Department.

EXPERIMENTAL RELIGION.

HOW TO HAVE A RICH EXPERIENCE.

1. Fix your eyes on the particular evils of your heart and life, and ply closely the reformation of them by the Spirit. Alas! what are we doing in the way of mortification of sin? Experimental religion is a dying to sin, by virtue of our union with Christ. What use have we for Christ, if not to save us from our sins? Matt. i. 21. But the use many make of Christ is to save them in their sins. They will drink, swear, lie, cheat, and do unjustly still, and they will call these infirmities, or very little things that need not disturb a man; and they will think themselves whole with their believing; and on a new temptation go just back again to them. Sirs, this is to make Christ the minister of sin, and to sin because grace abounds. The running the round between swearing and confessing, will make men fall down at length into the pit whence they will never rise again.—Prov. xxix. 1. If Christ cure thee not of thy disease, thou wilt never get life by him.

"Therefore, I say, ply reformation of heart and life closely. It will not be wishing that will do it; ye must put your hand to the work. It will cost mourning groans under the weight of sin, believing looks, and vigorous endeavors against it. Is there a thing that is on your weak side? pray remember thy soul is at stake; if it overcome thee, thy soul is gone: and if ever thou see heaven, thou must get above it. Matt. v. 29. Rev. iii. 21. O mind that passage, Mark x. 21. One thing thou lackest, &c. Look to thy spots in the glass of the law, and quickly set about purging of them. Thou hast, may be, a carnal worldly heart, fall on to get it spiritual and heavenly; an ill tongue, get it bridled; or an offensive carriage, get it mended.

2. Continue at the work, for the victory is got but by degrees. The interruptions that take place in our plying the work of religion, make it still the more difficult.—The miserable halts we make in the exercise of godliness, do but weaken us, and give the enemy more time to recruit. And they cannot digest the making religion their business, are not for heaven. Heaven is an eternal triumph; how can they be capable of it, then, that make it not their business to fight, or that are always overcome instead of being overcomers? It is a rest, therefore, it presupposeth a labor; not so much the toil of business in the world, for the most carnal have as much of that as professors, but a rest from labor against sin.

3. Take often notice what progress ye are making. Consider with yourselves, Have I got any more victory over my passions, my lusts, and my prevailing iniquity? Is there a cubit added to my spiritual stature? am I going backward or forward?—Sirs, people are at pains with a farm, they count their profit, to see whether they be winners or losers; if any thing has been mismanaged to their loss, they endeavor to mend it the next time; and if they find they are gainers, they are encouraged to redouble their pains. But alas! what pains men are at about religion, is bestowed on it as if they cared not whether it prospered or not; and therefore they have no experience.

4. Look after the profit of duties. We should never hear a sermon, but should inquire when we have come from it—Now what have I made of this? where did it touch me? what evil of my heart has it discovered? what influence has it had on me to fit me more for my journey and work? Sermons are not easy to some of you that are far off from the place of public worship: ye would think it a great deal to go one mile, or two, three, four, or five miles in vain in other cases. Look after your prayers, as the Psalmist did. Psalm v. 3. Ye would think it much if ye were to ask a request of your neighbor, and yet get no answer, or a refusal. O, why then do ye not consider how your prayers are accepted by the prayer-hearing God? I assure you, if you would fall upon this way, ye would soon find the good of it.

5. Converse with experimental Christians about experimental religion. There is a wonderful diffidence that professors have in one another at this day. Matt. xxiv. 12. I verily believe this would be a good way to cure it, if those that have any experience of religion would modestly bring it forth to the edification of others. There is nothing that more endears Christians one to another than this. It is an unchristian-like thing in professors to despise converse about practical godliness and Christian experience. And there is more of the wisdom of the serpent than the harmlessness of the dove, in people's locking up in their own breasts all their sense of practical godliness, when it might be brought forth to the glory of God, and the good of others. I believe this way has been the cause of so much jealousy, suspicion, and division among professors; and has run out all Christian conference into vain jangling about the controversies of the time.

6. Be very nice as to the point of sin and duty. Ps. xxxiii. 2. Sudden resolutions in matters which will allow deliberation, are often to be suspected. Sometimes the matter of sin and duty is of that nature, that there is no time to deliberate; all that can be done, is, to look to the Lord for immediate clearness, and the Christian shall have it. Prov. iv. 12. When thou runnest thou shalt not stumble. Compare Matt. x. 19. But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak. Sometimes the Christian may have time to deliberate, and then God's ordinary way is to clear men step by step. Prov. x. 12. When thou goest, thy steps shall not be straitened. Say not the way is plain at first glance in this case; for the Spirit of God bids thee ponder the path of thy feet. Prov. iv. 26. If a way be such as our own heart at the very first inclines to, I say it ought the rather to be narrowly examined, seeing in scripture language the way of our own heart is of no good name. And suppose the inclination of the man's heart does really fall upon the right side in this case, yet this is no Christian resolution, but a stumbling on the right way, which God will never accept. Therefore, men that would act as Christians in the point of sin and duty, should lay aside prejudices, trample their inclinations under foot, lay the matter before the lord, and themselves open to conviction there, as a piece of clean paper, on which God may write what he sees meet, pondering all things with a holy jealousy over their own hearts, lest they be biased by their own inclinations and preconceived opinions. I am sure much of God is to be found in this way.

7. Acknowledge God more in your temporal concerns. Prov. iii. 6. Are ye Christians? let us depend on God for all things in this life and the other. We are directed to pray about them, the promises are about them, and therefore we should wait on God for them. Many a sweet experience have the saints got in temporal things, when they have been helped to lay them before the Lord, and leave them there without anxiety, in the use of the means.

8. Lastly. Have a precise respect to all the commands of God, and be truly strict in your lives; that is, deal with men as believing God's eye is upon you, and with God as if the eyes of men were upon you. Never look on the authority of the multitude as sufficient to make that no fault, which will not abide strict examination by the word of God. Let the command of God prevail with you; and whatsoever liberty ye may take for aught that men can say or do to you, let that be a sufficient restraint. Thus may ye attain experimental religion.

BOSTON.

From the Baptist Record.

IS IT NOT TIME TO STOP?

This question might be asked with reference to many classes of our fallen race.—Is it not time to stop? Ye young and vain, it is now time for you to stop and consider! Your race is short—life is uncertain—the soul is precious, and you are yet in your sins! Like the ball rolling down a declivity, the longer you continue in your course the faster you move onward. Solemn thought! Easier to sin—to cast off restraint and the fear of God—to reject the overtures of mercy—to restrain prayer and live in rebellion!

If these things be so, where will you stop, and when will you be likely to stop, unless you heed the warning voice "now?" Stop, young sinner, stop and think. "Boast not thyself of to-morrow." To-morrow's sun to thee may never rise. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth. Behold now is the accepted time, and to-day the day of salvation."

Is it not time to stop? Ye men of business, who have long paid your Lord in promissory notes! Your youthful days have passed away, and your early vows have not been paid. Business now fills the mind—there is but little thought bestowed on eternal things! Are you a parent? What! a prayerless parent! Is it not time for you to stop and ask how shall I meet my dear family at the Judgment Seat of Christ? There you must meet them and how awful will be that meeting, if you continue in sin! Now you are anxious to lay up for them treasures on earth; then you will realize that anxiety should have been felt for your own soul and the souls committed to your charge. Here, money is the chief good; there religion shall be so acknowledged! Oh! the contrast when viewed in the light of eternity! Man! look into your Bible, and if you lack wisdom ask of God. "Incline your ear and come, hear and your soul shall live."

Is it not time to stop? Ye aged who are unpardoned, and whose gray hairs bespeak a speedy departure. Surely you will heed this last warning. Childhood, and youth, and riper years have all gone by [illegible] has permitted you to live, while many [illegible] many, have fallen around you. A [illegible] long life spent in sin! "Laden [illegible] What a solemn thought! "The [illegible] ing an hundred years old shall be [illegible] sed." Your account—what is it? The days, the months, the years you have lived—the health, the influence, the money bestowed—the Bible with its Savior, its warnings and invitations—the living teacher, his sermons, prayers, and tears—Oh! how can you, my aged friend, meet all these in the judgment! Where will you find shelter when the great day of his wrath shall come! Can you abide the day of his coming? You are yet the subject of Gospel address, and for you there may be pardon. Come to Jesus with your accumulated guilt, and he will have mercy and abundantly pardon.

Reader, it is not time to stop, if it so be that you are engaged in promoting the cause of our Immanuel. No. Go on—pray on—give on, work until life's last sand shall have been spent, and then "Crown him," your Savior, "Lord of all."

M. H.

From the Ohio Observer.

Universalism not to be found in a Bible that has not the leaves turned down.—There lived in England many years since, a man who professed to believe in the final salvation of all men. To sustain this doctrine, whenever he came to a passage which seemed favorable to his creed, he turned down a leaf. In this way he converted his Bible into a kind of Universalist Text Book, for the indoctrination of his family. He had a son who imbibed the sentiment of his sire. At the death of the father the son inherited the Bible referred to, and in accordance with paternal example, he used to read where the leaves were turned down, and comfort himself in the belief that the wages of sin is not death.

After a few years the young man removed to the west. He went to hear a Universalist Minister preach. The sermon being rather a lame performance, the man, so far from being confirmed by it, was rather shaken in his confidence. He thought, however, that he could make a stronger argument himself. He went home and sat down to the task. But the Bible with the leaves turned down, was away in England, and he had forgotten where to look for the detached portions upon which he had rested his faith, and thus, was forced to read his Bible, in its legitimate connexions and dependencies. So he read on chapter after chapter, looking all the while for his favorite doctrine. But he did not find it.—Nay, he was soon convinced that in order to salvation he must be born again. He sought and soon found peace in believing. For a few years he lived the life of a consistent Christian, and when called to die, he left the world in the full enjoyment of those consolations which it is the province of evangelical faith alone to give.

Remarks.—1. That it is every way suitable that men be devoted to the business of explaining and enforcing the several doctrines of religion; still that must be rather a blind system, the very existence of which is not supported from the Bible, without a guide to point it out.

2. Probationers for eternity should beware how they trust to a system of belief which receives but a doubtful support from DETACHED portions of Scripture, but it is obviously contradicted when the Bible is read in course.

3. If people generally would go to the Bible for their religious views, instead of adopting the views of their fellow-men, there would be fewer errorists, and more evangelical Christians than there are now.

D. C.

THE PATH TO THE BUSH.

Mr Read, the missionary of Kat River settlement, in South Africa, related, while in England, the following fact:

It is the practice of some of the Christianized Hottentots at one of the stations, in order to enjoy the privilege of private prayer, with greater privacy and freedom than they could do in their own confined dwellings, to retire among the trees and bushes in the vicinity; and, that they might carry on their devotions without being intruded on by others, each person selects for his own use, a particular bush, behind which he might pour out to God the pious breathings of his own soul. The rest considered this bush as an oratory, sacred to the brother or sister who had appropriated it, and which, therefore, was never to be violated by the foot or gaze of a stranger, during the season of occupancy by its proprietor. The constant tread of the worshipers in their diurnal visits to this hallowed spot, would, of necessity, wear a path in the thin grass which lay between their huts and the scene of their communion with God. On one occasion, a Christian Hottentot woman said to a female member of the church, "Sister, I am afraid you are somewhat declining in religion." The fear was expressed with a look of affection, and with a tone which savored nothing of railing accusation, nor of reproachful severity, but altogether of tender fidelity.—The individual thus addressed, was too conscious of its truth to deny the fact, and too much melted by the meekness of wisdom with which the solicitude was expressed, to be offended, and meekly asked what led her friend to the opinion she had expressed. "Because," said the other, "the grass has grown over your path to the bush." The backslider fell under the rebuke, confessed that secret prayer had been neglected, and that her heart had been turned away from the Lord. The admonition thus had its desired effect, and the faithful Hottentot had the satisfaction of restoring the wanderer, not only to the path to the bush, but to that God, with whom she there communed in secret.

Given for Thee.—What was given for me? When I can comprehend infinite holiness—when I can realize all the natural shrinkings of such purity from every shade of sin; when I can understand infinite happiness relinquished for me—when I can measure the distance between divinity and humanity, and thus estimate the humiliation of "God manifest in the flesh;" when I can feel the force of infinite wrath; then, but not till then, I shall know what was "given for me."

Eternity is too limited for that lesson.—As a God only could devise, a God only execute, so a God only can comprehend it!

And this was given for thee! Oh, dull soul, dost thou realize the gift? Dost thou appropriate it? Dost thou feel that it was given for thee! That the sacrifice was as entirely for thee as if every other created intelligence had remained in sinless obedience, and thine hadst been the only forfeited soul? The body was broken, the blood was poured out for thee.

When was it given for thee? Was it after thine earnest entreaties, made because thou hast contemplated the fearful abyss on which thou wert standing; when thou hadst "beheld, and lo, there was no man!" and in the perfect impotence of nothingness, thou hadst turned to the Almighty? No! an unasked boon, it was given when you were slumbering in the womb of futurity with the things that were yet to be! like the unformed wave, moving forward slowly with the mass of waters until in its turn it raises its crested head, beats against the shore, then with a reluctant murmur, mingles with its fellows.

Given for thee! Wondrous gift! Oh, receive it daily, and hourly renew thine acceptance of it! Thy sins are ever new; and though that sacrifice atones for all the past, it is still entire and perfect for the remotest sin that shall darken thy coming days! Oh, wondrous love! Surely, my soul, if thine eyes be permitted to behold that Lamb before the throne "as it had been slain," when others shout, "Blessing and honor, glory and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne and to the Lamb for ever!" thou wilt only whisper, "Given for me!"—Epis. Rec.

"Wo unto him that is at ease in Zion."—Proverbs.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, May 7, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent

Removal.

Rev. Azor Estee has removed to Shiloh, Cumberland Co., New Jersey. His Post Office address is Bridgeton. His correspondents will please direct accordingly.

Fast Day.

Notice is hereby given to the inhabitants of this community, that the day appointed for a National Fast will be observed at the house of the De Ruyter Religious Society with appropriate exercises. Services to commence at 11 o'clock, A. M.

Ordination.

Brother Charles M. Lewis was ordained, and publicly set apart to the work of the gospel ministry, at the first S. D. B. Church in Verona, on the 25th inst. Ordination Sermon and Consecrating Prayer by Eld. A. Campbell; the Charge and Right Hand of Fellowship by Eld. S. M. Burdick; Benediction by the Candidate. Comm.

An Incident.

Some years since in company with a friend, I called at the house of an old acquaintance who had been brought up to observe the Sabbath of the Bible, but on some account had left its observation. In the absence of our friend we were most cordially welcomed by his daughter, an interesting girl of 8 or 10 years of age, and by her aged grand-mother, who was near the end of her earthly pilgrimage, and as I have since learned, has gone to receive her reward in heaven. The aged matron seemed to enjoy peculiar pleasure when she recognized us as members of the same communion with herself, and observers of that day which she had long honored as the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. At the same time we observed a frown upon the countenance of the damsel, who, before, had evinced so much pleasure in our presence.

We were not long permitted to offer consolation to our aged friend, who, by reason of the distance she lived from any of our churches, and also on account of decripitude and age was unable to meet her brethren, before we were informed by the damsel that our Bibles were wrong, if they sustained the views we held in common with her aged grandma. As we were not disposed to argue the question, we simply referred her to several passages in her own Bible, and left the subject.

In the evening, when all the family were seated around the fire-side, we noticed a scene which has ever since given us unpleasant reflections. Our young friend, who had been satisfied with the references we gave her a few hours before, now presented them to her father, and after repeated efforts to call his attention to them, was at length repulsed with a "Be still—keep it to yourself." His manner, together with the emotions which seemed to possess his mind, gave us the impression that his conscience was not at ease, nor was he willing that the word of truth should be treasured up, unadulterated, in the heart of his daughter.

The man of whom we have related this, was in high standing in the —— Church, and had a good report of all about him, and, no doubt, felt that his passage to heaven was clear. The inquiry suggested itself, Can a man be in the favor of God who refuses to follow what his judgment convinces him is the will of God? And can he hope to have said to him in the last day, "well done good and faithful servant," when he sedulously teaches his children to follow doctrines contrary to the word of God?

Every Christian's happiness is identified with his obedience to God. It is easy to find ways in which one's convenience may be subserved; but there is but one way in which to secure the favor of God. If convenience supersedes the word of God, there is a direct impeachment of his wisdom, or denial of his right to reign, either of which must tend to condemnation. And shall a man contend with his Maker, and teach his children to violate the laws of God? They who will do this have no just conception of the unchangeable holiness of God, and of his determination to vindicate his own honor. To such a character, the hours of serious reflection, if he have any, must be filled with bitterness. A sense of injury inflicted on those under his charge, will afford him no pleasure, and a consciousness that he is both doing wrong and teaching others to do the same, (if he have any sense of the heinousness of sin,) must fill him with deep contrition.

Parents are, to a great extent, responsible for the sentiments their children imbibe. They are commanded of God to teach them diligently, and train them up in the fear of the Lord. And if they inculcate error, knowing it to be such, how can they escape the condemnation of God? He is greatly unwise who is disposed to risk his own eternal welfare by submitting to a convenience system. And he who will sacrifice the welfare of the souls committed to his care, shows a hardness of heart that is unpardonable.

All souls are God's, and the duty of parents to train up their children in the truth is most imperious. The fear of the Lord is better for them than all riches. It is the greatest patrimony—the best estate. If a parent sincerely love his offspring, he can have no greater desire than to see them walk in the truth; and instead of misleading will labor to instil it into their minds on all occasions.

Associations.

It will be seen by the notices in this number that the time for holding our associations is near at hand. It is hoped our brethren will come to these annual assemblies prepared to act for the interests of our common cause. Some of our institutions have but little efficiency from a want of concert of action, and a just appreciation of their value. Every thing pertaining to the well being of Christ's kingdom should receive a dispassionate and pious examination. All other motives than to glorify the name of God should be discarded, and measures should be adopted whose only tendency would be to aid this holy cause. If selfishness or sin enter into the schemes of the Churches of the living God, then is the success of those schemes just so much hindered. If we would see the work of God prosper in our hands, then there must be a union of feeling and effort, and all peculiar views must be abandoned for the general good. Otherwise, it will require all our efforts to harmonize our own feelings, while the institutions we love are neglected.

The Mission to the Jews we anticipate will be presented to the attention of these deliberative bodies. Our churches, without exception, are ready to acknowledge themselves debtors to the Jews, and have expressed a willingness to preach the Gospel to them, also. The anxieties and resolutions we have made, we hope will not be ephemeral. The present is an age of resolutions more than of actions. Resolutions, good in themselves, are often enough made, but lack the sustaining of them afterwards to render them effectual. It is easy to see what ought to be done, and easy to resolve to do it; and did we have a just conception of the interests of religion, it would not be a difficult thing to execute whatever good resolutions a love of souls and of Christ's kingdom might prompt us to form. Wrong conceptions of God and of ourselves enter very much into the schemes of benevolence that are formed, and exhibit themselves by too low an estimate of God, and too high of self. God's command is imperative, which requires love to the neighbor equal to that to one's self, and He will not give his honor to another. Christianity will progress and triumph. The Jews will be converted, but the hand of God will be so manifest in it, that all must be constrained to say, "not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake."

The Virginia Controversy.

In our news department may be found a correspondence between Mr. Patton, acting Governor of Virginia, and Gov. Seward.—These letters are worthy of a perusal. The question, whether New York by her Executive and Legislature will sanction Slavery, is here answered. We trust the enlightened views of Gov. Seward will be responded to by every lover of freedom. As for the dark spirit of Slavery, we wish it no lodgment in any heart, and most earnestly desire to see the day when all men shall be acknowledged as free by man, as they were made by God.

"Baptist Banner and Western Pioneer."

This paper comes to us this week very much enlarged. It is now, we believe, the largest religious paper in the U. S. We find many good things in its columns; but we are not certain that the largest papers are always best, or nearest "right." The following "puff" we take from a previous No.

"Our Paper."

"Perhaps next week—at all events in a very few weeks—we will appear in a gigantic form. Our new press is expected every day. We are resolved to excel any religious newspaper in the world in size. Why shouldn't we? We verily believe that when all the world gets right, it will be a world of Baptists. And the Baptists, therefore, should take the lead in every thing.—When we enlarge, all the religious papers in the land will appear small by our side.

W."

The Editor's views, that "when all the world gets right, it will be a world of Baptists," is probably correct. We think, however, a little attention must be given to the Sabbath of the Bible, before 'all the world will get right.' A word of caution, by the way, might not be amiss. If we remember right there was a greater disparity in size between the giant of Gath and the stripling David, than there is between the "Banner & Pioneer" and some religious newspapers in the land, and yet the haughty Philistine's lofty head bowed before the arm of the servant of God.

We, however, wish the enterprising publishers and editors all success in advocating the truths of Christianity.

For the Register.

Exposition of the latter part of the 7th of Romans.

NO. II.

Verse 15. For that which I do, I allow not: for what I would, that do I not, but what I hate that do I.

For that which I do. Here the performance of a work is attributed to the person alluded to in this passage. What is the nature of this work? It cannot be the fruits of righteousness; for it was not approved of by his reason and conscience. He acted in opposition to his own understanding and judgment. He says, "that which I do, I allow not," and "what I hate that do I." The Greek work katergazomai which is here translated I do, says Dr. Clark, means a work which the agent continues to perform, till it is finished, and is used by the Apostle, Phil. ii. 12, to denote the continued employment of God's saints in his service to the end of their lives. Work out your own salvation; the word here denotes an employment of a different kind; and therefore the man who now feels the galling dominion of sin, says, what I am continually laboring at, I allow not, ou ginosko, I do not acknowledge to be right, just, holy or profitable." Can this be the experience of the Christian? Does such a state of degradation and misery comport with the high and holy relation which the children of God, according to the Scriptures, actually sustain to their Heavenly Father?

Verses 17, 18. Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.—For I know that in me, (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing, for to will is present with me: but how to perform that which is good, I find not.

Here it is plainly perceived that the Apostle makes a "distinction between the higher moral self of reason and conscience, and the lower one of carnal passions and appetites," & exhibits the latter as triumphing over the former in the person whose case he describes. The same distinction was observed by some of the ancient philosophers, and the subjugation of the mind to the passions strongly expressed. The following quotations are taken from Professor Stewart's Commentary on the 7th of Romans. I shall barely cite the English version of the passages as I find them in his work; should any one wish to consult the original, they can do so by referring to the authors from which the selections are made.

"There is a striking passage (says the Professor,) in Xenophon (Cyrop. vi. 1,) in which Araspes the Persian says, by way of executing his treasonable designs:—"Certainly I must have two souls . . . . for plainly it is not one and the same which is both evil and good, nor which loves honorable and base conduct, and at the same time wishes to do a thing and not to do it. Plainly, then, there are two souls; and when the good one prevails, then it does good; and when the evil one predominates, then it does evil. Similar to this is the sentiment in Euripides, Medea, 1077. I know, indeed, that such things as I am about to do, are evil; but my mind is better than my inclinations.

"The same poet (as quoted by Clemens Alex. Strom. ii. 15,) says:—I have forgotten none of the things respecting which you admonished me; but although I have a desire to do them, nature struggles against it."

Dr. Clark quotes the following description of a depraved man from Ovid:

My reason this, my passion that persuades;
I see the right, and I approve it too;
Condemn the wrong, and yet the wrong pursue.

From the above extracts, it will be seen by the intelligent reader that the enlightened heathens both among the Greeks and Romans, had the same kind of experience, which, by some, is not only supposed to be the experience of the great Apostle Paul, in his best estate; but to be even the standard of Christian attainments!

I can hardly forbear to make another quotation from Professor Stuart, whose work is highly creditable to science as well as religion. While remarking on verse 18, he says:—"The present verse is designed to explain the preceding one. There the Apostle had said: It is sin who dwelleth in me. But, what is meant by me? The answer in verse 18 is: The carnal man. To say that sin dwells in me, and to say that no good thing dwells in my flesh is one and the same thing here. Let the reader compare, in order to ascertain the meaning of the writer, vs. 5, 14."

"But this is not all. The Apostle goes further than merely to assert, that the carnal part of himself is destitute of any thing spiritually good. He maintains, also, that it has a predominant power over him who is still 'under the law and not under grace.'"

The comment of Dr. Macknight on 15th verse, is in accordance with the view here taken. He says: "They who think the Apostle is here describing his own case and the cases of other regenerated persons, should consider that he does not speak of single instances of omission of duty; for the words which he uses, all denote a continuation or habit of acting. Now, how such a habit of doing evil and neglecting good, can be attributed to any regenerated person, and especially to the Apostle Paul, who, before this epistle to the Romans was written, told the Thessalonians, 'ye are witnesses and God also, how holily, and righteously, and unblameably, we behaved ourselves among you'? I confess I do not understand."

But the person whose character we are considering, is described as hating his evil actions, and, therefore, the "Village Pastor" thinks his case must represent that of the Christian. His words are: "The expression of Paul, "but what I hate, that do I," has every appearance of teaching that Paul hated his evil actions, it contains therefore a strong indication that during the period, to which, in the 15th verse, he alludes—he did love God." A position is here taken, which must be proved before we can admit it, viz. that the Apostle, in his highest state of Christian experience, did actually and constantly perform an evil work, or commit sin, knowing it to be wrong; for the reader will observe, we are not now speaking merely of errors of judgment, or defects of our mortal constitution, which are unavoidable, and inseparable from our connection with this world, but of voluntary and habitual sin. It has appeared, we think, in the course of our remarks, that such was the state of the individual whose case we have before us. His conscience, indeed, remonstrated—his reason opposed, but alas! his passions prevailed, and in every instance of contest he was brought "into captivity to the law of sin." Can it be possible that this is the experience of the Christian? Does such a measure of guilt and bondage ever oppress the soul of the devoted and faithful Christian, who can say with the Apostle, "Knowing this that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin"?

In my next, I shall examine the 22d verse, which will, probably, close what I have to say for the present.

L. K. REDINGTON.

Cuyler, April 31, 1841.

P. S. Mr. Editor.—Please correct a typographical error which occurred in my last communication. In the 6th paragraph from the commencement, 14th line, for "person" read power The sentence as amended will read, "completely under its power and control." L. K. R.

News of the Day.

Virginia Controversy.

Communication from the Hon. John M. Patton, Lieut. Governor of Virginia.

(COPY.)

Executive Department,
Richmond, March 22d, 1841.

Sir,—The functions of the Executive of this Commonwealth having temporarily devolved on me, by the resignation of Gov. Gilmer, it has become my duty to act upon the demand recently made by you upon the Governor of this Commonwealth, for the surrender of Robert F. Curry, charged with the crime of forgery in the State of New York.

The demand is in proper form, and the fact that he is charged with the commission of an act which is a crime by the laws of your State is duly authenticated.

Recognizing as I do the imperative obligation of the Constitution and laws which require the Governor of every State to surrender a fugitive from justice, upon the demand of the Governor of that State in which he is charged with the crime, I shall not hesitate about complying with the demand. You are accordingly hereby informed that I have issued my warrant, as acting Governor of this Commonwealth, commanding the delivery of the said fugitive to John D. Dix, the agent appointed by you to receive and convey him to the State of New York. Mr. Dix having left here on his return to New York, I enclose the warrant to you, and will forward a copy or duplicate of it to the proper authorities in Wheeling, where it is understood Curry is in custody.

The circumstances which have occurred in connexion with this demand make it proper that in complying with it I should avail myself of the occasion to express to your Excellency the profound regret of this department for the course which the government of New York has pursued in relation to a similar demand made by the Executive of this State upon the Governor of New York, as long ago as the 25th of July, 1839, and which remains unsatisfied.

It is not my purpose or desire to renew a discussion, (which indeed has been already exhausted) upon that subject. I can not however, refrain from reminding you of this unsatisfied requisition, or from expressing to you what is the universal sentiment of the people and government of this Commonwealth, that the refusal of New York to surrender the fugitives charged with the commission of a heinous crime against the laws of this State, is a grievous and intolerable outrage upon her rights, and a plain violation of the duty imposed upon the State of New York by the Constitution and laws of the United States.

This refusal to surrender fugitives from justice, upon the grounds on which it has been vindicated by your Excellency, and followed as it has been by an act of the General Assembly of New York, which seems to have been sedulously contrived to render it next to impossible to recapture a fugitive slave who shall escape to New York, involves an assault upon an institution of the Southern States, deeply interwoven with their whole polity, and to any foreign interference with which they are keenly sensitive. It is not the less aggravating that the assault is made by directly violating or rendering nugatory, two of the plainest and most explicit provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

In this state of things it is scarcely to be wondered at that some of our citizens eminent in virtue and patriotism, should be inclined to regard New York as having placed herself out of the pale of the Union, and forfeited all right to have any claim made by her under the authority of the Constitution of the Union respected and complied with while she retains her present attitude of hostility to its obligations.—While, however, a course of retaliation towards New York might be justified, as far as she is concerned, by her repeated and persevering disregard of her obligations, it is not deemed becoming the high character which it has been the desire of this state to deserve for good faith, respect for the Constitution and devotion to the Union, to retort even upon her an act involving a violation of Constitutional duty. She has refused to comply with the Constitution. Virginia will scrupulously obey it. She has wantonly assailed our property by acts of legislation, endangering its safety and impairing its value. Virginia will again appeal to her justice, and entreating her to retrace her steps, in the meantime resort only to lawful and constitutional means of self-protection and redress. She has refused and still refuses to surrender criminals who have fled from our justice, and is pursuing a course calculated to make the Empire State an asylum for felons and runaway slaves. Virginia still respects and relies upon the constitution and laws, and will surrender fugitives from justice and fugitives from labor when lawfully demanded.

I trust, sir, that you will see in this that we are ready to perform our duties, rather than quick to retaliate injuries, and that you will find it an example of forbearance, and proof of an anxious desire to preserve harmony and a sedulous regard for justice and good faith which will not be without benefit in inducing you and your great state to retract those assaults upon our institutions, of which the state of Virginia so justly complains.

The motives and principles on which your demand is now unconditionally complied with by the Executive of this State, (in conformity, as I am happy to believe, with the almost unanimous concurrence of the Legislature,) ought to be regarded, as I hope it will be, as giving an earnest that as this State recognizes, in all their extent, and will perform, faithfully and scrupulously, all her duties and obligations under the Constitution of the Union, she expects and will insist upon every other State exhibiting an equal fidelity to its constitutional obligations.

It is no spirit of menace, but from an anxious desire to preserve harmony between the States, and prevent collisions which must necessarily impair the value and stability of the Union, if they do not endanger and finally destroy it, that I assure your Excellency that the State of Virginia can not acquiesce in, and will not submit to those aggressions of New York which have occasioned the existing controversy between those two great Commonwealths. I therefore accompany this communication, informing you of the fact that your demand for the surrender of the fugitive from your State is granted, with an earnest protest against those aggressions, and an anxious and respectful appeal to you, and through you to the State, whose organ you are, to review the positions you have taken, and by a magnanimous abandonment of erroneous and untenable opinions and measures, restore those harmonious relations between the States which it is alike the interest and duty of us all to endeavor to perpetuate.

I have the honor te be,
Very respectfully your ob't serv't.
JNO. M. PATTON.

To his Excellency,
William H. Seward,
Governor of New York.

(COPY.)

STATE OF NEW YORK.

Executive Department,
Albany, April 6th, 1841.

Sir,—Your communication of the 22d of March last, enclosing a warrant for the surrender of Robert F. Curry, in compliance with my requisition, is acknowledged. The proper agent has been directed to receive the fugitive and convey him to this State.

Your compliance with this requisition is made, in your communication, a ground for asking a reversal of my decision upon a similar process of your predecessor, demanding the surrender of Peter Johnson and others. Although the candor you have avowed is by no means questioned, it is a matter of some surprise that you have treated the cases as altogether analogous. If you could have shown that the indictment accompanying my requisition was informal and defective in charging the crime of forgery; if a competent judicial tribunal had decided that the indictment was thus defective, and that upon examination there was no probable cause to believe the fugitive guilty of an offense against any law of this State, and if forgery were not a crime or offense against the laws of Virginia, the common law and the law of all civilized countries, then, although the cases would be analagous, it would, in my judgment, and with great deference, follow rather that the demand made by me ought to have been denied, than that the requisition issued by your predecessor ought to be granted.

Your views concerning the questions recently discussed between your predecessor and myself; your protest against supposed aggressions; and your appeal to me to review positions heretofore assumed, to abandon opinions and measures pronounced by you to be erroneous and untenable, and to restore harmonious relations between the States of New York and Virginia, have received most careful and respectful consideration. Since, however, you have intimated that it would be unprofitable to renew the discussion of the question referred to, upon its merits, my reply will necessarily be as general as your communication.

The Lieutenant-Governor of Virginia, in 1839, demanded of the Executive of this State, Peter Johnson, Edward Smith and Isaac Gansey, as fugitives, upon a vague and insufficient charge of stealing a negro slave in that Commonwealth. When this demand was made, the Constitution had existed during a half of a century, a period sufficient, it may be supposed to present domestic exigences of every character foreseen and intended to be provided for by the framers of that instrument. During that period the institution of slavery existed in Virginia and some other States, while in this and others it was abolished. Yet within that long time only one case is known to have occurred in which the Executive of a slave-holding State demanded from a State in which slavery had ceased to exist, the surrender of a fugitive upon a charge similar to that adopted by the Lieutenant-Governor of Virginia; and no case is known to have happened in which a demand of that character, made under such circumstances, was allowed. The affidavit was deemed by the Executive insufficient and defective, even to charge a crime against the laws of Virginia, while the requisition involved, if the requisition were supported by a proper charge, was regarded as one of grave importance, and requiring deliberate consideration. An informal note was delivered to the agent of Virginia, pointing out the defects in his papers and giving leave to amend, and a time was appointed for the consideration of the whole subject. In the mean time the supposed fugitives availed themselves of the legal remedy and were discharged on a writ of habeas corpus, on the grounds that the charge was insufficient, and that, upon examination, it was ascertained that the actual offense of the accused consisted in their being seamen on board of a ship in which a slave had concealed himself, with a view to what proved an unsuccessful attempt to escape from servitude. The Lieutenant-Governor, to whom the circumstances became known, nevertheless demanded a decision upon the case as originally presented. That course presented to the Executive of this State, on one hand, the alternative of seeming willing to evade a great constitutional question by placing his denial of the demand on the informal objection sustained by the judge, the removal of which would not dispose of the subject; and on the other, that of assuming the broad constitutional ground upon which, on mature reflection, he was satisfied the case must at last be decided. Both the frankness which becomes public functionaries, and a proper respect for the Lieutenant-Governor of Virginia, required the adoption of the latter alternative.

It was not unforeseen that an absolute and probably irreconcilable difference of opinion must arise between the Lieutenant-Governor and the Executive of this State. It was obvious that the former would assume, in conformity with opinions known to prevail in Virginia, that men of a certain race and condition may be, and are property and chattels, the subjects of purchase, sale, devise and theft. The Executive of this State, on the contrary, would be faithless to the spirit of its Constitution and laws, if he did not maintain that all men, of whatever race or condition, are men, and of right ought to be freemen; that every remedy for duress of a human being, whether it be the writ de homine replegiando, habeas corpus, action for enticement or false imprisonment, or indictment for kidnapping, regards him as a man and not as property, and that it is as absurd in this State to speak of property in immortal beings, and consequently of stealing them, as it would be to discourse of a division of property in the common atmosphere. It was equally manifest that Virginia would insist that her sister States should recognize the right of property of one class of her people in another as established by her laws. It would, on the contrary, become the duty of the Executive of this State to hold, that, except so far as the principle is controlled by the Article of the Constitution which declares that persons held to labor or service in one State, by the laws thereof, and escaping into another shall, on demand and proof, be delivered up to the persons to whom such labor or service is due, the relation of master and slave is a peculiar local relation of the State where it exists, and that this State is not bound to recognize or protect it in any manner, much less to protect it by extending for that purpose an Article of the Constitution which had no such design, nor any reference whatever to the relation.

The Executive of this State, always careful to avoid even any seeming interference with the institutions or municipal affairs of other States, would have gladly avoided such a discussion, not from objections on his own part, but because he supposed the discussion, although invited by the Lieutenant-Governor, could not be agreeable to the people of Virginia. But it was the pleasure, nevertheless, of the Lieutenant-Governor of Virginia to demand an answer to the requisition, notwithstanding the decision would involve the great questions which have been raised, and notwithstanding he must have known, moreover, that a compliance with the requisition would be to surrender three men as criminals whom a competent tribunal had pronounced guiltless, and thus exhibit the Executive trampling on the judiciary as well as striking down the liberty of citizens of this State.

Such were the circumstances under which the Executive of this State denied the requisition of the Lieutenant-Governor, and assumed the grounds on which that denial has been vindicated. The decision was not, as you have assumed, designed as an aggression upon Virginia, and intended to affect her institutions. Virginia was admitted, in the broadest sense, to be sovereign within her territory, in the enactment and execution of her laws. It was denied only that she could extend her legislative power so as to give a right to the Executive of this State, or render it his duty to surrender its citizens to be transported to that Commonwealth to be tried, condemned and punished for acts not in themselves wrongful, nor regarded as criminal by the laws of this State; and inasmuch as differences might exist between the codes of the two States, it was conceded that in ascertaining the intent of the compact between them, reference might be made, in such cases, not to the particular code of the one or the other, but to the common laws received by both, the laws of nations, and the laws of all civilized countries. These principles had no exclusive reference to the States in which slavery exists, but were the same by which other demands upon this State are tested, and they have been applied not only in the case in question, but in others presented by Pennsylvania and New Hampshire, where that institution has long since become obsolete. The discussion was, moreover, conducted in a manner which it is hoped will be found to have been always courteous and respectful to Virginia.

The Governor of Virginia, in submitting the correspondence to the General Assembly, thought proper to distinguish the non-compliance of the Executive of this State, upon the grounds assumed by him, as a flagrant invasion of the rights of that Commonwealth, which, in the event of the failure of other remedies, might render it the solemn duty of Virginia to appeal from the cancelled obligations of the federal compact to original rights and the law of self-preservation. The Executive of this State laid the same correspondence before the Legislature, with the reluctant expression of his surprise and regret on account of the seeming menace of the Governor of Virginia. The Executive of this State, desirous to avoid increasing the embarrassment which had resulted in consequence of the course adopted by the authorities of Virginia, declared that he regarded the subject as one falling peculiarly within the province of the Executive Department, and in relation to which the duties of that department were prescribed by the Constitution and the Laws of the United States, and not by the Constitution or laws of this State, and he carefully abstained from invoking any legislative sanction of his decision. The Executive of this State subsequently complied, promptly and cheerfully, with the request of the General Assembly of Virginia, and submitted the appeal of that body from the Executive to the Legislature of this State, together with the able arguments of the Governor of Virginia, and of a Committee of its House of Delegates, all of which documents were laid before the Legislature without comment.—The Executive also, with equal cheerfulness, complied with the further request of the General Assembly of Virginia by reviewing the positions assumed by him, and he trusts performed that duty in a spirit of candor and courtesy. The correspondence being thus again closed, the Governor of that State submitted it to the General Assembly in the manner he deemed proper.

He at the same time offered large pecuniary rewards to induce individuals who might thus be tempted to seize, within the jurisdiction of New York and in violation of its laws, and convey to Virginia the three individuals, whose security was doubly assured to them, first by the decision of a competent legal tribunal, and then by the Executive authority of the State. The Governor of Virginia also addressed public circular letters to such, and such only, of the American States as he assumed had peculiar sympathies with Virginia, inviting them to make common cause against New York. The Executive of this State submitted these proceedings and the correspondence to the Legislature of New York without reproach. The General Assembly of Virginia then thought proper to pass an act attempting to impose invidious restrictions and onerous impositions upon citizens of this State engaged in commerce with that Commonwealth, citizens not otherwise responsible for the action of the government than as being among its constituents; and this was done with a purpose fully avowed to oblige the Executive of this State to rescind a decision made under his constitutional responsibilities, and to compel the Legislature of New York to repeal a law found on its statute book, in accordance with its Constitution and the Constitution of the United States, and having no connexion with the question in controversy. Simultaneously with this proceeding the Governor of Virginia refused compliance with a requisition, admitted to be in due form, for the surrender of a fugitive charged with the crime of forgery, unless the Executive of this State would first rescind the decision previous made by him, allowing, however, to the Executive of this state six months as a reasonable period to decide upon the extraordinary proposition thus submitted. The Executive of this State lost no time in assuring the authorities of Virginia that the original subject had been reconsidered upon its merits, and also in connexion with those injurious and retaliatory proceedings, and submitted the result, that the decision having been made in accordance with convictions of constitutional duty still entertained, he found no sufficient ground for a reversal of the same.

It became the duty of the Executive to communicate these proceedings of Virginia to the Legislature of this state. In doing so he could not but foresee that no one would think of repealing, and especially under such circumstances a law of the state, designed for the protection and security of its own citizens, and others exposed to the risk of privation of liberty without even a charge of crime. There is no good reason to believe that the interests of the citizens of this state are less carefully guarded by its Legislature than the supposed interests of citizens of Virginia are by the General Assembly of that Commonwealth. There is no ground to suppose that the principles in regard to personal liberty and state sovereignty maintained by the Executive of this State, are less sedulously cherished by the Legislature than the institution of slavery is by the General Assembly of our sister State. When the commercial position, condition and relation of this state are considered, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature, if it could transcend its constitutional barriers, might annoy, harrass and even oppress unoffending citizens of Virginia, at least as severely as the General Assembly of that Commonwealth can oppress such citizens of New York.

Nevertheless the Executive declared that he deemed any retaliatory action unworthy the dignity and inconsistent with the relations of this State. He recommended no such measure. He declared that none should be adopted on his part; and assuming that the citizens of this State have ample constitutional remedies against any injuries they may suffer from the wrongful legislation of Virginia, he declared his confident conviction that it might safely be left to the magnanimity of that State and her own experience of the consequences of her measures to induce an abandonment of them and the performance of her constitutional obligations. The Executive of this State has sincere pleasure in acknowledging that so far as one of the measures is concerned, this anticipation has been already realized.

From the cursory review, rather of what has been done than of what has been written, it will appear that the authorities of New York have not been the actors in any transactions tending towards a derangement of the relations between this State and Virginia. New York has done nothing, and has spoken only when, and so often as she was appealed to by Virginia, and then always in the language of respect and affection. New York has made no novel or questionable demands, complained of no wrongs, offered no rewards for violation of laws of Virginia, passed no vindictive acts, made no menaces, nor has she endeavored, in any manner, to excite her sister States against Virginia, although she doubts not there are many and enlightened states among them which cherish her own principles and respect her decision.

I trust, therefore, sir, that you will be satisfied that the spirit of conciliation, kindness and devotedness to the Union which you have so properly invoked, will continue to prevail here, since no other spirit has been indulged from the beginning. You have a guaranty also of that spirit in the fact that although not loud and frequent in professions, New York is constant in works showing her attachment to the Union. Her history presents no instance in which she has questioned its value, nor has she ever indulged speculations concerning that after state which sometimes engages the contemplation of those whose estimate of the value of the Union is not fully settled. You have a guaranty also in the perseverance with which New York pursues her policy of increasing her communications with her sister States, and the determination she manifests to render equal justice to them all, while she protects her own citizens as she ought upon principles essential to her own sovereignty and that of her sister States.

I trust, also, that you will agree with me that it rests with Virginia to restore harmony between herself and New York, if indeed that harmony has been impaired, which New York is not yet prepared to admit. New York maintains, with regard to Virginia, the same attitude and relations now as heretofore. She concedes to Virginia all she has ever yielded. She asks of her nothing Virginia does not herself admit to be constitutional and just, and she maintains towards her the same attitude and relations that she maintains towards the other States of the confederacy. If, however, it be not the pleasure of Virginia to retain her ancient attitude and cherish her ancient feelings towards New York, I can only express my unavailing regret for a circumstance so unhappy and unfortunate.

You are pleased to remark that this State is pursuing a course calculated to render her territory an asylum for felons and runaway slaves. Waiving all exceptions to the spirit of this remark, I trust I may be permitted to reply, first, that it is not inconsistent with the most careful regard to the public morals to grant impunity to those declared innocent by the legal tribunals or to those whose conviction would involve no offense against the laws necessary for the preservation of a well-ordered society, and no violation of abstract rights, as ascertained from the system of jurisprudence established in civilized nations; and secondly, that the experience of the people of this State has proved, at least to their own satisfaction, that neither public virtue nor public prosperity has received any injury from extending, so far as has yet been done, equal justice to every class and every race of men within our limits.

Accept the assurance of high respect,
With which I remain,
Your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

The Honorable
JOHN M. PATTON,
Lieut. and acting Governor of Virginia,
or his successor in office.

From the National Intelligencer.

President Tyler received the diplomatic body on Saturday, at two o'clock, at the President's mansion.

In the absence of the British Minister, Mr. Fox, (who, we are sorry to say, was kept away by indisposition,) the Russian Minister, Mr. Bodisco, appeared at the head of the corps. We give below his address to the President on behalf of himself and his colleagues, and the Presidents' reply.

As the members of the body were respectively presented, the President spoke to each of them of the relations, present or past, between his country and the United States, and of his hope of the continuance of amicable relations; and received from all congratulations, and the assurance of the desire of peace and amity with this country.

In these short conversations with gentlemen mostly strangers to him, the President was particularly happy, and this his first official intercourse with the representatives of other nations, was, we doubt not, exceedingly satisfactory. Nothing, indeed, could be more appropriate or in better taste than the President's remarks, and the replies of the several members of the Corps.

MR. BODISCO'S ADDRESS.

[TRANSLATION.]

"MR. PRESIDENT: The United States having been suddenly deprived of its supreme head, the Constitution has invested you with the Chief Magistracy of the Union.

"The Diplomatic Corps has the honor to appear before you, Mr. President, for the purpose of expressing through me, its organ, its concern in the melancholy event which has so unexpectedly removed General Harrison from the hopes of the American people. The Diplomatic Corps hasten also to offer up its vows, Mr. President, that your administration may be distinguished by the maintenance of all the existing friendly relations, and by a constant increase in the prosperity of the United States.

"The Diplomatic Corps embraces this opportunity, Mr. President, to assure you of its earnest desires to merit your confidence and esteem.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY.

"MR. MINISTER: In my character of Chief Magistrate of the United States, and in the name of the people thereof, I have to return to the Diplomatic Corps, whom on this occasion you represent, my acknowledgments for the expression of condolence on account of the bereavement which this country has so recently sustained in the death of its late lamented and illustrious President. I take this occasion, at the same time to give the assurance that my most earnest desire as his constitutional successor, will be to maintain and cherish the friendly relations which now so happily subsist between our respective countries.

"The people of the United States regard their own prosperity as intimately connected with that of the entire family of nations, and the cultivation of feelings of mutual amity as the best mode of advancing that important end.

"I sincerely desire that the residence of the Diplomatic Corps near the Government may prove every way agreeable to them; to accomplish which nothing shall be wanting on my own part."

From the N. O. Picayune, April 18th.

LATE FROM TEXAS.—The steam ship Savannah, Capt. Wade, has arrived since our last, bringing Galveston dates as late as the 13th inst.

We learn from all parts of the country, says the Houston Telegraph, that most extensive crops of cotton will be put in this season.

Judge Webb was about leaving Galveston for Mexico, in the schr. of war San Bernard, in search of place. The editor of the Courier, in commenting upon this move says:—How much better it would be if the Government has appointed Com. Moore, to go down as minister, accompanied by the whole fleet. We could then have TREATED and COERCED alternately, according to circumstances."

The Houston Morning Star of the 10th inst. says there has been another fight with the Indians about fifty miles above Austin, in which eight Indians were killed and 30 horses captured. The expedition was under the command of Capt. Dolson who was badly wounded.

From the Savannah Republican.

FROM FLORIDA.

We yesterday received several letters from our attentive correspondent in Florida, forwarded by the steamer Gen. Clinch, Capt. Brooks. We are pained to learn that the Indians are again at their work of death.

We hope the report of the Indians having left Tampa will not prove true.

The officer alluded to by one of our correspondents, whose death was momentarily expected, has since died. We regret to learn that it is Lt. C. E. Woodruff, 2d Infantry.

The despatches which passed through town yesterday to the Adjutant and Commissary General were perforated by a bullet shot from the rifle of the Indian who murdered the express rider mentioned in one of our letters.

SLAVERS.—The British brig Wasp, arrived at this port yesterday, left at Sierra Leone, about fifty days ago, twelve prizes, slavers, belonging to different nations. Left at Rio Nunez, 1st January, U. S. schooner Grampus, and U. S. brig Dolphin—came there to demand satisfaction from King Sara for some damage he had done to an American vessel. The dispute was amicably settled.

Capt. Ward, a passenger on board the ship Grotius, below at Boston, from Manilla, and last from St. Helena reports that seven vessels, slavers, had arrived at St. Helena, with 700 slaves, prizes to H. B. M. cruisers on the West coast of Africa. The last that arrived (March 2d) threw overboard sixty dead slaves in sight of St. Helena.

ALBANY ARGUS OFFICE,
Sunday Afternoon, April 25.

Last night, as the steamboat South America, Capt. Brainard, was on her passage up the river, an accident occurred which reduced the machinery of the boat nearly to a wreck, and severely injured several of the passengers. The following particulars may be relied upon:

When about ten miles above Poughkeepsie, at about half past 12, the boat being under the usual steam and full headway, the shaft broke, and the connecting machinery giving way, the piston was forced through the cylinder, both in its downward and upward motion, scattering the fragments of machinery in different directions and with great force, and discharging the steam into the gangways and cabins.

All was confusion for the moment. Passengers jumping from the berths, or not thinking to envelope themselves in the bedclothes, (which some had the presence of mind to do,) encountered the vapor, and were in the instances we give below, scalded more or less severely; though we are happy to state that the probability is that all, with perhaps one exception, will survive. Owing to the promptitude and energy of Captain Brainard and the officers and crew of the boat, the sufferers and the other passengers were relieved from immediate danger, and the steamboat Diamond opportunely coming up soon after the occurrence, went at once to their relief. The passengers, including those who were disabled, were immediately taken on board the diamond, where every attention was afforded them, and every thing done by Capt. Flower, his passengers, officers and crew, to alleviate their sufferings. They reached this city between 9 and 10 A. M., and the wounded were immediately taken ashore for medical treatment.

Some idea of the force with which parts of the machinery were thrown upward will be understood by the circumstance, that a fragment of the shackle-bar, falling perhaps 50 feet from its place, passed through the second deck, and striking a colored man belonging on the boat, severely wounded him in the head.

The South America is a new and splendid boat—having made only three or four passages. Her machinery is said to be literally a wreck; and the amount of damages from $20,000 to $30,000.

The following are the names of the persons injured:

Mr. Conant, Ballston Spa,
Mr. Glen, Schenectady,
Mr. Jones Rensselaer,
Mr. Garwin, Troy,
Mr. Taylor, Troy.
Solomon Smith, Fort Plain,
G. Warnick, Amsterdam,
James Steer, Hartwick,
Another, a resident of Hyde Park, and left on board,
A colored man, a hand on board.

Another Shocking Steam Boat Accident.—A little past 6 o'clock last Tuesday evening, 27th inst., as the steam tow boat, HENRY ECKFORD,, Capt. Tice, was leaving the dock at the foot of Cedar-street, North River, and just as the escape of steam through the chimney had been stopped, her boiler burst with a tremendous explosion, tearing her machinery and upper works to fragments, and killing or wounding nearly every one on board—as follows:

Capt. Tice, blown 60 feet across the slip, over the lake-boat in tow, into the water: one leg broken, and otherwise severely injured—not scalded. His recovery is doubtful.

Mr. Belshow, of the lake-boat in tow, was killed outright; struck by a piece of the cylinder, and terribly mangled.

A fireman nearly killed; limbs broken, &c. The captain of an Eastern schooner alongside was knocked over by the water from the boiler, and one side of his face slightly scalded. The captain's wife (in the cabin) was immersed in water from the feeding cylinder, but not scalded.

The engine, piston, smoke-pipe, shafts, and upper work, wheel, pilot-house, deck-cabin, &c. were blown completely away—most of them into the river so that they cannot be found. One-half the boiler is pushed forward, and remains on the boat; the other half was blown into the river. The steam and contents of the boiler were blown out, aft, so that very little injury by scalding was experienced. The wreck was taken in tow by the Citizen for the foot of Seventeenth street, East River; but she was sinking so fast that it was by no means probable that she would reach her destination.

The Henry Eckford was probably the oldest steamboat running in the vicinity of New-York. She was built some seventeen years ago by Eckford, and has been used as a tow-boat on the River and in the Harbor.

The customary stereotype phrase on such occasions imports that "No blame can be attached to any one." We cannot use it here. It seems to us that there was gross recklessness of life evinced in the running of so old and worn-out a boat—that her engineer must have been unqualified for his station—and that the United States Inspector who examines and licenses boats has been grossly unfaithful to his duty. We will not pursue this subject now, but await further devlopements.

A man who was on the wharf at the time, remarked to us that he was looking to the Eckford as she started, and heard her squeal when the escaping steam was shut off. He instantly observed—"There is too much steam on—we had better get away from here." The next instant a roar as of cannon was heard, and a cloud of steam, pierced by flying fragments of boiler, engine, works, &c. proclaimed that the boat was a ruin.

We understand that three or four persons are missing in additon to those above mentioned—possibly escaped, but more probably blown into the river—dead.—N. Yorker.

C. F. Mitchell.—This distinguished forger, it would seem from the following letter which we find in the Commercial of Tuesday last, is at present in Montreal. He appears to have thrown behind him all regard of public opinion—to have relinquished all claims to respectability, and rushed at once into the excesses and companionship of outcasts, from which the strong arm of Law or the power of Death alone will be likely to rescue him. Once let self-respect be cast away, and crime ventured, and how swift and terrible is the downward plunge!

MONTREAL, April 21, 1841.

Charles F. Mitchell, the person who committed the forgeries in your city and Philadelphia, is now in this city. He arrived on the 9th inst. bearing the name of Goodwin, and passes his time in gambling and at houses of ill-fame. He was arrested a few days since and taken before the police, but succeeded by feeing lawyers, in getting clear. His trunk, however, was searched, and about $1,000 was found in it, mostly notes of the Girard Bank. He is spending it very freely. A stranger called at my office this morning with $150, which he had received from Goodwin, who he said had lost it in gambling.

It struck me that this Goodwin might be Mitchell, and I said so to the stranger, who told me that he had been introduced to Mitchell in New-York about three years ago, and had afterward seen him at Buffalo, and had no doubt that this Goodwin was the same man. When he first met him in Montreal he told him that he thought he had seen him before, but Goodwin (or Mitchell) denied all acquaintance with him when I mentioned Mitchell's name, my informant distinctly recollected that this was the same person. I learn, moreover, that he told his lawyer he was a Member of Congress, and at the police office confessed that his name was Mitchell.

I have spent the whole day in trying to have him arrested, but without success. Our authorities say—"The United States refuse to give up persons who have committed the most heinous crimes in this country, (alluding to Holmes the murderer,) and why should we trouble ourselves about this man? He is spending his money very freely, which will do us some good.'

The money that he obtained by his forgeries might be recovered from him by proving the debt. He might be arrested on a civil process, if authority were given some one here to proceed against him.

Daring and Extensive Forgeries.—Forgeries of an extensive and most adroit character, have recently been perpetrated on several banks at the West. The Commercial bank, Cincinnati, has been swindled out of $13,000. The villain, says the New-York Tattler, called himself William M. Parker, of London, and the mode of his operations is somewhat novel, very ingenious, and exceedingly difficult to guard against. He forged a certificate of deposite in the Commercial Bank of New Orleans, and a letter enclosing one half of the certificate to the Lafayette Bank in Cincinnati. He then called on the cashier of the Lafayette Bank with the other half, and received the half that had been forwarded per post. The whole certificate, thus endorsed by the usual course of transmission, he then sold to the Commercial Bank of Cincinnati, and decamped with the proceeds.

By this ingenious mode of swindling, he disarmed all suspicion. He played the same game on Mr. Gwathmey, of Louisville, for the same amount. A forged certificate of the same bank in New Orleans was used, and the half forwarded to the Bank of Kentucky, in Louisville, of which Mr. G. is cashier. The same trick was commenced on the North Bank of Kentucky, at Covington, but the certificate has never been called for—and most probably now will be.

The same operation has also been played in New-York. The New-York American says:

"We just learn that some time last week, the Cashier of the Bank of America received a letter from the New-Orleans Bank enclosing the half of a certificate for 28,000 Mexican dollars, which he was to deliver to a Mr. Britton, on presentation of the other half, and recommending Mr. B. to Mr. Thompson's consideration as an English gentleman of fortune, who had deposited the money with the New Orleans Bank. Mr. Britton appeared on Thursday, and received the half of the certificate, which he took to Jacob Little & Co.'s, who cashed it for him by a check on the Union Bank which was paid in 1000 dollar notes. At a late hour of the day, another person, evidently an accompilce, came to Mr. Little to buy sovereigns, and purchased 2000 sovereigns, which he paid for the notes of the Union Bank.

The next day the steamer for England sailed. There seems to be no doubt that this is but a part of the plan by which the banks have been swindled. Mr. Little has offered $3,000 reward for the recovery of the money. To show the coolness of the villain, when he presented himself at the Union Bank, the check being drawn to his order, payment was refused on the ground that Mr. Britton was a stranger. He immediately returned to Mr. Little and asked him to accompany him for the purpose of satisfying the Bank. Mr. Little not being able to go, the Cashier of the Bank of America went with him, and the money was accordingly paid.

We learn that the Girard Bank of Philadelphia paid a similar certificate on Saturday last, but for some reason, being anxious about it, they succeeded about midnight in finding the men, and recovering the money.

We also learn that a certificate was received at the Globe Bank, in the city, for $21,000, and the money was ready for delivery, but no one as yet having presented themselves, they ascertained it was a forgery.—Traveller.

SOVEREIGNS OF THE WORLD

ENGLAND.—Victoria I. born 1819.
FRANCE.—Louis Phillipe I. born 1783.
CHINA.—Tau-Kwang.
RUSSIA.—Nicholas I. born 1790.
BELGIUM.—Leopold I. born 1790.
PRUSSIA.—William IV. born 1795.
AUSTRIA.—Ferdinand I. born 1793.
SPAIN.—Maria Isabella Louisa I born 1830.
PORTUGAL.—Maria de Gloria I. born 1819.
SWEDEN.—Charles John I. (Bernadotte) XIV. born 17[illegible]4.
TURKEY.—Abdul Medjid the Unfortunate, born 1822.
HOLLAND.—William I. born 1775,

Marriage in the Police Office.—A young Jewess named Delia Phillips, having sued a young Israelite named Isaac Steenberg, for breach of promise of marriage, laying her damages at [illegible]—the faithless swain was lodged in the debtors' prison in default of bail. There he had time to reflect, and agreed to marry, when the lady refused, but the counsel and friends of both parties interposing, they became re-united again, and proceeding into the police office with their witnesses, were duly married by Justice Matsell.

Honey.—The farmers in Massachusetts are trying to increase the stock of honey by means of bee pastures. For this purpose white clover, sweet clover, mignonette, buckwheat and trees are recommended.

Correspondence of the Commercial Advertiser.
NEW LEBANON, April 18th.

The death of our late President, of Herman Le Roy, and of many other venerable men which I have noticed, has led me to think that this spring has been unusually fatal to the aged. It has been remarkably so here with us. In this small community, during the short space of ten days from the [illegible] to the [illegible] of March, six of the old men of our valley were carried to their graves. Three of them lay dead on the same day. This was a case unparalleled in the annals of our town. Their ages were 71, 76, 75, 80, 82, and 83. Four of them were revolutioners. Others of the aged among us have also been affected, and brought nigh to departure. It is said that in the towns north of us, Stephentown and Berlin, during the past month, death has occurred among the old to an alarming extent. There has been nothing here of an epidemic. The cause has seemed to be atmospherical, or incidental to the weather—the disappearing damp and thick, and the weather inducing great debility. As the season advances, however, the aged and debilitated who are left, begin to breathe more freely.

Yours, &c. H.

Notices.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Central Association will hold its next annual session with the Church in Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the 2nd Sabbath in June next at 10 o'clock. Introductory discourse by E. S. BAILEY, or S. B. CRANDALL, alternate. A full delegation and punctual attendance is requested.

JAMES BAILEY, Sec'y.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Eastern Association are to meet on the fifth day before the fourth Sabbath in May next, at the S. D. B. Meeting-house in Salem, N. Jersey, at 10 o'clock, A. M., and an invitation is hereby given to the ministering brethren, and other brethren also, that can conveniently attend. I think it would be [illegible] to the meeting to have some of our western and northern brethren to attend with us.

A. D. TITSWORTH, Cor. Sec.

[illegible], April 1[illegible], 1841.

MARRIED.

In Lincklaen, on the evening of the 1st inst., by Eld. S. M. Burdick, Mr. CYRUS CARTWRIGHT and Miss [illegible]LINA M., daughter of Benjamin H. Burdick, all of Lincklaen.

LIST OF LETTERS.

Jabez Chadwick, Lucius Crandall, (next week,) Azor Estee, (we will do it,) D. Foster, (it is done,) I. K. Redington, (we have attended to it,) Hiram Babcock, (we will do it next week,) W. K. Greene, E. Whitford, Joseph Greene, 2, (we have obeyed all the instructions we have received,) W. Stillman, P. M., D. Hardin, P. M., E. Whitmore, P. M.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Thos. E. Babcock $5,31, cr. J. Hollister, O. Partridge, each $2, v 1, W. C. Crippen, $1, v 2, W. Woodward, 31, v 2.

Eliphalet Johnson $2, v 2. Jared Stillman $1, v 2 Eld. S. M. Burdick $2, cr. Wm. Burdick, v 2, J. B. Wells $2, cr. Daniel Truman, v 2. H. S. Crandall $2, cr. Benjamin West, Benjamin Stelle $2, v 2, E. S. Bailey $8, cr. G. Armsbury $4,25, v 1, 2, Charles Green $1, Adonis Trowbridge $2,25, v 1, self, 50. R. T. Green, $2,25, cr. Waite Clark, $1, D. Hardin $3, cr. Jabish Brown, jr. $2, v 2, Asa Lanphear, $1 v 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 29 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street joining the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

SIX CENTS REWARD!

RANAWAY from the subscriber, on the 16th inst., JOSEPH PRATT, an indented apprentice to the Farming Business. All persons are hereby notified that I shall pay no debts of his contracting, after this date. Said Boy was 16 years of age in March last. Whoever will return said boy shall receive the above reward. 61w3.

MARTILLUS C. WOLCOTT.

Otselic, April 21, 1841.

POETRY.

To the Freed Men of the Amistad.

"O, give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good; for his mercy endureth forever.

Let the redeemed say so, whom He hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy.

For he hath broken the gates of brass, and cut the bars of iron in sunder."

"O, magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt His name together."—Psalms of David.

"The captives are free! * * * 'Not unto us, O, Lord, not unto us,' but to thy name be all the glory."—Letter from John Quincy Adams.

Brethren beloved! God-cast upon our shore—
We greet ye now as captive men no more!
The fiat comes that Heaven ordained to be,
And freemen hail ye as among the free,
O, Brethren! 'tis a sadly pleasing hour—
A mingled issue of Jehovah's power:
For 'twas His power that swayed the helmsman's hand—
That brought ye strangers to our native land.
He turned the rudder of your 'friendly*' bark,
And blew the winds that bore ye in the dark.

The sun was not against thee—Cinque! No!
Nor yet in hate did midnight breezes blow:
That sun in love shone down upon the Sea—
And swilled those gales—your wings to liberty!
O, wondrous mercy of our wondrous Lord!
He held your vessel, and ye all on board,
Where not one ray, nor yet one puff of air,
But did His bidding as ye floated there!
O, how were they despoiled, and such as they,
Who sought to make ye here an easy prey!
'Twas to AMERICA they sailed: ay here—
This land to Liberty and Slavery dear!
Bright was their hope, with Old Montaug in view,
That they were free to make bond slaves of you!
"Ho! for the land," they cried, "whose banner waves
Its stars and stripes of Freedom over slaves!
Tis just the land for us!—so rich—so free—
'Twill sell us bonds for those now in the Sea:
Bonds that those black-skinned pirates may not dare
From off their limbs again in battle tear!
Hail! First Republic! 'Glorious Union, Hail!
See! pilot, see! the sun is down! Make sail!"

Such were the words, my Brethren! that they spoke,
As o'er the decks ye strode on Slavery's yoke—
Such were their thoughts, as they beguiled your way
Far from the land to which ye steered by day.
But God was in them all! nor word, nor thought,
Hath failed to work the freedom God hath wrought!
Brethren! 'twas God—our God—who led your feet
Where Yankee rivers with Ocean meet;
'Twas he who kept you, as ye roamed the beach,
Safe from the tyrant overseer's reach;
'Twas He veered North instead of South the prow
That sped ye here to share deliverance now!
And from that hour to this—through every change
His gracious wisdom taught your fate to range—
Our God—our father's own—hath been your God,
To break in shiver's the oppressor's rod!
O, love HIM Brethren! Give HIM every heart—
And from His precepts never more depart.

God shall direct ye still. Would ye remain,
In Western valley, or on Eastern plain!
Or, would ye hasten to your natal shore,
And tell of Christ and Freedom Afric o'er!
Would ye the Bible spread in Mendi's shades,
And plant the cross in Guina's everglades!
Where loved Lomboke stretches forth its Bay,
Would ye build shrines to God, and praise and pray!
Where Gambia flows, and where the Niger rolls
Its lengthened currents by the fruitful knolls;
Ay, where at home the Atlantic pours its flood,
Would ye go publish of the Savior's blood?
Then look, O, look to God!—look to your Guide
By night and day across the Ocean's tide;
Look! and plain paths shall grow where'er ye tread,
And cloud and fire be pillared o'er your head!
Go where ye go, our ruined world to save,
To burst the bonds of every human slave!
Go, help Redemption's song o'er Earth to swell!
Dear Brethren! tis a Brother's prayer: Farewell!
Farewell!

CHARLES W. DENISON.

---

* The Spanish word L'Amistad means—Friendship.

Miscellaneous Department.

From the Protestant Vindicator.

JUGGERNAUT.

Juggernaut is the name of a Hindoo Idol, and also of a town which is the principal place of his worship, situated in the province of Orissa, on the Western shore of the Bay of Bengal, between two and three hundred miles westward of Calcutta. There are many temples of this idol in different places, and great numbers of his cars in Bengal. The god Juggernaut [the lord of the world] is one of the terrestrial deities of the Hindoos. His origin is thus stated by Dr. Ward in his view of the History, Literature, and Religion of the Hindoos.

"Krishnu [another Hindoo terrestial god, one of the forms of Vishnoo the celestial god who is the source of all the Hindoo incantations,] in some period of Hindoo history, was accidentally killed by Ungunu, a hunter; who left the body to rot under the tree where it fell. Some pious persons, however, collected the bones Krishnu, and placed them in a box, where they remained till Indrudhoomnu, King who was performing religious austerities to obtain some favour of Vishnoo, was directed by the latter to form the image of Juggernaut, and put into its belly those bones of Krishnu, by which means he should obtain the fruit of his austerities. Indrudhoomnu inquired who should make this image; and was commanded to pray to Vishwukurmu [son of Brumha, and the creator and architect of the gods.] He did so, and obtained his request;—but Vishwukurmu, at the same time, declared, that if any one disturbed him while preparing the image, he would leave it in an unfinished state. He then began, and in one night built a temple upon the blue mountain of Orissa, and proceeded to prepare the image in the temple. But the impatient king, after waiting fifteen days, went to the spot, on which Vishwukurmu desisted from his work and left the god without hands or feet. The king was very much disconcerted; but on praying to Brumha, he promised to make the image famous in its present shape. Indrudboomnu now invited all the gods to be present at the sitting up of his image.—Brumha himself acted as high priest, and gave eyes and a soul to the god which completely established the fame of Juggernaut."

"The worship of this god," says Dr. Ward, "is performed in the temples every morning and evening; at which time people come to see the god, or prostrate themselves before him. During the intervals of worship, and after the god has partaken of the offerings he is laid down to sleep, when the temple is shut up till the next hour of worship. There are two annual festivals at Bengal in honour of this god; the Snanuyatra, and the Ruthuyatra. At the Snanoyatra, this lord of the world, wrapped in a cloth is carried out and placed on a seat on a large terrace built in an open space near the temple. Here the Brahmins, surrounded by an immense concourse of spectators, bathe the god, by pouring water on his head during the reading of the incantations. The people, at the close of the ceremony make obeisance, some by lifting their hands to their foreheads, and others by prostration, and then depart, assured by the shasters, that they shall be subject to no more births, but be admitted to heaven after the death of the body. The Brahmins then wipe this creator of the world, and carry him back to the temple; after which the ceremonies of worship are performed before him with great show. About seventeen days after the Snanuyatra, the Ruthuyatra, or car festival is held. The car belonging to the image near Serampore is between thirty and forty cubits high. It has sixteen wheels, two horses, and one coachman, all of wood. Juggernaut, his brother Boloram, and his sister, Shubudra, are drawn up with ropes tied round the neck, and seated on benches in an elevated part of the carriage. The crowd draw the carriage by means of hawsers. Their shouts, as it proceeds, may be heard at the distance of a mile.—Being arrived at the appointed spot, the Brahmins take out the images, and carry them to the temple of some other god, or to a place prepared for them, where they remain eight days. The car stands empty during this time, and the crowd flock to gaze at the indecent figures alluding to the abominations of the gods, which are painted all over it. At the end of eight days, the god is again up by the neck, placed in the car, and carried back to the place whence he came. Persons frequently cast themselves under the wheels of this ponderous car, and are crushed to death. This festival is intended to celebrate the diversions of Krishnu and the milkmaids, with whom he used to ride out in his chariot."

TOO MUCH COLOR IN THE BRUSH.—If there be any kind of mannerism that is universal among mankind, it is that of coloring too highly the things we describe. We cannot be content with a simple relation of truth; we must exaggerate: we must overdraw: we must have "a little to much red in the brush." Who ever heard of a dark night that was not "pitch dark?"—of a stout man that was not "strong as a horse?"—or of a miry road that was not "up to the knees?"—I would walk "fifty miles on foot" to see that man who never caricatures the subject on which he speaks but where is such a man to be found? From "rosy morn to dewy eve," in our common conversation, we are constantly outraging the truth. If somewhat wakeful in the night, we have "scarcely had a wink of sleep;" if our sleeves get a little damp in a shower, we are as wet as if dragged through a brook;" if a breeze blow up while we are in the chops of the channel, the waves are sure to "run mountains high;" and if a man grow rich, we all say that he "rolls in money.,' No later than yesterday, a friend of mine, who would shrink from a wilful misrepresentation, told me hastily, as he passed, that the newspaper had "nothing in it but advertisements;" and that he had just sent off, by the Shrewsbury coach, a "codfish as big as a jackass."

The habit of decoration in describing common things, most likely proceeds from that love of the marvellous which most mankind entertain. We wish to affect the minds of others; what is the use of telling a tale that will excite no wonder? or making a complaint that calls forth no sympathy? or of representing a deed of injustice that will rouse no indignation? We wish to make our picture striking: and thus, like the painter, are induced to put "a little too much color in the brush."

But if we be thus in things little affecting us, still more is it the case where interest is concerned. In such cases the most unblushing misrepresentations are made. Every newspaper has its "bargainists—great savings—and its immense sacrifices," "fish all alive" is not too strong a term for the unhealthy, tainted, scaly fry offered for sale. The Irish cloth of the mercer is "fine as cambric;" the stale meat of the butcher "sweet as a nut;" and the cheesemonger's hard, tough, lean cheese "as fat as butter." These are general remarks. How far do they affect you? To this inquiry may be added another.—How far do they affect Ephraim Holding? I am sadly afraid that we both are culpable. Not that I plead guilty myself, or tax you with wilful misrepresentation, for the purpose of forwarding any individual interest, but that I feel that we are both amenable to the charge of speaking lightly and thoughtlessly; that we both by putting occasionally "a little too much color in the brush," leave impressions not warranted by the facts we relate.

EPHRAIM HOLDING.

Important Discovery.—The following is translated from a recent number of the Gazette des Deux Mondes of Paris:

"Some days ago Baron Dupotet presented to the Academy of Medicine a Deaf Mute, ten years of age, whose speech and hearing he had restored by a magnetic process. The Academy immediately appointed a commission to inquire into the truth of a fact which threatens to overturn all provious notions of science. Their report is looked for anxiously.

"Since that time the Baron submitted to his process a deaf mute of the age of five years. A certificate of a member of the Academy of Medicine proves that the Baron was evident, for at the end of three sittings the child heard and repeated every word pronounced in its presence. We have seen this ourselves.

"Assurance has been given us, which we dare not doubt, that the Baron has cured nineteen persons similarly afflicted."

From the Anti-Slavery Reporter.

DESTINATION OF THE LIBERATED AFRICANS.

Many of the friends of these Mendians have expressed a hope that when they shall be prepared to return to their native lands, and the way is opened to their reaching Mendi, that competent Christian teachers will accompany them with a view to remaining, and establishing the Christian religion in the interior of Africa. One or more young men, who are preparing to preach the gospel, and who have already the confidence of these Africans, have thought of going with them, if there should be a reasonable prospect that they will be able to reach Mendi. We look upon this plan with deep interest, and we doubt not that Christian abolitionists, as well as other friends of the Redeemer, will rejoice that the return of Cinque and his companions to their kindred and homes will be the occasion of introducing to their benighted countrymen, the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Three or four of these men are hopefully converted, and it is earnestly desired that many of them will, during their abode in this country, become Christians. What an opening will there be for the introduction of the religion of the cross into Mendi! These men full of grateful emotions towards those who have befriended them when exposed to the loss of liberty or life—who have instructed them in the elements of knowledge, and the religion of Jesus—who have administered to their temporal wants—who have taught them useful labor—will carry to their homes, and to their pagan friends, the Bible, a knowledge of the God of the Bible, useful trades, implements of agriculture, civilization and Christianity. They will introduce to their countrymen some of those who have befriended them in a distant land—who cheered them when sinking into despondency—who wept with them when in terror of perpetual slavery or death—who rejoiced with them when they were delivered from the oppressor and those who had no pity—who have taught them to read, write, cypher, &c.—who have instructed them to pray, who have led them to the foot of the cross—and they will say to their astonished kindred and friends—"For we were an hungered, and they gave us meat; we were thirsty, and they gave us drink; we were strangers and they took us in: naked and they clothed us; we were sick and they visited us; we were in prison, and they came to us." They have spoken to us of the God of the oppressed—of the Savior of sinners—of the way of salvation—and have persuaded some of us to yield our hearts to the Lamb of God who take away the sins of the world. Receive them as men of God—as messengers of the skies; receive and obey their message; renounce your superstition—your pagan rites—your barbarism—and come with us to the light and enjoyment of civilization and Christianity."

Surely no missionary—no religious teacher—since the days of the apostles, ever possessed greater facilities for securely and successfully exerting an influence in a heathen land, than would be enjoyed by those pious men who may be privileged to accompany the Mendians into the interior of Africa. We hope that their friends in the United States will prayerfully reflect upon these things, and that they will bear them, those who superintend them, and those who contemplate accompanying them, in their hearts daily to the throne of grace. We have no sectarian views in reference to these interesting foreigners, and we trust that such arrangements will be made in regard to them that Christians of all denominations may unite in promoting their temporal and spiritual welfare, and in contributing to send the gospel with them, whenever they shall return to Mendi. This will be an era in the missionary movements.—It will call forth the benefactions of thousands who now give little or nothing to such funds, and will excite the prayers of many who will see God's hand in the singular and wonderful providence that led these men to these shores—that protected them when exposed to the machinations of enemies—that granted them deliverance in the hour of their anxiety—that led them to embrace the Savior, and carried them on eagles' wings to the country of their nativity, as heralds of salvation to their benighted countrymen.

Children's Department.

From the Youth's Companion.

A LITTLE BOY'S LETTER ANSWERED.

Mr. Willis,—I met with this in a French paper, published in the Canton of Vaud, in Switzerland, and it has been translated. It is too touching to be lost. Yours &c.,

C. S.

A little child from C——, in Germany, had just lost his father, and found himself left, by this sad event, without the means of continuing his education. He was particularly desirous of entering an institution, founded by the pious Christians, known under the name of Moravians; it was his mother's wish likewise. But without money, without friends, without protectors, poor and unknown, he had but little hope in the world. Fortunately for our young orphan, he had heard of "Him who is rich towards all who call upon him;"—of that Friend of the unfortunate—that great and powerful Protector, who disposes of the gold and silver, as he does of the heart, according to his good pleasure—of Jesus, who says, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

The child trusted entirely on the word of this good Savior; he believed in him, and desired to petition him. "But how shall I go to Jesus?" said our little orphan to himself. "I will write him a letter, in which I will tell him all. This he did in nearly these words:

"My dear Lord Jesus Christ:

"I have lost my father, and we are very poor; but thou hast said in thy word, that whatever we should ask of God in thy name, he will grant it to us. I believe what thou hast said, Lord Jesus. Therefore, I pray thee, my God, in the name of Jesus, to furnish my mother with the means of placing me at the Moravian Institution. I should like so much to continue my education, I pray thee, good Jesus, to grant my request. I love thee already, but I will love thee still more,—give me likewise wisdom and all that is good. Adieu, &c."

The child folded the letter, and addressed it "To our Lord Jesus Chrst in Heaven." Afterwards seriously, but with a heart full of hope, he carried it to the Post Office. The postmaster, on seeing the address, thought it must be the letter of some lunatic, and threw it aside. But after finishing his work, he took it up again, and attentively examining the writing, observed it was that of a child; he opened it, and was strongly affected by reading his infantile prayer, which he communicated to the Moravian of his acquaintance. The latter read the letter in a society of the brethren. The Baroness of Lippe, who was present, considered these circumstances as an appeal addressed to her by the Savior. She took the young orphan under her protection, and placed him at the much desired institution. Thus the letter arrived at its destination and was answered.

From the Youth's Cabinet.

"SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN TO COME UNTO ME."

Jesus, when he was upon the earth, spent his whole time in doing good to those around him. But he did not forget little children. You know it is said they were brought to him that he might bless them; and when the disciples rebuked those that brought them, he said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me," Why did he want children to come unto him? He added, "For of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Now, children, after such encouraging words from the lips of the Savior, how can any of you think, for a moment, of living without a change of heart and loving this Jesus? I believe those children were very young, for it says that when they were "brought" to him, "he took them in his arms" and blessed them. I don't say that they come to him. No doubt they were as young as any of the readers of the Cabinet, and if so, children, why do not you go to Jesus? He wants you to come unto him. He loves little children, and there is great encouragement for you. How many persons are there in the Bible who love the Lord when very young? You have read of Abel, Joseph, Josiah, Samuel, Daniel, the three young persons who were thrown into the fiery furnace; John the Baptist, who was filled with the Holy Ghost from his earliest infancy; Timothy, who knew the Scriptures from a child, and probably many others.

When Jesus the Savior, says; "Suffer little children to come," it shows us clearly that there is no difficulty in the way but what you make yourself. Jesus is ready; he wants to bless you, and make you happy. Don't you want to be happy? Say children, don't you want to get to heaven when you die? Then give your heart to Jesus. "They that seek me early shall find me," says the Bible. Seek him now; pray to him expecting he will answer your prayer. Stop doing those things that are wrong. Think of God's goodness, accept of his mercy, and try to love Him above every thing else. Believe in Jesus, that he died for your sins—that he has promised to save you. Has he not pomised, "He that comes to me I will in no wise cast out." You know this is true. Now believe him. Take his word, and he will save you. Be so sorry for having sinned, that you will never do so again. This is the way to seek him. Think about Jesus, who came from a glorious heaven to die on the shameful cross, that he might open the way for you to escape from everlasting contempt," and enjoy blessings which mortal eye hath not seen, nor ear heard. Read your Bible, and may God bless it to your salvation.

SIMON.

Agricultural Department.

From the Yankee Farmer.

STIR THE EARTH OFTEN.

It is necessary to stir the earth often among vegetables, not only for the purpose of keeping down the weeds, but for the purpose of keeping it loose for the passage of the roots, for the admission of the air and water, and to form finely pulverized soil on top as a protection against drought. When the earth is hard, the water in time of rain will run off from some places, where a mellow soil on top would readily imbibe it.

In some cases we have observed that after a powerful rain where the ground was hard it was not wet down half an inch, while it was thoroughly wet where the surface was loose and fine. In dry weather the advantages of frequent stirring the soil are equally great; it prevents in a measure the evaporation of the moisture, as loose earth will not conduct off the moisture, so readily as close earth.

We are aware that some persons will say "it is a poor rule that will not work both ways," and if loose earth readily absorbs rain, it will allow the escape of moisture, but this is not the case as experiments plainly prove and we must be governed by facts that are well established, though there may be a seeming inconsitency from our not understanding the operations of nature.

Water falls down by its own weight and will readily sink into the loose earth, running down between the particle; but if the ground be close and hard, and very dry, it will run off barely wetting the surface. The dryness which at first view would lead one to suppose that it would at once imbibe the water, serves only to repel it. This peculiar property of very dry substances is shown by throwing water on a floor where there is much dry dust. It will remain in large drops, and be blown about over the floor, as the dry dust repels the drops and prevents their spreading.

The evaporation of moisture from the ground, is by a differet process in nature, from that of gravitation by which the water falls or tends downwards; in evaporation it is drawn up and passes through some medium, first through the top of the earth and then through the air. Fine particles of earth are a poor medium for conducting off the moisture under the surface, while it readily passes off through a close, hard body of earth. This fact will appear evident to any one, who, in a dry time, examines the state of the soil as to the moisture, below the fine, loose earth that is often stirred, and the hard earth in the path or place beside it, that has long remained unmoved.

Many experiments have been made by hoeing frequently in a very dry time, part of a piece of land on which corn or vegetables were growing, and leaving a part; and it has been found that the crops suffered much less from drought where the earth was often stirred.

Writers on the advantage of frequently hoeing, attribute its valuable effect, in this respect, to the dews penetrating more rapidly the fine earth, and passing to the roots of plants, this opinion is erroneous, for a heavy dew will penetrate the fine earth but little—It will lay mostly on the top, and soon evaporate when the sun shines upon it.

In this country the dews are too light to penetrate to the roots of the plants, as they do not go so deep. The great object is to retain the moisture in the earth, and prepare the surface to receive and convey the rains directly downward, even when they come suddenly, in plentiful showers, and this is done most effectually by stirring the earth frequently and finely.

Some farmers hoe the corn only twice, excepting they cut up the weeds after the haying season is over, to prevent their producing seed. Others use a light horse-harrow, and stir the earth frequently, thinking there is a great advantage in this method that will repay the trifling expense, which is but trifling where the ground is light and free from obstructions.

BIRDS.—We some times preach of birds—but what is the use of preaching? Our practice has been for years not to let a single bird be shot on our premises. No, not even a cherry bird that comes without leave for his bag full of fruit, and retires again without even singing for his supper. Even the crow, the terror of the planter by the wood-side, is more fond of mice than of corn, and though he likes a few kernels during a very short season in the spring to make up his meal, he probably does us more good than harm by reducing the number of the numerous vermin that infest our fields. One half bushel of corn sown on a field of six acres will effectually protect all we bury in the earth. And what is the expense? It may be forty cents for a whole season. How little compared with the expense of trying to kill them.

In regard to all other birds at least, farmers should strictly forbid their destruction on any part of their premises. We are likely to be overrun with worms, if we don't persuade the birds to help us. Robins will build their nest close to our doors if we make no war upon them—for they fear the hawks when they build near the woods.—Boston Cultivator.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

200
PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATIONS
OF THE
HOLY BIBLE,
CONSISTING OF
VIEWS IN THE HOLY LAND.
BY ROBERT SEARS.

THE FIFTH EDITION of the first volume of the above work is issued from the press of ROBERT SEARS, 122 Nassau Street, New York.

It is a book of 400 large octavo pages, and is done up in the neatest typographical manner, bound in muslin, and lettered in a superior style; containing over 200 engravings of an interesting and beneficial character.

Those wishing to subscribe for the above valuable work can be accommodated by applying to the subscriber, who has the agency for this town and vicinity. A specimen of the Book can be seen at this Office The price is extremely low, for a book of the size, so well stored with interesting and useful matter, and reflects much credit, in every respect, upon its enterprising publisher. Subscriptions are respectfully solicited, and the work will be ordered immediately for as many hundred as may wish to avail themselves of this opportunity of making so rich an addition to their Family Libraries, at so small an expense. Price only TWO DOLLARS.

A. H. BURDICK, Agent.
Register Office, De Ruyter, April 30, 1841.

Head Quarters for BOOTS & SHOES.
Wholesale and retail. As cheap as the cheapest and good as the best.

THE Public are invited to call and examine for themselves. He keeps on hand Fine and Coarse Boots and Shoes, of every description, Ladies French Buskins and single sole Slips, White and Black satin slips, made to order. The Ladies are invited to call and examine the latest New York fashions. ☞Utica St. Sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.

De Ruyter, April 26, 1841. 61tf.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.
J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store.) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

De Ruyter, April 22, 1841.

SHERIFFS SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Supreme Court of Judicature, of the State of New York, and to me delivered, I have levied upon the right, title and interest of Stephen G. Sears in and to a certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being, in the Village of De Ruyter, county of Madison, and bounded as follows: on the north by the turnpike road, on the east by lands owned by Noah B. Foote, on the south by lands owned, or in possession of, John Starr, on the west by lands owned by Marvin M. Hamilton, which I shall expose to sale at public Vendue, as the Law directs, at the house of Wm C. Gage, on Saturday, the 22d day of May next, at 1 o'clock, P. M.

Dated, De Ruyter, April 10, 1841. 59w6
ISAAC BROWN, SHERIFF.
By T. ORVILLE ELMORE, Deputy.

WANTED.

IMMEDIATELY wanted a good workman in the business of Wagon making. Also, a Smith acquainted with the business, to whom good encouragement will be given. 56tf

JOHN MAXSON.
April 12th 1841.

HOUSE TO LET.

A PLEASANT and convenient tenement is still to let, in the House occupied last year by Mr Clark on the estate of the late L. B Goodwin.

JOHN MAXSON.
April 12th, 1841. 59tf

Medicines! Medicines!!
TO FAMILIES.

S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public, for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co's
MOTHER'S RELIEF.
JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT—
DR MUNN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—
MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—
DOCT. BISHOP'S ANTI BILLIOUS PILLS-
A HIGHLY VALUABLE FAMILY MEDICINE.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

GEO. W. SUTTON.
De Ruyter, March 19, 1840.

BOOKS! BOOKS!! BOOKS!!
EDWIN P. BLY,

WOULD respectfully inform the citizens of De Ruyter and the public generally, that he has for sale Books of most kinds and descriptions usually called for in a country Book Store. The following are a few, viz:—Daviess Geometry, do Surveying, do. Algebra, do Arithmetic, do First Lessons in Arithmetic. Also, almost all kinds of Latin, Greek and Italian, Olney's Geography & Atlas, Burnet's Geography of the Heavens.

Common Schools can be supplied with Books for a Library.

BOOK BINDING

Done in a neat and durable manner, and as cheap as can be done in any other place, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany St., De Ruyter.

De Ruyter, November 1st, 1840. 35tf

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail. He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to

ELISHA STILLMAN.
De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

WANTED—Any qunatity of RAGS wanted in exchange for BOOKS, at the sign of the Mammoth Book, No. 3, Albany-st.

De Ruyter, Dec. 16, 1840.

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 11.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 63.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, MAY 14, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Religious Discussion.

For the Register.

Reasons for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity.

NO. IV.

MR. EDITOR.—My fourth reason for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity is, that the texts which are commonly adduced in its support, do not appear to me, upon a fair construction and comparison with the general scope of the Bible, to contain it. There is no passage which appears definitely to teach it; whereas there are many which definitely and unequivocally teach the contrary, as I have attempted, in my previous numbers, to show. I feel perfectly ready, and hold myself sacredly bound to meet the arguments from these texts—yea, I am anxious to meet them for the truth's sake. But it has occurred to me, that it is most proper to defer my main remarks, until Br. Johnson shall have had opportunity to reply to the previous numbers, and shall have brought forward those texts in support of what he conceives to be the true theory. I shall, therefore, in this number attempt nothing more than a mere glance at the method, while I purpose to take in disposing of the texts referred to; and shall suspend further communications, until I see his reply to my arguments, and his vindication of the doctrine in question; unless you shall think it most advisable for me to proceed immediately to make my intended comments on these texts. In regard to three principle texts which are supposed to present the doctrine of the Trinity at one view, viz. Matt. xxviii. 19, 2 Cor. xiii. 14, and 1 John v. 7, I would observe, that the clause in the first which reads, "baptizing them in the name," &c., should be translated "baptizing them into the name," &c., which very much modifies the sense. The second, as it stands in the common version, which is correct, does not teach the doctrine of the Trinity. The third, I believe, with many of the most learned and candid Trinitarians, is spurious. It was manifestly not contained in the original inspired copy; but has been added since. But if genuine, it simply teaches that the three heavenly witnesses are one in their testimony that Jesus is the Son of God—not that they are one God. The argument from the ascription of divine titles to Jesus Christ, I shall meet, by showing that the title, Jehovah, uncompounded with any other term, is never applied to him; but invariably belongs to the Father: and that the title God, which is, in a few instances, applied to him, is so applied in a subordinate or modified sense; on the same principle that it is applied to magistrates and angels. Several of the passages in which this title is supposed to be applied to Christ are addresses or doxologies to the Father. The argument in favor of his equality with God, which is based on two passages, viz. John v. 18, and Phil. ii. 6, I shall dispose of in this way. The first contains a slander uttered against Jesus by the Jews; and the second is a mistranslation. The alledged ascription of Divine attributes to him, I shall show to be a mistake. His power is derived, or given, not original and absolute. His knowledge also is denied. He is said to know all things in a modified sense, not in a sense which implies absolute and essential omniscience. The term everlasting is applied to him, in respect of the part, in the known qualified or limited sense which it often bears. His engagement to be with his worshiping people "whenever gathered together in his name," and with his ministers "always, even to the end of the world," implies his being virtually present with them, or present in spirit, or present by his advocate, which is the spirit of his Father, promised him in its gifts and operations to carry on the work of redemption, or, at most, present by such an extent of mind, or largeness of capacity, as enables him to be, at one and the same time, wherever his subjects exist, or wherever they require his presence and aid, without implying absolute omnipresence. His immutability, strictly speaking, is not affirmed. The argument therefore is based on two passages, viz. Heb. i. 10—12, and xiii. 14; the first of which is an apostrophe to the Father, and not addressed to Christ. The second simply affirms that Jesus Christ is the same Savior always that he was at the beginning, having "an unchangeable priesthood;" not that he is, like his Father, "without variableness or shadow of turning." The argument for his essential Deity, founded on the ascription of Divine actions to him, is, I humbly conceive, equally founded in mistake. It is admitted that those works are ascribed to him which God only can do. So are the same kind of works ascribed to Moses, the prophets and the Apostles. But in neither case does this ascription imply that the power by which they were done was their own independently. God did these works by them as his agents. He created and preserves the world by Jesus Christ, and will raise the dead and judge the world by him. The power to forgive sins also was delegated to him. It was in all cases declarative and derived, not original and absolute. It no more proved him to be very God than the power to work miracles. So likewise the title, Savior, was given him in the subordinate sense. "God our Savior" saves "by Jesus Christ our Savior." In the supreme and original sense, God is the only Savior; but in the subordinate sense, Jesus Christ is the Savior—provided and given of God, and the only one appointed to save us from the "wrath to come." And as to the subject of worship, I shall evince a distinction between supreme and subordinate worship. The former belongs to the Father only; but the latter belongs to Christ. He is to be worshiped as the Son of God; the Lamb that was slain, and the Mediator, (which is all suitable and important,) but not to be worshiped as the Supreme God. There is no example of such worship in the Bible.

These things all appear to me to be consistent with the doctrine which I have maintained—gloriously consistent—and to have the seal of truth. But, unless it be thought best for me to state my views more particularly of the texts urged in favor of the Trinity, in this stage of the discussion, I shall patiently wait to hear the reply of Br. Johnson, and hope I shall be prepared to give his statements and reasonings their due weight.

Yours for the whole truth,

JABEZ CHADWICK.

Weedsport, April, 1841.

[It is desired that you should present all of your arguments in connection, before MR. JOHNSON offers his. When you have closed your arguments, he will present his. —ED.

For the Register.

Is it a sin to secularize the Fist-Day of the Week.

As multitudes believe it is a sin, and under the influence of this belief are striving to persuade their fellow-men not to pursue their usual avocations on that day, it is important that the subject should be prayerfully examined and the question decided as the Scripture dictates.

If the Bible sustain the affirmative of the question, then all should unite in correcting the evil. Does the Bible support the affirmative of this question? Has God intimated in his Word that the first-day of the week is the Sabbath, or that it is our duty to keep holy a seventh part of time embracing that day of the week? Certainly, no intimation of this kind can be deduced from the example of our Creator. He commenced the work of creation on the first-day of the week, and rested on the seventh. From the most careful examination of the fourth commandment, we shall not discover that the simple act of laboring on the first-day of the week is sinful, or that we are required to keep that day for the Sabbath. If we turn to the Savior who has "left us an example that we should follow his steps," we shall find that he pursued his usual avocations on that day, and never taught his disciples to do otherwise. If we pass to the Apostles and primitive Christians, we shall not learn from the inspired writer who has given us their history for the first thirty years after the resurrection of Christ, that during this period they ever called the first-day of the week the Sabbath, or regarded it as such.

Luke, who is supposed to have written the Acts of the Apostles, has not informed us of but one religious meeting which they held on the first-day of the week, during the long period of thirty years, except when they had continued meetings, which extended over the Sabbath, and probably embraced all days of the week. This isolated instance of a religious meeting on the first-day of the week is recorded, Acts xx. 7—12. About twenty-seven years prior to the time of the religious meeting just referred to, there was a meeting of the disciples on the evening of the first-day of the week. After eight days from the time of this meeting the disciples were together again, John xx. 26. These two meetings mentioned by John, and one more which occurred after an interval of about twenty-seven years, are the only religious meetings which were held on the first-day of the week of which we have any account, during a period of thirty years after the resurrection of Christ, except at times when they had a continued meeting of weeks or days. Would it not be absurd to conclude that Seventh-day Baptists regarded the first-day of the week for the Sabbath, because, from their history, it was ascertained that at distant intervals, they had happened to come together on that day for religious worship? Is it not equally preposterous to infer that the Apostles, who, it is admitted, were Seventh-day Baptists until after the resurrection of Christ, regarded the first-day of the week for the Sabbath, because it is learned from their history that some of them, during a period of thirty years, were present at three religious meetings on that day of the week? I am surprised that any, who have examined this subject in the light of Scripture, should come to the conclusion that it is sinful to labor on the first-day of the week; or that a seventh part of time should be kept holy, embracing that day. If any of your correspondents, or readers of your paper believe it is sinful to secularize the first-day of the week, I request them to present, through the medium of the Register, their Bible reasons for that belief.

AZOR ESTEE.

Shiloh, April 23d, 1841.

Religious Department.

NATURAL AND REVEALED RELIGION.

The Christian Revelation ought not to be considered as superseding the Religion of Nature, but as carrying it forward to perfection. It introduces the Deity to us under new relations, corresponding to the degraded state into which we have fallen. It is superadded to our natural relations to God, and takes it for granted, that these natural relations must forever subsist. It is true, indeed, that the essential attributes of God, and the principles of Natural Religion, cannot be fully discovered without the light of Revelation, as appears from the past experience of mankind in every generation; but it is equally true, that, when discovered by the aid of this celestial light, they are of the utmost importance in the Christian system, and are as essentially connected with it, as the foundation of a building is with the superstructure.—Many professed Christians, however, seem to think, and to act, as if the Christian Revelation had annulled the natural relations which subsist between man and the Deity; and hence the zealous outcry against every discussion from the pulpit, that has not a direct relation to what are termed the doctrines of grace. But nothing, surely, can be more absurd than to carry out such a principle to all its legitimate consequences. Can God ever cease to be Omnipotent, or can man ever cease to be dependent for existence on his infinite power? Can the Divine Being ever cease to be Omnipresent and Omniscient, or can man ever cease to be the object of his knowledge and superintendence? Can Infinite Wisdom ever be detached from the Almighty, or can man ever be in a situation where he will not experience the effects of his wise arrangement? Can Goodness ever fail of being an attribute of Jehovah, or can any sentient or intelligent beings exist that do not experience the effects of his bounty? In short, can the relation of Creature and of Creator ever cease between the human race, in whatever moral or physical situation they may be placed, and that Almighty Being, "who giveth to all, life and breath, and all things?" If none of these things can possibly happen, then the relations to which we refer must be eternal and unchangeable, and must form the basis of all the other relations in which we can possibly stand to the Divine Being, either as apostate or as redeemed creatures; and, therefore, they ought to be exhibited as subjects for our frequent and serious contemplation, as religious and moral agents. But, unless we make such topics a distinct subject of attention, and endeavor to acquire clear and comprehensive conceptions of our natural relation to God, we can never form a clear conception of those new and interesting relations into which we have been brought by the mediation of Jesus Christ.

If man had continued in his primitive state of integrity, he would have been forever exercised in tracing the power, the beneficence, and other attributes of Deity, in the visible creation alone. Now that his fallen state has rendered additional revelations necessary, in order to secure his happiness—is he completely to throw aside those contemplations and exercises which constituted his chief employment, while he remained a pure moral intelligence? Surely not. One great end of his moral renovation, by means of the gospel must be, to enable him to resume his primitive exercises, and to qualify him for more enlarged views and contemplations of a similar nature, in that future world, where the physical and moral impediments which now obstruct his progress will be completely removed.

It appears highly unreasonable, and indicates a selfish disposition of mind, to magnify one class of the Divine attributes at the expense of another; to extol, for example, the Mercy of God, and neglect to celebrate his Power and Wisdom—those glorious perfections, the display of which, at the formation of our globe, excited the rapture and admiration of angels, and of innocent man. All the attributes of God are equal, because all of them are infinite; and therefore to talk of darling attributes in the Divine Nature, as some have done, is inconsistent with reason, unwarranted by Scripture, and tends to exhibit a distorted view of the Divine character. The Divine mercy ought to be celebrated with rapture by every individual of our fallen race; but with no less rapture should we extol the Divine Omnipotence; for the designs of mercy cannot be accomplished without the intervention of Infinite Power. All that we hope for, in consequence of the promises of God, and of the redemption accomplished by Jesus Christ, must be founded on the conception we form of the operations of Omnipotence. An example or two may not be unnecessary for illustrating this position.

We are warranted, by the sacred oracles, to entertain the hope, that these mortal bodies of ours, after they have mouldered in the dust, been dissolved into their primary elementary parts, and become the prey of devouring reptiles, during a lapse of generations or of centuries—shall spring forth from the tomb to new life and beauty, and be arrayed in more glorious forms than they now wear; yea, that all the inhabitants of our globe, from Adam to the end of time, though the bodies of thousands of them have been devoured by cannibals, have become the food of fishes and of beasts of prey, and have been burnt to cinders, and their ashes scattered by the winds over the different regions of sea and land—shall be re-animated by the voice of the Son of God, and shall appear, each in his proper person and identical body, before God, the Judge of all. Now, the firmness of our hope of so astonishing an event, which seems to contradict all experience, and appears involved in such a mass of difficulties and apparent contradictions, must be in proportion to the sentiments we entertain of the Divine Intelligence, Wisdom, and Omnipotence. And where are we to find the most striking visible displays of these perfections, except in the actual operations of the Creator, within the range of our view in the material world?

Again, we are informed in the same Divine records, that, at some future period, the earth on which we now dwell shall be wrapt up in devouring flames, and its present form and constitution forever destroyed; that its redeemed inhabitants, after being released from the grave, shall be transported to a more glorious reign; and that 'new heavens and a new earth shall appear, wherein dwelleth righteousness." The Divine mercy having given to the faithful the promise of these astonishing revolutions, and most magnificent events, our hopes of their being fully realized, must rest on the Infinite Wisdom and Omnipotence of Jehovah; and, consequently, if our views of these perfections be limited and obscure, our hope, in relation to our future destiny, will be proportionably feeble and languid; and will scarcely perform its office "as an anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast." It is not merely by telling a person that God is All-wise, and All-power, that a full conviction of the accomplishment of such grand events will be produced. He must be made to see with his own eye what the Almighty has already done, and what he is now doing in all the regions of universal nature which lie open to our inspection; and this cannot be effected without directing his contemplation to those displays of intelligence and power which are exhibited in the structure, the economy, and the revolutions of the material world.—Dick.

THOUGHTS FOR THE BACKSLIDER.

Reflect on the State and Exercise of thy Mind in former times.—This was the counsel of the Apostle to the Hebrews, who, disheartened by persecution, were half inclined to go back again into Judaism: "Call to remembrance the former days, in which, after that ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions." This was the counsel of our Lord himself, to the churches of Ephesus and Sardis: "Remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent—remember how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast and repent." Ask thine own soul, "Are there no seasons of tenderness in my life which it would be for my profit to recall to mind? I have professed repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ, and was it only a profession? Was there not a time when my sins were more bitter to me than death, and more dreaded than hell? How is it that I have turned again to folly? Has sin changed its nature, or become less odious? Rather is it not the change in me? Was there not a time when the work of the Lord was precious to my soul; when my Sabbaths were my happiest days, and godly people my chosen companions? Whence this lamentable change? Is Christ or the gospel less precious than heretofore? I once thought that if I might be found in him, and live for ever with him and those that love him, I should not care what I lost or suffered in the present world. And was I in all this deceiving myself? Were my repentance, and faith, and hope, and love, and joy, all counterfeit? I endured reproaches and losses, as I supposed, for his name sake; and is it all in vain? Must I at last be separated for ever from him, and have my portion with unbelievers? "O Lord, have mercy upon me a most wretched caitiff and miserable sinner! I have offended both against heaven and earth more than my tongue can express! Whither then may I go, or whither shall I flee? To heaven I may be ashamed to lift up mine eyes, and on earth I find no place of refuge or succor. To THEE, therefore, O Lord, do I run; to THEE do I humble myself. O Lord, my God, my sins are great: but yet have mercy upon me, for thy great mercy. The great mystery that God became man, was not wrought for small or few offences. Thou didst not give thy Son unto death for little sins only: but for all the greatest sins of the world, so that the sinner returns to thee with his whole heart, as I do here at this present. Wherefore have mercy on me, O God, whose property is always to have mercy. O Lord, I crave nothing for my own merits, but for thy name sake, that it might be hallowed thereby, and for thy dear Son Jesus Christ's sake."*

This part of our Lord's counsel would apply not only to those who have fallen into gross immoralities, but to such as have deserted the principles of the gospel. It was asked the Galatians, through what medium they first received the Spirit; by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? This question proceeds upon the principle of that being the true doctrine which is productive of the best effects; and by the manner in which it is introduced, This ONLY would I learn of you, it is intimated that the solution is of itself sufficient to determine what the true doctrine is. And what are the effects produced by a relinquishment of the doctrines usually denominated evangelical? Nay, I might say, by only a hesitation concerning them? I appeal to those who have made the trial.—Have you the same joy and peace in believing in your present principles, as you had in your former ones? Can you, or do you go to a throne of grace with the same holy freedom as heretofore? Do you feel an equal concern for the salvation of your poor ungodly neighbors? Rather is not the far greater part of your zeal consumed in laboring to make proselytes of serious Christians to your new way of thinking? Does the society of those who are like minded with yourself, afford that inward satisfaction which you once enjoyed in the fellowship of those whom you are now taught to pity as enthusiasts? If while professing those things you are strangers to them, you may answer these questions in the affirmative; but if otherwise they would not. Remember from whence you are fallen, and repent! Remember how you have received and heard, and hold fast, and repent!—Fuller on Backsliding.

---

* That which is included in inverted commas is a part of the prayer of Archbishop Cranmer, who, through fear of man, had denied his faith, but was notwithstanding burned to death. When brought to execution, which was at Oxford, on March 21, 1556, he uttered the above prayer; and on the flames approaching him, first thrust into the fire the hand with which he had signed his recantation.

HUMAN LIFE.—A spirit throws us from on high down into this life, and then counts seventy or eighty, as we do when we throw a stone into a deep crater; and at the seventieth pulsation or year, he hears the hollow sound as we strike the bottom of the grave.

A CONTRAST.—The nettle mounteth on high, while the violet shrouds itself under its own leaves, and is chiefly found out by its fragrancy. Let Christians be satisfied with the honor that cometh from God only. Maton.

Minister's Department.

From the Edinburgh Review.

PULPIT ELOQUENCE.

If we were compelled to give a brief definition of the principal characteristics of this truest style of eloquence, we should say it was "practical reasoning, animated by strong emotion;" or if we might be indulged in what is rather a description than a definition of it, we should say that it consisted in reasoning on topics calculated to inspire a common interest, expressed in the language of ordinary life, and in that brief, rapid, familiar style which natural emotion ever assumes. The former half of this description would condemn no small portion of the compositions called 'Sermons,' and the latter half a still larger portion.

* * * * * *

What can be more hopeless than the attempt to engage the attention, or interest the feelings of a common audience in metaphysical subtleties? And yet abstruse speculations on the 'origin of evil,' on 'moral necessity,' on the 'self-determining power,' on the 'ultimate principles of ethics,' on the 'immortality of the soul,' as proved from its indiscerptibility, and we know not what, on the 'eternal fitness of things,' on the 'moral sense,' with other still more recondite speculations on themes which it is almost impious and perfectly useless to touch, were of common concurrence in our older pulpit literature; and they are not unfrequent, though not pursued to the same extent, even now. For our own parts, we believe that the discussion of such subjects is about as profitable in a popular assembly as would be that of the well known questions, as to whether angels can pass from one point of space to another, without passing through the intermediate points, and whether they can visually discern objects in the dark? * * * *

We gladly admit that the modern pulpit is fast outgrowing these extravagances; that such discussions are both less frequent, and pursued to a much more limited extent than they used to be. Yet it is no uncommon thing to find the young preacher, fresh from his metaphysics or his philosophy, touching upon them just to a sufficient extent to exhaust and dissipate the attention of his audience before he comes to more important and more welcome matter; or indulging in allusions, and employing phraseology with reference to them wholly unintelligible to the mass. Others, and they form a much larger class, are fond of subjects which are only one degree less useful, and which, though they ought not to be excluded from the pulpit, need to be very rarely entered upon. We allude to the discussions connected with 'Natural Theology,' and the first 'Principles of Morals.'—Such preachers are continually proving that there is a God, to those who readily admit there is a divine revelation; that the marks of design in the universe prove that there had a single doubt upon the subject; that death is not an eternal sleep, to those who find no difficulty in admitting that there is a heaven and a hell; that man is a moral agent, to those who can not conceive that he be otherwise; and that those first principles of ethics are certainly true, which even savages themselves would be ashamed to disavow. We say not that such topics should be excluded from the pulpit, but only that they should form a very inferior element in its ordinary prelections. * *

Even where the topics are not such as are fairly open to censure, a large class of preachers, especially amongst the young, grievously err by investing them with the technicalities of science and philosophy; either because they foolishly suppose they thereby give their compositions a more philosophical air, or because they disdain the homely and the vulgar. We remember hearing of a worthy man of this class, who having occasion to tell his audience the simple truth, that there was not one Gospel for the rich and another for the poor, informed them, that "if they would not be saved on 'general principles,' they could not be saved at all!" With such men it is not sufficient to say, that such and such a thing must be, but there is always a 'moral or physical necessity' for it. The will is too old-fashioned a thing to be mentioned, and everything is done by volition; duty is expanded into 'moral obligation;' men not only ought to do this, that, or the other, it is always by 'some principle of their moral nature;' they not only like to do so and so, but they are 'impelled by some natural propensity;' men not only think and do, but they are never represented as thinking and doing without some parade of their 'intellectual processes and active powers.' Such discourses are full of 'moral beauty,' and 'necessary relations,' and 'philosophical demonstrations,' and 'laws of nature,' and 'a priori and a posteriori arguments." If some simple fact of physical science is referred to in the way of argument or illustration, it can not be presented in common language, but must be exhibited in the pomp of the most approved scientific technicalities. If there be a common and scientific name for the same object, ten to one that the latter is adopted. Heat straightway becomes 'caloric,' lightning, the 'electric fluid;' instead of plants and animals, we are surrounded by 'organized substances;' life is nothing half so good as the 'vital principle;' phenomena of all kinds are very plentiful; these phenomena are 'developed,' and 'combined,' and 'analyzed,' and, in short, done every thing with, except being made intelligible. Not only is such language as this obscurely understood, or not understood at all, but even if perfectly understood, must necessarily be far less effective than those simple terms of common life, which for the most part may be substituted for them * * *

Equally at variance with common sense are the topics which some few preachers, much addicted to Biblical criticism, but strangely ignorant of its practical uses, and the limits within which alone it can be properly applied, sometimes think proper to introduce into sermons. Their talk is much of 'collations of manuscripts,' of 'various readings,' of the 'Vulgate,' of 'Coptic and Syriac versions,' of 'interpolations,' of the 'original languages,' of 'Hebrew points,' &c. &c. &c. They totally forget, if they ever knew, that all these things are the mere instruments with which they work; and that the results, expressed in simple language, and without any ostentatious technicalities, are all with which the people have to do. If such a man were building a house, he would doubtless suffer the scaffolding to stand about it as a notable embellishment; or if he were employed to lay down a carpet, he would leave the hammer and nails upon the floor as memorials of his labor and ingenuity. * * * *

Well would it be if in this respect, as well as in others, the preacher would make the Bible the object of his sedulous imitation. It is every where a practical book, it contains no over-curious speculations, no superfluous subtleties. On the contrary, it has often been remarked that there is a singular silence maintained in that volume on all that tends merely to gratify our curiosity. The very mysteries it discloses, it discloses only so far as is necessary for some practical purpose; whilst it every where views man just as in common life man views himself and his fellows—recognizing at once, without discussion, all those facts connected with our intellectual and moral constitution, the true theory of which has occasioned such endless differences and inquiries in the schools.

False religion is but a corruption of the true. The true must have been first; for no counterfeit can come before the genuine coin.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, May 14, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

The Register.

A correspondent in whose judgment and zeal for the truth we have great confidence, writes thus: "There are a number in this neighborhood that I think ought to take the paper, but they think they cannot afford to do it. I wish S. D. Baptists would all feel the importance of helping sustain the Register, and let that be the first paper that they would support, and let political papers come in by and by." We, of course, would be glad to furnish every S. D. Baptist with the Register, and we shall endeavor to make it worthy of their support. We are aware, with our correspondent, that many prefer a political to a religious paper. This disposition we regard as a good index of the mind and feelings. If Christians felt as much zeal for the kingdom of Christ as for political parties, we should suppose that they would be as ready to take a religious as a political paper. It is certainly a thing much to be lamented, that there is so much cause to suppose that the professed followers of the Lamb love earthly things better than heavenly. They that are of the spirit, mind the things of the spirit.

The very common excuse that political papers are better for the news, is hypothetical. We furnish as much news that is of value as common political papers, and do it as soon as they. Besides this, we furnish news relative to the kingdom of Christ, which, to the Christian, is of the most value.

We shall make all reasonable efforts to sustain a press in our denomination, and this we trust we shall be able to accomplish. Nothing shall be wanting on our part, and the cordiality with which our wishes have been met, generally, induces the belief that our brethren appreciate the importance of coming to our aid. We trust we shall be able to render the paper as interesting and profitable as heretofore, and that those who wish to take it will ever hail it as a welcome messenger to their house. If others wish the paper who have not as yet taken it, we can supply them to any amount.

De Ruyter Institute.

The Summer Term in this Institution has again opened with about its usual number of scholars.

Those who are acquainted with this school, need not that we should speak a word in its praise. Among its patrons it has a good reputation, and, so far as we know, all have been fully satisfied.—The facilities for obtaining a thorough English, Classical, or Scientific education, are good, and the Trustees are disposed to offer every encouragement to its patrons that are desirable.

One great barrier that has hindered S. D. Baptists from standing on an equality with others in education, is now removed. They can now study the Natural Sciences or Classics without losing one day in a week more than others, and can pursue them to any extent desirable in this Institute.

The Institute is every year getting freeer of the embarrassments that have, from its commencement, clogged its operations to some extent, and it is confidently expected that a few months more will free it from its embarrassments, and place it where its friends have desired to see it, free of any thing to hinder its operations. Its friends are desired to make every reasonable exertion to increase the number of scholars, and to give it a fair place among schools of the higher order. Few (if any,) schools offer better facilities than can be had here. There are competent teachers in every department of study, and apparatus for demonstrating problems in Mathematics, Chemistry, and Natural Philosophy. Arrangements have been made for additional apparatus for experiments, &c., to accompany the Lectures on Chemistry.

Abolitionism.

We thank our friend "Philanthropos" for his suggestion on this subject, and, in reply, we remark that we have not, and do not intend to present any other than a religious view of the subject. As a conductor of a religious press, we feel ourselves bound to guard the interests of religion. Slavery, we regard as directly opposed to its fundamental principles, causing a direct or indirect violation of nearly every precept of the Decalogue, and also directly opposed to the genius and spirit of the Gospel of the Son of God. Regarding it thus, we could not satisfy ourselves did we not "cry aloud and spare not," and lift up our voices against this so enormous a sin. The Register knows nothing of Abolitionism as a political scheme, nor will it so long as our views remain as at present.

For the Register.

Exposition of the latter part of the 7th of Romans.

NO. III.

Verse 22, "For I delight in the law of God, after the inward man." This passage is interpreted by some, as representing, taken in connection with the other parts of the chapter, the high and holy state of the Apostle when he wrote it, and, therefore, the whole representation must be applied to christian experience, as we never can expect to advance higher in holiness, than did this devoted preacher of righteousness.

The phrase, "inward man," simply considered, barely means the soul, or rational part of man in opposition to the body of flesh, which is its usual signification, as has been shown by several Authors.

Dr. Clark says, "To say that the inward man means the regenerate part of the soul is supported by no argument—Ho eso anthropos, ho entos anthropos, especially the latter are expressions frequently in use among the purest Greek ethic writers to signify the soul or rational part of man in opposition to the body of flesh: see the quotations in Wetstein from Plato and Plotinus. The Jews have the same form of expression; so in Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 10. 3, it is said, The flesh is the inward garment of the man; but the SPIRIT is the INWARD man the garment of which is the body: and St. Paul uses the phrase in precisely the same sense, in 2 Cor. iv. 16, and in Eph. iii. 16.

The expression, "I delight in the law of God," is considered inapplicable to an unregenerated person by those who think the Apostle is here representing the character of a Christian, and that it is impossible for any but those who have actually experienced the salvation of the gospel, to make such an acknowledgement in regard to the law of God.

We shall now proceed to adduce arguments in proof of a contrary position, viz. that such an admiration of the Divine precepts, as is here expressed, is perfectly consonant with the feelings of a penitent or awakened sinner; for this is the character who is said to "delight in the law of God, after the inward man." It is not necessary to our argument to suppose that all sinners, however hardened and impenitent, are alike affected with a sense of the excellency of the law of God, or, of the impropriety of their sinful conduct, though it is certain they all have to encounter the opposition of reason and conscience in their iniquitous practices, which makes them "see the right," and "condemn the wrong," until, as the Apostle expresses it, they are past feeling, or have their "conscience seared with a hot iron." But the individual in question, is represented as deeply awakened on account of his sins; he beholds with abhorrence his depravity, and feels the pressure of his guilt so much that he exclaims, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" While in this sad condition his reason and conscience are awake to the subject of the law of God; he sees that it is "just, holy and good," and "delights in it after the inward man," that is, he approves of it, and ardently wishes to be conformed to its heavenly requirements, realizing that he never can be satisfied till its Divine image is imparted to his heart.

Now is not all this true of every penitent? Will any one undertake to prove that an awakened sinner does not "hate his evil actions," while his reason and conscience entirely approve of the law of God? Even the inhuman princess, as represented in Ovid, who, being upon the point of committing murder, exclaimed, "My mind (that is my reason and conscience,) leads me to one thing, but my new, impetuous passion carries me to another against my will. I see, I approve what is right, but I do what is criminal." If this was the case with a murderess, will not a penitent sinner, while he views his wretched condition, in the light of God's Spirit, be led to see the excellency, and admire the purity, of God's law?

The quotations from scripture, adduced by President Mahan and others, to prove that "language equally strong is applied to the sinner in other parts of the Bible," are considered by the "Village Pastor" as inapplicable to the case, but after all his remarks upon the subject, the validity of the arguments drawn from this source remain, in my view, in full force. Some of these passages are especially in point. Isah. lviii. 2. "Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways," &c. Rom. ii. 17, 18. "Behold thou art a Jew and restest in the law and makest thy boast of God, and knowest his will and approvest the things that are more excellent." See also John v. 35.

These passages are not introduced, with a view to prove that the persons to whom they relate were Christians, but merely to show, that notwithstanding their great wickedness, for no one disputes this, they did actually, with their reason and conscience approve of the Divine precepts, or, as the Apostle expresses it, "with the mind they served the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin." It is curious to see the method which the "Village Pastor" takes to do away the force of these quotations. He assumes in the first place, that the person alluded to in the 7th of Romans, "did love God," and then shows, what was already admitted, that the characters, to which reference is made, in the citations from the scriptures, were great sinners, and, therefore did not represent the christian character! Who does not see the fallacy of such reasoning?

Another argument to show that the passage under consideration, cannot refer to christian experience, is, that such an interpretation perverts the very design the Apostle had in view. I cannot do better justice to my readers, on this point, than to quote from Professor Stuart. He says, "The object of the writer (which is to show that the law is insufficient for the sanctification of sinners,) would not be effectually promoted, by supposing that he represents the experience of Christians in chap. vii. For if Christians, who are of course under grace and are dead to the law, (Chap. vi. 14. vii. 6,) are actually in the state here represented, then would it follow, that neither grace nor law hinders them from being the servants of sin. But to aver that grace does not effect this, is to contradict chap. viii. 1—17.

"The tout ensemble of the representation in chap. vii., seems to render it certain that a true Christian cannot be here described. What is the result of the whole? It is, that notwithstanding all the opposition which the law of God and the law of the mind make to sin, yet the person in question practices it, and habitually practices it, on all occasions and under all circumstances. In every contest here, the sinful carnal mind comes off victorious. Is "this overcoming the world?" Is this to be "born of God so as not to sin?" Is this "loving Christ so as to keep his commandments?" Is this "doing no iniquity?" Is this "walking not after the flesh, but after the Spirit?" In a word, is it possible to make this accord with chap. viii. 1—17?"

Were it necessary, we might add many other arguments, but we think enough has been said to establish the truth of the position we have taken; in relation to the latter part of the 7th of Romans, and sufficient to show, that in no rational or consistent sense, can it be applied to Christian experience, or Apostolical holiness. We shall, therefore, now conclude, by adding some inferences.

1. We see, in the light of this subject, that the law, is not the source or ground of our justification or sanctification. It may give us the knowledge of sin, but provides no remedy for the pardon of it. We should, therefore, apply directly to Christ; for he is our "wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption."

2. We see a wide difference between merely a penitent sinner and a true Christian. The former, though he sees the right way, and with his reason and conscience "serves the law of God," yet he is in bondage to sin; he feels that he is "wretched, and miserable, and poor;" while the latter exclaims, "there is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, for the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

3. "If we find any theory of religion which requires for its support, that the closing part of the seventh chapter of Romans be applied to" Christian experience or Apostolical holiness, "we cannot have confidence in the soundness of that theory."

L. K. REDINGTON.

P. S. MR. EDITOR.—I request you to correct some typographical errors which occurred in my 2d number. In the 2d paragraph, 10th line, for "Greek work," read Greek word. In the 5th paragraph, 4th line, for "executing," read excusing; also, 11th ¶, 10th line, for "mortal" read mental.

Missionary Department.

For the Register.

The Home Missionary Society.

BROTHER BAILEY,—Your paper of the 23d ultimo contains an article in the "Missionary Department," from brother James H. Cochran; and though I was glad to see something from him, yet I could but be sorry for the turn of things relative to his appointment by the Missionary Society, in September last. Again, the difficulty assigned as having led the Executive Committee to advise brother C. to give over the work to which he was appointed, (however wise and prudent the views of brethren upon constitutional points, AS SUCH, may be,) seems to be unnecessarily thrown in the way of our Missionary operations; for those who find fault with the Constitution of the Society, do not amend it in this way; and bad as it is, its provisions allow persons to contribute to an available treasury, if they think that preferable to a standing fund. But if brethren withhold their gifts, merely because there is a small fund so covered by the Society's Constitution that for the present it cannot be made available, they ought not to think strange if some should not be able to see at once the agreement of their course with the Missionary spirit.

If brother C. had happened to have made a beginning in some other parts of our denomination, he would have found a very different state of things, nor can I think serious as the above difficulty may have seemed to the Committee, that it would by any means have prevented the accomplishment of the object the Society had in view in the appointment of brother C. The course, moreover, of the Committee presents a new feature in the history of our Society: for, though there have been appointments made by the Society, and subjected to the control of the Executive, it will be remembered that such was not the case in brother C's appointment. And so far as I can recollect, the Executive has never before felt it to be within its range of duties to countermand the dictates of the Society, where there was no intimation in its Minutes of a wish to put business into their hands. I will here quote from the Society's Minutes what relates to this matter, as some may not have it by them who will see this article:

"Resolved, That we appoint a Missionary to labor for the ensuing year within the bounds of this denomination, whose duty it shall be to preach the gospel among the feeble churches, whilst he visits the more highly privileged churches for the purpose of receiving their contributions in aid of the objects of this Society.

"Resolved, That Br. James H. Cochran be our Missionary.

"Resolved, That the Missionary send an account of his labors monthly to the Register for publication."

And shall nothing be done? Shall the Society be thwarted for such a course? Are brethren ready to take such responsibilities? And, most of all, can they content themselves that the cry, "Come over and help us!" should continually ring in their ears to no purpose, AND FOR SUCH A COURSE?—I trust not. I would rather believe, that, upon farther reflection, they will resolve to press with redoubled vigor into the field to the rescue of those whose wail disturbs the midnight air, and moves the heart to pity.

SPECTATOR.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the N. Y. Evening Post.

ARRIVAL OF THE BRITANNIA.

The Royal Mail Steamship Britannia, arrived at Boston about four o'clock yesterday afternoon, bringing news from Europe ten days later than that previously received. The Britannia left Liverpool on the 20th of April, about twelve o'clock, noon.—She ran about two hundred miles south of her course to avoid the ice, which lengthened her passage. Eighty-seven passengers were brought by the Britannia.

We are indebted to Harnden & Co.'s expresses for copies of the Boston papers, and our files of the Liverpool Albion.

The steamer Caledonia, arrived at Liverpool at half past nine o'clock on the morning of the 15th, having made the passage in thirteen days and eighteen hours. The intelligence she carried out was favorably received as being of a pacific nature, and indicative of the continuance of peace and amity between England the United States.

Nothing could exceed the anxiety which was felt in England in regard to the fate of the steamship President. That vessel left this port on the 11th of March, and consequently, has been out forty days. It was the common impression in England that she had put into the island of Bermuda, after the severe storm of the 12th and 13th, to repair the damages she might have sustained. But this seems hardly probable.—Our advices from that place are to the 19th of April, at which time the President had not been seen or heard from; and as the ordinary passage from this port to the Island requires only four or five days, it is certain, had Captain Roberts sailed for Bermuda, he would have reached there long before the 19th.

On the 20th of March, a steamship was seen by a vessel that arrived in this city, standing east by south, in lat. 42 35, and longitude 59. If this was the President, as many supposed at the time, she had then been out nine days and had traversed only fifteen degrees of latitude. Supposing her to have made the same progress for the remainder of the distance, it would have required forty-four or forty-five days to reach England. It is not positively certain, therefore, that she may not have arrived by this time. She was, we are told, plentifully stocked with provisions, and well supplied with sails.

The only supposition remaining is that the President may have gone to Madeira. This is not very likely; but as there could not have been time for the news of her arrival there to reach England, we have no certainty on that subject.

From China, the news is of considerable importance. Her Majesty's Plenipotentiary, Commodore Elliott, weary of the delays of the Chinese authorities, attacked the forts of the Bogue, on the 9th of January, and after a short engagement, compelled the enemy to terms. The basis of the treaty is given in the extracts from English journals published below. It appears that the arrangements of Captain Elliot have not given much satisfaction to the merchants engaged in the China trade. An instant fall in the price of teas was the consequence of the receipt of the news in London.

Accounts from Trebisonde, received at Constantinople, state that all differences between Great Britain and Persia are arranged.

Admiral Stopford is appointed Master of Greenwich Hospital.

Commodore Napier arrived at Liverpool from Egypt in the steamer Oriental, on Sunday, the 18th, and was received on the following day by the Mayor, Aldermen and Burgesses, who presented him an address. On the same day a dinner was given in honor of him, at which he sat down with seven hundred gentlemen.

United States Bank shares sold in London on the 16th ult., at about £5 10s.

It is remarked that the season is unusually forward in England, as well as on the European continent.

The Belgian Government has just adopted a report in favor of a uniform system of cheap postage, viz. 20 centimes, or about 4 cents.

The celebrated Mdlle. Mars, took a final leave of the French stage on Thursday night, April 15th, at Paris, after a career of brilliant success for nearly 40 years.

No less than sixteen steam frigates are ordered to be immediately built at the different dock yards in England.

China.—The following is the treaty agreed upon between the Imperial Commissioner, and Captain Elliott:—

1. The cession of the island and harbor of Hong Kong to the British Crown. All just charges and duties to the Empire upon the commerce carried on there to be paid as if the trade were conducted at Whampoa.

2. An indemnity to the British Government of $6,000,000, $1,000,000 payable at once, and the remainder in equal annual instalments, ending in 1846.

3. Direct official intercourse between the countries upon an equal footing.

4. The trade of the port of Canton to be opened within ten days after the Chinese New Year, and to be carried on at Whampoa till further arrangements are practicable at the new settlement. Details remain matter of negotiation.

News of the Day.

From the New-Yorker.

The Manor of Rensselaerwyck.—Hugh Maxwell and Gary V. Sackett, Commissioners appointed by the Governor to mediate between the Patroon, Stephen Van Rensselaer, and his refractory tenants, have made a Report in part to the Legislature, from which we gather the following facts:

The Manor of Rensselaerwyck is about twenty-four miles in length each way from the Hudson River, and twenty-four in breadth North and South from Boon Island in the Hudson to the Cohoes Falls in the Mohawk, excluding a strip one mile wide and sixteen miles long on the west side of the River, (which includes the greater part of the City of Albany,) excepting also the site of the City of Troy, and certain other portions of the Counties of Albany and Rensselaer of which the fee simple has been surrendered by the Patroon. This tract was purchased of the Indian occupants by Killion Van Rensselaer between 1630 and 1637, under the sanction of the Dutch Government. After the conquest of the colony by the English, a new charter was granted him by Queen Anne in 1701, so that the original Van Rensselaer title would seem a triple cord, not easily broken. The character from Queen Anne is baronial or feudal, conferring upon the Patroon all the rights of a lord or manor under the old English laws, authorizing him to hold courts, issue writs, impose fines, distrain for rent, &c. &c

The American Revolution stripped him of many of these privileges, but left him in full possession of the property, who is held by entail and leased to tenants on conditions which are now generally deemed unwise and oppressive, if not degrading. The estate is divided into farms of one hundred and twenty acres each, leased in perpetuity, at a yearly rent of twenty-two and a half bushels of wheat, four fat fowls, one day's service with a wagon and horses, the payment of all taxes and assessments, and reservations to the Patroon of all mines, minerals and streams of water, such fire-wood and timber as he may think proper to require for building, mills, mining operations, &c. &c. He is also entitled to 'quarter sales,' or one-fourth the proceed of every sale or transfer of a lease from one tenant to another. These conditions many of the tenant deem oppressive and degrading, and have combined to resist their enforcement.

The late Patroon was a very kind-hearted, benevolent man, and popular with his tenantry. During his long life they did very much as they pleased about the rent; and at his death there was due from them the gross sum of four hundred thousand dollars, while he was involved, if we mistake not, in pecuniary embarrassments of some standing.

The new Patroon, Stephen Van Rensselaer the younger coming into possession of the estate, attempted to turn over a new leaf. He demanded the payment of all arrears and a rigid fulfilment of the contracts thereafter—a demand which led to remonstrance, resistance, the famous 'Helderbergh War,' and ultimately to this attempt at adjournment by State mediation.

The Commissioners have not brought the landlord and tenant very near each other's terms, as yet. Th Patroon offers to receive $30 in money in lieu of the 22 1-2 bushels of wheat, one day's service and four fowls, which are now the annual rent of a farm. He will relinquish the right of quarter sales for $30 per farm. He will relinquish the water privileges, &c., for a fair consideration—all these on condition that the arrears of rent be first adjusted and acknowledged so as to be in a train of ultimate payment, or, the arrears being settled, he will release all his title and interest in any farm for $4 per acre, one-fifth in hand the balance secured by bond and mortgage. These are the Patroon's conditions, and they do not appear to us unreasonable.

In reply to these terms the tenants submitted the following proposition: that the rent in what he valued at one dollar per bushel, and all restrictions be taken off; and that the tenants have the privilege of purchasing fee at a sum, at 7 per cent interest, which would amount to a given number of bushels of wheat. Meaning thereby to pay for 160 acres of land (being the size generally of the farms for which they pay 22 1-2 bushels of wheat,) $321 12, or $2 per acre.

In this situation do the affairs of the landlord and his tenants remain at present. The Commissioners say they "have thought they should best perform their duty to the parties and to the public by suspending their interference for the present, and until some indication shall appear of a disposition on the part of the landlord or tenants to reconsider the terms submitted, and approximate towards those offered by the other party. The disposition manifested by a great majority of the tenants induces us to hope that finally a settlement will be effected between them and the landlord. The interest of the landlord, as well as that of the tenants, will be most advantageously secured by mutual concession and compromise."

Correspondence of the Journal of Commerce.

LONDON, April 3, 1841.

Capt. Taylor, of New-York, has just had awarded to him the sum of £8,000 sterling, by the Germanic Diet, for his discoveries in electro-magnetism, whereby he proposes to supercede steams on railroads and for propelling machinery. This gentleman, some months back exhibited a very beautiful model of this electro-magnetic engine at the Coloseum here, which drew forth the approbation and astonishment of men of the highest practical knowledge and scientific attainments. On that occasion, the engine was devoted to the turning of a lathe, and most admirably did it perform its functions. The inventor has now constructing a machine of considerable power which he expects to be enabled to get ready for service within the preset year. So sanguine is the Captain, that he emphatically declares he does not intend to return to America until he can go back by lightning! But this is not the only wonder which Captain Taylor has been exhibiting to the astounded gaze of the of Cockneyshire, for he has a patent for steaming wood, and then when in a soft state, slicing it like soap, and forming the same forthwith into shingles, staves, garden paling, &c. &c. He has fitted up some extensive premises for this purpose, and also for making casks by machinery: and to such perfection has be brought the latter, that his lady visitors can manufacture a cask in less than five minutes, without soiling their gloves. At the present moment the worthy Captain is all the rage in town, and he is also, as might be imagined, playing the very deuse among the coopers in England.

Mr. Wells, an American, who is the patentee of the Felted Cloth, has formed a company in London, who have commenced the manufacture of this very peculiar fabric. The works are at Leeds and great success has attended the experiment. Orders have been given to the company which will take two years to execute. I have visited the depot in town, and been highly gratified with some very splendid specimens of this admirable discovery. The cloth, you are aware, is made without either spinning or weaving.

Several Mormonites, from your far west, are zealously laboring in the Provinces here for the purpose of making proselytes to their strange faith. In some parts they have been induced to dispose of their property here and set sail for the United States, to join the general body. In some towns the missionaries have been very roughly handled.

The Canada Election.—The elections in Canada for members of the House of Assembly, the many disgraceful scenes of violence witnessed at which, have been from time to time chronicled in the American journals, have now terminated. The chief question upon which parties were rallied appears to have been the act of the British Parliament for the re-union of the Provinces, the Tories being in favor of, and the Liberals opposed to, the Union Act was the test question, and as the favorite measure of the Government was supported by the mass of Tories and opposed by the Liberals. The Quebec Gazette says the Anti-Unionists or Liberals are in a decided majority in both Provinces, and classifies the members from the Lower as follows:

Anti-Unionists, 21; Unionists, 13; doubtful, 5. Of the 13 members who approve of the union, 6 were returned in consequence of violence, 1 by dread of violence, and 3 by the proclamation disfranchising the suburbs of Quebec and Montreal. Seven of the 13 are government officers. Of the Unionists, 2 were returned under test, and of the Anti-Unionists, 2. The 24 Anti-Unionists are supposed to represent a population of 340,138; and the 13 Unionists a population of 44,827 827.

The House of Assembly consists of 81 members, equally divided between the two Princes, The qualifications of electors are the following: In the counties they are required to posssess forty shilling freeholds; in towns five pound freeholds or ten pound leaseholds, Members must hold real estate worth five hundred pounds, and are elected for four years, though the Governor has power to dissolve the Assembly at any time. The Legislative Council or upper branch of the Legislature, as well as the executive council, are appointed by the Governor.—New Yorker.

Arrest of Mitchell.—We have seen a letter from R. W. BOWYER, the officer who has been so long in pursuit of MITCHELL, stating that he finally arrested him concealed in a disreputable house at Point-au-Tremble, about 10 miles from Montreal. When the officer entered the house, Mitchell escaped from a garret window and ran for the St. Lawrence river into which he plunged. The officer threatened to shoot him if he did not surrender. He then threw into the current a package which he says contained $2,700, and told the officer to fire; that he was ready to die, &c. An accomplice shoved off a canoe to Mitchell in which he made for an Island, where he was pursued and taken.

Mitchell is now in the Montreal Prison. An officer has been despatched with documents from the Governor to the Canadian authorities, requesting his delivery.—Alb. Evening Journal.

From the Detroit Daily Advertiser.

Sunday Travelling.—We observe from statements published in the Albany Argus and other New-York papers, that notwithstanding the vast amount of travel on the line of rail roads through that great state, the Sunday trains are run at a loss to the companies. This is true of other states, and it illustrates an important fact that the observance of the Sabbath is fast becoming a settled principle with our people. Where inclination will not dictate such a course, interest will very soon induce a suspension of the rail road travel upon the Sabbath. And the sooner the better. Humanity and the physical structure of man, aside from either morality or religion, promts to an observance of a Day of Rest. We would have no laws enacted—no penalties enforced—to induce this reform. The great laws of propriety and public opinion, is the best law upon subjects of this kind; and we doubt not, public opinion will ere long sanction that which every man's better judgment tells him is right and proper.

From the Commercial Advertiser.

ALEXANDER MCLEOD.—We see it stated in some of the morning papers that McLeod was yesterday in Albany, on his way to this city, to appear, it is intimated, before the Supreme Court, at the present May term, while his council moved for a habeas corpus—but with what hope or object is not precisely mentioned.

In the meantime, if our private advices from Washington do not mislead us—and this they have never yet done—a decision of some importance has been come to there in reference both to this case and the boundery question.

If we are rightly informed it has been agreed betweem Mr. Fox and the Government of the United States that no further opposition shall be made by the former to the trial of McLeod. That trial is to go on under the jurisdiction of New-York, without interference either by the British Minister or the National Government. If acquitted, as is most probable, McLeod will be discharged, of course, and the matter thus be disposed of. If convicted, the National Government will then take the necessary steps to afford him that measure of justice and protection which all the circumstances of the case may require.

As to the boundary we learn that a convention has been signed on the part of Great Britain and the United States, which provides for the appointment of six commissioners, three for each party to the dispute. These six, if they can agree, are to give a final decision on the question. If they cannot agree, they are to appoint three others, and a decision by the majority of the nine is to be conclusive.

Such we understand to be the arrangement agreed upon. Some of the details may be incorrectly stated, but we have every reason to believe that the general fact of a convention being signed, will prove authentic.

SHIPWRECKS.—We copy the subjoined account of the loss of the schrs. Warsaw and Emeline, from the Boston Transcript of last Saturday evening.

A letter from Cohasset, dated yesterday morning, 9 o'clock, states that the sloop Warsaw, (of Southport, Conn.) Godfrey, from Salem, for New-York, with coffee &c. was stranded about daylight on Gull Ledge, 2 miles from that place and with her cargo, became a total loss. Capt. Godfrey was lost. The crew, five in number, were saved by the life boat placed at Cohasset by the Humane Society, one of the men had his shoulder dislocated, and all were unable to speak. The boat worked remarkably well, but was somewhat injured among the rocks.

A letter received in this city this morning says:—"The Warsaw with five hands, and one passenger, who was working his passage, came out of Salem on Thursday, bound for New-York, cargo of pepper, 800 bags; coffee, dates, mustard, dye stuffs, &c. &c.—Got near the Cape, when it shut in thick—the Captain concluded to run back for Boston light; on his way he struck on the Gull ledge at about half past three o'clock. She went entirely to pieces in two hours. The mate and crew reached the rock by aid of the mast—the Captain, exhausted, fell off the mast and was drowned. She was first discovered by John Vinal who came over and gave the information. The life boat was immediately manned by Lewis Wilcutt, J. O. Lawrence, Geo. A. Lawrence, Samuel Stockbridge, Alfred Whittington, Thomas Brown, Jr., Josiah Crosby, Elijah Pratt, Lyman S. Gove, and Daniel Tower. They were about thirty minutes going out. They took them off very much bruised and exhausted, and brought them in—they are doing very well. The mate had his shoulder dislocated before he left the vessel—he was in the water himself, when the captain (his brother) fell in and washed up so that he just touched him with his fingers, but owing to his own state from fatigue and pain from his shoulder, he was unable to hold him; but notwithstanding, he caught a piece of rope and threw him, which he caught but could not hold on. The boat rowed easily and worked finely in the sea; they had difficulty in landing at the rock, on account of one of the leeward oars breaking, (which was of very frow wood,) which rendered it necessary for four or five of them to jump overboard to save her from bilging on the rocks. They struck twice on leaving the rock, and made a hole through her each time. The pepper, furniture, mustard, &c. have been landed on the beach.

The schr. Emeline, of Charleston, Mass. Thompson, from Bucksport, Me. with lumber, went ashore on Point Alderton, bilged and filled with water. A passenger, name not ascertained, and the cook were drowned. Captain and remainder of the crew saved by the life boat from Hull.

A Hoosier Candidate for Congress says he is one of twenty-nine sons and two daughters by the same father and mother, all now living; and that if any one can beat him on that score, he will withdraw from the course. His name, as might be expected is Smith.

Velocity of the Wind.—The velocity of the wind varies from 0 to 100 miles an hour, but the maximum is variously stated by different authors. According to Smeaton, a gentle breeze moves between 4 and 5 miles an hour, and has a force of about two ounces on a foot; a brisk pleasant gale moves from 10 to 15 miles, with a force of 12 ounces; a high wind, 30 to 35 miles, with a force of 5 or 6 pounds; a hurricane, bearing along trees, houses &c., has a velocity of 100 miles, and a force of 43 pounds on the square foot.

The case of Gen. Gaines and wife, is now in course of argument before the U. S. circuit court for the Eastern District of Louisiana

The October term of the Supreme Court is hereafter to be held at Rochester, instead of Albany. An act to this effect passed the Legislature on the thirtieth day of April.

The Exeter, N. H., News Letter, says that hay is selling in the interior of Rockingham County so high as twenty dollars a ton.

The Legislature of Maine adjourned on Saturday last, after a session of three and a half months. Governor Kent has been nominated by the Whig members for another term, and has consented to be the candidate.

Willis G. Carroll, the supposed murderer of Rev. Mr. Lindsey, near Hendersonville in Summer county, a few months since, has been arrested in the Indian Territory, west of Arkansas.

There were slain by sea and land, during the last war between England and France, 2,100,000 men. The cost to England was £1,058,000,000—the greater part of which is still unpaid in the National debt!

A Parisian florist has succeeded in producing a new hybrid rose from the Bourbon rose and Glorie de Rosomene, the flowers of which he fertilized with the pollen of some damask hybrid roses. The plant is said to be extremely beautiful—the color bright crimson, shaded with maroon purple, and is further enriched with a powerful and delicious fragrance.

The New York Assembly (69 to 24) have voted to divide the county of Genesee; the new county to be called Wyoming. The bill has yet to go through the ordeal of the Senate.

The Baptist Triennial Convention, comprising delegates from all parts of the United States, commenced its tenth Triennial Session on Friday morning, in the First Baptist Church in Baltimore. The meeting was called to order by the President, Rev. S. H. Cone, of New York city. The first business being to elect a President, Secretary, and Assistant Secretary. Mr. Cone expressed a desire to retire having occupied the chair for nine years as President. W. B. Johnson, D. D. of South Carolina, was elected President, Rufus Babcach, of Philadelphia, re-elected Secretary, and J. B. Taylor of Richmond, Assistant Secretary. The object of the Convention is for Missionary purposes, &c. The Rev. Richard Fuller of South Carolina, preached the Triennial sermon.

The Governor of Canada offers a reward of $200 for the apprehension of the persons who set fire to the building near Clifton house, Niagara Falls, the property of Col. Creighton.

Murder of a Minister.—We learn from Brother S. W. Lynd, now in this city, who has received a letter communicating the painful intelligence from Cincinnati, that our brother King Griswell of that place, has been brutally murdered. He has been for some time laboring with great success in one of the suburbs of Cincinnati, having baptized some sixty or seventy converts, who had been recently publicly recognized as a church. A profligate young man, who became enraged, because he had been made a subject of special prayer, by a converted companion, threw a stone at the man who had prayed for him, as he passed out of the church. The stone struck the head of brother Griswell, who was at the same time near the door, and fractured his scull. He died in a few hours. The young man who committed the rash malignant deed, has been committed to prison. B.

Rats Becoming Topers.—A gentleman at Frodsman, Eng. on going to his cellar for the purpose of drawing some ale, found three immense rats sitting on one of the barrels, and putting their tails down through the bung hole, and afterwards licking them. Like some other topers they certainly discovered great ingenuity in getting at the "liquor they loved."

Progress of Temperance.—We are happy to say that no intoxicating liquors were sold at the refreshment tables around the State House, in Hartford, on election day—the first instance of the kind since the memory of man.—Congregational Obs.

Parts of a human body have been found in the woods near Salem, New Jersey, in a situation to induce a coroner's jury to return a verdict of "murder by some person or persons unknown." The deceased was a female.

The plan recently proposed by certain ship owners of this city, to the general government, has received the sanction of the latter, and four magnificent Atlantic steamers are to be built forthwith at this port—each of the capacity of 2,500 tons. The cost of the four, it is estimated, will be about $3,000,000.

Justice Warner, of Rochester, has been arrested on three different suits, for committing to jail three medical students, who refused to testify before him relative to the body of a colored man which had been used for dissection, and subsequently found in a box in the Franklin House. Damages are laid at $3,000, and nine lawyers have been engaged to prosecute the suits.

On the 12th ult., at New Orleans, a quadroone girl, a slave, was captured by her owner, from whom she had eloped, and as he crossed the Second Municipality ferry with her on her way home, she leapt from the boat into the river, and was drowned.

At Philadelphia, on Wednesday, a stream of 1 1-4 inches in diameter, was thrown by the joint action of three engines, to the distance of two hundred and forty-two feet! The Humane and United States were used as forcing, and the Fairmount as the playing engine, the stream being sent from the pipe on the gallery.

It has been ascertained that the fellow who committed the great forgeries at Cincinnati, Louisville and here, did not go in the Acadia from Boston last week. He set a trap for $21,000 at the Globe Bank at Boston, but it did not spring. That bank received the half of a certificate on the same plan with the rest.

"The Mammoth," is the appropriate name of the great iron steamship now building at Bristol, Eng.,) by the owners of the Great Western. The Mammoth will be of 3,600 tons burthen, and her engines of 1000 horse power. "It is calculated,' says an English paper, "that she will cross the Atlantic in ten days."

In the town of Paynesville, Ohio, 7000 gallons of alcoholic drinks are annually consumed, and 73,000 manufactured yearly.

A late English newspaper says that a giantess, named Moir. who was lately exhibiting herself at Glasgow, has been taken up on a charge of murdering her husband, who was killed by a blow on the head with a bed post in a quarrel.

The Late President.—Gen. Harrison, in his last out-door exercise, was engaged in assisting the gardner in adjusting some grape vines. The gardener remarked that there would be but little use in trailing the vines, so far as any fruit was concerned, as the boys would come on Sunday, while the family was at church, and steal all the grapes; and suggested to the general, as a guard against such a loss that he should purchase an active watch-dog. "Better," said the General, "to employ an active Sabbath school teacher; a dog may take care of the grapes, but a good Sabbath school teacher will take care of the grapes and the boys too."—Evening Signal.

Insulting Females.—On Saturday night last, between 10 and 11 o'clock, three persons, Thomas Lawless, Michael McMann, and John Dayton, were lodged in the watch-house, by Elliott and Newton, watchmen, on a charge of having insulted several females in the street. They were brought yesterday morning before the police magistrate, and held to bail in $100 each to keep the peace for six months. which they gave and were discharged.

Terrible.—We learn from a credible source this morning, that a terrible tragedy of blood occurred last Wednesday, in Sumner, Oxford Co., where Mr. Moses Butterfield, hitherto a respectable citizen of that town, murdered his wife and two youngest children, while two others of the family only saved themselves by flight. Mr. B. had previously, we are told, fits of insanity, and this last fatal attack took the form, it is said, of religious phrenzy, and his alleged reason for murdering his family, was to save them from approaching ruin at the end of the world!

He has been committed to jail in Paris.—Portland Argus.

Fatal Effects of Intemperance.—A man named Ephraim Goff, was found dead by the roadside, in Berkley, on the 16th inst., the neighbors having been attracted to the spot by the howling of his dog. He was at the house of a neighbor on the Monday evening previous, partially intoxicated, and it is said, expressed a determination to lie down and die, describing the place and position in which his body would be found, and on which it was found on removing the snow. Goff had long been addicted to intemperance.—New-Bedford Register.

The Reformed Drunkards in Boston.—These delegates from the Baltimore Washington Temperance Society are attracting great crowds, and making much impression in Boston. The Odeon, Marlboro' Chapel, and old Faneuil Hall have been insufficient to hold the people that have flocked to hear them. Petitioners have asked for a popular vote on the license law, but the Mayor and Council have refused to grant it.

Herman Hinman, a young man about 15 years of age, in Southbury, Conn., hung himself with a bridle, in his chamber, a few days since, from mortification at being charged with a petty theft, of which he was innocent.

The London correspondent of the Boston Times, asserts confidently, that the infant Princess Royal of Great Britain is blind, or at least of defective vision. This is contradicted by some of the London papers.

The grand jury of this city has recently found an indictment for manslaughter, against the infamously notorious Madame Restell.—N. Y. Obs.

The assessors' returns state that in Philadelphia and its Liberties, there are 902 licensed places where spirits are retailed.—The unlicensed are not enumerated.

The three boys accused of the murder of the lad Phelps, in Brooklyn, a few months since, have been arraigned, and pleaded not guilty, before the Brooklyn Oyer and Terminer. Their trial will not be proceeded in at this term.

The President and his Family.—As much interest is felt by the nation in regard to every thing connected with the President and his family, we deem it not improper to remark that the household of the Chief Magistrate at present, consists of himself and his two sons, Mrs. Tyler, the daughter-in-law of the President, and her sister, Miss Cooper. The people of the United States have never been more ably represented in social life, by any Chief Magistrate and his family, than by the present inmates of the White House.—Madisonian.

The line of steamboats between New York and New Haven are not to run on the Sabbath, during the ensuing season.

The legal voters of Thomaston, Me., have decided by a vote of 350 to 15, in favor of withholding licenses the ensuing year.

David O. Shattuck, who went from New England a pedlar, afterwards became a Methodist minister, and subsequently a judge, is now a candidate for Governor of the state of Mississippi.

Dr. John Lofland, once widely known as the "Milford Bard," has been committed to the Baltimore Almshouse. He once bade fair to be a poet; he chose to be a "temperate drinker," and became a drunkard and a vagabond. The demon Alcohol has destroyed him.

The thirteen "land pirates" of Michigan, who maliciously entered the farm of Phineas Davis, near Pontiac, in November last, and butchered $5000 worth of live cattle, are now at work in the State Prison, to which they have been recently sentenced.

Mr. Fox, the British Minister at Washington, is expected soon to marry a Miss Williams, aged 16, sister of the young lady married by the Russian Minister last year. He is rich, distinguished, and on the shady side of forty; she is dollarless, but young and beautiful. Thus runs the world.

The Mayor of Philadelphia has stopped the running of cabs, omnibuses and hacks in that city, on Sunday.

The peach buds in the section of the Lake country in Ohio, were very generally killed last winter.

During the funeral ceremonies celebrated at Alton, on the 12th ult., two men had each an arm shot off by the careless firing of cannon.

The steamboat Czar has been sunk on the Ohio, by coming in contact with the Tribune. The Czar was heavily loaded with merchandise, partially insured in Pittsburg and Philadelphia.

The Welland canal (around the Falls of Niagara,) will open this week. It has been repaired the past winter. The Canadians expect it will be speedily enlarged and perfected by the British Government.

In 1814, a bull which killed a man in France was sentenced by a lower court to be hung, and Parliament confirmed the sentence!

On the Erie canal, flour is charged 4 mills per 1000 lbs, per mile, for toll; iron 2 mills; furs and peltry 1 cent; packet boats 50 cents; freight boats 2 cents.

The Charleston Mercury says that the destruction of stock along the water-courses, in Georgia and South Carolina, by the late freshets, has been very extensive. In some instances one half or two-thirds of the hogs and cattle belonging to the planters along the Edisto, have been swept away and drowned. The crop is materially injured by it.

It is stated in the National Intelligencer, that so many appointments of cadets for the Academy at West Point, have been made by the late administration, as to render it certain there will be no more within this year, unless, perhaps, two youths, a grandson and another relative of the late President.

Mr. Hoadley, a Justice of the Peace at Cleaveland, O., and formerly President of the Eagle Bank at New Haven, has, it is said, in nine years entered judgments in his docket, upon 17,000 suits.

Mr. Kingsbury of the Pennsylvania Senate, has introduced a bill into that body, which provides that the Canals and Rail Roads of Pennsylvania shall not hereafter be opened or used for the purpose of transportation on the Sabbath.

Trade of Cincinnati.—The editor of the Cincinnati Chronicle, in a late number of that paper, thus notices a walk which he took along the business portion of the Queen City of the West:

"Yesterday afternoon we strayed, amidst the bright smiles of April along our river side. The quay presented one of the most active and animating scenes of Western commerce. During the day, there were at least thirty steamboats at the landing. We saw twenty of the best class of boats receiving and landing passengers and produce—now puffing into port, and now gaily wending their way to other regions. What distant points do they unite! What various climes do they pass! Here is a steamboat which has just left the snows and the swelling waters of the Alleghany—now she pays her respect to the Queen City—tomorrow she passes the Falls of the Ohio—then she comes where the dark Missouri sends its stream along from the realm of the Sioux and the Dalcotah, far, far away in the North West—then she glides down, by cotton groves and magnolias, to the orange groves of the sunny South! It is a great country this. A great people will live here."

From the Buffalo Journal.

The West is Coming!—Last evening the fine brig Indiana, Capt. J. Kline, entered port from the upper lakes, with an astonishingly large cargo, consisting of 4,657 bushels of wheat, 1,120 bbls. of flour, 700 bbls. of pork, 120 bbls. of fish, 50 packs of furs (5,000 pieces.) and two boxes of merchandize. In addition to the articles above enumerated, some 270 barrels of whiskey were landed at Mackinaw, making the trip sheet immensely large in amount.

Capt. Kline wintered at St. Josephs, In., and loaded from the recently erected warehouse of Mr. Breton & Sullivan, who are represented as enterprising forwarders, and using every means within their control to facilitate trade and develope the resources of that thriving port.

Capt. K. reports the Queen Charlotte grounded on the flats in Lake St. Clair, with lighters along side, relieving her of a portion of her cargo; also, the Ottawa as having lost her boat and both anchors in the ice, in the same vicinity. By this time, however, we opine both vessels are safe at Detroit.

Over Statements.—Over statements in any work of reform are always injurious, and should be carefully avoided by editors and writers. Several papers are stating the number of reformed drunkards in Baltimore at 6000. For this there is no foundation; it probably exceeds the number of this deluded class in that city. From the strictest inquiry we have been able to make, we are satisfied that the true number is between 10 and 1100; and this is a very great number.—Temp. Jour.

Notices.

NOTICE.

Mr. S. F. GREEN, of Utica, will deliver a Lecture on PHRENOLOGY (free,) at the Presbyterian Church, on Thursday evening, 13th inst. Exercises to commence at the ringing of the bell. A general invitation is given to the citizens.

NOTICE.

Mr. LANE, of Utica, Teacher of Instrumental Music, will meet with the citizens of this village and vicinity, on Monday evening, the 17th inst., to make arrangements for organizing a BAND OF MUSIC. The meeting will be held at the house of Wm. C. Gage. A general attendance is solicited.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Central Association will hold its next annual session with the Church in Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the 2nd Sabbath in June next, at 10 o'clock. Introductory discourse by E. S. BAILEY, or S. B. CRANDALL alternate. A full delegation and punctual attendance is requested.

JAMES BAILEY, Sec'y.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Eastern Association are to meet on the fifth day before the fourth Sabbath in May next, at the S. D. B. Meeting-house in Salem, N. Jersey, at 10 o'clock, A. M., and an invitation is hereby given to the ministering brethren, and other brethren also, that can conveniently attend. I think it would add much to the meeting to have a number of our western and northern brethren to attend with us.

A. D. TITSWORTH, Cor. Sec.

Metuchen, April 18, 1841.

MARRIED,

In Preston, on the 29th ultimo, by Eld. Benedict Wescote, Mr. JOSEPH TRUMAN and Miss MARY CLARKE, both of Preston.

In Durhamville, N. Y., on the 4th inst., by Willet Stillman, Esq., Mr. JOHN O. CORSON and Miss SARAH, daughter of Charles Stroud, Esq., of Lenox.

In Lenox, on the 9th inst., by the same, Mr. ABSALOM PRICE and Miss LORANY BORT.

DIED,

In Truxton, on the 8th inst., of a disease of the Heart, Miss SALLY, daughter of Benjamin C. and Sally Maxson, aged 21.

Miss Maxson experienced religion in 1835, under the labors of Eld. Nathan V. Hull, united with the S. D. B. Church in Truxton, and remained a worthy member as long as she lived. She bore her last sickness with that fortitude and resignation, which is characteristic of the saint of God. She was visited by the writer of this article, a few days before her death, and in conversation with him, expressed some doubts in regard to her acceptance with the Savior; requested him to pray with her; that if her sins were forgiven she might have an evidence of the same, and if they were not, that they might be forgiven. Accordingly a season of prayer was had, in which she seemed to engage earnestly at the throne of grace. After prayer she expressed a firm belief that she was accepted of God. All at once she said, a calm and serene peace of mind came upon her, and that she was now willing to die. The next day she called upon the family in order, and exhorted them to live their religion; to prepare for death, and to meet her in Heaven. In her last hours she was heard to shout glory to God, and to use often the Savior's name. She finally expired without a struggle, and thus fell asleep in the arms of the Savior. R. G. B.

LIST OF LETTERS.

Willet Stillman, P M. Eli S Bailey, (it is all right on our books.) William Ennis, P M., (it is done.) Dennis Harden, P M, (it is done.) Zuriel Campbell, (it is right.) Russel Maxson. Ephraim Maxson, (thank you) Israel Hoyo, P M., (we will do it.) "Philanthropos" next week, Geo. Crandall & A F Worthington, (the letter you sent with $6 75 has not come to this office, neither has it come to this Post Office. I will write you about it, further, soon.) Joel Greene, (yes sir.)

LIST OF RECEIPTS

Benjamin Burdick, $6, cr. self, S P Burdick, $2 each, Vol. 2. Noah K. Brown, $2, Vol. 1. Robert Langworthy, $2, cr Welcome Babcock, Vol. 2. J. C. Maxson, $2,25, cr. John J. Maxson, Vol. 1. S Bailey, M D., $8,25, cr. Jonathan Babcock, Collins Miller, Tillinghast Gorton, $2, each, Vol. 2. H G Babcock ,50 cents, Vol. 2. Elias L Langworthy, $1,75, Vol. 1. per Jonathan Babcock. Eli S Bailey, $6, cr. Daniel Andrews, $2.25, Vol., 1 and $1 Vol. 2. Luke Kellogg, $2,10, Vol. 1, and ,15, Vol. 2. self, ,50. Dennis Hardin, $2, cr. G R Babcock, Vol 2. Z Campbell, $4,25, cr. Davis Stillman, Vol. 1 and 2. Ephraim Maxson, $13, cr. Joshua Maxson, Saunders Crandall, John H Burch, John S Coon, self, $2 each, Vol. 2; Betsey Coon, De Witt C Coon, $1, each, Vol. 2. Henry B Crandall, $1, Vol. 1, one dollar yet due. Joel Greene, $2, cr. Jesse Burdick, 2d, Vol. 2. Wm. Crandall, $2, Vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

LOOK TO YOUR INTEREST!
EXAMINE & BE CONVINCED!

S. D. DELLAY,

IS now opening his Spring Stock of Goods, among which may be found,

8,000 yds. Calicoes, from 4 to 25 cts. per yd.
6,000 " Sheeting, " 7 " 12 1-2 "
1,000 " Ticking, " 12 1-2 " 25 "
1,000 " French Mull, " 20 " 50 "

Together with cords and piles of other Plain, Domestic and Fancy GOODS, consisting of too great a variety to be enumerated in a paper advertisement, which have been purchased for Cash at the present low state of the Market, and which he proposes

SELLING LOWER

than they can be bought elsewhere in Town, County, or State! He has also a complete assortment of Millinery Goods, such as

Leghorn, Straw, Silk, & Lawn Bonnets,

with every possible variety of Trimming. He would say to PHYSICIANS, that he has the largest and best selected assortment of MEDICINES ever before offered in this County, which he pledges himself to sell from 25 to 50 per cent Cheaper than they have ever before been offered.

TO FAMILIES,—He would likewise call the attention of Families to a choice selection of GROCERIES, which he will sell as LOW or LOWER than they can be bought elsewhere—HAMILTON not excepted. Also, Crockery, Hardware, &c. &c.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,
Too well known to need comment.

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s
MOTHER'S RELIEF.

A Pamphlet describing the merits of this highly popular and beneficial Medicine, will be given any one wishing to become acquainted with its qualities. The uniform success of this Medicine has rendered it the "Ne Plus Ultra" of the day. Medical gentlemen have had to acknowledge its benefits and yield to its sway.

DR. WATERMAN'S
RHEUMATIC AND STRENGTHENING PLASTER.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbants to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases; such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S
BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, aad several other vegetable substances Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,
10,000 Bags,
10,000 pr. Socks,
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey,
☞For which the highest price will be paid ☜
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63y1

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.
De Ruyter, April 22, 1841.

WANTED, an Apprentice to the Blacksmith Business. Apply to the subscriber.
HIRAM BABCOCK.
Scott, Cortland Co., May 11, 1841. 63w3

POETRY.

Judah's Shepherds.

The night was moonless. Judah's shepherds kept
Their starlight watch; their flocks around them slept.
To heaven's blue fields their wakeful eyes were turned,
And to the fires that there, eternal, burned.
Those azure regions had been peopled long
With Fancy's children, by the sons of song:
And there the simple shepherd, conning o'er
His humble pittance of Chaldean lore,
Saw, in the stillness of a starry night,
The swan and eagle in their silent flight;
And, on their spangled pinions as they flew,
On Israel's vales of verdure shower the dew;
Saw there the brilliant gems that nightly flare
In the thin mist of Berenice's hair;
And there Bootes roll his lucid wain
On sparkling wheels along th' etherial plain;
And there the Pleiades, in tuneful gyre,
Pursue for ever the star-studded Lyre;
And there, with bickering lash, heaven's Charioteer
Urge round the Cynosure the bright career.

While thus the shepherds watched the host of night,
O'er heaven's blue concave flashed a sudden light.
Th' unrolling glory spread its folds divine,
O'er the green hills and vales of Palestine;
And lo! descending angels hovering there,
Stretched their loose wings, and in the purple air
Hung o'er the sleepless guardians of the fold:
When that high anthem, clear, and strong, and bold,
On wavy paths of trembling ether ran—
"Glory to God—benevolence to man;
Peace to the world;"—and in full concert came
From silver tubes, and harps of golden frame,
The loud and sweet response, whose choral strains
Lingered and languished on Judea's plains.
Yon living lamps, charmed from their chambers blue,
By airs so heavenly, from the skies withdrew;
"All?"—all but one, that hung and burned alone,
And with mild lustre over Bethlehem shene.
Chaldean sages saw that orb afar
Glow unextinguished:—'twas Salvation's Star.

Miscellaneous Department.

From 'The Dial' for April.

THOUGHTS ON LABOR.

* * * * * * * It is no law of God, that when Sin gets a footing in the world it should hold on for ever, nor can Folly keep its dominion over society simply by right of "adverse possession.' It were better the body went bare and hungry, rather than the soul should starve. Certainly the Life is more the meat, though it would not weigh so much in the butcher's scales.

THERE are remedies at hand. It is true a certain amount of labor must be performed, in order that society be fed and clothed, warmed and comforted, relieved when sick, and buried when dead. If this is wisely distributed—if each performs his just portion, the burthen is slight and crushes no one. Here, as elsewhere, the closer we keep to Nature, the safer we are. It is not under the burthens of Nature that society groans, but the work of Caprice, of contemptible Vanity, of Luxury, which is never satisfied—these oppress the world. If these latter are given up, and each performs what is due from him, and strives to diminish the general burthen and not add to it, then no man is oppressed; there is time enough for each man to cultivate what is noblest in him, and be all that his nature allwes. It is doubtless right that one man should use the service of another; but only when both parties are benefited by the relation. The Smith may use the service of the Collier, the Grocer, and the Grazier, for he does them a service in return. He who heals the body deserves a compensation at the hands of whomsoever he serves. If the Painter, the Preacher, the Statesman, is doing a great work for mankind, he has a right to their service in return. His fellow man may do for him what otherwise he ought to do for himself. Thus is he repaid, and is at liberty to devote the undivided energy of his genius to the work. But on what ground an idle man, who does nothing for society, or an active man, whose work is wholly selfish, can use the services of others, and call them to feed and comfort him, who repays no equivalent in kind, it yet remains for Reason to discover. The only equivalent for service is a service in return. If Hercules is stronger, Solon wiser, and Job richer than the rest of men, it is not that they may demand more of their fellows, but may do more for them. "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak," says a good man. In respect, however, to the matter of personal service, this seems to be the rule; that no one, whatever be his station, wants, attainments, or riches, has any right to receive from another any service which degrades the servant in his own eyes or the eyes of the public, or in the eyes of him who receives the service. It is surely unmanly to receive a favor which you would not give. If it debases David to do a menial service for Ahud, then it debases Ahud just as much to do the same for David. The difference between King and Slave vanishes when both are examined from the hight of their common humanity, just as the difference between the west and north-west side of a hair on the surface of the earth is inconsiderable to an eye that looks down from the sun, and takes in the whole system, though it might appear stupendous to the notes that swim uncounted in a drop of dew. But no work, useful or ornamental to human life, needs be debasing. It is the lasting disgrace of society, that the most useful employments are called 'low.' There is implied in the very term the tacit confession, on the part of the employer, that he has wronged and subjugated the person who serves him; for when these same actions are performed by the mother for her child, or the son for his father, and are done for love and not money, they are counted not as low, but rather ennobling.

The law of Nature is, that work and the enjoyment of that work go together. Thus God has given each animal the power of self-help, and all necessary organs. The same Robin builds the nest and lives in it. Each Lion has claws and teeth, and kills his own meat. Every Beaver has prudence and plastic skill, and so builds for himself. In those classes of animals where there is a division of labor, one brings the wax, another builds the comb, and a third collects the honey; but each one is at work. The drones are expelled when they work no more. Even the Ruler of the colony is the most active member of the state, and really the mother of the whole people. She is only 'happy as a king,' because she does the most work. Hence she has a divine right to her eminent station. She never eats the bread of sin. She is Queen of the Workers. Here each works for the good of all, and not solely for his own benefit. Still less is any one an injury to the others. In Nature, those animals that cannot work are provided for by Love. Thus the young Lion is fed by the parent, and the old Stork by its children. Were a full grown Lion so foolish that he would not hunt, the result is plain—he must starve. Now this is a foreshadowing of Man's estate. God has given ten fingers for every two lips. Each is to use the ability he has for himself and for othsrs. Who that is able will not return to society, with his head or his hand, an equivalent for what is received? Only the Sluggard and the Robber. These two, the Drones and Pirate of society represent a large class. It is the plain duty of each, so far as he is able to render an equivalent for what he receives, and thus to work for the good of all; but each in his own way—Dorcas the seamstress at her craft, and Moses and Paul at theirs. If one cannot work through weakness, or infancy, or age, or sickness, Love works for them, and they too are fed. If one will not work, though he can the law of Nature should have its effect. He ought to starve. If one insist simply upon getting into his hands the earnings of another, and adding nothing to the common stock, he is a robber, and should properly meet with the contempt and the stout resistance of society. There is in the whole world but a certain amount of value, out of which each one is to have subsistence while here; for we are all but life-tenants of the earth, which we hold in common. We brought nothing into it. No man, therefore, has a natural right to any more than he earns or can use. He who adds any thing to the common stock and inheritance of the next age, though it be but a sheaf of wheat, or cocoon of silk he has produced, a napkin or a brown loaf he has made, is a benefactor to his race, so far as that goes. But he who gets into his hands, by force, cunning, or deceit more than he earns, does thereby force his fellow mortal to accept less than his true share. So far as that goes, he is a curse of mankind.

There are three ways of getting wealth. First by seizing with violence what is already in existence, and appropriating it to yourself. This is the method of the old Romans, of Robbers and Pirates, from Sciron to Captain Kidd. Second, by getting possession of goods in the way of traffic, or by some similar process. Here the agent is Cunning, and not Force; the instrument is a gold coin and not an iron sword, as in the former case. This method is called Trade, as the other is named Robbery. But in both cases wealth is acquired by one party and lost by the other. In the first case there is a loss of positive value; in the latter there is no increase. The world gains nothing by either. The third method is the application of labor and skill to the earth, or the productions of nature. Here is a positive increase of value. We have a dozen potatoes for one that was planted, or an elegant dress instead of an handful of wool and flax. The two former classes consume much but produce nothing. Of these the Roman says, "fruges consumere nati," they are born to eat up the corn. Yet in all ages they have been set in high places. The world dishonors its workmen, stones its pophets, crucifies its Saviors, but bows down its neck before wealth, however won, and shouts till the welkin rings again, LONG LIVE VIOLENCE AND FRAUD.

The world has always been partial to its oppressors. Many men fancy themselves an ornament to the world, whose presence in it is a disgrace and a burthen to the ground they stand on. The man who does nothing for the race, but sits at his ease, and fares daintily, because wealth has fallen into his hands is a burthen to the world. He may be a polished gentleman, a scholar, the master of elegant accomplishments, but so long as he takes no pains to work for man, with his head or his hands, what claim has he to respect, or even a substance? The rough-handed woman, who with a salt-fish and a basket of vegetables provides substantial food for a dozen working men, and washes their apparel, and makes them comfortable and happy, is a blessing to the land, though she have no education, while this fop with his culture and wealth is a curse. She does her duty so far as she sees it, and so deserves the thanks of man. But every oyster or berry that fop has eaten, has performed its duty better than he. 'It was made to support human nature, and it has done so,' while he is but a consumer of food and clothing. That public opinion tolerates such men is no small marvel.

The productive classes of the world are those who bless it by their work or their thought. He who invents a machine, does no less service than he who toils all day with his hands. Thus the inventors of the plough, the loom, and the ship were deservedly placed among those society was to honor. But they also, who teach men moral and religious truth, who give them dominion over the world; instruct them to think; to live together in peace, to love one another, and pass good lives enlightened by Wisdom, charmed by Goodness, and enchanted by Religion; they who build up a loftier population, making man more manly, are the greatest benefactors of the world. They speak to the deepest wants of the soul, and give them the water of life and the true bread from Heaven. They are loaded with contumely in their life, and come to a violent end. But their influence passes like morning from land to land, and village and city grow glad in their light.—That is a poor economy, common as it is, which overlooks these men. It is a very vulgar mind, that would rather Paul had continued tent-maker, and Jesus a carpenter.

Now the remedy for the hard service that is laid upon the human race consists partly in lessening the unproductive classes, and increasing the workers and thinkers, as well as in giving up the work of Ostentation and folly and sin. It has been asserted by authority, that if all men and women capable of work would toil diligently but two hours out of the twenty-four, the work of the world would be done, and all would be as comfortably fed and clothed, as well educated and housed, and provided for in general, as they now are, even admitting they all went to sleep the other twenty-two hours of the day and night. If this were done, we should hear nothing of the sickness of sedentary and rich men. Exercise for the sake of health would be heard of no more. One class would not be crushed by hard work, nor another oppressed by indolence, and condemned, in order to resist the just vengeance nature takes on them to consume nauseous drugs and resort to artificial and hateful methods to preserve a life that is not worth the keeping, because it is useless and ignominious. Now men may work at the least three or four times this necessary amount each day, and yet find their labor a pastime, a dignity, and a blessing, and find likewise abundant time for study, for social intercourse, and recreation. Then if a man's calling were to think and write, he would not injure the world by even excessive devotion to his favorite pursuit, for the general burthens would still be slight. * * *

TESTIMONIES AGAINST WAR.

Edmund Burke, probably the greatest philosopher the world ever produced, was decidedly pacific in his sentiments and transmitted these views to the school of politicians under his influence.—Fox, Sheridan Canning, Brougham, may all be regarded as his pupils in the science of politics; and the history of the British parliament records their frequent and successful exertions to prevent war. England, Europe, and the world are deeply indebted to those great minds for nearly a quarter of a century of general peace.

Some of Burke's statements respecting the waste of life in war, defy belief, and awaken doubt whether he intended they should be received as sober realities. "It is an incontestible truth," he says, "that there is more havoc made in one year by men, than has been made by all the lions, tigers, panthers, ounces, leopards, hyenas, rhinoceroses, elephants, bears, and wolves, since the beginning of the world. I think the number of men now upon earth are computed at five hundred millions at the most. Here the slaughter of mankind amounts to upwards of seventy times the number of souls this day on the globe."

A debate in the House of Commons called forth in 1829, an expression of similar views from nearly all the leading statesmen of Great Britain. Sir James McIntosh, in opening the debate, said, that such discussions in repesentative assemblies will be serviceable, if it were only as affording vents to political animosities, proving the good-will which subsists between the governments constituted on the principle of representation, and rooting more firmly the strong and growing passion for peace, which I rejoice to say, is visibly extending and increasing throughout every nation in Europe, and which, I would add, is the best legacy left us by fierce war which waged from Cadiz to Copenhagen. If my passion for peace could have received any addition, it would have been strengthened, when I heard the horrors of war described and deprecated by a man who, during the two thousand years that have elapsed since Scipio vanquished Hannibal, was the only individual that in one battle had destroyed all his enemies. I confess I feel a strong passion for peace, for I must call it by that name; and I trust this will ultimately become the ruling passion of all Europe.

Sir Robert Peel, in continuing the debate, remarked, "I will not follow the gentleman through all the details of his speech; but I will at once express my cordial concurrence with his sentiments respecting the advantages and blessings of peace, and my congratulations for the happiness which fifteen years' entire freedom from war, an unusual circumstance in our later history, has afforded us. I do hope that one great and most beneficial effect of the advance of civilization, the diffusion of knowledge, and the extension of commerce," that he did not mention Christianity, the very main spring of all instrumentalities in the cause of peace, "will be to reduce within their proper dimensions, the fame, the merits and the reward of military achievements; and that juster notions concerning the moral dignity and the deserts of those who apply themselves to preserve peace, and avoid the eclat of war, will be the consequence."

Lord Brougham was still more explicit. "My principles—I know not whether they agree with yours; they may be derided, they may be unfashionable; but I hope they are spreading far and wide—my principles are contained in the words which that great man, Lord Faulkland, used to express in secret, and which I now express in public, Peace, PEACE, PEACE. I abominate war, as unchristian. I hold it the greatest of human crimes. I deem it to include all others, violence, blood, rapine, fraud, every thing which can deform the character, alter the nature, and debase the name of man."

On various occasions, Lord Brougham has expressed similar views. At the meeting of the British Scientific Association, in 1834, he said, "It has often been remarked, that war is a game at which were the people wise, governments would not often play; and I may add that in encouraging and fostering the exertions of men in science who are of no party, over whom the angry tempests of war pass innocuous, a government is taking the best means to facilitate that which should ever be their chief aim—PEACE ON EARTH AND GOOD WILL AMONG MEN. As individuals, the older they grow, the more sensible they become that life is too short to be spent in peronsal quarrels, so I am happy to say, that the world is too old and too experienced for neighboring states to engage in war with little or no ground of quarrel."

Such are the views, not of visionary philanthropists, but of the ablest statesmen that ever lived sentiments uttered not by way of compliment, but as an homage due to truth; a spontaneous expression of the deliberate and settled convictions respecting the baneful custom of war. Recount their names, and say if the opinions of such men as Clarendon, Burke, and Brougham, are not worthy of the most serious and respectful consideration.—Advocate of Peace.

VENICE.

The silence of Venice constitutes in my opinion one of its greatest charms. This absence of noise is peculiarly soothing to the mind, and disposes it to contemplation. I looked out from my balcony last night, when the grand canal reflected a thousand brilliant stars on its water, turbid though it be; and the lights streaming from the windows on each side, showed like golden columns on its bosom. Gondola after gondola glided along, from some of which soft music stole on the ear, and sometimes their open windows revealed some youthful couple with their guitars, or some more matured ones, partaking their light repast of fruit and cakes; while not unfrequently a solitary male figure was seen reclining on the seat absorbed in the perusal of some book. The scene realised some of the descriptions of Venice read years ago; and except that the gondoliers were small in number, and the lights from the houses few and far between, I could have fancied that no change had occurred since the descriptions I referred to were written. The morning light reveals the melancholy alteration; and as I stood on the same balcony to-day, and saw the muddy canal with a few straggling gondolas gliding over it, the defaced and mutilated palaces, and the reduced population, all brought out into distinctness by the bright beams of the sun, I could hardly believe it was the same scene that looked so well last night. Moonlight is a great beautifier, and especially of all that has been touched by the finger of decay, from a palace to—a woman. It softens what is harsh, renders fairer what is fair, and disposes the mind to a tender melancholy in harmony with all around.

The endless variety in the architecture of Venice pleases me. It looks as if the natives of many lands, and as many ages, had congregated to build dwellings and churches according to the different tastes of each; for here may be traced the massive piles and round arches of remote time, the fantastic and grotesque style of the middle ages, the richly decorated Saracenic, and the stately buildings whose fronts are encrusted with fine sculpture that even still retain their pristine beauty.

Where, but at Venice, could be found crowded together specimens of the Greek, Roman, Gothic, and Saracenic styles, blending into rich masses, rendering this city a place where every traveler may find some remembrances of his home?

The arcades of the Piazza of St. Mark present an amusing picture, being appropriated to cafes, and shops, principally jewelers', the windows of which glitter with trinkets, tempting many a bright-eyed Venetian maid and matron, to loiter before them in longing admiration, while groups of people, dressed in the garbs of their different countries, from the turbaned Turk and quick-eyed Greek down to the staid and soberly-attired Englishman, are seen moving along, giving the scene life and animation.

This moving mass of the natives of so many countries accords well with the equally heterogeneous masses of architecture beneath which they are seated; and though this extraordinary mixture of style in the buildings cannot be defended as examples of pure taste, nevertheless the effect is, at least to me, very delightful; and while gazing on it, I find mysef no more disposed to censure it than I should be to decry a bed of rare tulips of various hues, because their variety was more rich than chaste.

This strange mixture of architecture seems to tell the history of its origin.—Might not the victorious Venetians, returning from distant lands, have wished to perpetuate the memory of their achievements, by imitating the buildings beheld there? and this jumble, so censured by connoisseurs, may have had a peculiar charm for them, by reminding them of past glory.—But though, without this prestige, I confess (though by so doing I give reason to have my taste called in question,) I greatly admire the general effect of the Piazza of St. Mark; and that this very melange is perhaps one of the causes of my admiration, so novel, and yet so gorgeous is its appearance.—The Idler, by Lady Blessington.

Every thing ought to be well done,—A good many capital things are told of the late William Gray—a distinguished merchant of Boston. He was familiarly known by the name of "Billy Gray." He left at his death a large estate, and used to say that the chief source of his worldly success, was his motto, "What is worth doing at all, is worth doing well." On one occasion, he had reason to find fault with a mechanic for some slovenly job. The mechanic recollected Mr. Gray when he was in a humble condition, so he bore the rebuke with impatience. "I tell you what" said he, "Billy Gray, I shan't stand such jaw from you. Why I recollect when you was nothing but a drummer in a regiment." "And so I was," replied Mr. Gray," so I was a drummer—but did'nt I drum well—eh eh! didn't I drum well.

SMALL BIRDS GREAT BLESSINGS.

I wish our intelligent farmers could be awakened to the importance of preserving robins, and other small birds, as a means of aiding in their work. The inhumanity which suffers every lazy lubber of a boy, who can rest an old king's arm over a stone wall, to kill or frighten every poor linnet that sings in the fields, and every robin-redbreast that dares eat an unripe cherry, and save a child from the dysentery, is a short-sighted piece of selfishness. These harmless birds live upon grubs and other worms, and insects, and the slight inroads they make upon the farmer's crops are repaid, an hundred fold, by the protection they afford, against a thousand destroyers. These birds, if not frightened, will become so tame as to perch on the hand, or light on the plough as it turns over the furrow. No good farmer should fail to teach his boys to spare and cherish these harmless and often tuneful visitants to his fields and orchards. Like the good man in one of our Western towns, who pleaded so earnestly for the poor crows, in our Legislature a few years since, I would enforce the legal penalties for trespass, against any one who shot them on my land. The crows, too, nature's living mouse traps, instead of being a tame, almost domestic bird, as in some other countries, where farmers have been taught their value by long experience, have been frightened into mean pilferers of unwed corn hills!—A good crow is worth a bushel of wheat or other grain, to the acre, and sometimes ten! A knowledge of ornithology, and not penal laws, is what our farmers and their sons need to induce them to regard their true interests in this matter.

Ladie's Department.

PIETY IN A WIFE.

"That's it, that's it; that's first rate. If I am wild myself, I intend having a pious wife. That's the very first qualification." So spake a wild and thoughtless, though talented and amiable young man. A few of us having me by chance with a friend, on new year's eve, agreed to yourselves for a short time (doubtless we might have been better employed,) with the "Book of Fate," as it is called. Various characters, dispositions, qualities, &c., being written down and numbered, each person chooses a number, when the quality attached to it is read out to him. The number which this young man had chosen for the quality of his partner, was piety, which called forth the remark above stated. It struck me as something very strange; and as an opinion, either not generally entertained, or not generally known. This induced me to mention his remark in the presence of another young gentleman, equally regardless of personal religion. He replied that he was not aware that it was avowed openly, but he believed it to be generally entertained by all honourable young men.

And is this the case? and do young ladies know it? Are they aware that when they are exerting all their ingenuity in preparing to shine as the most brilliant stars at the fashionable ball or masquerade, that their more minded friend who perhaps at that moment is, with a broken heart before the mercy seat pleading for the salvation of some poor helpless sinner—that she who has received the "blessing of those who were ready to perish," holds a more exalted seat, in the affection even of those who are utterly regardless of religion as it respects themselves?

There is something indescribably lovely in a devotedly pious young lady, something that reminds the soul at once of those bright angelic spirits which surround the throne of God. That calm serenity and composure—those eyes which beam with looks of holy tenderness and compassion for immortal souls; even the men of the world too well known their true interest to disregar! these things. And the remark which another votary of the world made, speaking of the daughters of pleasure, "ah, those girls will do well enough for amusement, but give me a pious wife," is full of truth; and conveys a sentiment which should, as it is no less exalted than true, be engraven as with the point of a diamond, upon evary female heart. If there is any difference who should be pious, it should certain be females; they who hold the destinies of the earth, in its most emphatic sense should be guided with "wisdom from on high." Ardent piety gives an accomplishment to the most faultless form, which can be furnished from no other source.

It makes a kinder and more affectionate sister; a more devoted and sincere friend; and is every thing for a wife. And whilst the brilliant enameling of the coquette may dazzle the beholder for a moment, piety alone can bear the trouble and disappointments of "real life."—Presbyterian. T.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 29 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street joining the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village.
JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

Head Quarters for BOOTS & SHOES.
Wholesale and retail. As cheap as the cheapest and good as the best.

THE Public are invited to call and examine for themselves. He keeps on hand Fine and Coarse Boots and Shoes, of every description, Ladies French Buskins and single sole Slips, Whit and Black satin slips, made to order. The Ladie are invited to call and examine the latest New York fashions. ☞Utica St. Sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.
De Ruyter, April 26, 1841. 61tf.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

200
PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATIONS
OF THE
HOLY BIBLE,
CONSISTING OF
VIEWS IN THE HOLY LAND.
BY ROBERT SEARS.

THE FIFTH EDITION of the first volume of the above work is issued from the press of ROBERT SEARS, 122 Nassau Street, New York.

It is a book of 400 large octavo pages, and is done up in the neatest typographical manner, bound in muslin, and lettered in a superior style; containing over 200 engravings of an interesting and beneficial character.

Those wishing to subscribe for the above valuable work can be accommodated by applying to the subscriber, who has the agency for this town and vicinity. A specimen of the Book can be seen at this Office. The price is extremely low, for a book of the size, so well stored with interesting and useful matter, and reflects much credit, in every respect, upon its enterprising publisher. Subscriptions are respectfully solicited, and the work will be ordered immediately for as many hundred as may wish to avail themselves of this opportunity of making so rich an addition to their Family Libraries, at so small an expense. Price only TWO DOLLARS.
A. H. BURDICK, Agent.
Register Office, De Ruyter, April 30, 1841.

SIX CENTS REWARD!

RANAWAY from the subscriber, on the 16th inst., JOSEPH PRATT, an indented apprentice to the Farming Business. All persons are hereby notified that I shall pay no debts of his contracting, after this date. Said Boy was 16 years of age in March last. Whoever will return said boy shall receive the above reward. 61w3.
MARTILLUS C. WOLCOTT.
Otselic, April 21, 1841.

SHERIFFS SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Supreme Court of Judicature of the State of New York, and to me delivered, I have levied upon the right, title and interest of Stephen G. Sears in and to a certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being, in the Village of De Ruyter, county of Madison and bounded as follows: on the north by the turnpike road, on the east by lands owned by Noah B. Foote, on the south by lands owned, or in possession of, John Starr, on the west by lands owned by Marvin M. Hamilton, which I shall expose to sale at public Vendue, as the Law directs, at the house of Wm C. Gage, on Saturday, the 22d day of May next, at 1 o'clock, P. M.
Dated, De Ruyter, April 10, 1841. 59w6
ISAAC BROWN, SHERIFF.
By T. ORVILLE ELMORE, Deputy.

WANTED.

IMMEDIATELY wanted a good workman in the business of Wagon making. Also, a Smith acquainted with the business, to whom good encouragement will be given. 56tf
JOHN MAXSON.
April 12th, 1841.

HOUSE TO LET.

A PLEASANT and convenient tenement is still to Let, in the House occupied last year by Mr. Clark on the estate of the late L. B Goodwin.
JOHN MAXSON.
April 12th, 1881. 59tf

Medicines! Medicines!!
TO FAMILIES.

S. D. DELLAY, would call the attention of families to some of the most speedy and effectual remedies which have ever before been offered to the public; for the sale of which he has lately been appointed sole agent of this place—among which may be found
G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s
MOTHER'S RELIEF.
JAYNE'S INVALUABLE INDIAN EXPECTORANT—
DR. McMUN'S HIGHLY CELEBRATED AND INFALLIBLE ELIXER OF OPIUM—
MERRITT GRIFFIN'S CELEBRATED LION OF THE DAY—
DOCT. BISHOP'S ANTI BILLIOUS PILLS. A HIGHLY VALUABLE FAMILY MEDICINE.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
GEO. W. SUTTON.
De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. &c. A certain cure in all cases ☞ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,
ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,
For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.
For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6
S. D. DELLAY.

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail. He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.
ELISHA STILLMAN.
De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postaga

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 12.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 64.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, MAY 21, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

Is it a Sin to Secularize the Last Day of the Week!

As the influence of those who believe the original Sabbath should be observed, conflicts with the influence of their brethren who believe the first day of the week is the Sabbath, it appears important that all who respect the Sabbatic institution should prayerfully investigate the whole subject, and let the unerring language of Scripture settle the question.

Having, in a former article, presented some of my reasons for believing it is not sinful to secularize the FIRST DAY of the week, I now propose some reasons for believing it is a sin to secularize the LAST DAY of the week.

That it is the will of our Creator that the seventh day should be regarded as a day of rest, is plainly intimated from his own example as recorded by Moses, Gen. ii. 2, 3. From this record it appears that God, having finished the work of Creation, rested on the seventh day from all his work, and on this account, BLESSED and SANCTIFIED it. If it was his will that Adam and his posterity should imitate his example in resting on that day, it must be sinful to disregard his will in that respect.

Again ; It is evidently sinful to secularize the seventh day, as it is a direct violation of the fourth precept of the decalogue. In that precept, the Lord has solemnly required us to "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy ;" and has unequivocally declared that the "seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." This command dedicates the last day of the week in a particular manner to the service and worship of God. That the fourth commandment has not been abolished, is evident from the express declaration of the Savior, recorded in Matthew v. 17. He came not "to destroy the law," but to submit to its authority, and obey its precepts. As he did "abolish in his flesh the enmity even the law of commandments contained in ordinances," it is evident that the law referred to in Mat. v. 17, was the law of the ten commandments. That the Sabbatic law has undergone no change or modification, is evident from the fact that God has given us no such intimation in his Word. The Bible nowhere intimates that GOD has released us from keeping the very day for the Sabbath which he originally specified.

There is no evidence that Christ or his Apostles ever secularized the last day of the week. With respect to the improvement of the Sabbath, the "manner" of Paul and the "custom" of Christ were alike. Luke iv. 16 ; Acts xvii. 2.

As it is contrary to the will of God to secularize the last day of the week, as appears from the example of Jesus Christ and his Apostles, and a direct violation of the fourth commandment, I am brought to the conclusion that it must be sinful.

AZOR ESTEE.

Shiloh, April 27, 1841.

For the Register.

Open Communion.

The practice of many churches at the present, of inviting and allowing others to come to the eucharist with them, is a subject which ought to be well considered by every one. It is advocated by some that it is "charitable." But it ought to be plainly shown how far such a matter should be carried before the commencement, or wherein the propriety consists.

If "charity" is to be taken for an infallible rule, (and it certainly should be with regard to our actions,) then we have only to examine the conduct of those who advocate the practice, and place it beside the description given of charity in the Scripture, and draw our conclusions. This, if impartially done, cannot fail of being useful, both to those who contend for it, and likewise to those who oppose it.

In the first place, then, we see a body of people professing one set of tenets extending a fellowship to another, believing differently. Charity requireth of her followers to bear, hope, believe, and endure all things. Thus we are enjoined to exercise forbearance to every one, not even excepting infidels. For assurance is given that the worst of men may repent, and come to the knowledge of the truth ; but if because we are commanded to hope, and believe, that there are good men in all societies, and on this consideration the "Open Communion" system is adopted ; is there any stopping point, short of admitting every one ? However, while this christian grace requires many things, one remains unenjoined, viz : to do every thing. Concerning our actions, there is but one criterion : What God has commanded. When we leave this, we grope at noon-day as in the dark ; and are involved in a labyrinth of perplexities.

But if Communion be a test of fellowship, is it not so in all cases ? and should not those who participate in it join also in all other things pertaining to the church ? It appears to me somewhat incongruous for people who call themselves Christians to come forward, and allow those who differ widely in theory and practice to be partakers with them in the ordinance, while they deny, or exclude, the same ones from all others, not suffering them to act, in any matter else than this, unless they promise to coincide with every rule of their discipline. Whereas, would not charity, if it justified any in companying in this, also demand an allowance, and steady attendance and brotherhood in all others ? But while we may frequently see denominations mutually meeting each other here, we find them almost as much separated in the transaction of every thing else, pertaining to the church, as if they never saw each other. Does not the Heavenly grace require more things than one ? and ought not every being who comes to this ordinance to be a fit partaker of all others ? If so, I would humbly ask, why there is so many partitions between those who adopt the Free Communion plan ?—For, I can see no reason for any when we can all meet on this ground as equals. Besides, most all sects require something previous to attending on this ; but by suffering this practice to prevail, (as it does in many societies of our country.) I can see nothing to prevent such as practice neither Baptism or the Imposition of Hands, or those who profess no religion at all, from being communicants ; for if Charity is the plea, it may as well comprehend every one as an individual ; and thereby an opportunity is offered to those who delight to cast contempt and reproach on every thing sacred, to commit abominations, the consequence of which they are (till awakened) willingly ignorant, and totally regardless.

It may be said, no such instance can be pointed out. If it could I should hope it never would be. But I say, as before, a chance for the like is given ; and whilst the hearts of men are prone to do iniquity, and the imagination thereof is continually evil, we know not to what extent they may be led by the crafts and wiles of the wicked one. Moreover, those who profess to be believers are required to come out from the world, and be separate. But how shall this separation be known, if all are permitted to intermingle in even but one christian ordinance, which I think every one, who has a correct knowledge, will say none but true followers of our Lord are entitled to ?

PHILANTHROPOS.

Pike, Pa., May 6, 1841.

Religious Department.

THE WAY TO BE HAPPY.

RULES FOR ALL FAMILIES.

1. Begin and end every day with prayer to God. In the morning when you wake, lift up your thoughts to God. Think how great a mercy it is that you have had a night's rest and are spared to see another day. Think how many have spent the night in pain, in sickness, or in prison. Think how many were last night removed into eternity, and how soon this may be your own case.

2. Offer up, in secret, your prayer and thanksgiving to God, before you begin your worldly business. It is much better to go from prayer to business, than from business to prayer, for if the world gets the start of religion in the morning, it is hard for religion to overtake the world all the day after. Let no trifling excuse make you forget prayer. It is better to take a little time from sleep now, than to have to lament your neglect under future punishment.

3. After prayer to God, set about your proper business with diligence and industry. God hath sent no one into the world to be idle, but to labor either with mind or body, or with both. He that says "Remember the Sabbath-day, (Not Sunday,) to keep it holy," says also, "Six days shalt thou labor." If you are called to the meanest and most laborious occupation, be not discouraged, but consider that it is the appointment of God, and in obedience thereto be diligent in your place. In doing this from a regard to his will, you will glorify God as truly, while in your daily labor, as the king upon the throne, or a minister in the pulpit. These earthly distinctions are nothing in the Divine eye. "The Lord looks not at the outward appearance, but at the heart."

4. Labor of a heavenly frame of mind in the midst of your earthly business. While your hands are employed in your needful work, seek to have your heart with God. Endeavor to improve the time by profitable thoughts, or short ejaculatory prayers, which will be no hindrance to your business, but will keep you from vain and wicked thoughts. Bear constantly in mind this text—"Thou, O God ! seest me."

5. Be strictly just and upright in all your dealings. Remember the golden rule, "To do unto others as you would have them do unto you."—Consider also that solemn sentence, that "With what measure you meet to others, it shall be measured to you again." If you are a parent or a master, take care that you rob not your wife, your children, or others, by your intemperance, or neglect of what you ought to provide for the bodily comfort and above all, for that moral and religious instruction which is so necessary for their eternal welfare. If you are a servant for an apprentice, beware you rob not your master, either wilfully or carelessly, of that property which is entrusted to you, or of that time in which you are engaged to serve him.

6. In doing your duty in your calling, depend on God's fatherly care to bless your endeavors and all circumstances put your trust in him. Do you meet with sickness, or losses, or difficulties ? See and acknowledge God's hand in them, and pray to him to support you, that whatever befals you here, it may work for your good in eternity. Do you meet with success and comfort ? Own the hand of God in it and let it be your delight to praise him for it.

7. Watch daily every sin that besets you, and avoid all evil company. When any temptation attack you, pray to God for help against them ; It is reasonable to hope that such a prayer, if sincerely offered, will be heard.

8. In the evening consider the actions of the day past ; humble yourself before God for all your sins, and pray for his pardoning mercy, upon the conditions laid down in the gospel of Jesus Christ ; for when you have done your best, you will have reason to say that you are an unprofitable servant.

9. Esteem your Bible, and particularly the New Testament, the greatest treasure you have on earth, because it teaches the way to heaven. If you are a parent, teach your children to read this blessed book, and to understand it. Pray not only by yourself, but with your family, remember that strict account you must one day give for every trust committed to your care.

10. Make much of precious time, and especially of the Sabbath. Think how great a blessing it is to live in a land of religious liberty; and where the way of salvation is so publicly declared. Think what numbers of the human race are without these advantages, and how they will condemn you in the day of judgment, if without your light and privileges, they have acquitted themselves as well or better than you have.

11. Whatever you may suffer in this life, think what your state would be if you were dealt with as your sins deserve. Remember that the least sin is more to be feared than the greatest suffering, and that God's favor is more than any earthly good.

12. Remember that your Creator is the "giver of all good gifts," and if he blesses you with the means let the hand of charity be extended to the sick and needy of your fellow-creatures : for "he that hath pity on the poor lendeth to the Lord, who will deliver him in the time of trouble."

Read over these rules carefully every Sabbath morning, and examine how you have observed them in the week past. If you have adhered to them, your life will be blessed, your death happy, and your eternity glorious ; but if you despise them and neglect your eternal welfare, remember life is short ; and, as death, judgment, and eternity are fast approaching, "Prepare to meet thy God."

THE BIBLE.

It would be happy for all men to be Christians; but every man should know what it is to be a Christian. This knowledge may be easily found in the holy scriptures, and nowhere else with certainty. These scriptures compose a book, which, beside pointing out a sure way to happiness, temporal and eternal, contains a variety of matters, more eloquent and charming to a reader of true taste than all other books. It speaks in a language of more simplicity, sublimity and power, than that of human genius in its highest efforts. It is partly historical, and partly didactic. Every thing most important and interesting to mankind is detailed in its history, and its lesson of piety and morality are powerful and perfect. These latter are not dryly arranged in scholastic method, but intermixed with the history, where they shine forth in living characters, whether good or bad, with a most affecting brilliancy. And where the best characters, most favored by the historian, are branded with blemishes and crimes to which in fact they were liable, and followed with such rewards, or pursued with such reproofs or punishments, as Divine justice required. Herein are found such strains of poetry, as loudly speak the divinity of their Author. Herein we everywhere meet the strokes of oratory, which speak more in five or six words, and with greater power, than the long elaborate orations of Demosthenes or Cicero. And to set these infinitely farther still above all human efforts of the kind, they are accompanied with predictions, often the most unlikely, and sometimes to human apprehension, impossible to be fulfilled; & yet, at the great distance of time, most exactly verified by events. Again, to give these predictions credit when they were uttered, and to raise a well-grounded expectation of the accomplishment, innumerable miracles were wrought, to prove that Almighty power ensured the dictates of infinite wisdom. The inquisitive reader no sooner wishes to know of what end or purpose this astonishing interposition of the Divine Being is asserted to have been given, than he finds that end repeatedly declared in the same book to be no other than the reformation of mankind, and their real happiness. An end of less consequence, or of less connection with infinite goodness, cannot be supposed. The man that knows himself, that is, how very incapable he is of attaining to true happiness, by his own endeavors, must either believe in his interposition, and give his faith to this book ; or maintain that he wants no help, and that God is neither willing nor able to help him.

INSUFFICIENCY OF NATURAL RELIGION.

We are frequently told of the sufficiency of natural religion, and the deficiency of a written revelation. We are told that as all men must be supposed to be interested in the revelation of the divine will, if it be conceded to exist, it ought to have been written with a sunbeam upon all lands, or inscribed upon the face of the orb of light himself, that he might daily present it to all nations in his unwearied journey. Upon their showing, that which is demanded has been done, and (to give them all the advantage of the argument) has been done by natural religion, and not as yet by revelation. If, as they assume natural religion is a sufficient revelation, and no other is necesary, it has been written with a sunbeam upon all lands ; it has been inscribed from the beginning of the creation upon the face of the glorious orb of day. What is the result ? What has natural religion effected in any, in every age ? in any every country ? "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth forth his handy work ;" but the "world by wisdom knew not God ;" they "worshipped and served the Creator ;" they fell down to the host of heaven ; or changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like unto corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things." Now call for natural religion, and she shall answer you from the depths of the forest and the summit of the mountains ; from the sea, and from the shore; from the crowded city, and uncultivated desert ; from the hut of the savage and the dome of the monarch ; everywhere her altars are planted, and her worship maintained. Her influence and her footsteps may be traced on the face of the whole earth, in barbarous rites revolting superstitions, and disgusting obsceneties ; and in all the forms of idolatry, from the feathered gods of the islands of the South Sea, to the mis-shapen logs of Africa, up to the three hundred and thirty-three thousand deities of philosophical India. Would you see her in her own person ? Bid her come forth—she appears in "garments rolled in blood ;" "the battle of the warrior with confused noise" rages around, her children drop into fires kindled to her honor ; human victims are slaughtered on the altars raised to her praise, or crushed beneath the ponderous car upon which she sits enthroned. Around her, dying cries and agonizing shrieks mingle with loud acclamations and frantic sound ; her look withers the country, and depopulates the city. This is natural religion, not as she came from the hands of God, the witness of his eternal power and Godhead, but as she is deformed by the passions of men and debased by their corruptions ; not as "the image of the invisible Creator," but as the idol of the fallen and depraved creature. Yet this is natural religion, stained with gore, and foul with crimes ; not depicted by fancy, but demonstrated by fact ; the facts drawn from all climes and from all generations : facts which even infidelity has not the effrontery to deny.—Rev. Dr. Collyer.

WHY SHOULD I BE A CHRISTIAN?

Candid reader, will you give me your attention for a few moments, as I may attempt briefly to answer this important question.—It is an inquiry which every providence of God, every mercy, every judgment, every blessing, in fine every thing in nature and in revelation urges upon you. "Why should I be a Christian ?" Impenitent reader, have you ever attended to this inquiry ? Have you ever reflected seriously upon your condition as an immortal, accountable, but sinful being ? Have you sufficiently considered your relations to God, to eternity ? Have you considered the momentous consequences involved in your choosing or rejecting the one thing needful ? If you have, you must have seen many good reasons for such a choice, and you ought to ask yourself why you are not now a Christian.

And first, your condition in this world ought to lead you to seek religion. You must be convinced when you look around you that there is much in this world that is wrong. If you look at your fellow-men, you see many, even in your own happy country, involved in misery. You see a thousand "ills that flesh is heir to," destroying the happiness and peace of the community. In the train of vices which follow hard one upon another, you can read the destiny of very many of your acquaintance. You see the tender plant cut down, while even the dew of the morning has not ceased to moisten its tender leaves. The bud no sooner begins to swell, than it falls from the stem.

Intemperance stalks abroad over the land, ready to place its cloven foot upon the threshhold of every hamlet. Licentiousness, the sister vice of intemperance, disguising herself in painted tapestry and plucking the fairest blossoms, is sending abroad her pestilential breath, which like the canker worm, penetrates the very core of human society.

You behold oppression rearing her head in the most frightful form, consigning more than two and a half millions of human beings, men like yourself, to the most cruel bondage ; breaking the strongest ties that ever bound mortal man to his fellow, fixing the destiny of husbands and wives in distant climes ; dooming innocent children to be sold under the hammer, by their unnatural, and more unfeeling parents ; thus making merchandise of flesh and blood, and even entering the very church of God and tearing asunder the mangled limbs of Christ's body, until that body bleeds at every pore ! !

You behold our national escutcheon, dripping with the blood of innocent victims it was bound to protect. You behold the weak and defenceless, but rightful owners of the soil, compelled to forsake their humble cabins, where they had dwelt in peace and plenty, and from whose altars had ascended the morning and evening sacrifice, and the grateful hymn of praise ; you behold such, I say, casting a lingering look behind, as with a heavy heart, they see their dwellings fired, their property confiscated, and their waving fields left a prey to merciless marauders.—You behold a nation, boasting the highest attainments ever made in human government, rent in twain in consequence of its system of oppression, and divided into factions headed by political demagogues. You behold even in this favored land of Bibles, and gospel privileges, illumined, as it is, by the effulgent blaze of science and religion, both of which point, as it were in letters of gold, to the straight and narrow way : you behold even here, many, yea, a vast multitude, thronging the broad road that leads to death. And O, that every impenitent sinner could realize that he makes one in this vast number. Yes, reader, if an impenitent sinner, you are still in the broad road to destruction.

Secondly. The fact that you are a sinner urges you to choose the good part. Religion is peculiarly adapted to the exigencies of fallen human nature. It is that which alone can meet the demands of every impenitent sinner. Under all the trials and afflictions to which you may be exposed in this vale of tears, it will afford consolation which no earthly friend can yield ; and will even enable you to rejoice under the adverse providences of God.

The sinner is represented as blind, deaf and dumb, naked, lame sick, and in prison. Christianity extends her hand to restore sight to the blind, to unstop the deaf ears, to unloose the silent tongue, to clothe the naked, to heal the sick, and to open the prison doors. And all this even in this life. In fact it would be the consummation of your happiness even here. Whatever be your external circumstances, having the "good part," you have all you need to secure your highest happiness. There is no such thing as real prosperity without the favor of God. The poor man who lives upon the hard earnings of his daily toil ; the lonely cottager, whose half enclosed hut is but a scanty covering against the chilling blast ; or the solitary widow, whose heart is moved with compassion at the sight of her famishing children, if permitted to enjoy the favor of God, are with all their poverty possessed of infinitely more real prosperity than those who have thousands at their command, and yet do not enjoy the smiles of heaven.

It is sin and sin alone, that makes men so unhappy in this world. It is because they are not reconciled to the will of God. There is a constant desire to have things different from what God has fixed them. Could men bring their desires into subjection to God, there would be no discontent. Every thing would go just right. Our constitution is such that we cannot satisfy the highest claims of our nature, such as self-love, pride, vanity, &c. may be gratified, but so long as conscience is disregarded, so long as her voice is unheeded, or her dictates disobeyed, there can be no true enjoyment. The great secret of true happiness is, to obey the voice of conscience. So much for your happiness here, without any reference to any hereafter.—Golden Rule.

WARNING.—Your day will end. The night of death will call you from life. The doom at death standeth as long as God liveth,—forever. How comfortable will the feast of a good conscience be to you, when your eye-strings shall break, your face wax pale, and the breath turn cold, and your soul shall long to have the door open, that the prisoner may be set at liberty. Make sure work of salvation, that it be not to seek, when the sandglass is run out, and time and eternity shall be conjoined. There is no errand so weighty ! O take it to heart!—Rutherford.

Children's Department.

LEARNING TO THINK.

'Here, Charles! Stop a moment, will you ? I want to speak with you."

'I can't awhile now, Henry : for I hav'nt had a run with my hoop a long time."

'But I want to tell you something. Here ! I hav'nt seen you since you came back from the country. Your iron hoop runs along this hard ground capitally. Can you tell what it is that makes it go along so famously ?'

'What it is ! To be sure I can. It is my stick. The harder I hit it the faster it goes.'

'But hit this post as hard as you like with your stick, and it will not stir from the place where it stands ?'

'No ! that is because it is stuck fast in the ground.'

'Yonder is a post lying down in the road ; hit that, then, with your stick, and see if it will run along like your hoop.'

'I know it will not, because it is so heavy ; it is of no use to hit that.'

'Well, then, here is my pocket handkerchief; let us see how you can knock that along. Surely that will not be too heavy for you.'

'No ; but it will be too light though !—The handkerchief would not run along at all.'

'The post is too heavy, and the pocket handkerchief is too light ; you are hard to please : but suppose I put a big stone in the handkerchief, and make it heavier, will you bowl it along then with your stick ?'

'No, that I could not.'

'And why not ?'

'Why, because—because it wouldn't run along at all.'

'But can you tell me the reason why it will not run along at all ?'

'No, I can't ; I never thought about it.'

'I dare say not ; for we boys very seldom do think about any thing but our play, unless we are obliged to do it. But now let me tell you what I wanted to say to you.'

'Ay, do, and then I'll be off again, for yonder is Edwin Palmer, with his hoop, and I want to join him. What is it ?'

'Why, do you know, that I am learning to think ?'

'Learning to think ! I never heard of such a thing !'

'I dare say not ; but, for all that, I only wish that I had begun years ago. I have learned more the last three months than I did all last year, I am sure.'

'But where's the good of learning to think ?'

'Where's the good ! What a question ! But I dare say that I should have asked it myself three months ago, and, therefore, I ought not to be surprised at you. If people had not thought about things, we should never have had the comforts and pleasures we now enjoy ;—the food we eat, the clothes we wear, the houses we live in, have all been the subject of much thought ; aye, and our very plays too. Why does the peg top spin, the ball bounce, the humming top make a noise, and the kite fly in the air ? I hardly think you can answer me one of these questions. Now, if you had learned to think, you would be able to answer them all.'

'Should I ?'

'Yes, that you would ; but instead of being able to answer them now, you cannot tell me, I dare say, why a battledoor will not fly in the air as well as a kite. It is something of the same form ; why will it not rise in the air ?'

'It's too heavy, a great deal !'

'Too heavy ! Why a large kite is as heavy as two battledoors ; so that cannot be the reason.'

'I can't say, then !'

'And for that very reason you should learn to think. Now, try to find out why your kite does not go up higher in the air when you have let out all your string.

'Because the string holds it fast, and keeps it from going up higher.'

'Then how is it that if your string breaks, instead of your kite going up higher, it comes tumbling down directly ?'

'I can't tell that, I am sure. Can you ?'

'Yes, I can, and a hundred other things that, three months ago, I knew nothing about. I am older than you, and ought to know more ; but if you would learn to think, what is now hard for you to understand would soon become easy. Thinking people have a great advantage over others, for they are much wiser ; they can give better advice, and assist others ; for they know the best way of doing things, and the proper time when to do them. If you wanted to know how many grains of corn there are in a bag of wheat, how should you find it out ?'

'Count them, to be sure.'

'That would be one way, but not the way a thinking person would set about it. Why, if you counted two hundred every minute, and kept it up day and night for a whole week, you would hardly be able to get through your task.'

'How would you set about it, then ? It's a puzzle to me how it could be done without counting.'

'I would first weigh an ounce of wheat out of the bag, and count the number of grains in that one ounce. Then I would weigh the whole bag together, to see how many ounces there were in all. If, after that, I multiplied the number of grains in one ounce by the number of ounces in the whole bag, it would give me the exact amount of grains altogether ; and this might be done, if a large pair of scales were near, in ten minutes or a quarter of an hour.'

'I should never have thought of that plan, however ; but what's the use of learning to count the grains in a bag of wheat ?'

'Just the same use as there is in learning to do a sum ; it teaches us to reckon in the quickest and best way. There would be no good in a boy learning the alphabet, only that it enables him to read afterward, and there would be but little advantage in learning to write copies in a copy book, if it did not fit us to write letters, bills of parcels, and no other things, all through our lives.'

'Well, that plan of counting the grains is a capital one.'

'It was not hit upon without thought, depend upon it. Sometime ago, I heard a thoughtless cottager, who, seeing that a crop of grass had grown on the old thatch of his cottage, tried all manner of contrivances to get a cow that belonged to him up to the roof of his cottage, to eat the grass.'

'And how did he manage it at last ?'

'Why, a neighbor of his, who had learned to think, told him, that though he could not get the cow up to the grass, yet he might, perhaps, manage to cut the grass, and bring it down to the cow; and this plan was adopted without difficulty.'

'Ah! ah! ah! What a foolish cottager he must have been.'

'He had never learned to think. I read a story yesterday about a mischievous monkey, that, after doing much damage, ran up a thin tall tree, and took shelter in the top branches. Two men undertook to catch him. One of them had learned to think, and the other had not. The thoughtless man climbed up the tree as far as he could; but he was obliged to come down again, for the thin branches would not bear his weight. The thinker then stepped forward, but instead of climbing the tree, he set to work busily with his axe, and soon brought down the tree and the mischievous monkey to the ground.'

'Capital! capital! So poor pug was taken at last. I begin to have a notion that 'learning to think,' is a capital thing, and I should like to talk a little more with you about it another time.'

'Well, then, be off with your hoop now, for I see that Palmer is waiting for you.—No doubt I shall see you to-morrow, and then 'learning to think' shall be the subject of our conversation.'—London Child's Companion.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, May 21, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

New York Anniversaries.

During the last week, the Anniversaries of several Religious and Benevolent Societies were held in New York.

The AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY held its 25th Anniversary in the Broadway Tabernacle. Hon. John Cotton Smith in the chair. The President, in his address, referred to the history of the Society and its operations, as furnishing cause for thanksgiving.

The annual report mentions the fact, that three of its Presidents, twenty-three of its Vice Presidents, and seventeen of its managers have died within the 25 years in which the Society has been in operation. Three of its Vice Presidents, viz. Zechariah Lewis, of Brooklyn, Samuel Bayard of Princeton, and Gen. Santander, of South America, together with Marinus Willett, one of the Managers, have died during the past year. In the course of the Society's operations, nearly 3,000,000 of Bibles and Testaments have been sent forth directly from its depository; and means have been furnished for publishing 200,000 more in foreign countries, and foreign tongues. They have been published in five Indian tongues; in some of those spoken in Europe; five in Asiatic Turkey; seven in India; in the Chinese; the Hawaiian; the Sandwich Islands; and in the Grebo tongue on the west coast of Africa. Means have also been furnished for the purchase and distribution of the scriptures in about twenty additional tongues, making about fifty in which they have been sent forth to the world. During the year, 400 individuals have become Life-Directors and Life-Members. Nineteen new Societies have been formed, mostly in the Western States. Receipts from all sources, $118,860 41, being $21,505 more than the preceding year. Of the above, $9,747 were from Legacies; $5,000 by bequest of Miss Mary Ann Brimmer, of Boston.

The whole number of Bibles and Testaments printed, 166,875. Books issued since the last meeting, 150,202, making an aggregate of issues in 25 years, 2,795,698. Six persons have been engaged as Agents through all the year, and nine during part of the year. About $30,000 have been granted during the year to promote the circulation of the Scriptures abroad.

Rev. John Coleman, of Philadelphia, offered the following resolution:—

Resolved, That the rapid growth of our population, and the high importance of the Bible to every portion of it, renders it the imperative duty of the local Societies to promote the work of ascertaining and supplying destitute families, as fast and extensively as possible.

He remarked that, in 1829 it was resolved to supply the whole of the U. S. in two years. This was accomplished, and 500,000 copies of the word of God were distributed. The great increase of families since that time, rendered it necessary that another supply should be sent out.

Rev. Prof. Emory offered the following resolution:—

Resolved, That the increasing demand for the Bible among the destitute, affords conclusive evidence that God is both preparing their hearts to receive it, and calling on us to circulate it more.

In the course of his remarks, he said that 13,000,000 copies of the Bible had been put in circulation by the British Society—5,000,000 by other European Societies; 3,000,000 by American; 1,000,000 by Asiatic; 21,000,000 in all.

Mr. Bingham, of the Sandwich Island Mission, offered the following:—

Resolved, That the cause of the Bible is every year assuming a new importance from the indispensable aid which it furnishes to the advancing cause of Christian Missions.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—The anniversary of this Society was held at the Broadway Tabernacle on Wednesday morning.

The report states that there have been 7 volumes stereotyped during the year; 19,000 of the Family Christian Almanack for 1841 have been sold. The operations of the Society are sustained by Christian benevolence. Total printed the past year, 4,436,710 publications, or 95,958,500 pages, including 254,710 volumes; total circulated, 4,124,372 publications, or 80,501,565 pages; including 153,340 volumes. Total circulation since the formation of the Society, 59,383,971 publications, including 1,598,150 volumes, making in all, 1,122,252,841 pages.

Gratuitous distribution, during the year, in 477 separate grants, including 1,261,696 pages for foreign mission stations, &c., 8,972,870.

Receipts, during the year, $98,962 59, of which $57,219 98 were for publications sold, and $23,395 25 for foreign distribution. A single individual contributed $2,100, and $7,796 64 were from Ladies in different States.

Tract visitation.—In New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Brooklyn, Albany, Rochester, Newark, Chicago, and many other cities and towns, this system is carried out with palpable tokens of divine favor. In New York, 390 persons are reported as hopefully converted by this means.

Volume circulation.—163,740 volumes have been circulated in the past year. Mr. John Clark has circulated 10,000 volumes in eight months in R. I. Very much good has attended his labors—numbers have been converted. Mr. H. Leet has circulated 12,000 volumes in Pennsylvania; Mr. S. S. White about 10,000 in Western Pennsylvania and Virginia; Mr. S. Wood about 12,000 in Tennessee; and various other amounts have been circulated by different individuals in different places.

Twenty-five thousand dollars have been remitted to foreign lands. Tracts have been circulated in ninety-three dialects. In almost every place where tracts have been distributed, much good has attended it. A very extensive field is still open for this kind of labor.

Rev. William Adams moved the following resolution:—

Resolved, That personal Christian effort for the conversion of men, which God has so signally blessed in connection with the distribution of religious Tracts, is of universal obligation; being enjoined on every believer by the necessities of the world, the principles of the Gospel, and the impulses of common humanity. This, and several other resolutions of a right spirit, were well sustained by several speakers.

The notice of the other Societies is necessarily deferred until next week.

An extract of a letter from Eld. JOB TYLER, may be found in our columns this week. We are happy to learn of the good work which his letter communicates, and we should greatly rejoice if his request for Missionary aid in that section could be complied with. There are several fields open to us, that are ready for the harvest, which we are unable to enter. We need more Minister's to devote themselves exclusively to the work, and we need more efficient men to sustain them in it. We sometimes fear that both preachers and people lose sight of the great work that is before them, and place too low an estimate upon that religion which is valuable above price. The great interests of the soul are always exposed, and no effort is too great which it is possible to make to secure the triumph of truth, and the salvation of souls.

Remittances.

We request our friends not to send specie to us by mail. We prefer to have any sum less than one dollar retained till a suitable opportunity offers to send it, without exposing it in the mail.

A few weeks since an agent forwarded to us $6,75, by mail, which has never reached us. We suppose, from the amount, there must have been specie in the letter, enough to be noticed by those who change the mail at Post-Offices, and was probably abstracted by some one of them.

For the Register.

Extracts from Letters.

COLON, Mich., May 2, 1841.

BR. BAILEY,—I send you the names of three new subscribers for your paper, to be sent to Newburg, Cass co., Michigan.—There are several more who would be glad to take it, but they think the hard times forbid it.

In the place to which you are to send your papers, I have spent some considerable time the latter part of the winter and spring, in connection with Eld. Brown, a Baptist Minister, and it has resulted in a glorious reformation. Between 20 and 30 have been baptized, several backsliders have been reclaimed, the lukewarm have been stirred up, the cause of Christ has been advanced, and I think the subject of the Sabbath is receiving some attention. Two have embraced the seventh-day, or Sabbath of the Bible. When I was there last, about two weeks since, some were quite anxious I should preach upon that subject. I told them I was willing to do so at a suitable time. I have endeavored to keep all sectarian selfishness out of sight, and to preach Christ and him crucified.

I believe if our denomination could establish a Missionary route in this country, it would be attended with great advantages, not only to the general advancement of the cause of Christ, but also to the peculiarities attached to us. My labors are solicited in various directions; and, although I would not live for myself alone, yet the calls of my family are such that I cannot leave them to make the entire sacrifice of my time.—I should be glad if it were so I could. I should not be backward to do so.

Some time since, I think about the first of February, I was called about fifteen miles away from home to attend a funeral, and heard of a Mr. S——, a seventh day man. I called at his house—he was not at home. I have since been there, and preached in the place. I have heard by way of the Methodist circuit preacher, that there is a very good state of religious feeling in that section. I found Mr. and Mrs. S—— still in possession of good religious feeling, with strong determinations to adhere to Bible doctrine. I have heard of some other seventh-day friends at Marshall, about forty miles from me. I would be glad to visit them, but do not know when I can.

We received the last No. of the first volume of the Register with bills of what was due, and regret that we could not send the pay both for that and the second volume; but our Michigan money is not such as you will take. We think it will be better times soon. The Register is much esteemed for its liberality. All who have seen it speak high in its commendation. I am ever pleased to peruse its articles, and wish to continue a subscriber for it.

* * * * *

I will say, if the Missionary Society could see proper to appoint a Missionary to this country, I should be pleased; for I think here is a wide-spread field for gospel labors. Michigan, as yet, has not formed her moral or religious character, and if she could be instructed right, perhaps she would light on a sure foundation. In the expression just made I am not claiming infallibility; but like all the others, we claim to be right.—If such labors should be thought expedient, if there are none others that will take the field, they may give an appointment to me, and I will do what I can by the grace of God. My heart's desire for Zion is, that she may flourish.

I am yours,

In the bonds of Christian Love,

JOB TYLER.

For the Register.

Spring.

What bosom but kindles with sweetest emotion,
What heart but ascends with the warmest devotion,
When nature awakes from her cold, icy slumber,
In anthems of praises from tongues without number.

In the coolness of eve and the freshness of morning.
When roseate sweetness the vale is adorning,
When pleasure and love in each bosom are beating,
And innocence o'er the soft landscape is bleating;

When 'neath the green shade of the bower reclining,
Where zephyr's are playing and ivy entwining;
Where the green-margined brook o'er the pebbles is flowing,
While its banks with the violet and cowslip are glowing;

When all that in Nature are lovely and shining,
To gladden the senses are sweetly combining;
What heart will not glow with the warmest emotion,
When praises ascend from the land, air and ocean?

H.

Monthly Sermon.

The Sermon for this Month will be inserted next week. It has been deferred a little beyond the usual time.

The Forger Mitchell who was arrested at Lounge Point, Canada, has been taken to New York, by officer Bowyer of the New-York Police, for trial.

News of the Day.

On Wednesday of last week, the New Haven Palladium announced the marriage of Dr. Ely—on the Monday following it announced his death. This was indeed a short step from the bridal to the tomb.

In the Worcestershire assize calendar, out of forty-four prisoners, there was not one who could read and write well, while there were twenty who could neither read nor write.

A Pleasant Country.—The Arkansas State Gazette says that a gentleman in Poinsett county, recently killed forty rattle snakes in one day; the length of the largest was five feet, and of the smallest eighteen inches.

According to the latest intelligence from Ireland, the tee-total army of Father Mathew numbers 35 prelates, 700 clergymen, 4,647,000 of the people. This is a formidable array.

One thousand and two hundred newspapers are printed in the United States.

A vessel arrived at New York a short time since, with a large number of Irish emigrants, every one of whom were tee-totallers!

Mail Robbery.—We learn that the mail stage which left this city last evening at 10 o'clock, with the Hartford mail, was robbed, as is supposed, at the foot of the hill leading from Greenbush east. The mail bag was subsequently found in a barn belonging to Mr. Staats, at Greenbush, much cut and rifled of its contents. The mail was taken from the boot of the stage.—Daily Adv.

Sudden Death.—Hon. Daniel M. Durrel, of Dover, N. H., was found dead in his door yard some two weeks since. It is supposed that he died of apoplexy. A few days before his death, he leased a lot of land for ten years, and in the lease inserted a clause which precludes any building which may be placed upon it, from being occupied as a rum store. This adds another to the many striking instances of sudden deaths, within a few months.—Zion's Advocate.

New Jersey.—Gen. Darcy, U. S. Marshal, has just completed his revision of his Deputies' returns of the population of that State. Their returns made it 374,445, his make it 374,462, as follows;

Counties.	Popu.	Counties.	Popu.
Bergen County	14,379	Hunterdon	24,789
Hudson	9,483	Mercer	31,502
Essex	44,621	Monmouth	32,909
Passaic	16,734	Burlington	32,831
Morris	35,844	Gloucester	25,438
Warren	20,366	Atlantic	8,726
Sussex	21,770	Salem	16,025
Somerset	17,455	Cumberland	14,371
Middlesex	21,893	Cape May	5,324

Total Population of the State, 374,462

New-Jersey will lose one Member of Congress if the Ratio is fixed higher than 62,000; two if above 74,000.—New Yorker.

Steamship President.—We have information which leads us to hope that the steamship President is safe, having gone into Madeira. A letter has been received by Mr. Howell, of Cumberland, Md., whose father was on board the President, from a relation of his who resides at Southampton, England, stating the fact of the arrival of the steamship at Madeira, and detailing how the news reached him.

Mrs. Power, the wife of Mr. Tyrone Power, the actor, who was a passenger, had agents stationed at points where information of the steamship would likely be received, and from one of those agents she received, by express, a letter, on the 19th ult., in which it was stated that a vessel had just arrived there from Madeira, which reported that as she was leaving the latter port the President was going in, and spoke with her.

This letter was received by Mrs. Power on the 19th ult., and being read by the relation of Mr. Howell, who was present at the moment it was received, he immediately sat down and wrote the letter referred to above. He despatched it by the post, and it reached the steamer Britannia in time to be brought out by that vessel, which left England on the 20th ult.

These facts seem to justify a belief that the steamer is safe.

[We copy the above from the Baltimore Patriot of Tuesday. We give it for what it is worth, and without further comment. A rumor prevailed in Liverpool when the Britannia left, that the President had arrived at Madeira. It was not credited, however.)

P. S. The intelligence contained in the above is endorsed by a letter, placed in our hands last evening by a responsible person. The names and particulars are given, but as the facts are the same, it is unnecessary to repeat them anew.—New York Express.

Trouble at Fort Snelling.—The Galena Gazette says:—"There have been rumors in town for several days past of difficulty between the Sioux and the United States troops at Fort Snelling. The following comes from a gentleman from Prairie du Chien, and is most likely nearly correct.—He says, an Indian attempting to get into the garrison at night was shot by a soldier. The Indians, upon this, demanded the surrender of the sentinel for punishment. Upon the demand being refused, they surrounded the Fort, and exhibited such indications of hostility as to induce the commandant to send an express to Fort Crawford, (Prairie du Chien) for reinforcements, which went up on the Chippewa. We apprehend no serious difficulty from this source. There are several boats above, and we expect to hear later news in a day or two."

We understand that boats from the Upper Mississippi, since the date of the above, bring no news which would induce the belief that any further difficulties had occurred.

Madame Restell.—This woman was taken before the Recorder on a writ of Habeas Corpus, sued out by Peter B. Manchester her acting counsel in the case, and admitted to bail in $3000. A man named Selden Brainard, who justified in twice the amount, became her bail. This Mr. Brainard has recently done a large business in this way, and is surety for others at the Police Office for several thousand dollars. Whether he is sufficient, and whether Mrs. Restell will appear and be tried, will be ascertained as soon as her case shall be called by the court.—Express.

The Court of Inquiry continues its session at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, to ascertain the truth or falsity of certain charges against Com. James Renshaw, convened on Monday at the Navy Yard—Com. James Biddle, President; Com. Geo. C. Read, Capt. David Conners, Members; Phil. Hamilton, Esq., Judge Advocate. Com. H. Paulding has been, at his own request, relieved from his duties as commander of the Navy Yard, and Com. Joshua R. Sand, ordered in his stead.—Express.

Melancholy Accident.—Mr. Taylor, first officer of the Niantic, bound to Canton, yesterday afternoon, at the S. W. Spit, in the act of casting the anchor, fell from her bows overboard, and was drowned. The ship anchored, and Capt. Hepburn sent to the city for another mate.—Express.

Pauperism.—The Secretary of State has transmitted to the N. Y. Legislature a report containing abstracts of the returns of the Superintendents of the Poor for 1840. From this document, it appears that the whole number of paupers relived or supported at the County poor houses, is 56,561

Number temporarily relieved	14,170
Total.	70,731
Being an increase during the past year of	10,204
The number returned as County paupers, is,	52,764
As town paupers,	3,797
The expenses of the County poor houses were,	$373,493 12
The expenses of temporary relief	$154,320 71
The estimated value of the labor of paupers	$54,648 83
The average yearly expenses of each person, is,	60 06
Of the persons relieved and supported, there were foreigners,	10,397
Lunatics,	786
Idiots,	272
Mutes,	63
The increase in the number of foreigners, is,	2,790
The number of lunatics has decreased,	91
The number of children in the poor houses under 16 years of age, is,	2,500
The number instructed during the year, is,	2,296

The time of instruction average nine months. No report has been received from Hamilton County.

The whole expense of relieving and supporting the poor since 1830, has been, $4,209,693 72

From the New Yorker.

Merchandise and Produce of New York.—In conformity with the requirements of a law passed by the Legislature at its last session, the Secretary of this State has transmitted to that body a statement of the quantity and value of the Merchandize, Provision and Produce inspected in this State during the past year, condensed from the reports of the inspectors, weighers and measurers throughout the State. The Secretary's Report forms an octavo volume of 78 pages; we present below an abstract of its most important and interesting statements. The Evening Journal remarks truly that the document "presents a highly flattering view of the amount and value of the products of this State, and shows that, whatever embarrassments may temporarily occur, we still have an inexhaustible mine of wealth, in our agricultural productions, that will at all times pour its untold treasures into the coffers of our proud and prosperous commonwealth." It should be noted that more than two hundred inspectors, &c. have neglected to make returns during the year. The following is the amount and value of the several products inspected during the year 1840:

	Quantity.
Flour and Meal,	2,075,925	bbls.
Beef,	53,167	"
Pork,	85,821	"
Potashes,	11,453,903	lbs.
Pearlashes,	16,586,569	"
Manufactured fine Salt,	2,632,335	bush.
Fish and Liver Oil,	58,942	galls.
Lumber of all kinds,	45,649,341	feet.
Staves and Heading,	5,447,566	pieces
Flax Seed,	2,901 1-2	tier.
Herring and Shad,	138	bbls.
Quercitron Bark,	475	hhds.
Hides and Skins,	3,407,302	lbs.
Sole Leather,	11,688,161	"
Hops,	206,030	"
" second sort, and damaged,	18,215	"
Domestic distilled Spirits,	6,397,748	galls.
Leaf Tobacco,	18,997,100	lbs.

Total value of the above, (excluding Quercitron bark, as the value is not reported): $24,373,574 87

Deduct Leaf Tobacco, 1,842,638 00

Balance $22,530,939 87

This shows an amount of more than twenty-two millions and a half of dollars, the value of inspected articles for the most part produced in this State. It is said, moreover, that not one-tenth of the products which come into market are inspected; the law requiring only the inspection of such as are exported out of the United States.

The following statement exhibits the number of bushels of grain imported into the City of New York during the past year:

	Bushels.		Bushels.
Wheat	691,308 1-2	Beans,	222 1-2
Rye,	614,497 1-2	Peas,	1,280
Corn,	1,195,553 1-2	Flaxseed,	590
Oats,	1,373,339 1-2	Tim. seed	1,739
Barley,	149,915 1-2	Rice,	221 1-2
Malt,	95,240 1-2	Oil Meal,	538

The amount of grain exported from New York is as follows:

	Bushels.	Sent to England.		Bushels.
Wheat,	459,182	252,716	Oats,	143,996
Rye,	59,931	45,031	Barley,	49,259
Corn,	562,788	54,339	Malt,	15,318

There were weighed in the City of New York 87,909,404 lbs. of merchandise; aggregate value of the same, $14,452,466 15.

Of the Flour, the following quantities were inspected at the following places:

Places.	Bbls.	Value.
New York,	1,974,974	$9,452,163 48
Albany,	170,465	819,930 00
Troy,	27,249	130,849 00
Rochester,	7,653	30,612 00
Buffalo,	33,562	91,362 00

Of the Lumber, twice as much was inspected in Albany County as in other parts of the State.

The fine Salt was manufactured at the following places;

	Bushels.
Salina,	1,107,825
Syracuse,	524,461
Liverpool,	802,955
Geddes,	187,064
Aggregate,	2,622,335

Various suggestions are made by the Inspectors with reference to improving the quality of the articles inspected; but as they have interest for those only who are concerned in the manufacture or production of the several articles, we omit them entirely.

From the Philanthropist.

A Horrible Outrage.—On the last evening of March, a cruel outrage was committed at Ripley on the person of a colored man. A poor old widow woman a short time since procured several of her white friends to become her security for five hundred dollars, which she borrowed to purchase her daughter's husband out of slavery. The purchase was made, and the man with his wife and children came to Ripley, where the mother resided, in order to help her make the five hundred dollars she had borrowed. The man hired himself to a respectable citizen of Ripley. Two fellows, of the baser sort, of which Ripley, notwithstanding its good character, has a few, were moved with envy at seeing a colored man doing well, and laid a plot to destroy him. They agreed between themselves that in passing him, one would push the other against him, and thus make an occasion of beating him. They carried it into execution, and one of them threw a brickbat, and knocked the colored man down, and then took one in his hand and beat him on the head with it in a most shocking manner. His skull is broken, and his head is cruelly mangled. In this condition he was borne home to his hopeless wife and children and widowed mother-in-law, who had pledged more than her all to liberate him from bondage. The colored man sustains as good a character as any other man. There is reason to believe that he is truly a Christian. All this cruel treatment he endures because he has a black skin. He gave the vile wretches no cause of offense,—he never did them the least injury. It is hoped that he will recover, but it is yet uncertain. He has in a high degree the sympathy of the citizens in general, and due efforts have been made to redress the injury done him, so far as it can be done by legal process, but the wretch who perpetrated the crime has no property, and, of course, can bid defiance to law, unless the man should die of his wounds. These hateful and grovelling wretches but carried into practice the spirit of hatred to colored people so prevalent among many of the better class of society, and they are but a looking glass in which many respectable people may see a picture of their own heart.

A CITIZEN OF RIPLEY.

Coal on the Lakes.—The coal experiment in the lake boats, says the Buffalo Advertiser, answers admirably, particularly where skilful and experienced engineers have charge of the machinery. A great saving might be made in generating steam, wear and tear of works, and in the speed of the vessel, by selecting practicable and competent men to take charge of an engine, instead of inexperienced pretenders, who have passed muster three seasons as a scullion or greaser.—Express.

Flood in St. Lawrence Co.—The great rains of the last month have swelled the streams of St. Lawrence Co. almost beyond precedence. A vast amount of lumber has been swept off, especially upon the Oswegatchie River. The Dekalb bridge over that River was taken up by the citizens to save it from destruction. The Beaver Creek bridge has been swept off, breaking up the stage-route from Ogdensburgh by Gouverneur to Antwerp. The stage-road near Canton was so deeply under water as to be for some time impassable.—New Yorker.

Heavy Damages.—Some time last year we published a letter from Montreal, announcing the elopement of Mrs. Harris, wife of Capt. Harris, 24th regiment, with E. D. David, Esq., of Montreal, barrister, and Major in the Montreal cavalry. On the 6th inst, the action commenced by Capt. Harris against Mr. David was tried in Montreal, and resulted in a verdict for Thirty Thousand Dollars damages.—Commercial Advertiser.

Pilatka, (E. F.) May 5, 1841.

The Western Mail, this afternoon, brings us the mortifying intelligence that the war is not over yet. On the afternoon of the 3d inst., a citizen was shot near Fort Tarver, by the Indians; he was penetrated by three balls; yesterday morning he was still alive, and said he saw two of the Indians when they fired. The troops at Micanopy as soon as the news arrived, were instantly put in motion, to drive the daring marauders from their present haunts near the settlements. It is supposed this outrage was done by Allecktusteenuggee's band, who has lately refused either to come into Tampa Bay or negotiate—leaving it to be inferred he intends to be hostile.

Ezra White Convicted.—The jury in White's case came into Court about 12 o'clock last night, with a verdict of guilty of manslaughter in the third degree.—N. Y. Express of 15th inst.

From the St. Louis Republican, May 1.

THE ST. LOUIS TRAGEDY—THE MURDERERS DISCOVERED.

For some days past, the city authorities have been engaged in investigating some recent developements connected with the murder of Messrs. Baker and Weaver, and the burning of the store of Messrs. Collier & Pettus, and we have refrained from giving any of the particulars, lest our doing so might impede their operations. The objects of secrecy being over, in the officers, we feel at liberty to state the particulars so far as they have been developed.

A negro man named Edward H. Ennis, who has been for some time past in the employ of a barber named Johnson, on Market street, opposite the National Hotel, made the disclosure The communications, were made to Ennis, by one of the parties, that Ennis being uneasy about it and yet afraid, because of the excitement, and also of the murderers, to tell what he knew went on Friday last to Butcher, a yellow man, who resides in Brooklyn on the opposite side of the river, and told him what he knew, and asked his advice. Butcher refused to give any advice; on Sunday he went over again and went to Alton, when butcher communicated the facts to two constables who arrested Ennis and after taking his statement, came here with the expectation of catching one of the parties (Warwick) but he had left before their arrival.

The circumstances of this horrible affair, as detailed by Ennis, are as follows: About 10 o'clock on Saturday night, Ennis went from the barber shop to his boarding house, kept by Leah, a free yellow woman, and Peter Charlevill, a free man, on Third, between Market and Walnut streets. Shortly after he had gone to bed, a negro slave named Madison exclaimed, "G—d—n the luck," and on inquiry why, he said, "I have done more murder to-night than I ever did before, and have not been paid for it;" and after remarking that there would be an alarm of fire shortly, he stated, in substance, that he and three yellow men, viz: James Seward, alias Sewell, Warwick and Brown, had gone on that night to Mr. Pettus' counting room, that the door was unlocked; Madison entered alone; Mr. Baker was sitting down with his boots off, reading a newspaper. Madison walked up and presented a bank bill to him and asked him if it was good; and as Baker turned to look at the bill, he struck him over the head with a short bar of iron which he had concealed under his arm; the others then came in and repeated the blows until he was quite dead, his skull and one side of the head completely mashed: after searching the body for the keys, they rolled it up in the bed clothes and placed it in the bed.

They secured the door and went to work on the vault to open it. Whilst at this work, Mr. Weaver came to the door and knocked, and called to Jesse, (Mr. Baker) to let him in. Some dispute ensued between Brown and Madison, which should kill Weaver; and it was insisted that Madison should, as he had killed Baker, but he refused, saying that he had done his share and would do no more. Brown opened the door and placed himself behind it, and as Weaver passed into the room struck him over the head with the bar of iron: on the second blow he fell and attempting to rise, Brown thrust a sharp iron bar through his head. Ennis in his statement, does not confirm the report of the firing of the pistols, but says that having heard that Weaver was shot, he asked Madison about it, and he told him that no pistols had been fired, and that they had no weapons but the bar of iron mentioned. From the statement it would seem that all of them had beaten Weaver.

After some further effort at the vault, finding they could not get into it, Madison left; Warwick, Sewell and Brown remained a short time, then fired the house, in five different places, came out, locked the door and went up the alley north from the house, and threw the key away. Brown took with him a gold watch and a blue cloth cloak, which he said he had thrown away for fear of detection, but did not say where.

It seems from the statements that Ennis on the morning following, was in company with all of them and many of the facts he got from others besides Madison. Warwick and Sewell said but little about it. Madison had with him on the morning following the bar of iron which the deed was executed, and Ennis having the office it had performed, took it and threw it into a privy in the rear of Leah's house. The vault was yesterday searched and the bar found. We understand it proves it to be an instrument used in opening dry goods boxes, a chisel on one end and claws on the other, one of the claws partly broken, agreeing with Ennis' description.

There are many other minor statements, but the above is the substance. The communication of Madison appears to have been made without solicitation, and without any injunction of secresy.

Leah and her husband confirm Ennis' statement as to the time he came home, and the time Madison came in. They heard the conversation, but not sufficiently to understand it. It may be well, however, to remark, as a further proof of Ennis' statements, that yesterday Madison's coat was found in the loft of Leah's house besmeared with blood. From all that we can gather, it does not appear that the scheme had been long concocted, or that they had very well matured their plan of operations.

The President.—The most conclusive evidence, or intimation that we have yet seen as to the fate of the steamship President, is contained in the following extract from the log-book of the packet ship Utica, which we find in the Newark Daily Advertiser.

"Ship Utica, from Havre toward New-York, March 15 or 16, (date obscure.)

"At 10 30 A. M. fresh breezes from N. W.—passed the wreck of a vessel's mast, spars and yards, (or mast and yards, for the word spars appears to have been partly erased,) with sails attached thereto, the mast heads and yards being painted black, supposed them to have belonged to an English vessel dismasted in the gale of the 12th, being in the same lat. and long. in which the Utica lost many sails.

C. D. CONN, Mate.

Lat. 46, 30 N. Long 41, 85 W."

The gentleman who furnished the extract says:

"The latitude and longitude give the position of the Utica on the 12th. Capt. Pell remarked at the time he passed the wreck that it did not appear to belong to an ordinary merchantman, having considerable chain work about the spars. The wreck was passed so near that they were obliged to luff to prevent the copper of the Utica being scratched. I may add that Capt. Bell, before leaving port, entertained serious apprehensions that the wreck was a portion of the steamship President.

A Gale.—On Sunday afternoon last, the wind blew tremendously in this city. It exercised its strength upon the zinc roof of the Car Manufactory of Betts, Pussey, and Hartan, which is seized, and with such great force as to drag off a large portion of the boards, and some of the rafters, and throw them a considerable distance. We have not learned that any other damage was done.—Wilmington (Del.) Journal.

The New-York Controversy.—We learn from the official organ of the acting Executive, that the war of words is not yet over. Col. Rutherfoord is about to take Gov. Seward in hand, and we are told will prove his "executioner." The Enquirer says: "he (Gov. Seward) will probably obtain an appropriate answer (to his letter to Mr. Patton) from the proper quarter—and will not anticipate the office of executioner, who he is likely to find in the present acting Governor, Colonel Rutherfoord:"—Richmond Whig.

Indian Troubles.—The Burlington (Iowa) Gazette of the 24th ult., says: "We learn that a large body of the Winnebagoes have in violation of the treaty, crossed the Mississippi into Wiskonsan, at the mouth of Black River and commenced planting corn, and that Lt. Ruggles, of Fort Crawford, has been sent with a detachment of troops from that Fort to drive them back. It was uncertain whether the Indians would make battle. If they have, Ruggles has no doubt made them sick of it." The Milwaukie Sentinel, of the 27th ult., states that Captain Trenor, with a company of the 1st regiment of dragoons, arrived at Fort Leavenworth on the 14th inst. from the Kanzas country. Nearly all the Pawnee women and children had been massacred by the Kanzas, while the warriors were out on a hunt. Sixty were butchered and ten taken captives. The prisoners were however returned through the interference of Capt. Trenor.

An Act to Promote Agriculture.—This Act became a law on the 5th inst. It appropriates $8000 per annum, for the term of five years, for the promotion of agriculture and household manufactures in this State. The sum of $950 for New-York county, is given to the American Institute. When the New-York State Agricultural Society, or any County Agricultural Society which is now, or may hereafter be formed, or the American Institute, shall by voluntary subscription raise any sum of money, then the Comptroller, on an affidavit of the facts, shall draw his warrant on the treasurer for an equal sum which is not, however, to exceed the amount apportioned to the County. It is the duty of the officers of the State and County Societies to regulate and award premiums on such articles as are best calculated to promote the agricultural and household manufacturing interests of the State, giving the reward for the most economical or profitable mode of completion. An accurate written description of the whole process in raising the crop, or feeding the animal, as may be, is to be given by the person claiming the reward.—J. of Com.

The Florida Indians.—As I expected, the rumor relative to the disappearance of Cosatustenuggee, and 80 warriors from Tampa, proves to be without foundation. The General has about 200 of the enemy ready for emigration. I have not learned when he purposes to embark them. You are aware that Coacooche (Wild Cat) consented to emigrate, and had permission to be absent until the 5th of May, for the purpose of collecting his people. He has sent in eight of his warriors to the General to be retained as hostages, saying that circumstances have occurred to prevent his returning by the specified day, but that he will return and in company with his people. We have (notwithstanding the favorable train events are now in,) every prospect of an active summer campaign. It is rumored, that in consequence of the Indian difficulties in the West between the Choctaws and Kicapoos, that the 2d Regiment of Dragoons will be ordered West of the Mississippi.—Correspondence of the Savannah Georgian.

The Forgeries.—The annexed paragraph from the New Orleans Advertiser, explains the origin of the forged drafts by which so successful a game has been played in defrauding various persons of their money.

A fellow by the name of Matthew Draper, deposited four several amounts in the Commercial Bank of New Orleans, between one hundred and seven, and a hundred and twenty dollars each, on or about the 20th of March, and received certificates of deposite therefore. With this anchor to windward, the scoundrel obliterated the figures and the words, and inserted "twenty-one thousand Mexican dollars," in the bottom of the certificate, and at the bottom in the left hand corner, are the figures $21,000. The alteration is not a perfect fac simile of the original filling up, though it is near enough to deceive.

The check was sold to the Girard Bank in Philadelphia, and now sent on here for payment, endorsed by W. D. Lewis, the Cashier of that institution. There can be no doubt that there are three other such checks afloat. If forging were punished by solitary imprisonment for life, it would be well for the cause of honesty.

Escape of Slaves.—Various stories having been circulated respecting the escape of some fugitive slaves that had been taken in Oberlin and committed to the jail of Lorain county, Ohio, the Grand Jurors sitting in and for the county of Lorain, at the April term of the court of Common Pleas, made an examination of the subject to ascertain if a reason existed to suspect that they were assisted in their escape by any persons from the outside, and in their report they say that "after a full investigation of the testimony and of all the transactions, we have become unanimously of the opinion that the whole plan was matured and carried into operation by the prisoners, and that there was no other person privy knowing or in any way the least to blame, as the testimony before us is that there was a protracted meeting in progress in the place, which fully accounts for the noise which the prisoners heard in the evening, and all of the circumstances go to acquit all others from any participation or blame in any way whatever."

The Red River Whig, published at Alexandria, La. says: the steamer Canton passed here on Tuesday last, having on board a man named Beauchamp, who murdered a family of persons in Terre Haute, Indiana, some time since, and made his escape to Texas. A reward of $1500, was offered for his arrest.

About three months since, a colored child 2 1-2 years old, daughter of Abr'm Tanner, then of this city, was carried to New Orleans and there sold as a slave. By the exertions of some benevolent individuals, the child has been recovered. She arrived in this city a few days since, in the ship Orleans, and is about to be restored to her parents.

By a census just completed, Lockport village shows a population of 6063.

The Rochester Democrat says that information was given Constable Dunn on Sunday evening that a large quantity of stolen goods were on board a schooner from Oswego, bound to Cleaveland. Thinking probably that the vessel might be put into the mouth of the river, he went there and found her, and also about $800 worth of the goods.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 1st says that the murder of a man named Genet, son of a former French Minister, perpetrated by his own slave at the instigation of his own wife, has recently been discovered in Rankin county, Miss. He had been missing for fifteen months. His wife at the time asserted that he had gone to South Carolina, on a visit to his friends. The daughter of the deceased could not give credit to the statement, and had since made repeated and extensive inquiries, which have resulted in the discovery of her father's bones, and ample testimony to convict the prisoners of the inhuman and brutal deed.

In Philadelphia, the Mayor has given orders that no Cabs, Omnibuses or Hacks kept for hire, shall be run from any of their stands hereafter on Sunday, as provided for in an old and heretofore unenforced law.

When the steamer Maid of Arkansas was about leaving St. Louis on the 21st ult. two scoundrels went on board and robbed a passenger of $5000 in cash, and $10,000 worth of notes and drafts. The thieves were quickly pursued and captured, the filched property restored to the owner, and they conducted to prison.

It has become a pleasing duty of late, to notice the unexpected success of the Temperance reform, in Halifax, particularly as connected with St. Mary's Chapel. Last Sunday, 250 additional names were placed on the lists. The whole number now belonging to this society is about 3,100, although it has been but three months in existence.

Appointments by the Postmaster General.—Philo C. Fuller, of Michigan, to be Second Assistant Postmater General.

John S. Skinner, of Maryland, to be Third Assistant Postmaster General.

A resolution has been introduced in the Pennsylvania Legislature to prevent the canals and rail roads, of that State, from being used for the purpose of transportation on Sunday.

General Appropriation Bill.—The House, yesterday afternoon, rejected, in committee the appropriation for the Northern Rail Road. The proposition will be renewed when the bill comes up in the House.—The motion of L. S. Chatfield to reduce the Erie Canal appropriation to $1,500,000 was rejected, yeas 34, noes 52. When the committee rose and reported, a substitute for the Genesee Valley Canal appropriation was pending, authorizing the abandonment of the work beyond Mount Morris.—Alb. Adv. of Saturday.

Improved Bank Notes.—Messrs. Durand & Co., engravers, of New-York, have devised and patented a desideratum in note engraving—to wit a means of preventing from a low to a higher denomination. In their process the amount of the note is printed in large red letters across the body of the note, so as to cover the space for the signature, and the red ink or pigment is of such a nature that it cannot be effaced by chemical appliances without effacing the signatures, and otherwise so disfiguring the note as to ensure detection. The skillful chemists, Chilton Mapes and Millian, certify to the efficacy of the contrivance.

Incendiaries in Cincinnati.—The profession seem to be prosecuting their business with vigor in this city also. On Wednesday night the 21st, a fellow was in the act of setting fire to the stable of Edward Woods, on Sycamore between Market and Third, and after legal examination, in default of the bail required—$2,000—was committed for trial.

On Saturday morning, the 24th, not less than three successive attempts of a similar kind were made, in the latter instance of which one of the incendiaries was detected in the act. The name of each of the villains —if they are to be believed— is John Smith. Watchman of the Valley.

Cool.—It is stated that the rogue who relieved the Commercial Bank of Cincinnati and the Bank of Kentucky of $13,000 each, was an hour in counting his money in the latter bank, and paid the cashier postage on the New-Orleans letter.

Fatal duel.—A duel was fought on the evening of the 23d ult., at New-Orleans, between a gentleman of that city, and a creole of the Island of Martinique. The weapons were small swords, and Mr. Tungeau, the former, was killed on the spot, the sword piercing his heart.

A Hog's Life.—The Syracuse Standard states that Mr. Erastus Barber, of Onondaga, had a hog which disappeared on the 8th December last. On the 11th March, his hired man heard a groan under the barn floor, and on examining found the lost hog a perfect skeleton. He thinks the animal must have remained there during the whole time he was missed, three months and three days, without a particle of food or water. When taken out he was barely alive, but is now recovering and likely to do well.

"I wonder how any one can eat his breakfast before reading a newspaper," said an old borrower of this article. "I wonder how any one can eat his breakfast after reading a borrowed paper," said his more conscientious wife.

Strange Method of obtaining Salt.—Mr. Bowring in his report on Egypt, says, that the consumption of salt is considerable in Egypt, and strange are the means employed for obtaining it. At Abydos, the Arabs open the mummies take out the inner parts, which they put into water, and say they furnish excellent salt. They sometimes get salt from the sand in which the mummies lie; but more frequently from the bodies themselves.

European Post Office Arrangements.—Letters from all parts of the United States for the continent of Europe, except Austria and her territories, Spain, Portugal, and the Italian states including Sicily, may now be forwarded through England, without payment of the postage in advance. The arrangement as respects Sweden and Norway does not exist through the whole year, but only during those months in which packets run direct from Hull to Gottenburgh.—Com. Adv.

Stephen Chapman, Esq. has been appointed, by the Governor and Senate, a supreme court commissioner for this county, in the place of Ichabod S. Spencer.—Madison Observer.

English Missionary Societies.—The number of Missionary societies in England is 614, and the contributions there for missionary purposes last year, amounted to over $1,800,000. The Missionary societies of all other Protestant countries are less than 450, and their contributions are only about half a million.

Jews.—We are told in a late article in a German newspaper, addressed by Jews to their brethren, that in no country of the earth are Jews so numerous as in Syria, that in no place do they live in such dense masses, or so independently of the surrounding inhabitants: and in none do they persevere so steadfastly in their faith in the promise of the fathers, as on the beautiful shores of the Orontes. In Damascus alone are nearly 60,000 Jews.

One in ten Thousand.—The Philadelphia Chronicle has the following:—Mr. Zadoc Casey, of Illinois, is known as the most industrious member of the House of Representatives. He surpassed Mr. Whittlesey, when that gentleman was in Congress, and is more uniformly at his post and more prompt in the discharge of his duties than even John Quincy Adams. He married at the age of seventeen, and a year afterwards, with his wife and one child, and all his worldly goods in a pack, set off for the then Territory of Illinois, with these words of faith and courage on his lips: "Come, wife, I have forty-seven dollars in cash, and a stout heart; don't you be down in the mouth, for I am going to be somebody."—He gradually rose from one honorable station to another, until he was elected to Congress, eight years ago.

Murderous.—Grain to the amount of 25,000,000 bushels is annually converted into intoxicating drink, in the United States. It would be infinitely better if it were cast into the sea. The amount of money thus lost is $40,000,000. The number of distilleries in actual operation, is 9,659, which distil annually, 36,343,236 gallons, and estimating the population of the country at seventeen millions, it will furnish each man, woman and child, with 2 14-100 gallons per annum. North Carolina contains the greatest number of distilleries, 2,698; which send forth a flood of 1,038,741 gallons each year. The number in Pennsylvania is 707, but as the operations of each are on a large scale, they furnish conjointly 3,784,138 gallons.—Phil. Chronicle.

Coffee.—The total growth of coffee is estimated at 165,000 tons. The largest amount is raised in Brazil. America, it is said, consumes 22,000 tons, twice as much as is used in Great Britain and Ireland.

Tie a piece of sewing silk to a large silver spoon, and suspend it from the ear.—Then strike the spoon, and the reverberation will sound as grand and tremendous as that of the great bell of a cathedral.

Lake Champlain—Opening of Navigation.—Last Tuesday, Lake Champlain was emancipated from its 'icy fetters," and the magnificent steamers "Burlington" and "Whitehall" commenced their regular trips from Whitehall to St. Johns. Captain Sherman arrived at our wharf after a longer absence than he ever probably knew before, and received the warmest congratulations of his numerous friends in this vicinity.—The "Burlington" appears with increased splendor, and Capt. S., as usual, will surpass the whole world in the accommodation and management of his boat.

The steamboat "Winooski" has commenced her trip from Burlington to Plattsburgh, and will go to St. Albans as soon as circumstances permit. Many improvements have been made to the "Winooski," and the public will learn with great satisfaction that Capt. Phillips is yet "on hand" and ready to do any thing in his power which the wants of the people require.—Plattsburgh Whig.

Over $6000 toll was taken at Albany, on the first day of the opening of the Erie Canal—more than was ever before taken in one day.

MARRIED,

In West Edmeston, N. Y., on the 24th ultimo, by Joshua Maxson, Esq., DANIEL COON, Esq., and Widow MEHALA GREEN, all of West Edmeston.

DIED,

In Georgetown, on the 25th ultimo, MARTHA MELISSA, daughter of Asa C. and Sally Ann Nichols, aged 12 years, and 10 months.

Fresh in the morn the Summer's Rose
Hung withering ere 'tis noon;
We scarce enjoy the blooming gift
But mourn its pleasures gone.

Such are the charms that flush the cheek,
And sparkle in the eye,
So from the lovely finished form
The transient graces fly. Comm

For the Register.

Of Consumption, in Cincinnatus, May 13th, EDWIN PLACE, son of Thomas Place, in his 21st year.

Mr. Place made a profession of his faith in Christ about one year and a half since, and connected himself with the Baptist church, and very soon after witnessing a good profession before angels and men, disease began to make inroads upon his active frame.

But the spirit of religion which he manifested in his life, sustained him in his dying hours. He bore the pains of lingering disease as a christian, and died as one who has the hope of a glorious Resurrection.

"Sweet is the scene where Christians die,
Where holy souls retire to rest:
How mildly beams the closing eye!
How gently heaves the expiring breath!"

But a few days previous to his death, a Deacon of the church to which Mr. P. belonged, who is quite feeble, sent word to him that they should not meet again in the flesh, but soon they would meet in heaven to praise that Savior whom they had united in praising on earth. Mr. P. replied, yes; I shall soon be there. He bore his afflictions with great Christian fortitude. The church has lost a praying soul. Parents are bereaved of a dutiful son, and one that promised to be a solace to them in old age; but in his death, he has taught them where they may find greater consolations than in any of those things which surround them here. In his death, he says to his surviving friends—"lay up your treasures in heaven." "Weep not for me."

"Oh for the death of those
Who slumber in the Lord!
Oh be like theirs my last repose,
Like theirs my last reward."

Cincinnatus, May 13, 1841. E. T. B.

Notices.

NOTICE.

The Stockholders of the "De Ruyter Band Association" will meet at Wm. C. Gage's Hotel, on the evening of Saturday, the 22d inst.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Central Association will hold its next annual session with the Church in Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the 2nd Sabbath in June next, at 10 o'clock. Introductory discourse by E. S. BAILEY, or S. B. CRANDALL alternate. A full delegation and punctual attendance is requested.

JAMES BAILEY, Sec'y.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Eastern Association are to meet on the fifth day before the fourth Sabbath in May next, at the S. D. B. Meeting-house in Salem, N. Jersey, at 10 o'clock, A. M., and an invitation is hereby given to the ministering brethren, and other brethren also, that can conveniently attend. I think it would add much to the meeting to have a number of our western and northern brethren to attend with us.

A. D. TITSWORTH, Cor. Sec.

Metuchen, April 18, 1841.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

H. J. Williams, $3, cr. self $2, J. B. Wells $1, each vol. 2. S. R. Hopkins, $3, cr. Thomas R. Green. L. Stephens $1.

LIST OF LETTERS.

"J G M." (not suitable for our paper.) N. V. Hull, (we will do it.) Clarke Saunders, (they have not yet paid.) S. R. Hopkins, (thank you.) B. Stillman, jr., Rev. Job Tyler, (you have our thanks.) Hiram Babcock, (we expect him to furnish it as soon as he can.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

New-York Cash Store.

H. J. WILLIAMS,

WOULD respectfully inform the inhabitants of De Ruyter, and vicinity, that he is receiving from New-York, at the Store in De Ruyter next door to Geo. W. Sutton's Shoe Store, on Utica Street, an extensive assortment of

Spring and Summer Goods,

Among which are French, English, and American Prints, of almost every variety of style and quality to be found in New-York Market; Bl'k, Blue-bl'k, Sinchew, Bonnet and Florence Silks, Printed and Plain Lawns, Book, Swiss, Jaconet, Cambrick and Mull Muslins; Bleached and unbleached Table Cloths, Crapes Broad Cloths, Cassimeres, Satinetts, Vestings, Hosiery, Bonnet Trimmings; and almost every other article usually kept in a country Store. Also, an assortment of Groceries, Crockery, Glass and Hardware.

H. J. W. would say that his system of business will be

One Price, and Ready Pay,

And he flatters himself, from his advantages in purchasing Goods, and system of selling, that he can afford Goods at as LOW PRICES as any establishment west of the City of New-York.

All who wish to purchase Goods on favorable terms, are respectfully invited to call and examine his Goods, and judge for themselves as to price and quality. 64tf

De Ruyter, May 17, 1841.

P. S. The Store will be closed on the seventh day of the week. H. J. W.

LOOK TO YOUR INTEREST!

EXAMINE & BE CONVINCED!

S. L. DELLAY,

IS now opening his Spring Stock of Goods, among which may be found;

8,000 yds. Calicoes, from 4 to 25 cts. per yd.
6,000 " Sheeting, " 7 " 12 1-2 "
1,000 " Ticking, " 12 1-2 " 25 "
1,000 " French Mull, " 20 " 50 "

Together with cords and piles of other Plain, Domestic and Fancy GOODS, consisting of too great a variety to be enumerated in a paper advertisement, which have been purchased for Cash at the present low state of the Market, and which he proposes

SELLING LOWER

than they can be bought elsewhere in Town, County, or State! He has also a complete assortment of Millinery Goods, such as

Leghorn, Straw, Silk, & Lawn Bonnets,

with every possible variety of Trimming. He would say to PHYSICIANS, that he has the largest and best selected assortment of MEDICINES ever before offered in this County, which he pledges himself to sell from 25 to 50 per cent Cheaper than they have ever before been offered.

TO FAMILIES.—He would likewise call the attention of Families to a choice selection of GROCERIES, which he will sell as LOW or LOWER than they can be bought elsewhere—HAMILTON not excepted. Also, Crockery, Hardware, &c. &c.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,
Too well known to need comment.

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s

MOTHER'S RELIEF.

A Pamphlet describing the merits of this highly popular and beneficial Medicine, will be given any one wishing to become acquainted with its qualities. The uniform success of this Medicine has rendered it the "Ne Plus Ultra" of the day. Medical gentlemen have had to acknowledge its benefits and yield to its sway.

DR. WATERMAN'S

RHEUMATIC AND STRENGTHENING PLASTER.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbants to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases; such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, and several other vegetable substances. Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,

10,000 Bags,
10,000 pr. Socks,
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey,

☞For which the highest price will be paid. ☜
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63y1

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received.

No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

De Ruyter, April 22, 1841.

POETRY.

From the Christian Intelligencer.

I have received from Britain an Ode, written, it is said, by a minister of the gospel, which will edify your readers, and the insertion of which in your paper will confer a favor upon AMICUS.

INVOCATION TO THE HOLY GHOST.

I.

Spirit! pour'd on Pentecost,
Paraclete, or Holy Ghost;
Whatsoe'er thy mystic name,
Shed in quivering tongues of flame,
Brooding over chaos deep,
Garnishing the heavenly steep,
Or by Jordan's sacred side,
When the heavens were opened wide,
In the emblem of a dove,
Full of peace and full of love,
Resting on the Eternal Son,
Holy, uncreated One!

II.

Quickener! that dost rouse the dead,
At the gates of hell misled;
Breath of Life! thine aid impart—
Waken every slumbering heart;
Every groveling soul refine
With thy power and grace divine.
While our little taper burns,
And another year returns,
And thy word to us is spoken,
And our hour-glass is unbroken,
And the blood within our veins,
Bid us shun eternal pains!

III.

Sanctifier! seal our hearts
With the truth thy Word imparts;
Every passion lull to sleep,
That will not thy precepts keep;
Hallow every passing thought
Of our souls that Christ hath bought;
Sacred truths and themes instil,
And thy pleasure all fulfill;
There let Christ replace his throne,
And possess us for his own,
Till our bodies all shall be Temples to thy Deity!

IV.

Comforter! thy peace restore,
Holy patriarchs felt before;
Brightest hope and faith returning,
And pure love with incense burning,
Evil thoughts and pains dispel,
With the sable troop of hell;
Cleans'd in Jesus' sacred blood,
And the water's mystic flood,
That proceeded from his side,
When in darkest night he died,
In our souls thy graces glow,
Making earth a heaven below!

V.

Intercessor, Spirit! pray,
Teach our darkened souls the way;
Prompting words and holy feeling,
And the mind of Christ revealing;
In us raise the pure desire,
Like the altar's quenchless fire,
Ever burning, pure and bright,
Full of Warmth, and full of light;
While the heavenly veil within,
Our High Priest that died for sin,
With his glorious breastplate on,
Pleads before the eternal throne.

VI.

Everlasting Spirit! come,
Teach us life's imperfect sum;
All on earth is dark and drear,
Changeful as the changing year;
All is dark, without a ray,
Like one hideous Golgotha!
Breathe, oh, breathe! thine influence give,
Spirit! come, and we shall live;
Raise our souls from things of earth,
Subjects of a better birth,
And our song shall be of Thee,
Through a blest eternity! G.

Miscellaneous Department.

We copy the following account of the case of an interesting blind mute, for the benefit of those of our readers who may not have before read her singular history.—N. Y. Evening Post.

LAURA BRIDGMAN.

The last annual report of the Perkins Institution for the Blind contains a full account, which has been prepared by the director, Dr. Howe, of that most remarkable being, Laura Bridgman, a girl who is wholly deaf, dumb and blind, almost if not quite destitute of the power of smell, and has but a very faint and imperfect sense of taste. Of course, the only remaining organ of communication between her mind and the world is the sense of touch, of which so little use is commonly made in the acquisition of knowledge. Her story is full instruction and pathos.—Common School Journal.

LAURA BRIDGMAN has become extensively known. Human sympathies are always ready to be poured out in proportion to the amount of human suffering. The privation of any one's sense is supposed to be a dreadful calamity, and calls at once for our sympathy with the sufferer; but when a human being is known to be deaf, dumb, blind, without smell, and with imperfect taste, that being excites the tender compassion of all who feel, and becomes an object of great curiosity to those who reflect as well as feel. When the supposed sufferer is a child—a girl—and of pleasing appearance, the sympathy and the interests are naturally increased.

Such is the case with our beloved pupil, Laura Bridgman; and so general is the interest which she has excited, and so numerous are the inquiries concerning her, that I have thought it would be showing proper respect to the public of this section of the country, to publish a short history of her case.

She was born in Hanover, New Hampshire, on the 21st of December, 1829. She is described as having been a very pretty and sprightly infant, with bright blue eyes. She was, however, so puny and feeble, until she was a year and a half old, that her parents had hardly hoped to rear her. She was subject to severe fits, which seemed to rack her frame almost beyond its powers of endurance, and life was held by the feeblest tenure; but when a year and a half old, she seemed to rally, the dangerous symptoms subsided, and at twenty months old she was perfectly well.

Then her mental powers, hitherto stinted in their growth, rapidly developed themselves; and during the four months of health which she enjoyed, she appears (making due allowance for a fond mother's account,) to have displayed a considerable degree of intelligence.

But suddenly she sickened again; her disease raged with great violence during five weeks, when her eyes and ears were inflamed, suppurated, and their contents were discharged. But though sight and hearing were gone forever, the poor child's sufferings were not ended; the fever raged during seven weeks; "for five months she was kept in bed, in a darkened room; it was a year before she could walk unsupported, and two years before she could sit up all day." It was now observed that her sense of smell was almost entirely destroyed, and consequently that her taste was much blunted.

It was not until four years of age that the poor child's bodily health seemed restored, and she was able to enter upon her apprenticeship of life and the world.

But what a situation was hers! The darkness and silence of the tomb were around her; no mother's smile called forth her answering smile—no father's voice taught her imitate his sounds—to her, brothers and sisters were but forms of matter which resisted her touch, but which differeth not from the furniture of the house, save in warmth and in the power of locomotion; and not even in these respects from the dog and cat.

But the immortal spirit which had been implanted within her could not die, nor be maimed nor mutilated; and though most of its avenues of communication with the world were cut off, it began to manifest itself through the others. As soon as she could walk she began to explore the room, and then the house; she became familiar with the form, density, weight and heat of every article she could lay her hands upon. She followed her mother, and felt of her hands and arms, as she was occupied about the house, and her disposition to imitate led her to repeat every thing. She even learned to sew a little and to knit.

Her affections, too, began to expand, and seemed to be lavished upon the members of her family with peculiar force.

But the means of communication with her were very limited; she could only be told to go to a place by being pushed, or to come to one by a sign of drawing her. Patting her gently on the head signified approbation; on the back, disapprobation.

She showed every disposition to learn, and manifestly began to use a natural language of her own; she had a sign to express her idea of each member of the family, as drawing her fingers down each side of her face, to allude to the whiskers of one; twirling her hand around, in imitation of the motion of a spinning wheel, for another, and so on. But although she received all the aid that a kind mother could bestow, she soon began to give the importance of language to the development of human character. But the time Laura was seven years old, the moral effects of her privation began to appear. There was nothing to control her will but the absolute power of another, and humanity revolts at this. She had already begun to disregard all but the sterner nature of her father, and it was evident that as the propensities should increase with her physical growth, so would the difficulty of restraining them increase.

The parents were easily induced to consent to her coming to Boston, and on the 4th of October, 1837, they brought her to the institution.

For a while she was much bewildered; and after wandering about two weeks, until she became acquainted with the new locality, and somewhat familiar with the inmates, the attempt was made to give her a knowledge of arbitrary signs, by which she could interchange thoughts with others.

There was one of the two ways to be adopted; either to go on to build up a language of signs on the basis of the natural language which she had already commenced herself, or to teach her the purely arbitrary language in common use; that is, to give her a sign for every individual thing, or to give her a knowledge of letters, by a combination of which she might express her idea of existence, and the mode and condition of existence of any thing. The former would have been easy, but very ineffectual; the latter seemed very difficult, but if accomplished very ineffectual; I determined to try the latter.

The first experiments were made by taking articles in common use, such as knives, forks, spoons, keys, &c., and pasting upon them labels with their names printed in raised letters. These she felt very carefully, and soon of course distinguished that the crooked lines spoon differed as much from the crooked lines key as the spoon differed from the key in form.

Then small detached labels, with the same words printed upon them, were put into her hands; and she soon observed that they were similar to the ones pasted on the articles. She showed her perception of this similarity by laying the label key upon the key, and label spoon upon the spoon. She was encouraged here by the natural sign of approbation, patting on the head.

The same process was then repeated with all the articles which she could handle, and she very easily learned to place the proper labels upon them. It was evident, however, that the only intellectual exercise was that of imitation and memory. She recollected that the label book was placed upon a book, and she repeated the process, first from imitation, next from memory, with only the motive of love of approbation, but apparently without the intellectual perception of any relation between the things.

After a while, instead of labels, the individual letters were given to her on detached bits of paper; they were arranged side by side, so as to spell book, key, &c. when they were mixed up in a heap, and a sign was made for her to arrange them herself so as to express the words, book, key, &c. and she did so.

Hitherto the process had been mechanical, and the success about as great as teaching a very knowing dog a variety of tricks. The poor child had sat in mute amazement, and patiently imitated every thing her teacher did; but now the truth began to flash upon her—her intellect began to work—she perceived that there was a way by which she could herself make up a sign of any thing that was in her own mind, and show it to another mind; and at once her countenance lighted up with a human expression; it was no longer a dog or parrot, it was an immortal spirit eagerly seizing upon a new link of union with other spirits! I could almost fix upon the moment when this truth dawned upon her mind, and spread its light upon her countenance; I saw that the great obstacle was overcome, and that henceforward nothing but patient and persevering but plain and straight forward efforts were to be used.

The result, thus far, is quickly related and easily conceived; but not so was the process; for many weeks of apparently unprofitable labor was passed before it was effected.

When it was said above that a sign was made, it was intended to say that the action was performed by her teacher, she feeling of his hands and then imitating the motion.

The next step was to procure a set of metal types, with the different letters of the alphabet cast upon their ends; also a board in which were square holes, into which holes she could set the types, so that the letters on the ends could alone be above the surface.

Then on any article being handed to her, for instance, a pencil or a watch, she would select the competent letters, and arrange them on her board, and read them with apparent pleasure.

She was exercised for several weeks in this way, until her vocabulary became extensive; and then the important step was taken of teaching her how to represent the different letters by the position of her fingers, instead of the cumbrous apparatus of the board and types. She accomplished this speedily and easily, for her intellect had began to work in aid of her teacher, and her progress was rapid.

The whole of the succeeding year was passed in gratifying her eager inquiries for the name of every object which she could possibly handle—in exercising her in the use of her manual alphabet—in extending in every possible way her knowledge of the physical relations of things, and in proper care of her health.

At the end of the year a report of her case was made, from which the following is an extract:

"It has been ascertained beyond the possibility of doubt that she cannot see a ray of light, cannot hear the least sound, and never exercises her sense of smell if she has any. Thus her mind dwells in darkness and stillness as profound as that of a closed tomb at midnight. Of beautiful sights, and sweet sounds, and pleasant odors, she has no conception; nevertheless she seems as happy and playful as a bird or a lamb; and the employment of her intellectual faculties, or the acquirement of a new idea, gives her a vivid pleasure, which is marked in her expressive features. She never seems to repine, but has all the buoyancy and gaitey of childhood. She is fond of fun and frolic, and when playing with the rest of the children, her shrill laugh sounds the loudest of the group.

"When left alone, she seems very happy if she has her knitting or sewing, and will busy herself for hours; if she has no occupation, she evidently amuses herself with imaginary dialogues, or by recalling past impressions; she counts with her fingers or spells out names of things which she has recently learned in the manual alphabet of the deaf mutes.

"In this lonely self-communion she seems to reason, reflect, and argue; if she spells a word wrong with the fingers of her right hand, she instantly strikes it with her left, as her teacher does, in sign of disapprobation; if right, she pats herself on the head and looks pleased. She sometimes purposely spells a word wrong with the left hand, looks rogueish for a moment and laughs, and then with the right hand strikes the left as if to correct it.

"During the year she has attained great dexterity in the use of the manual alphabet of the deaf mutes; and she spells out the words and sentences which she knows, so fast and so deftly that only those accustomed to this language can follow with the eye the rapid motions of her fingers.

"But wonderful as is the rapidity with which she writes her thoughts upon the air, still more is the ease and accuracy with which she reads the words thus written by another, grasping their hands in hers, and following every movement of their fingers, as letter after letter conveys their meaning to her mind. It is in this way that she converses with her blind playmates; and nothing can more forcibly show the power of mind in forcing matter to its purpose, than a meeting between them.—For if great talent and skill are necessary for two pantomimes to paint their thoughts and feelings by the movements of the body and the expression of the countenance, how much greater the difficulty when darkness shrouds them both, and one of them can hear no sound!

"When Laura is walking through a passage way with her hands spread before her, she knows instantly every one she meets, and passes them with a sign of recognition; and if it be a girl of her own age, and especially if one of her favorites, there is instantly a bright smile of recognition, and a twining of arms, a grasping of hands, and a swift telegraphing upon the tiny fingers, whose rapid evolutions convey the thoughts and feelings from the outposts of one mind to those of the other. There are questions and answers, exchanges of joy or sorrow, there are kissings and partings, just as between little children with all their senses."

TREADING THE WINE PRESS.—A letter from J. Tappan, Esq., of Boston, who has recently travelled in Europe, gives the following description of the process of trading grapes. Fastidious wine drinkers will not fancy the fact.

"We passed through the finest wine countries in Europe, in vintage time; and having witnessed the "treading of the grapes," it may interest you to know the process. On an appointed day, all the inhabitants of the hamlet assemble early in the morning, and with carts containing baskets, tubs and casks, proceed to gather all the grapes, sound and in every state of decay, in large tubs, resembling in size and cleanliness the tubs in which hogs are scalded and dressed in America. When the tub is sufficiently filled with grapes, spiders, spiders' webs and flies, a lad jumps into it, and drawing up his pantaloons to his middle, commences, sometimes in bare feet, and at others with his barn-yard shoes to jump upon the grapes, and force the juice through holes in the centre of the bottom of the tub into a large tunnel, which is inserted in a cask. When the cask is filled it is rolled away and carted to the village, from whence it goes to the wine merchant, and is manufactured, which means adulterated, and sent to market. Nothing can be more filthy and nauseating than the dirty, slovenly way wine is made, unless it may be the water back of Albany, of which Mr. Delevan proved they made strong beer. Could wine drinkers, who so much extol the cock-roach flavor of their wine, in our country, once realize that it probably is the spider flavor, they would loathe what they call the pure juice of the grape. It is a well known fact, that no pure wine is exported from wine countries, and why it should be believed that there is, when it is so notoriously otherwise that even the dealers themselves make no secret of their mixtures, passes my comprehension."

A SABBATH TWILIGHT.—How quiet, yet how expressive! Even the sky in its clear blue depths, in its meaning mildness, seems to say, Soul, and tranquil, be subdued, be peaceful. And yon cloud of beauteous tints, and almost living brilliancy (bearing the impress of the orb of day) says the exalted, be sublime, be holy in thy feelings. And that little twinkling star, how sweetly lustrous and seemingly kind it looks out from its far off magnificent home upon mortals. The mighty ocean, too, list! dost hear it softly flowing upon its pebbled shore? Did ever organ of human invention discourse such exquisite music? or did ever music greet the ear of such thrilling import? with so much power to absorb the spirit in lofty contemplation, to soften and soothe? And what is the language of that bell as now it chimes forth its welcome, winning invitation to the sanctuary of the one living and true God? Emphatically peace and good will to man—yea, every thing joyous and blessed.

ANECDOTE OF PATRICK HENRY.—When the celebrated Patrick Henry, of Virginia, was near the close of his life, and in feeble health, he laid his hand upon the Bible, and addressed an old friend who was with him: "Here is a book," said he, "worth more than all others ever printed: yet it is my misfortune never to have read it with proper attention and feeling until lately!" About the same time he wrote to his daughter, "I heard it said that Deists have claimed me! The thought gave me more pain than the appellation of Tory; for I consider religion of infinitely higher importance than politics; and I find much cause to reproach myself, that I have lived so long and given no decided and public proof of my being a Christian."

FEMALE LABOR IN ARABIA.—I saw several females here literally performing the duties of bullocks; that is, in plain English, they were yoked to the plough. One was a very comely lass, and she answered my inquiries laughingly, that they hired themselves for the purpose; the remuneration being a small quantity of grain. The men, at the same place, were standing looking on with spinnets in their hands. An odd transfer of duties this! The reader may recollect that Sir Thomas Moore relates as a reason why an Indian should be exempted from paying his taxes, that he pleaded the late loss of his wife, who did as much work as two bullocks.—Wellsted's City of the Caliphs.

THE HUMAN VOICE.—God has made the whole earth vocal with sweet sounds. The untraveled forest echoes the notes of the wild bird, and the habitations of men are made glad by the song of the feathered minstrel. But, above all, the human voice, that combines the highest charm of sweet sound with the inspiration of thought, is given for no ordinary purpose of earthly pleasure. In its whisper of affection, how grateful! In its expression of religious devotion, how exalted! For its solace in trouble, how dear! For its participation in joy, how unspeakable!

Help others and you relieve yourself. Go out and drive away the cloud that gathers around the brow of your sorrowing friend, and you will most assuredly return with a lighter and clearer conscience.

STRAY THOUGHTS,

FROM THE GERMAN OF RAHEL LEVIN.

NATURE.—Why should I not be natural? let me twist myself into a thousand affectations, and I shall not be so various, as when giving my affections their free natural play.

FUTURITY.—There is a thought which is hammering my head in two; and it is this. The future does not come to meet us—does not lie before us—but comes streaming over our heads from behind.—Sauve qui peut! I see plainly there is no redemption here.

HAPPINESS.—Not happiness but victory and pleasure is the lot of man. Perfect happiness I for one could not stand. A man must file and be filed. In a state of bliss this is impossible.

A DANGEROUS MAN.—He who cannot tune himself down is dangerous and pernicious.

RULE OF COMPOSITION.—If you would write to any purpose, you must be perfectly FREE from without in the first place, and yet more free within. Give yourself the natural rein—think on no pattern, no patron, no paper, no press, no public; think on nothing, but follow your impulses. Give yourself as you are—what you see, and how you see it. It is an entire mistake, their prate about objectivity and self-exenteration. Shakspeare, Goethe, Cervantes, gave the world as they saw it, each for himself—they could not give it otherwise. The more world you put into your work so much the better—so much the richer are you in yourself, so much the richer do you make your readers. But you cannot give them the world only; and if you give it otherwise than as yourself truly and substantially know it and feel it, you are a weak imitator and a LIAR. Every man sees with his own eyes, or does not see at all. This is incontrovertibly true. Bring out what you have. If you have nothing, be an honest beggar rather than a respectable thief.

KNOWLEDGE.—If any man would see a thing, pierce through it, thoroughly know it, he must, in the first place, love it.

INNOCENCE.—Innocence is beautiful; virtue is a plaster, scar, an operation.

A POOR BLIND GIRL.—A poor blind girl in England, brought a clergyman 30 shillings, for the missionary cause. He objected, "you are a poor blind girl, and cannot afford to give so much." "I am indeed blind," said she, "but can afford to give these thirty shillings, better perhaps than you suppose." "How so?" "I am, sir, by trade, a basket maker, and can work as well in the dark, as in the light. Now I am sure in the last winter, it must have cost those girls who have eyes, more than 30 shillings for candles to work by, which I have saved; and therefore hope you will take it for the missionaries.—Burder's Miss. Anecdotes.

An honest man need not feel the assaults of his enemies. Talent will be appreciated, industry will be rewarded, and he who pursues in any calling, an open, manly, honest course, will in the end triumph over all enemies, and build up for himself a good name, which shall endure long after his traducer shall have been forgotten.

He that threatens us, not having the power to harm us, would perhaps do so if he could: but he that threatens, having the power, is not much to be feared. A man in a paroxysm of passion, may exclaim, I would stab you if I had a sword, and perhaps he would be as good as his word; but he that has a sword, will either use it without threatning or threaten without using it.

TWO GREAT VIRTUES.—Delaware can boast of two virtues which no other State in the Union can claim. The one is an overflowing Treasury, free of debt, and the other that there is not a single Distillery upon her soil. May not the former be the consequence of the latter?

Ladie's Department.

ADVICE TO WIVES.

BY J. A. JAMES.

Economy and order in the management of her personal and domestic expenditures, are the obvious duties of a wife.

You are to preside in the direction of household affairs, and much of the prosperity and comfort of the little community will depend upon your skilful and prudent arrangements. A showy, luxurious, and expensive taste, is almost universally cherished, and is displayed in innumerable instances, where there are no means to support it. Christian families are in the most imminent peril of worldly conformity in the present day; and the line of demarkation between the church and the world is fast wearing out. It is true they have no cards; they do not frequent the theatre or the ball-room; and perhaps they have no midnight routs; but this is not all—for many are as anxious about their furniture, the fashion of their habits, the expensiveness of their entertainments, as the veriest worldling can be. Now, a wife has a great influence in checking or promoting all this. It has been thought that this increasing disposition for show and gaiety is to be attributed chiefly to female vanity. It is woman that is generally regarded as the presiding genius of such a scene; she receives the praise and the compliment of the whole, and she, therefore, is under the strongest temptation to promote it. But let her consider how little all this has to do with the happiness of the family, even in its most prosperous condition; and how the recollection of it aggravates the misery of adversity, when a reverse takes place. Then to be found in debt for finery of dress and furniture; then to have it said that her extravagance helped to ruin her husband; then to want that for bread which was formerly wasted on luxury; then to hear the whispered reproach of having injured others by her own thoughtless expenditure! Avoid, my female friends, these miseries; do not go on to prepare wormwood and gall, to embitter still more the already bitter cup of adversity. Endeavor to acquire a skilfulness in domestic management, a frugality, a prudence, a love of order and neatness, a mid-way course between meanness and luxury, a suitableness to your station in life, to your Christian profession, and economy, which shall leave you more to spare for the cause of God and the miseries of man. Rather check than stimulate the taste of your husband for expense; tell him it is not necessary for your happiness, nor for the comfort of the family; draw him away from these adventitious circumstances, to the mental improvement, the moral culture, the religious instruction of your children.—Let knowledge, piety, good sense, well formed habits, harmony and mutual love, be the sources of your domestic pleasure; what is the splendor of furniture, or dress, or entertainments, to these?

ADVERTISEMENTS.

WANTED, an Apprentice to the Blacksmith Business. Apply to the subscriber.
HIRAM BABCOCK.
Scott, Cortland Co., May 11, 1841. 63w3

SHERIFFS SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Supreme Court of Judicature, of the State of New York, and to me delivered, I have levied upon the right, title and interest of Stephen G. Sears in and to a certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being, in the Village of De Ruyter, county of Madison, and bounded as follows: on the north by the turnpike road, on the east by lands owned by Noah B. Foote, on the south by lands owned, or in possession of, John Starr, on the west by lands owned by Marvin M. Hamilton, which I shall expose to sale at public Vendue, as the Law directs, at the house of Wm C. Gage, on Saturday, the 22d day of May next, at 1 o'clock, P. M.
Dated, De Ruyter, April 10, 1841. 59w6
ISAAC BROWN, SHERIFF.
By T. ORVILLE ELMORE, Deputy.

WANTED.

IMMEDIATELY wanted a good workman in the business of Wagon making. Also, a Smith acquainted with the business, to whom good encouragement will be given. 56tf
JOHN MAXSON.
April 12th, 1841.

HOUSE TO LET.

A PLEASANT and convenient tenement is still to Let, in the House occupied last year by Mr. Clark on the estate of the late L. B. Goodwin.
JOHN MAXSON.
April 12th, 1841. 59tf

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 29 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street joining the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village.
JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

Head Quarters for BOOTS & SHOES.
Wholesale and retail. As cheap as the cheapest and good as the best.

THE Public are invited to call and examine for themselves. He keeps on hand Fine and Coarse Boots and Shoes, of every description, Ladies French Buskins and single sole Slips, White and Black satin slips, made to order. The Ladies are invited to call and examine the latest New York fashions. ☞Utica St. Sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.
De Ruyter, April 2?, 1841. 61tf

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
GEO. W. SUTTON.
De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.
For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place.
47m6
S. D. DELLAY.

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail. He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.
ELISHA STILLMAN.
De Ruyter Apr. 13, 1841.

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 13.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 65.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, MAY 28, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

MONTHLY SERMONS,

BY

A VILLAGE PASTOR.

(MAY, 1841.)

NO. V.

A Sermon suggested by the death of WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON, late President of the United States; delivered in one of the Villages of Central New-York, on the Day of National Fast, Friday, May 14, 1841.

Psalm xlvi. 10.—Be still and know that I am God.

Not only by his written word, but also by his providential dispensations, God asserts his universal and particular government. When he commissions death to enter the most retired domestic circle, he designs to teach that circle, that all their sources of happiness are subject to his disposal.

The same salutary truth is taught to NATIONS, when distinguished statesman in the midst of their official trusts, are called to bid farewell to earth.

Within the period of about one half of a century, the people of the United States have elected nine Presidents. Three of those men are now living; two of the three are of venerable age. Six of the Presidents have died; two of them yielded to the stroke of death on the same day, July 4th, 1826.

It was not until April 4th, 1841, that God saw fit to arrest the attention of this whole nation, by removing one by death while he was in the exrcise of his high responsibilities as the President of the United States of America. That one was thus removed, precisely one month after he had entered upon that service to which the voice of the people had called him.

The strong and full intonations with which he pronounced his Inaugural, were soon followed by his short, faint, and expiring breathings. The splendor of the 4th of March had scarcely passed from our view, when that great funeral procession bore to the silent tomb, the prostrate form of WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON.

By this Providence, God proclaims to the American people,—

"BE STILL, AND KNOW THAT I AM GOD."

This solemn event—this injunction of inspired truth—this day of National humiliation—all conspire to induce us to cherish the following

REFLECTIONS:—

1. That the destinies of this nation are in the hands of God.

That the Most High "ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will," is one prominent sentiment of the Bible, which mankind are slow to learn. God is the Disposer of nations, "Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance; behold, he taketh up the isles as a very little thing." All nations are required to acknowledge the Government of the Ruler of the Universe. From the hour that our fathers placed their feet upon the Plymouth rock, until this hour, may be clearly seen, "God's hand in America." In the hands of that God who thus far hath led us on, are the elements of our future history. Upon his sovereign will, so manifested as to perfectly harmonize with our agency and accountability, does it depend, whether we shall be an united and growing nation, blessing by our diffusive influence the numerous nations of the earth; or whether we shall be "broken with a rod of iron, and dashed" "in pieces like a potter's vessel." Permitting us to form and to develope our national character without compulsion, God will "overturn, and overturn," until he shall ultimately dispose of this nation in that manner which will best coincide with his benevolent, comprehensive, and eternal plan of governing the Universe, and will most glorify himself before the innumerable intelligences, who, either with delight or hatred, study his mighty works.

Another reflection naturally arises—it is this;

2. That as a nation we should repent of our sins against God, and evince the sincerity of our repentance by putting away the evil of our doings.

Repentance is not mere sorrow for transgression; it is that kind of sorrow which is inseparably joined with forsaking what is wrong, and with doing what is right. We are a guilty nation. We have abused unspeakable privileges. In all our rich vallies, and on all our fragant hills, in our new townships, and "in the city full," on all our lakes and rivers, we have profaned the name of the Lord our God. We have treated the holy Sabbath with contempt. The arrangements of the marriage covenant have oft been spurned, and in this respect, the civil law has been found notoriously inefficient to restrain and to protect. We are proverbially a money-loving people; we 'make haste to be rich.' We are proud, and haughty, and self-sufficient. We have shamefully wronged our red brother. We even enslave our fellow man. We heed not his groans of distress, and his pleadings for Liberty. Some sins upon this catalogue are those which are charged upon numerous individuals, while statute laws bear their full testimony against them, and no direct national act has endorsed them. Others are there which are smiled upon by occasional, and rather (comparatively,) incidental legislative doings.

BUT, FOR THE CRIME OF LEGALIZING THE ABOMINABLE SIN OF AMERICAN SLAVERY, WE STAND INDICTED IN OUR NATIONAL CAPACITY BEFORE THE GOD OF THE OPPRESSED.

Our plea, "Not guilty," darkens our guilt. Attempt to evade the charge as we may, the American people are responsible for the continuance of American Slavery. The people make laws, and repeal them at their pleasure; and if it be contended that some additional constitutional provision is needed, that the people may possess the right to abolish an intolerable nuisance from their own seat of government,—be it remembered, the Constitution is in the hands of the people, and by them can be constitutionally amended to meet the claims of Justice and Humanity. We cannot—we dare not extenuate the matter. WE ARE A SLAVEHOLDING NATION. On this day of National Fast, we should humbly confess this sin, and from this moment do works fit for repentance. If we would as a nation to-day keep such a fast as God has chosen, we must "loose the bands of wickedness, undo the heavy burdens, AND LET THE OPPRESSED GO FREE, AND BREAK EVERY YOKE." 'Then shall our light break forth as the morning, and our health spring forth speedily.'

If the preceding sentiments be correct, it is evident,

3. That we should supplicate God for the blessings that we need.

To what other source shall we look for help. If we accord with the sentiment which is well expressed in the Official Recommendation for the observance of this day, viz.—"the dependence of nations, as well as of individuals, upon our Heavenly Parent," we shall "with one accord join in reverential and humble approach to Him in whose hands we are, invoking him to inspire us with a proper spirit and temper of heart and mind under these frowns of his Providence, and still to bestow his gracious benedictions upon our Government, and our country." How can we succeed in promoting public reformation, without the "gracious benediction" of Him against whom we have sinned? The more numerous and formidable the obstacles are which have a tendency to dishearten us in any work of reform, the more earnestly should we supplicate aid from the God of our fathers. Our prayer should be—"Have mercy upon us that we perish not"! "Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach; wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God"? Or rather, 'Why have that people forsaken the God of their youth'?

4. That we should offer up earnest prayer for our rulers is a duty which is now most solemnly pressed upon our attention.

Their duties are momentous, and they are liable to death, like ourselves. Yes, they must "die like men"—like other men.

The following extract from the pen of the Rev. J. N. DANFORTH, in a most affecting manner presents our rulers as needing our prayers:—

"But when in an interval of "expressive silence," the coffin was conveyed down into the tomb, and all that remained on earth of the President of this great Union was laid in its narrow bed, near other coffins almost unnoticed, and altogether unknown to us, how did all earthly grandeur dwindle into its real insignificance, and how impressively did the tomb teach in that hour! The immortality of fame! How did the bubble burst in that atmosphere of the house of death"!

"And when I saw TYLER, WEBSTER, EWING, BELL, CRITTENDEN, and GRANGER, enter that house of death to take their last view of the coffin, and emerge again with the weight of a nation's cares upon them added to their present affliction, who could help exclaiming, "What shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue"! In view of such a scene, I cannot help exclaiming—Pray for those men! Let us beseech God to aid them to realize and to discharge their most sacred responsibilities—to sanctify the affliction to their souls—and to prepare them for that hour when they must again enter the house of death, not to emerge again until the last trump shall sound."

If we pray for our present Chief Magistrate, with that faith, humility, fervency, and perseverance, which the inexpressible exigency demands—in special answer to our supplications, God may graciously "inspire" him "with a proper spirit and temper of heart and mind," in such an abundant measure, that the sequel may demonstrate, that one part of the plan of God in removing him whose departure we deplore, was, to furnish a signal occasion for the nation to enjoy a most effectual example of EMANCIPATION.

5. Amid all our fears and anxieties HOPE should predominate; and we should cherish the expectation that God will signally manifest himself for the deliverance of our nation from existing evils, and their threatened consequences.

If we are disposed to indulge in despairing forebodings, let us make 'God our refuge and our strength, our very present help in trouble.' We will listen to his voice saying unto us, "Be still and know that I am God." Our united response shall be,—

"Our God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come."

Let us confide fully in him. God is able so to treat nations as well as individuals, that where sin abounds, grace may much more abound. God may permit the great sin of this land of liberty to wave its black flag over our capitol, and over many of the states, until he shall have sufficiently humbled us before the gaze of other nations, whose systems of government we pronounce to be defective in the great principles of universal liberty—and having done this, he may utterly abolish American Slavery by those means which will most delightfully concur to promote the durable happiness and usefulness of this nation—will most clearly portray those principles of liberty which we now profess—will most humble tyrannical usurpation all over the earth, and most glorify the Lord of hosts. We shall sink in despair as it regards all hope for the rescue of our beloved country from irrevocable ruin, unless we cherish these cheering expectations; therefore we must cherish them.

6. There is one other reflection which must not pass unrecorded—it is one which comes home to each heart,—"I too must die."

However much our families and intimate friends may desire us to remain on earth; however strongly the more enlarged circles of society in which we move may wish us to prolong our stay; with whatever great interests the continuance of our life may seem to us, and to others, to be connected,—yet let us remember, that the summons of death may suddenly demand our presence amid eternal scenes. Permit me, for a moment, to particularly address the enterprizing business men of this village, and its adjacent neighborhoods;—

Does it sometimes appear to you, that the importance of your remaining on earth for years to come, to accomplish your plans, is so great, that it can scarcely be possible that death will interrupt you? Remember, Remember—President HARRISON could not be spared for four years, though a nation plead that he might be spared. "Be ye also ready."

It is duty to remind ourselves, ere we disperse from this temple, that we ought to give thanks unto God, that the late President evinced on various occasions, so humane and generous a spirit; that he bequeathed to the nation in his dying moments such a solemn charge to carry out the principles of the Government; and more than all, that he manifested high esteem for the Bible, for the Sabbath, for Christian ordinances, and we trust, did fix his faith on the atoning sacrifice of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Praised be God, that such records stand on the page of American History!

With eager eyes, and a heart trembling with deep emotion, I search that page for one other record which I find not. It would rejoice my heart there to read,—'President Harrison, in his Inaugural Address, invoked the wisdom, and patriotism, and piety of the American nation, to devise the best means to cleanse our liberty-loving country from its deepest stain—traffic in the human species.'

O how bright such a record would look! Could such a record as the following be found on the same loved page, we should thank God, and take courage; 'As the President met the closing hour of his probation, he said to the members of his Cabinet—Remember those who are in bonds as bound with them; Plead the cause of the poor and of the needy; Open your mouth for the dumb; Tell my beloved country that I testify in my expiring moments, that American Slavery must be speedily abolished, or I am conscious that the judgments of God will wither the United States.'

Words of this import coming from his lips, in such an hour, would have accomplished more in awakening an impulse too powerful for slavery to resist, than, perhaps, he could have accomplished, had his life and strength been spared during the four years for which he was elected President, and had he, during the whole time, labored with all the Anti-Slavery zeal of a Wilberforce. Who can tell what immense responsibilities may devolve on one frail man, to be discharged in the short space of thirty fleeting days!—In one brief dying hour!

Over the grave of PRESIDENT HARRISON I mingle my tears with those of my fellow-citizens; but I weep most when I reflect what he might have done for the cause of impartial Liberty which he neglected to do.

Here again, we must recur to the sacred injunction with which we commenced this discourse—"Be still, and know that I am God."

Doubtless God has, for wise reasons, permitted this neglect. By it, and the sudden decease of the President, he has taught all, this important lesson—"Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of."

If we learn this lesson thoroughly, we shall not fail to seek unto God with fasting, and supplication, and individual and national repentance. Then can we truly say, "The Lord of Hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge."—AMEN.

Religious Department.

MARKS OF A TRUE CHURCH.

In the first place it must go and teach all nations. It must be animated with the apostolical, the missionary spirit. It must not rest satisfied that Christ should be preached of yore. It must not let sloth creep over it, so as to count that it has already attained. It must not be content with taking care of itself, of its own souls, of its own flock. It must so prize the treasure it has received, as to desire above all things to impart that treasure to others. It must have something of that spirit, which will leave the ninety and nine sheep in the fold to seek after bringing back the hundredth that is lost—of that spirit, which moved our blessed Lord himself to leave the throne of heaven, and the choir of holy angels, and the rule of all worlds, to seek after and bring back this poor wandering ball of earth to the fold of his heavenly Father. It must have something of that spirit, with which Jesus Christ yearned for the salvation of souls, for the showing and spreading of the glory of God. In the next place it must baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. It must hold and preach the true faith in the holy Trinity. It must not court the world by echoing its strain, and merely preach faith in the Father according to the heresy of the Socinians; with whom the Father is no Father, except in the same sense as father Jove. Nor must it try to steer a middle course between the world and the gospel, by preaching faith in the Father and Son, according to the heresy of some of the Semi-arians. If it does, it has no claim to the promise; Christ is not with it. It must preach faith in the Father as made known to us by the Son—as the Father of the Son, and all those who become his children by being adopted into the brotherhood of the Son; faith in the Son as the only begotten of the Father—the first-begotten before all creatures—as God manifest in the flesh, to the end that all who believe in him may receive adoption of sonship—and faith in the Holy Ghost, as the purifying, sanctifying Spirit of God sent to us by the Son to be our comforter, through whom, dwelling in our hearts, we become the children of God.—The third characteristic of a church, which has a share in our Lord's promise is, that it must teach the observance of all things which he commanded. Indeed, this is scarcely separable from the second; for, if Jesus was God manifest in the flesh, all his words must needs be truth, and righteousness, and power. His church, therefore, must not slur over his words, or pare away from them; it must preach the whole gospel; it must not take what it likes and reject what it dislikes; it must take all.—It must not shape and dress up the gospel after its own fancies according to the Rationalist heresy in Germany. If it does, Christ is not with it; he is not with the Socinian heresy; he is not with the Rationalist heresy. There is no life in their words, no power in their preaching; still-born they came upon earth, and still-born they lift up their heads from it—still-born in spirit, carcases of a departed faith, barren craters of an extinct religion. But whenever a church has had these three characteristics of a true church—when it has had the missionary spirit—when it has acknowledged that the Father can only be known and approached through the Son, that there is no other name under heaven by which we can be saved, but only the name of Jesus Christ, and that so frail are our purposes, and so corrupt our wills, it is impossible for us to do, or even to will any thing good, except through the Spirit of God working in us and with us; when, moreover, it has bowed with full submission to all our Lord's commands, and has tried to engrave them all on her heart, and to lift up the voice through every note of the gospel, whenever a church has had these three essential features, and in the same measure in which it has had them, Christ has ever been with it, in the fulness of the power given to them over all things in heaven and in earth. He has blessed its baptism, and enabled it to shine with a great light on the nations that were sitting in darkness. He has blessed its teaching and preaching, and enabled it to enrich the courts of heaven with saints. He has come to it as to a mine, and has taken jewel after jewel out of it, to place them in his crown. —Archdeacon Hare.

From the Parent's Magazine.

"AH, MASSA, YOU NO UNDERSTAND IT."

A few years since, there lived in one of our large cities, a poor colored woman, named Betty, who had been confined by sickness for nearly twenty years. By the few friends that knew her, she was familiarly called poor Betty. Betty had seen comfortable days. She had been kind and good at service. Eighty years shed their blights upon her robust limbs, before they yielded to the hardships of toil. She had acquired a hale constitution by sporting for twenty years upon her native hills, upon the burning sands of Africa, before the slave-ship stole its guilty, accursed way over the waters, laden with chains and manacles to bind her limbs, and to mar her sable beauty, to agonize her soul, and to subject her to the horrors of the middle passage. Betty had long been blind, and was said to be 105 years old. An aged daughter, whom God, in mercy to this bruised reed in a stranger-land, had kindly permitted to be the companion, both of her bondage and her freedom, arranged and administered the few comforts with which former industry and present charity furnished their decayed cottage. Betty was, indeed, a relic of former days, and was noted both for her good sense, and her discreet, warm-hearted piety.

Mr. B. was a man of wealth and business in the same city. His signature was better than silver on the exchange, because it was more easily transferred. His sails whitened the ocean, his charity gladdened many hearts, and his bounty gave impulse to many benevolent operations. Notwithstanding the pressure of business, Mr. B. often found time to drop in and see what became of poor Betty. His voice, and even his step, had become familiar to her, and always lighted up a smile on her dark, wrinkled face. He would often say some pleasant thing to cheer this lonely pilgrim on her way to Zion.

One day Mr. B. took a friend from the country to see Betty. As he stooped and entered the cottage door, he said "Ah, Betty, you are alive yet." "Yes, tank, God," said Betty.—"Betty," said he, "why do you suppose God keeps you so long in this world, poor, and sick, and blind, when you might go to heaven and enjoy so much?"

While Mr. B.'s tone and manner were half sportive, he yet uttered a serious thought, which had more than once come over his mind. Now comes the sermon.

Betty assumed her most serious and animated tone, and replied, "Ah, Massa, you no understand it. Dare be two great tings to do for de church;—one be to pray for it, toder be to act for it. Now, Massa, God keep me alive to pray for de church, and he keeps you alive to act for it. Your great gifts no do much good, Massa, without poor Betty's prayers."

For a few moments, Mr. B. and his friend stood silent, thrilled, and astonished. They felt the knowledge, the dignity, the moral sublimity of this short sermon. It seemed to draw aside the veil a little, and let them into Heaven's mysteries. "Yes, Betty," replied Mr. B., in the most serious and subdued tones, "your prayers are of more importance to the church than my alms." This short sermon, preached by poor Betty, was never forgotten by Mr. B. or his friend. It made them more humble, more prayerful, more submissive in afflictions.

A REVIVAL.

It is not the work of man, however human agency may be employed. Imperfections there may be, and things to regret there may be—as in all that man touches, there is—but the phenomenon itself we regard as the work of the Holy Ghost, alike beyond human power to produce it and to control it. "The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou hearest the sound thereof, and canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth;" and such is the work of the Spirit alike in an individual conversion or in a revival of religion. The wind, sometimes gentle, sometimes terrific, sometime sufficient only to bend the heads of the field of wheat, or to shake the leaf of the aspen, sometimes sweeping in the fury of the storm over hills and vales, illustrates the way in which God's Spirit influences human hearts. You have seen the pliant osier bend gently before the zephyr, and the flowers and the fields of grain gently wave in a summer's eve. So gently does the spirit of God breath upon a church and people. So calm, so lovely, so pure are those influences which incline the mind to pray, in thought; to Christ, to heaven. You have seen the clouds grow dark in the western sky. They roll upward and onward, infolding on themselves, and throwing their ample volumes over the heavens. The lightnings play, and thunders roll, and the tornado sweeps over hill and vale, and the proud oak crashes on the mountains.—"The wind blows where it pleases;" and thus, too, the Spirit of God passes with more than human power over a community, and many a stout-hearted sinner, like the quivering elm or oak, trembles under the influences of truth. They see a dark cloud gathering in the sky; they hear the thunders of justice; they see the heavens flash along their guilty path, and they are prostrated before God, like the forest before the mighty tempest. The storm passes by, and the sun rises serene again in the heavens, and universal nature smiles—beautiful emblem of a revival of religion.—Albert Barnes.

DAILY READING THE BIBLE.—A true Christian, one who desires his soul to thrive and be in health, will no more suffer a day to pass without reading some portion of the Word of God, than a man who desires his body to be strong and healthy, will suffer a day to pass without tasting food. Many think it sufficient if they read the Bible on the Sabbath, but this is a clear proof that their hearts is not right with God—that they may have something of the form, they have nothing of the power of godliness—in a word, that they have never been born again of the Holy Spirit, for if they would, "as new born babes desire the sincere milk of the word that they might grow thereby," and such a desire would not allow them to rest satisfied without reading every day some portion of the Word of God. Be assured it is not the ability, it is the inclination alone that is wanting. You can find time for sleep, you can find time for your meals, but, alas! Satan persuades many that they have no time for attending to the concerns of their immortal souls; or, at most, no time except one day in seven for reading the Bible, the directory to heaven. Permit me now to caution such persons of the danger of such gross neglect. Be on your guard against his subtle devices, who, like a roaring lion, goeth about seeking to devour your souls; unless you make this invaluable book your daily study, be assured you will never be wise unto salvation.

A MARTYR'S ADDRESS ON THE SCAFFOLD.—Alexander Home was condemned to be hanged at the market-cross, Edingburgh, on December 29, 1685, for his adherence to the word of God. These were his last words;—"I am shortly to be clothed upon with my house from above, in that city that hath foundations. I shall sin no more. O desirable condition! when beyond all hazard of offending God, any more, I shall be capable both of serving and enjoying God. I shall wonder and toil no more, having reached that harbor of eternal rest. I now contentedly leave the world. Farewell all enjoyments, earthly pleasures and contentments! Farewell, friends and relatives, in whom I had much satisfaction! Farewell my dear wife and children, though not so dear as Christ, for whom I now willingly suffer the loss of all things, and yet am no loser, for I leave them on the tender mercies of Christ! How welcome, blessed Father, Son and Holy Ghost!—Welcome ye innumerable company of angels, and spirit of just men made perfect!—Welcome celestial city!—Welcome endless joy! And now, O Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit; Lord Jesus receive my soul!"

While the executioner was adjusting the rope to his neck, he sung the last verse of the seventeenth Psalm, according to the old version; and with its devotion the Martyr closed his earthly career.

"But as for me, I thine own face
In righteousness will see;
And with thy likeness when I wake,
I satisfied shall be." WOODROE.

Happiness in a cottage seems always more real than it does in a gorgeous palace. It is not wasted in large rooms—it is concentrated—a great deal of affection in a small space; a great deal of joy within narrow walls, and compressed, as it were, by a low roof. Is it not a blessed thing that the most narrow means become enlarged by the affections?—and that we need not be rich to be happy?

THE BIBLE.—Better than any or all the books of men, are the two books of God—the volumes of inspiration and nature. Both inexhaustible in the purest, richest instruction, and each enriching and corroborating the other. How strange then, entirely unaccountable, that either, much more than both, should be shut out of schools, or any institution designed to promote knowledge or elevate character.—Self-Instructor.

It is a poor thing indeed to have religion enough to save our credit, but not enough to save our souls.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, May 28, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

New York Anniversaries.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY.—This Society held its 1st Anniversary on Tuesday evening, in the 3d Free Church, Thompson-st. The meeting was addressed by several distinguished speakers. The abstract of the Report published, states, that but little was accomplished at the commencement of the year, except publishing the American & Foreign Anti-Slavery Reporter. Messrs. Birney and Stanton, Secretaries of the Society, were both absent for considerable time in England, to lay open to the British people the true state of the slavery question, and the difficulties in the way of its abolition. The London Convention is regarded as having an important bearing upon the subject of Emancipation of Slaves. Two acts of that body are considered as operating powerfully to produce this result, viz: The addresses to the different governments, and the exercise of Christian fellowship and communion towards slave-holders. The former is preparing the way to bring the subject into the diplomacy of all Nations. The latter promises, ere long, to bring the power of Christianity to bear against the strong hold which Slavery has found in the churches.

In the case of the Amistad, the hand of the Lord is seen, and the liberation of the captives is regarded as a signal manifestation of the goodness of God.

The great political excitement of the past year is regarded as operating against the progress of Abolitionism. But on the whole, there is the fullest evidence that the cause is advancing, and slave-holders begin to consider the subject as one of practical inquiry.

AMERICAN TEMPERANCE UNION.—This Society held its anniversary in the Murry-st. Presbyterian church. Hon. T. Frelinghuysen, President of the Union, made an address.

The principles of the Union, said he, are not arbitrary dogmas; but prompted by a considerate regard to the best interests of man, founded on sober calculation, and just views of duty, and the most efficient means of moral improvement.

A ruinous practice had grown into a habit, that breaks through all restraints of society, family, and friendship. It first degrades and depresses its victims, and then destroys them, bringing wretchedness and ruin upon their unhappy families. Christians have prayed over it for long generations, that God would arrest its progress, turn back its tide, and grant deliverance from its pestilential influence. To meet the crisis—and in faithfulness to his promises, the hearer of prayer, moved the purpose of total abstinence; and when it rose to our view, it drew an amount of favor corresponding with our hopes. It was a remedy, salutary, safe, and thorough. It does more than to arrest temptation—it breaks the head of the tempter.

Among the incidents of this enterprise, is the kind of opposition it has encountered.—That the vicious would denounce it, and the song of the drunkard be directed against it, was expected and prepared for. But many of the friends of virtue have been its adversaries. They have assailed it as ultra—as wisdom above what is written—an impeachment of the authority and example of the Savior. Perhaps the imprudence of some of its friends may have given some occcasion for this; yet, the remedy stands out in simple energy.

While we might allow to the casuist the benefit of his scruples, we could not sit still and do nothing, while we saw that the use of intoxicating liquors had become inveterate—that it was a monster that lived on itself. The solemn truth that total abstinence seemed the last effort of desponding humanity, took a deep hold of the hearts of those who feel for the woes of their fellow-creatures, and there was a soul-felt conviction that if this failed, all was lost.

That this cause calls for sacrifice, commends it to the heart and conscience. This allies it to all other efforts to do good to man. Look at our own history. It commenced in great personal sacrifice, for the sake of great principles; and so it has been carried forward to its present position among the nations of the earth. The American Revolution was but a sacrifice to defend the great principles of liberty; and now, that we are in danger from another source, similar sacrifices are demanded, and the friends of temperance make them freely.

Dr. Jewett, of Boston, in seconding the resolution for the adoption of the Annual Report, said that, while we have much occasion to rejoice at the success which has attended the efforts of the friends of temperance thus far, yet we have only taken the outskirts, while many strong holds of the enemy yet remain to be possessed; and proceeded to represent some of the obstacles that are yet to be overcome before it will triumph. And, the first was, a want of system in the management of the cause. Men in wordly business have their regular plans, and their business reduced to system; and so have other benevolent societies; yet the temperance reformation is permitted to hobble along, without any regular system, and with scanty means of support, while it is a fact, that the temperance cause must go in advance of every other cause of benevolence. It is the breaking up plough, while the others come to smooth down the surface, and sow the seed. But, as things are now managed, it is like the farmer, who puts all the strong teams on the harrow, and leaves the sod unbroken. He thought the temperance society ought to have a plan of operations for raising funds, as systematic and thorough as the other great benevolent operations. He would not have less given to them, but more to this. And, this he did not ask as a charity, but as a fair claim upon those who have been benefitted by it, in the immense saving they have made by abstinence, and that at the expense of others, who made sacrifices to sustain it. He wished them to pay the debt, that we may use the money to convince and benefit others. And he commended the example of the ladies of Worcester, who, seeing the men engaged in this cause, and feeling that it was for them that they were laboring, raised $140, and forwarded it to the young men's Bible society.

We have extended a lenity to the grog-sellers, which we extend to no other class of persons. If the clergyman has for many years maintained an excellent character, and acquired great influence in society, yet, if he does anything out of character, his name is trumpeted forth in the newspapers; but the rumseller is too sacred a character to be dealt with in this manner. If a man gets drunk and dies in a gutter, or kills himself by accident, the fact is mentioned, yet no one thinks of calling for the name of the man who sold him the liquor. And if any one has hardihood enough to publish his name, he is accused of persecution. We do not treat any other class of men with such lenity. If a physician is so careless as to give a vial of laudanum for paregoric, and the child is killed by it, the public must know his name, and the fact will crush him. By pursuing the same course, we should drive out three-fourths of the trade. The respectable portion of rum-sellers—the aristocracy of the trade will leave it, when it comes to this—they can't stand it.

Professor Goodrich, of New Haven, offered a resolution, declaring that the smiles of Heaven upon the Temperance reformation in Foreign lands, call for the liveliest expression of gratitude from the friends of the cause.

Rev. Mr. Scott, of Stockholm, made some interesting remarks relative to the cause of Temperance in Sweden. But little had been accomplished, until Rev. Mr. Baird visited that country. But now, very many of the influential and intelligent, with a great multitude of the peasantry, were the fast friends of Total Abstinence.

The following resolution, offered by Mr. John Tappan, was accompanied with some deeply affecting remarks on the miseries and degradation of the drunkard:

Resolved, That the poor unfortunate drunkard has claims to our deepest sympathy, and that the sudden reformation and deliverance from their chains of bondage of some thousands of their class in our land, shows that the Lord is very pitiful and of great mercy, and is a token that he designs the entire deliverance of our land from the evils of intemperance.

Mr. John Hawkins, a reformed inebriate of Baltimore, took the stand and spoke with much feeling relative to the reformation and salvation of every drunkard.

THE AMERICAN S. S. UNION held its Anniversary in the Tabernacle. Addresses were made by Rev. Mr. Hutton, Rev. Prof. Hendrick spoke of the peculiar economy of S. School instruction, and urged with energy the absolute necessity of religious truth sown and rooted in our children and youth, in order to the government of our country.

Dr. Parker spoke of the wisdom of S. School instrumentality. The Teacher, said he, comes to his little congregation, and though his sphere may not be as wide, he has his flock more under his influence. He has not to reconcile contending brethren; to hush rising feuds; to attend the frequent funeral. He can go and give them the pure Gospel to drink, dipping it up from the limpid stream. God has always worked powerfully through calm and quiet agencies.—The infant Samuel turned all Israel to the Lord. David was the least and most obscure of all his father's house, when selected for the throne. The Sabbath school agency is one of the safest influences exerted upon the mind. It is one of the most continuous. It is next to that of parental instruction in its adaptation to bless the infant mind.

NEW YORK VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.—The Annual Meeting of this Institution was held on Monday evening, in Zion's Church, corner of Leonard and Church streets.—Rev. C. B. Ray in the chair.

The Rev. A. Harris, of Philadelphia, opened the meeting by prayer, after which an Abstract of the Report was read, by which it appears that the usefulness of this Committee is greatly increasing, and that the protection of the friendless slave, which was formerly afforded by rare instances of individual benevolence, under deepest secrecy, is now extended in almost all parts of the free States, and in the day-light of heaven—regardless of the frown of man.

Rev. Amos G. Beman, of New Haven, supported the following resolution, in an eloquent and spirit-stirring address:

Resolved, That the principles and object of the N. Y. Committee of Vigilance commend themselves to the efficient aid of all the friends of God and man.

It was seconded by Mr. Gillett, from Oberlin, who gave an account of the progress of the cause in that section of the States.

The following resolution was offered by Rev. Elon Galusha, of Perry, N. Y., and supported in his own happy and energetic style of eloquence:

Resolved, That the righteous principle contained in the law given to the Jews, in these words: "Thou shalt not deliver unto his master the servant that hath escaped from his master unto thee, he shall dwell with thee, even among you, in one of thy gates, in the place he shall choose, where it liketh him best, thou shalt not oppress him;" is the basis of the Committee of Vigilance, and we rejoice that this benevolent principle is rapidly spreading its benign influence through the land.

From the Abstract of the Report, it appears that one hundred and sixty-eight individuals have been relieved and protected during the past year, making the total number since the formation of the Institution, upwards of 1000. By the audited account of the Treasurer, there is a debt of $1150, which presses heavily on the Committee, and greatly retards its progress, notwithstanding the very rigid economy used in all their operations. This fact strongly appeals to the generous sympathy of the friends of human rights for their prompt and efficient aid.

An Agent wishes to know what commission we can allow for obtaining new subscribers. We therefore make the following Proposition.

Any person who will send us $10, in advance, for five new subscribers, shall receive the sixth copy gratis. We are also willing to allow those who have assisted us in obtaining subscribers, and in collecting and remitting monies, a reasonable compensation for their services.

FOREIGN NEWS.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE CALEDONIA.

The Caledonia arrived at Boston early on Wednesday morning with news to the fourth inst. The Liverpool dates are to the 4th.—the London to the 3d. The news from the continent unimportant,—from England, interesting. From China we have nothing later than was received by previous arrivals.

The PRESIDENT steamship, we regret to say is not heard from. It was in England generally believed that she must have foundered in the heavy gale soon after she left New-York, or been crushed by the ice on the Banks of Newfoundland. If she had put into any port in distress in all probability we should have heard of her ere this.

The settlement of the China difficulties, as positively announced by the American papers at the arrival of the steam-ship turns out, as was suggested at the time, to be a thing of very small reality. It will be seen Lord Ashburton enquired (April 29,) whether government had received information of any agreement or settlement with the Chinese.—Viscount Melbourne replied that the government were not in possesson of any official despatches on the subject.!

The Parliament was in session, and for some days previous to the leaving of the Caledonia, the House had been engaged in a warm discussion upon the Irish Registration Bill of the Ministers. In a vote on an amendment introduced by Lord Howwick, the Ministers were left in a minority of twenty one. And they were again defeated on the question of passing the second clause, embodying the principles of the bill, and left in a minority of eleven! In an article on this subject the Albion of May 3 says:

"The Ministers having, notwithstanding the double defeat which they have sustained, determined to remain in office, seem determined to signalize their ministy by several bold financial and economical measures. Lord John Russell announced, on Friday night, that they had made an alteration in the corn law, a Cabinet question and that they had resolved to substitute in the place of the present fluctuating scale, a moderate duty on the importation of foreign corn. This change will not satisfy extreme men on either side; it is, however, the only change which there is a rational hope of carrying, and it will, therefore, receive the support of moderate men. On the same occasion the Chancellor of the Excheques, in bringing forward his anxiously expected budget, announced two most important changes which he intended to propose. The first is, an alteration in the duties of foreign and colonial timber; and the second, an alteration in the imposts on colonial sugar. From these alterations, coupled with the alteration in the duties on corn, he expects to raise the amount of revenue which he wants to make the national income adequate to the national expenditure.

The Tory papers were filled with rejoicings over the defeat of the Ministry. The Ministerial papers, however, do not manifest any alarm, nor do they throw out any intimation of the intention of the Ministry to resign. The Globe (Ministerial) pronounces the exultation of the Tories premature and without good grounds. Lord John Russell was, however, evidently alarmed, and on the 29th inst. withdrew Lord Morpeth's bill by moving "that the chairman do leave the chair without reporting progress and asking leave to sit again." On the following day the Ministry made a new move, and one of the boldest ever made by any Ministry in England—no less than the ABOLITION OF THE CORN MONOPOLY.

The London Chronicle (radical) of the 3d instant, says:—

The sensation produced by the Government notice of Friday night on the Corn-laws is rapidly extending through the country. Every where it is the signal of excitement and determination. By the metropolists it will never be forgiven; and by the people it will never be forgotten. Ministers have fairly thrown themselves on the nation for support in the assertion of a great national right and interest. The response will soon be heard in a thunder. The untaxing of the people's bread is a prospect full in view; and the people will spring towards it like lions on their prey.

If Ministers be but adequately supported; we cannot but augur the happiest results. In their present position, no Parliamentary defeat can be sustained that will not be equivalent to a victory.—And we should like to see a list of those who would dare to take office on the express grounds of disfranchisement for Ireland, and perpetuity to the Bread-tax.

The British Queen arrived out on the 28th of April, with intelligence of the death of General Harrison.

DEATH OF PRESIDENT HARRISON.

The Americans in London, on the receipt of the news of the death of President Harrison, held a meeting at which Mr. Stevenson, our Minister presided, and Col. Thomas Aspinwall acted as Secretary.

The China Rupture.—A deputation from merchants connected with the China and India trade had an interview with Viscount Palmerston, in the course of the week, on the subject of the recent events in China. It would appear, that the deputation rested their complaints mainly upon two points, namely, the inadequacy of the indemnity proposed to be paid by the Chinese Government to this country, and the want of any sufficient security having been provided for the personal safety and independence of British residents in China, by the arrangements which Capt. Elliot was said to have entered with the Chinese Plenipotentiary. The answer of Viscount Palmerston, was, we hear to the effect, that as yet he was acquainted only with the principles agreed to between the Plenipotentiaries, namely, that the Emperor was to cede the British Crown a territorial possession in China; that an indemnity was to be paid to the British Government; and that the official intercourse between the two countries was, for the future, to be conducted on terms of perfect equality. As yet his Lordship knew nothing beyond the admission of these important principles; and as it was expressly stated that the details were to be the subject of further negotiation, it necessarily followed, that it was impossible for his lordship to come to any conclusive opinion as to the acts of the British Plenipotentiary, until in full possession of the details of the further negotiations so alluded to.

France.—The ministerial journals exult in the discovery which they assert leaves no doubt as to the fact that the letters imputed to the King by the French newspapers were infamous forgeries.

The Moniteur publishes the law granting the Minister of the Interior an extraordinary credit of 1,000,000 fr. for secret service purposes in 1841.—The same official journal announces that the King, on the occasion of the christening of the Count de Paris, had pardoned five hundred and fifty soldiers sentenced to various penalties by courtmartial, one hundred and fifty soldiers sentenced to various penalties by courtmartial, one hundred and fifty-six convicts, commuted penalties of twenty-eight, and remitted the accessory penalty of exposure in the pillory of three.

An English cutter fishing-boat encroaching upon the oyster bank off Binie, was fired upon by the French man-of-war on the station, and one of the English pillagers was killed.

The scarcity and high price of meat had been again the subject of discussion in the French Chamber of Peers. The arguments of the magnates tended to deprecate any introduction of foreign cattle. The remedy they preferred was to get the French farmer to raise a greater number of cattle on a given space of ground. Half of the agricultural districts of England is laid out for feeding and pasturage; but only one-fifth in France. France could only equal England in this respect when land became a commercial investment, and returned something like a profit analogous to other investments.

Mr. Humann, the Finance Minister, declared it would take twenty months to raise the 450 millions wanting for his loan. This loan swallows up all and much more than the disposable capital of the country. And where is more capital to come from in a country where the accumulation of wealth is impossible?—Farms and farmers are both disappearing daily.—Pasturage and green feeding must always be much more costly, much more difficult to produce in a climate so warm as three-fourths of France. And the division of property is fast superceding the ox-stall of the farmers by the pig-sty of the cottier.

"We fatten annually," said M. Cunin Gridaine, "313,000, we kill 483,000. We import but 30,000, owing to the high duty; the rest are lean oxen taken from the plough to be killed. Thus the number of oxen employed in agriculture and in breeding is yearly diminished." M. Cunin Gridaine's inference from this was, that the importation of oxen should not be admitted.

The Minister of Commerce admitted that in 1789, the Parisians consumed at the rate of 68 kilograms the individual each year. at present they consumed but 48, with eight of pigs' flesh. Though the population had doubled, still the consumption had diminished. The Minister might have added, that a very large proportion of the poorer inhabitants of Paris make soup, i. e., their whole substantial food, of horseflesh. In the midst of such facts, the Chamber of Peers proposes waiting more quietly till agriculture shall have become more a commercial speculation.

The Commerce states, the day before yesterday, the octroi officers at the Barriere du Combat, seized 2,000 kilogrammes of horse flesh bringing into Paris, and that the police are at this time actually engaged in searching all the restraints where two dinners under two francs a head are given, and where large quantities of bad meats are served up. The price of meat in Paris has never been known to be so high as at present.

Love and Death.—A law student in Paris, aged 20, finding his proposals of Marriage to a young beautiful Spaniard of 16, rejected by her parents, shot the young person through the heart, and then blew out his own brains.

King Louis Phillippe on occasion of the grand fete at the christening of the Court of Paris, extended a pardon to 187 criminals, sentenced by the tribunals. He also signed an ordinance for 404 creations or promotions in the Legion of Honor.

No fewer than 81,091 persons have signed the Manchester petition for the abolition of the corn laws.

The property destroyed by the late earthquake at Zante, is estimated at £300 000. The English Government have appropriated £4000 for the relief of the sufferers, to which sum the Queen has added £1000 out of her private funds.

Sir John Harvey has been appointed Governor of Newfoundland.

The United Service Gazette states that arrangements are now in progress for raising and organizing an additional number of veteran companies, for exclusive and permanent service in Canada, where they are to be employed upon garrison duty.

Attack of a Vessel by Malay Pirates.—The London Globe states that the whaling ship Pilot, which left London but seven or eight months ago, was attacked by Malay pirates, in the Straits of Timor, who surrounded the vessel with their prows. The ship was gallantly defended by the captain and crew; but they were overpowered by superior numbers and the savages boarded the ship, plundered it of all the provisions, and killed and wounded a majority of the crew. The captain, the first and second mates, and twenty-five seamen fell victims to the barbarity of the Malays. The third mate, the surgeon, and eight seamen escaped, and afterwards navigated the ship to Singapore. These are the only particulars given.

News of the Day.

The President.—We are frequently asked what was the number of persons on board the steamer President when she left New-York on the 11th of March. In all, there were on board when she sailed [illegible] persons—18 officers and crew belonging to the ship, and 28 passengers. It is painful to think that so many men, before their time, have been hurried into another world. The ship has undoubtedly gone. Every last faint, fond hope concerning her,

> ——like a receding sail,
> Flits into dimness, and the lonely gale.
> O'er vacant waters reigns.

The Commercial of last evening says there were two persons on board this unfortunate vessel whose names have not yet reached the public eye. In the published list, "Mr. Howell and friend" are named. That friend was Mrs. Howell, who was married to Mr. H. a few hours before the steamer left the port—the other was Robert Hamilton Dundas, of the British Navy, a promising young officer.

A Man Shot.—On Wednesday evening last, says the Louisville Journal of last week, about 9 o'clock, a young man named Andrew McGiven was shot through the right breast by an assassin, near the corner of Market and Seventh streets. A young man supposed to be the murderer, had been arrested, and it was thought that he had endeavored to murder McGiven under the apprehension that he was another. It was proved, in an examination that James Owens and Andrew McGiven are so much alike in general appearance as to be sometimes mistaken for each other. The charge against Dalton, the man arrested, is, that in seeking for Owens, with intent to kill him he mistook McGiven for Owens, and shot him. McGiven's wound, as described by the physician attending him, will, it is feared, prove mortal. The ball it is supposed, passed through the lobe of the right lung, and being spent on passing out under the right shoulder, was caught in the shirt w[illegible] trating it. A bullet-mould [illegible] Dalton's house, in which [illegible] N. Y. Express.

THE MARINER'S C[illegible] ted the Mariner's Co[illegible] question not often pu[illegible] answered.

A shepherd of Italy [illegible] nes, was the first to [illegible] of the loadstone—a min[illegible] larity to iron, from the [illegible] walking over a quarry, [illegible] of this adhering to the [illegible] sandals. In the year [illegible] a handicraftsman of Naples [illegible] that a piece of iron rubbed w[illegible] stone, and suspended on its centre of gravity, had the property of pointing to the north star, and he was the first to apply needles on centres for the purpose of navigation. John tried his needles at different places in Italy & moored a vessel in the Mediterranean, to ascertain whether his magnetic power was the same on water as on land. The name of magnet was given to the loadstone and to the needle. The division of the shipman's card was first made into four quarters, then into 16 and 32 points, and ultimately into 360. This gradation was progressive, and marked out upon a moveable disk. It was not until the middle of the last century that the needle and card were combined and hung on a common centre.

In the time of Columbus, nearly 200 years after the discovery of the magnetic needle by John de Gioja, the card was placed under the needle. It is worthy of remark, that this highly useful instrument, discovered, not invented through any scientific or theoretical deductions, should continue to puzzle and baffle the philosopher, in his attempts to discover the cause of its variation in different parts of the earth. To the Italians we are indebted for the compass and early enterprise in navigation, and to a Philadelphian for the discovery of the quadrant by Godfrey.—U. S. Gazette.

We learn from Col. Todd, that, on his way to his residence in this county last week, he, in performance of a sacred duty, called upon the venerable widow of our lamented deceased President. Whilst there, he was invited by that lady to a consultation with herself and her only remaining son as to the ultimate depository of the remains of her distinguished and beloved husband, the Great and Good President. It was determined, at this consultation, to remove the remains immediately to North Bend, to be deposited upon a beautiful and elevated natural mound, where the monument may be seen for several miles up and down the Ohio river. There, the traveller of distant ages will be refreshed by a visit to the tomb of the Warrior, who was never defeated; of the Patriot, who died poor; and of the Statesman, who, from the proud height of President, "fell like a star struck from its sphere, covered with glory and renown."—[illegible]

Preservation of Meat.—At the last meeting of the Academy of Sciences, M. Gannal presented an important essay, which is likely to produce considerable sensation amongst the public, as well as in the scientific world. M. Gannal has been for many years occupied with the idea of preserving meat by injection. Thus, 4lb. weight of [illegible] injected into the caroted artery of an ox, penetrates all the vessels, and prevents a putrid decomposition. M. Gannal exhibited legs of mutton preserved two years since by this plan, and which were found to be perfectly sweet. M. Gannal employs for this purpose the muriate of alum. This discovery is considered as valuable in the preservation of provisions for the navy.—Times.

Many persons are alarmed at the appearance, during night, of what they believe to be stars hurled through the heavens with a velocity inconceivable. These meteoric lights are merely collections of inflammable air, which ignite within our own atmosphere, and but a few miles above the earth, and are not, as some suppose, bodies among the stars.

From the N. Y. Com. Advertiser.

CASE OF ALEXANDER McLEOD.

At the opening of the Court this morning Mr. Bradley, one of the counsel for the prisoner, proceeded to read his affidavit in support of the motion for his discharge.

It sets forth the occupation of Navy Island by a large body of men in arms against the authority of Great Britian in Upper Canada, which, it says, was composed in part of citizens of the United States; that their object was to effect a revolution in that province; that a British force of some 2,500 men were assembled at Chippewa, on the British side, to oppose the insurgents; that this force was commanded by Col. McNab, who was duly authorized to that end by the provincial government; that the steamboat Caroline was employed in conveying stores, ammunition, cannon, &c. to the force assembled on Navy Island; that by order of Col. McNab an expedition for the destruction or capture of that boat waa got up and carried into effect; that in the capture and destruction of the boat, Amos Durfee, for whose murder the prisoner is indicted, was killed, and not at any other time or in any other manner; that the act of taking and destroying the boat was subsequently approved and adopted by the British Government; that the Government of the United States had opened a diplomatic correspondence with the British Government in relation to that act, in which reparation and redress therefore were demanded, and which correspondence is not yet closed; and finally that he, the prisoner, was not present at, or engaged in the said attack upon the Caroline, or in the capture and destruction thereof.

Annexed to the affidavit is a certified copy of the credentials of Mr. Fox, as Minister of Great Britain to the Government of the [illegible]ited States, and a certified extract from [illegible] of Mr. Fox to Mr. Webster, dated [illegible] of March, 1841, of which more [illegible]

[illegible]avit refers to, and adopts as [illegible] a mass of public documents [illegible] in different messages by the [illegible] the United States to Congress, [illegible] the "patriot" outbreak, which [illegible] Mr. Bradley, and the princi[illegible] were the following:

[illegible] Mr. Scott to Mr. Fillmore, [illegible] 1837.

[illegible] Mayor of Buffalo to the Presi[illegible] United States, dated Dec. 14, [illegible] Mr. Baker, the Collector, to Mr. [illegible] the United States District Attorney, [illegible] 15.

From Mr. Benton to the President, Dec. 23.

Mr. Benton to Mr. Forsyth, Dec. 26.

Mr. Garrow, the Marshal, to Mr. Benton, Dec 21.

Mr. Garrow to the President, Dec. 28.
Mr. Fox to Mr. Forsyth, Jan. 4, 1838.
Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Fox, Jan. 5, 1838.
Mr. Fox to Mr. Forsyth, Feb. 6, 1838.
Mr. Stevenson to Mr. Forsyth, dated London, May 24, 1838.
Mr. Fox to Mr. Forsyth, Dec. 13, 1840.
Mr. Forsyth's reply.
And lastly, Mr. Fox to Mr. Webster, March 12, 1841.

The first eight of the letters above enumerated contained accounts of the excitement on the frontier, the various proceedings at Buffalo and other places, the organization of armed bodies, the seizure of cannon and other weapons in the arsenals, &c.—the occupation of Navy Island, &c. &c., with all of which our readers are familiar.

The letter from Mr. Forsyth to Mr. Fox, of January 5, is the one communicating the destruction of the Caroline, with the evidence relating thereto, and notifying Mr. Fox that a demand for redress would be made upon the Government of Great Britain by that of the United States.

The letter of Mr. Fox, dated February 6, enclosed a despatch from Sir Francis Head, then Governor of Upper Canada, with depositions then relating to the Caroline affair, and justifying the act on the ground that the laws of the United States and of the State of New York were not and could not be enforced—that the territory of Canada had been invaded from New York, &c.; that on the 28th of December information had been conveyed to Col. McNab, that the Caroline was taken into the service of the invaders, in consequence whereof he resolved to destroy her should she come to Navy Island; that she did come and was accordingly destroyed, &c., by order of Col. McNab, he being duly authorized, &c.

The letter of Mr. Benton to Mr. Forsyth, dated February 6, describes the occupation of Schlosser as a place of landing and embarkation of stores, ammunition, &c., conveyed to the insurgents on Navy Island; and states that the attack upon the Caroline was ordered by Col. McNab and led on by Captain Drew.

The despatch from Mr. Stevenson, of May 24th, 1838, inclosed a copy of his note to Lord Palmerston, denying the piratical character of the Caroline, characterizing her destruction as an outrage upon the United States, an act of undisguised hostility, and demanding redress and reparation as well for that as for the murder of Durfee.

The letters of Mr. Fox and Mr. Forsyth, of December 13, 1840, are those well known epistles in which on the one hand the immediate release of McLeod was demanded on the ground that the act for which he was arrested was a public act, duly authorized by the proper authorities, and on the other, the avowal of that act by the British Government was declared not to have been before made by any person authorized to make such avowal.

The note from Mr. Fox to Mr. Webster, of which a copy was attached to the affidavit, renews the demand and the avowal, in the most explicit terms; declaring that the attack upon the Caroline was a public act, planned and executed by persons duly authorized by the provincial authorities to take any steps and do any act necessary for the defense of the province, &c.

After the reading of these documents the District Attorney of Niagara read the demurrer interposed on behalf of the people.

It raises five points, to wit:—

1. Because it appears by the return of the Sheriff that the prisoner is detained on an indictment for murder, to which he has pleaded not guilty, and this Court cannot investigate the truth of such indictment or of the plea thereto.

2. Because the allegations of the prisoner do not apply to the question of his liability to arrest, but exclusively to the question of his guilt or innocence, which is not now before the Court.

3. Because the attack on the Caroline—a boat owned by a citizen of the United States, unconnected with the insurgents, navigating with a license from the Government of the United States, and engaged in lawful business, was made while she was moored at Schlosser, in the State of New York, and without the jurisdiction of Upper Canada or the authorities thereof.

4. Because neither the Government of Upper Canada, nor Col. McNab had any authority to send men into this State, and all acting under their orders are individually.

5. Because Amos Durfee, for whose murder the prisoner is indicted, was a peaceable citizen, and had not offended against the laws of the United States, or of this State; and was killed on the main land, after he had left the boat, was flying for his life and making no resistance; so that his killing was not essential to the safety of the province, or the fulfilment of the object aimed at by the expedition.

After the reading of the demurrer, Mr. Hall, the Attorney General, rose and suggested to the Court his desire to confine the argument to the single question of law, whether the Court could, or could not, in this stage of the case, undertake to examine and decide upon the whole merits of the case. He wished only to go into the authority of the Court—what might be called the preliminary question, as raised by the first point of the demurrer.

A long discussion ensued, Mr. Spencer claiming to go into all the questions which might arise, and especially the great national question on which the case must eventually turn, and Mr. Hall objecting.

The Court objected to a succession of hearings, and wished the whole matter to be argued at once.

Mr. Hall said it might become necessary to produce depositions in answer to the alleged facts set forth by the prisoner, and it might become a serious question whether the testimony produced before the grand jury could be produced and thus made public.

The Court told him that he must act upon his own discretion and responsibility as to that.

Finally, Mr. Hall avowing that he was not now prepared to go into the whole argument, and wishing to consult his associate, the District Attorney of Niagara, the case was adjourned over until to-morrow morning.

From the Auburn Journal.

Exemption of Household Furniture.—The bill introduced by Mr. Sibley, in the State Senate, for exempting household furniture to the amount of $150 from execution for debt, although treated somewhat harshly by certain members of that body, appears to be received with almost universal favor by the press, as we doubt not it is by the people of every section of the State. So far as we have seen or heard, but one paper has raised a voice against its passage—the N. Y. American; and the objection of that paper is, that the amount to be exempted is placed too high—that the whole furniture of hundreds and thousands of families will not at present reach the sum named; and that this very law, by protecting useless articles of furniture, will lead rather to extravagance and improvidence, (and thus tend to injure the truly poor and honest man.) than to any real benefit to the class whose condition is sought to be improved. It is possible that by way of trial a somewhat smaller sum might with equal propriety be named—but for ourselves we have no fear of the effect of the bill as it stands. For it will be remembered that nearly the same arguments were formerly urged against the abolishment of imprisonment for debt—with how much truth the result has shown.

Whatever secures to the poor and honest man an appropriate share of the common comforts of life—whatever leads him to look upon his household as his home, and to feel that there he may be secure in the peaceable possession of such articles as are necessary for his own peace, as well as for the peace and enjoyment of those who look up to him for succor and protection; in fine, whatever enables him to feel that he is a citizen, and entitled as any other citizen to the care and protection of the laws, is worthy of adoption, and if adopted may well be set down as forming one of the brightest pages of the statute book. Teach men that it is in their power to render their homes agreeable and pleasant, and we have not yet so poor an opinion of our race as to believe that you do not thereby make the first grand step towards their elevation.

From the Newburyport Herald.

The Fisheries.—The Mackerel fishery has been for several years so unsuccessful, that it will probably be abandoned, in a great measure, before long. The entire catch of Massachusetts last year was only 50,000 bbls. having been gradually diminished since 1831, when it was 383,000 bbls. In Portland where 15,000 bbls. have been packed in a single season, there were but about 500 bbls. packed last year.

The cod fishery is so uncertain both from scarcity of fish and low prices, that unless they had the bounty to rely upon, it would be abandoned as the vessels now in existence would wear out or be lost. The French and English pay a much higher bounty to their fishermen, than the United States does, and hence, the fish of those nations is sold in the markets at lower prices than the American fisherman is able to compete with. The cost of carrying on the cod fishery, is found to average about $100 a season for leads, lines, nets, knives, salt and provisions, to each man employed.

It is estimated that a vessel in the cod fishing will take on an average, seven quintals of fish, when dried and fit for market, per ton; and will use nine bushels of salt, per ton, on an average. Large vessels will use more and small ones less. The earnings of a man for a season, will average from $50 to 75 clear of expenses of living.

A Yankee Admiral.—It is stated in a New Hampshire paper that a former citizen of that State, Thomas F. Williams, has become an Admiral, Count Zenzechoff, in the Russian Navy.

It seems that he was in early youth a clerk in a store in Meredith Bridge. Being naturally of a generous, bold and ardent temperament, no sooner had he served out his time than he went to visit a relative in Portland for the purpose of seeing a ship, and if possible of obtaining employment in one. He at length succeeded; after one or two voyages he was taken dangerously ill at St. Petersburgh, and upon his recovery, through the aid of the American Consul, obtained a berth on board of a Russian merchant vessel, as a privileged seaman. After a prosperous voyage, on their return home the vessel was attacked by a piratical corsair;—owing to the bravery and skill of Williams, the pirates were beaten off and the vessel arrived at her destined port in safety. The Emperor Alexander hearing of this brilliant exploit, was so much pleased with the bravery and good conduct of Williams, as to send for him to visit his palace; the result of this interview was his appointment as senior Midshipman in the Russian Navy. From this he has risen to his present rank. He has been married for some years to a beautiful and accomplished Russian lady.

The steamship Britannia sailed from Boston on Sunday, with 77 passengers for Liverpool, and 4 for Halifax—all she could take. Applications from 30 more were from necessity refused.

Anti-Slavery Nominations.—A Convention of the 'Liberty party' was held in this City on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week, by which JAMES G. BIRNEY of New York was nominated as President of the United States, and THOMAS MORRIS of Ohio (formerly U. S. Senator,) for Vice President.—New Yorker.

Kidnapping.—The Wilmington (Del.) Journal says:—Jacob K. Griffin, lately tried before the Court at Dover, was convicted of kidnapping, and sentenced to four years imprisonment, a fine of 1500 dollars, and to have sixty lashes on the bare back. We learn that he is to be tried at New Castle on a similar charge.

Sudden Death.—On Friday afternoon last, Mr. James Burke, of Cleveland, Oswego, and brother of the junior partner of the firm of Leupp & Burke, New York, arrived in the cars from Albany, and immediately called at the store of Mr. E. M. Gilbert, with whom he had business to transact. While sitting in the store, he was attacked with coughing, ruptured a blood vessel, and died in about fifteen minutes. Two or three physicians were in attendance as soon as they could be found, and every possible assistance rendered that the case would admit of, but without avail. His brother arrived in the succeeding train of cars and conveyed his remains to his family. The deceased was aged 29 years,—and has left a wife and two children to mourn his sudden death.—Oneida Whig.

Suicide.—Miss Whitacar, about 18 years of age, committed suicide in Bridgewater on Sunday week, by hanging herself. It appears that a young man by the name of Benjamin had for some months been paying his addresses to Miss Whitacar, and that they were to have been married on the Thursday following her death; but Benjamin suddenly changed his mind and left her.

She took it much to heart, and on Sunday evening after she had declared her intention of destroying herself, went a short distance from the dwelling of Mr. Seager, in whose family she resided, and suspended herself from the limb of a tree with a silk handkerchief. She was a girl of good character, and her death can only be attributed to the desertion of a heartless fellow, which she should have rejoiced at rather than lamented. May he receive his reward.—Oneida Whig.

"Old Genesee."—This enlightened, patriotic and fertile County has been sundered! The bill dividing her centrally passed the Senate to-day. The new County takes the name of Wyoming. This question has been one of considerable solicitude. Appreciating, as they should, the claims of such a People, the Legislature has been much embarrassed in its action upon this bill. With the best intentions, Legislators as well as individuals, sometimes err. We hope they have not done so in this case. Genesee, as she was, has had a briliant career. May her destiny, and that of her daughter Wyoming, as they are, be not the less glorious.—Eve. Jour. May 18.

Death of a Member of Congress.—We announce with pain the death of Hon. Charles Ogle, M. C. from the Bedford District, Pa. He died at his residence, Somerset, Pa., on the 10th, of a consumption which has preyed upon him for many months past. His death leaves a vacancy in the new House, which can hardly be filled in season for the meeting of Congress.—New Yorker.

Mitchell the Forger.—This worthy is now in prison at the Hall of Justice, preparatory to his trial.

The Courier gives the following particulars of his escape:—

It appears that on his flight from this city he went to Philadelphia, where, after having procured a ticket at the Pittsburgh Railroad office, (for the purpose of misleading any who might be in pursuit,) he disguised himself in a suit of grey clothes, a broad brim hat with crape band, in which dress and green spectacles, and with a carpenter's rule in his hand, for four days openly walked the streets of that city, frequently meeting persons with whom he was well acquainted. He left Philadelphia for New York in the cars, and went up the river in the steamboat Utica; being all the while in company with persons whom he knew, but none of whom detected him through his disguise.

An incident occurred at Troy, which shows the constant apprehension of discovery under which he must have been laboring, while purchasing a stage ticket at that place, a person standing behind him, read aloud from a newspaper a paragraph, headed "Mitchell the Forger," upon which the guilty man turned suddenly around, under the conviction that he was discovered, but finding that such was not the case, he merely said he knew him, and believed him to be a great rascal.

From Texas.—By the arrival of the steamer Neptune, dates have been received at New Orleans from Galveston up to the 2d inst. The Austin papers state that a skirmish took place near Lorado, on the 8th of April, between a company of Texian spies, under Capt. John C. Hays, and a marauding company of Mexicans, which resulted in the total defeat of the latter.—The Mexicans were about forty in number, of whom three were killed, a number wounded, and twenty-five taken prisoners. Most of the horses, arms, &c. were also taken. The spies consisted of 12 Americans and 13 Mexicans, none of whom received any injury.

Return Home of the Mediterranean Squadron.—The city was quite surprised a few days since by the unexpected return of the U. S. squadron of vessels of war from the Mediterranean, which were not expected for years yet. The cause of this movement, by which the immense commerce of the United States in that quarter has been left entirely unprotected, was, it is said, a letter received at that station from the American minister at London, which stated that, as the result of the feeling produced by the Pickens' Report, a war would take place between Great Britain and this country, in which event, it would be entirely unsafe for the squadron to attempt to remain.

The National Intelligence says that the frigate Brandywine, is to return forthwith to the Mediterranean. The residue of the Squadron, it is possible, if not probable, has received such information, after the Brandywine parted company with it, as to induce it to return to the Mediterranean station.

State Prison Labor.—Gov. Seward has recently transmitted to the Legislature, a message concerning the mechanical labor performed in the State Prison. It was accompanied with a letter from Henry Polhemus, the agent of the Auburn Prison, in which he states that successful experiments have been made in the cultivation of silk, and that in a short time a large portion of the convicts' labor may be devoted to that business, and thus be taken from those articles whose manufacture interferes with the mechanics. He has also begun the manufacture of the Danube steel, an article which is now wholly imported. These things, if successful, will remove the difficulties long felt and loudly complained of.

Slavers Captured.—A letter received here yesterday, from H. Carroll, Esq., U. S. Consul at St. Helena, dated March 26th, 1841, states that five Portuguese slavers had just been brought in at St. Helena, having been captured on the West Coast of Africa, by the British naval force on that station, with upwards of one thousand slaves on board. The slaves had been landed at St. Helena, and remained of course subject to the orders of the British government.

Fire at Toronto, U. C.—This city was visited on the night of the 7th, by the most destructive fire ever known there. It broke out in a steam engine foundry owned by Mr. Andrus. The flames spread rapidly, and the whole block between King and Newgate streets were destroyed. Upwards of twenty-five dwellings, besides several business offices, were burned. The printing office of the 'Globe' was among them. The amount of the loss is not stated.

Newfoundland Seal Fishery.—The Newfoundlander of the 22d ult. gives the following information concerning the seal fishery of that island. It is supposed that not more than two-thirds of the vessels have yet returned, consequently, whether the trade has been prosperous or not, cannot be estimated.

Number of seals brought into St. John's,	37,609
Number of ditto. in the outports,	67,119
Total,	101,728

The Revival in Hartford.—The Congregational Observer states the following to be the number admitted to the various churches last Sabbath, as the result of the recent revival:—To the Centre church by profession, 95; by letter, 9—at the last communion, about 10. To the South church, 25. To the North church, by profession, 57; by letter, 2. To the Fourth church, by profession, 77; by letter, 16—at the last communion, 81. Colored Congregational church, at two communions, about 50. Total to the Congregational churches, 425. To the North Baptist church, by profession and letter, 195. To the South Baptist church, by profession and letter, 130. Total to the Baptist churches, 325. To the Methodist church, about 100. To the colored Methodist, about 40. Total, to the Methodist, 140. Total number in the city, 890.

Important Decision on Slavery.—The Supreme Court of Ohio, sitting at Lebanon, Warren county, Judges Lane and Hitchcock on the Bench. Judge Lane delivered the opinion of the Court—

That if the owner of a slave voluntarily bring him into this State, or permit him to come, although it should be only for the purpose of visiting or traveling through from one slave state to another, the slave in such case becomes a free man the moment he touches the soil of Ohio.

A Model Republic.—Gov Ellsworth, in his recent address before the Connecticut Legislature, has the following remarks:—Connecticut presents a republic which secures more good and avoids more evil than any other politic community of ancient or modern times. All the public statutes, after two hundred years' legislation, are contained in a single volume; the annual expenses do not exceed $80,000; the State owes nothing, possesses a school fund of more than $2,000,000 well invested, yielding an annual income of $113,000, is without disbursements or superintendence of public works, employs but few offices, and yet enjoys the security of law and the administration of justice as economically as any other State in the Union. The militia consists of 40,000 men. The Governor advocates the extension of the law abolishing imprisonment for debt to persons not living in the State.

Rules at Washington.—The Maine Temperance Gazette states that on the authority of a letter from Washington, that the following pledges are required of every clerk under the new administration, viz:

1. That he will be a total abstinence man, never tasting of any ardent spirits, wine, or other intoxicating drinks.

2. That he will never gamble, or play at chance games.

3. That he will keep none but steady and respectable society.

4. That he will always keep the Sabbath strictly, and attend public worship. And that he will be steady, industrious, and persevering.

Black Spot on the Sun.—A black spot upon the sun's disk, larger than a star of the first magnitude, is plainly visible to the naked eye, by looking through a piece of smoked glass. It is upon the western or northwestern side, about one quarter of the distance from the centre to the periphery, and must be several thousand miles in diameter.—It is to be hoped that some of our astronomers will watch its course and progress, and thereby learn the period of the sun's revolution on its axis, and the inclination of its axis to tlain of the earth's orbit. that this phenomenon may have an influence upon the temperature of the atmosphere, is not improbable when we compare the season thus far with the cold summer of 1816, when a similar phenomenon was observed. The abstraction of a column of rays of a few thousand miles in diameter for the space of six or eight months only will certainly be no mean fraction to our ordinary supply.—Express.

Notices.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the Stockholders of De Ruyter Institute will be held on Monday, the 21st day of June next, at 2 o'clock, P. M., at the Institute. At which time four Trustees are to be elected in the place of Alexander Campbell, Perry Burdick, Benjamin Enos, and Wm. Maxson, and to transact such other business as shall be deemed necessary.

N. B. Stockholders are entitled to vote by proxy.

B. G. STILLMAN, Sec'y.
De Ruyter, May 26th, 1841.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Central Association will hold its next annual session with the Church in Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the 2nd Sabbath in June next, at 10 o'clock. Introductory discourse by E. S. BAILEY, or S. B. CRANDALL alternate. A full delegation and punctual attendance is requested.

JAMES BAILEY, Sec'y.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Eastern Association are to meet on the fifth day before the fourth Sabbath in May next, at the S. D. B. Meeting-house in Salem, N. Jersey, at 10 o'clock, A. M., and an invitation is hereby given to the ministering brethren, and other brethren also, that can conveniently attend. I think it would add much to the meeting to have a number of our western and northern brethren to attend with us.

A. D. TITSWORTH, Cor. Sec.
Metuchen, April 18, 1841.

MARRIED,

In East Haddam, Ct., on the 14th inst., by the Rev. Isaac Parsons, Mr. JAMES M. LETTS, of this village, and Miss EUNICE, youngest daughter of the late Hon. Lemuel Daniels, of the former place.

DIED,

In the town of De Ruyter, on the 18th inst., after a lingering complaint, Mrs. PATTY DOAN, (widow,) in the 73 year of her age, much respected by all who was acquainted with her. Also, in the same place, an infant daughter of Abraham and Polly B. Pane, on the 23 inst., aged thirteen Mo.

'Death, like an overflowing stream,
Sweeps us away—our lives' a dream.'
COMM.

LIST OF LETTERS.

"A." (next week.) Paul Stillman, (you have our warmest sympathies. The alteration is "virtually" as well as "formally.") T. E. Babcock, 2. (we will write you.) A. Maxson, (it is done.) Jabez Chadwick, (next week.) E. S. Bailey.

LIST OF RECEIPTS.

Paul Stillman, $8, cr. Maxson Rogers, T B Stillman, Alfred Stillman, F W Stillman, $2 each, Vol. 2. A F Parker, $2, cr Joseph Flint. T E Babcock, $42, cr. S R Smith, Albert Smith, Elijah Lewis, George Maxson, Duty J Green, Rowland Saunders, Charles Maxson, Seely Monroe, Maxson Stillman, Isaiah W Greene, $2 each, Vol. 2. N C Williams, Silas Stillman, 2d, Jesse Tift, Felix Millard, $1 each, Vol. 2. Ray Green, Chas. Maxson, Silas Stillman, 2d, Paul Witter, Hiram Burdick, $2,25 each, Vol. 1. Jacob Crandall, $1, Vol. 1. B B Livermore, ,50 cents, Vol. 1. E S Bailey, $3, cr T H Green, $2, Vol. 1. E Parmerlee, $1, Vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

SHERIFFS SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Supreme Court of Judicature, of the State of New York, and to me delivered, I have levied upon the right, title and interest of Stephen G. Sears in and to a certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being, in the Village of De Ruyter, county of Madison, and bounded as follows: on the north by the turnpike road, on the east by lands owned by Noah B. Foote, on the south by lands owned, or in possession of, John Starr, on the west by lands owned by Marvin M. Hamilton, which I shall expose to sale at public Vendue, as the Law directs, at the house of Wm C. Gage, on Saturday, the 22d day of May next, at 1 o'clock, P. M.

Dated, De Ruyter, April 10, 1841. 59w6
ISAAC BROWN, SHERIFF.
By T. ORVILLE ELMORE, Deputy.

The sale of the above described piece of land is postponed to the 31st day of May, place and time as above. Dated, De Ruyter, May 22, 1841.
ISAAC BROWN, Sheriff.
By T. O. ELMORE, Deputy.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received.
No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.
De Ruyter, April 22, 1841.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

DE RUYTER, MAY 27, 1841.

ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, are receiving their supply of

Spring and Summer Goods,

Comprising an unusual variety, which they offer for Cash, Barter, or Approved Credit, on as favorable terms as can be purchased in this place. This place having been celebrated as the cheapest in the world, they think the above statement sufficiently comprehensive. Old and new customers are solicited to call and examine.

TO BUILDERS:

ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER are sole Agents in this place for the sale of Bliss' SASH AND WINDOW BLINDS, at Factory prices. Other sizes Sash and Blinds procured to order.

They have also on hand;
Pine Lumber and Shingles;
30 Kegs Swedes Iron Nails.
60 Boxes Window Glass, 7X9 to 12X18,
A large stock of Building Hardware,
Paints, Oil, Putty, &c.

10,000 Tin Pans,

Together with a large assortment of Tin Ware, at wholesale or retail, at as low prices as can be purchased in the State. Also,

Stoves, Pipe and Furniture,

For sale by ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER.
May 27.

Physicians and Families

Will find an extensive assortment of Medicines of the best quality, and at the lowest prices at the STONE STORE.
May 27.

Elmore, Annas & Ayer,

Are Agents for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines.

Winslow's Balsam of Horehound.

For particular recommendations of the above article; please refer to the advertisement of the Sole Ag't.

Rev. J. Covert's Balm of Life,
Moffat's Life Pills & Phœnix Bitters,
Dr. Phinney's Family Pills,
Dr. Phelp's Compound Tomato Pills,
Miles' Compound Extract of Tomato Pi

With others too numerous to mention.
May 27. 65tf

LOOK TO YOUR INTEREST!

EXAMINE & BE CONVINCED!

S. D. DELLAY,

IS now opening his Spring Stock of Goods, among which may be found,

8,000 yds.	Callicoes,	from 4	to 25 cts.	per yd.
6,000 "	Sheeting,	" 7	" 12 1-2	"
1,000 "	Ticking,	" 12 1-2	" 25	"
1,000 "	French Mull,	" 20	" 50	"

Together with cords and piles of other Plain, Domestic and Fancy GOODS, consisting of too great a variety to be enumerated in a paper advertisement, which have been purchased for Cash at the present low state of the Market, and which he proposes

SELLING LOWER

than they can be bought elsewhere in Town, County, or State! He has also a complete assortment of Millinery Goods, such as

Leghorn, Straw, Silk, & Lawn Bonnets,

with every possible variety of Trimming. He would say to PHYSICIANS, that he has the largest and best selected assortment of MEDICINES ever before offered in this County, which he pledges himself to sell from 25 to 50 per cent Cheaper than they have ever before been offered.

TO FAMILIES.—He would likewise call the attention of Families to a choice selection of GROCERIES, which he will sell as LOW or LOWER than they can be bought elsewhere—HAMILTON not excepted. Also, Crockery, Hardware, &c. &c.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,
Too well known to need comment.

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s

MOTHER'S RELIEF.

A Pamphlet describing the merits of this highly popular and beneficial Medicine, will be given any one wishing to become acquainted with its qualities. The uniform success of this Medicine has rendered it the "Ne Plus Ultra" of the day. Medical gentlemen have had to acknowledge its benefits and yield to its sway.

DR. WATERMAN'S

RHEUMATIC AND STRENGTHENING PLASTER.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbants to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases; such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, and several other vegetable substances. Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,

10,000 Bags,
10,000 pr. Socks,
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey,

☞For which the highest price will be paid. ☜
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63y1

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
GEO. W. SUTTON.
De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

POETRY.

BAPTISM.

BY LYDIA H. SIGOURNEY.

'Twas the close of that blest day,
When with melodious swell,
To crowded mart and lonely vale,
Had spoke the Sabbath bell;
And on the broad, unruffled stream,
With bordering verdure bright,
The western sunbeam richly shed
A tinge of crimson light.

When lo! a solemn train appeared,
By their lov'd pastor led,
And sweetly rose the holy hymn,
As toward that stream they sped,
And he its cleaving, crystal breast,
With graceful movement trod,
His steadfast eye upraised, to seek
Communion with its God.

Then bending o'er his staff approached
That willow fringed shore,
A man of many weary years,
With furrowed temples hoar,
And faintly breathed his trembling lip—
"Behold, I fain would be Buried in baptism with my Lord
Ere death shall summon me."

With brow benign, like Him whose hand
Did wavering Peter guide,
The pastor bore his tottering frame
Through that translucent tide,
And plunged him 'neath the shrouding wave
And spoke the Triune name,
And joy upon that withered face,
In wondering radiance came.

And then advanced a lordly form,
In manhood's towering pride,
Who from the gilded snares of earth
Had wisely turned aside,
And following in his steps, who bowed
To Jordan's startling wave,
In deep humility of soul,
Faithful this witness gave.

Who next? A fair and fragile form,
In snowy robe doth move,
That tender beauty in her eye
That wakes the vow of love—
Yea; come, thou gentle one, and arm
Thy soul with strength divine,
This stern world hath a thousand darts
To vex a breast like thine.

Beneath its smiles a traitor's kiss
Is oft in darkness bound—
Cling to that comforter, who holds
A balm for every wound;
Propitiate that Protector's care,
Who never will forsake,
And thou shalt strike the harp of praise,
Ev'n when thy heart-strings break.

Then with a firm unshrinking step,
The watery path she trod,
And gave, with woman's deathless trust
Her being to her God;
And when all dripping from the flood
She rose, like lily stem,
Methought that spotless brow might wear
An angel's diadem.

Yet more—yet more! How meek they bow
To their Redeemer's rite,
Then pass with music on their way,
Like joyous sons of light;
Yet lingering on those shores I staid,
Till every sound was hushed,
For hallowed musings o'er my soul,
Like spring-swollen rivers rushed.

'Tis better, said the voice within,
To bear a Christian's cross,
Than sell this fleeting life for gold,
Which Death shall prove but dross,
Far better, when yon shrivelled skies
Are like a banner furled,
To share in Christ's reproach, than gain
The glory of the world.

Miscellaneous Department.

From the Bridgeton Chronicle.

TIGHT WAISTS AND FASHION-PLATES.

The following is from the Hannibal (Mo.) Monitor, one of the ablest and most independent papers in the State: It is well known that among the higher classes in England, since the marriage of Her Blessed majesty Queen Victoria, small waists are considered decidedly vulgar.

"The reform, thus introduced by fashion, will be of incalculable benefit to mankind. Not only the present but unborn generations will have cause to be thankful for the abolishment of the inhuman and ridiculous practice of squeezing the beautiful human form out of its fair proportions.

"We fear, however, that the reform which has taken place in England, will be slow in extending its benefits to us, owing, in a great measure, to the injudicious course pursued by the American periodicals, which pretend to give plates and descriptions of the fashions. Among these we will name the Lady's Book, as we believe it has a larger circulation than any other work of the same kind in the country. Let any one examine the picture of the fashions which each number contains, and we will see that the publishers, instead of trying to improve the public taste, are merely catering for the vitiated taste which now prevails. The figures are drawn with the same forms they had some ten years ago. The heads, necks, arms and hands are tolerably well; but then such shoulders, waists and——skirts! (we believe they call them.) The shoulders are broader than a drayman's; the waists like those of wasps, and the skirts expanded to the dimensions of balloons. The whole figure resembles much a fodder stack with a great mushroom sticking out of the top of it. Nature never made and endowed with reason such things as these. They are the fanciful creation of some French milliner!

"These ridiculous pictures are not so harmless as many suppose. They give to the youthful mind a false idea of beauty, and beget a constant desire to compress and bend the form to match with what is considered the fashionable standard.

"The reform of this great evil, arising from prevailing false notions of the beauty of the human figure, is easy, although physicians and even divines have labored in vain to effect it.—Let the Lady's Book, and all similar publications, represent small waists as unfashionable and vulgar, and give to their drawings of human figures in the plates of fashion the beautiful and full proportions of nature, instead of the contemptible caricatures they now contain, and, our word for it, in a few months a small waist will be as rare as political honesty; provided that the waists now held "in durance vile" have the power (and we are somewhat doubtful on this point) to regain their symmetry."

THE MIDNIGHT STARS.

Is the moonlight gifted with a fairy power? Do the stars fling over us a spell which our hearts acknowledge, though they comprehend it not? Hath the hearts an inner realm of finer, more etherial philosophy, of which they are the arbiters, and which our grosser senses may not investigate?—Or why is it that Hope, Love, Poesy, Memory—all the divinities of our nature, even replenish their consecrated chalices at astral founts, and keep their ordinances, and hold their festivals in moonlight temples and pavilions? It is beneath the stars that Hope creates her fairy world, as lovely and as intactible as their own rays, and sits listening to the syren melodies that float from the harps of the angels with which she has peopled it. It is beneath them that Love bends at the shrine of its canonized, counting the pearls of its beautiful rosary—or weeping over them, crushed and soiled beneath its Jugernathian car! When like silver vials, distilling beauty, they shed their light over the silent stream and shadowy forest—when the many of those, who, in this vast chain of the created may alone claim alliance to the Creator, have folded the mantle of forgetfulness about them, burying themselves in "dumb oblivion" they utter in a "still small voice" the "open sesame" to the realms of Poesy, and she draws from the haunted wells of her treasury, the gems at whose heart burneth the light of another and holier sphere! And it is beneath their light that the white-robed phantoms of other years arise and walk the waters of the soul! that the rich tissue which our youth hath woven of sunny dreams, and rose-tinged images, starts forth in a palpable, but softened relief far in the perspective of the sombre web of life. We meet the gentle eye, over which the dust was long since shed—the lute-like tones of lips where pale silence long since set his seal, afloat again on the ear, and we weep with vain yearnings for the chrystal water and golden clusters with which the Tantalus of our memory sits mocking us!

And the stars have their own memories! Ay! memories burning deep with fire from off the altar of the Most High! From that hour, when at the great command, "Let there be light!" kindling with the magnificence of Omnipotent thought, they rose on purple midnight of Time, around them having clustered the holiest legends of immortal love. With their first morning rays lightning the loveliness of a world fresh from the hand of Jehovah, they broke the deep stillness with the first chorus of praise, "singing together" in concert with all "the sons of God," shouting for joy!" Awestruck before them, men, bowed down in adoration, due only to Him, of whose glory even they were but shadows, "worshiping all the hosts of heaven"—and the poor Chaldean dreamed from their mystic revealings, to draw the golden thread by which to unwind the mazes of human destiny.

LECTURES.—They gratify the social feeling, and are well adapted to elevate and refine it. The mere assembling together of people of both sexes, and of various conditions, for a common purpose, is a benefit.—It tends to check the selfishness of our nature; to allay the ambitious passions; to obliterate, for the time, at least, the distinctions which separate the community into classes; to remind us of our common origin, our equal rights, our personal duties.—When the purpose of the assembly is to promote the intellectual and culture of its members, these tendencies are not only increased in power, but hallowed in their influence. They awaken sentiments of a pure and exalted character—sentiments of brotherhood and of a noble emulation.—How important to any community are the measures which will impart such feelings! How exceedingly important to Americans! One of the conditions on which we hold our invaluable political privileges, is, that in exercising their rights and discharging their duties, as electors, our people are unavoidably divided into parties. Party spirit, as a necessary consequence, exists among us at all times, and not unfrequently in its most aggravated form. Its tendency to agitate and distract society; to divide it into hostile factions; to array neighbors against neighbors; and sometimes members of the same household against each other; to banish justice and benevolence from the intercourse of men; and to turn the very blessings we enjoy, into elements of evil; has been often lamented by patriots and philanthropists.—How shall this tendency be restrained, and mitigated? Next to the kindly influences of Christian worship, and of associations for benevolent purposes, there is nothing better calculated to promote so desirable an end, than the frequent convocation of the people of all sects and parties religious and political, for the acquisition and diffusion of useful knowledge.

Never despise a man because his employment is mean, or his clothing bad. The bee is an insect not very pleasing to the sight, yet its hive affords an abundanse of honey.

ceeded to represent some of the obstacles that are yet to be overcome, before it will hel

N. Y. INSTITUTION FOR THE BLIND.—A law has passed the Legislature of this State appropriating for the necessary out-houses, offices and wells, and erecting fences for the division of yards, and around the premises, the sum of five thousand dollars; and for the erection and completion of a wing to the main building of said institution, five thousand dollars. The agent of the State Prison at Mount Pleasant is directed to deliver at the prison, to the order of the managers of the said institution, or of any committee duly authorized by them, such rough and trimmed stone as shall be required by them, not exceeding five thousand dollars in value, at such prices as shall be reasonable.

The moneys appropriated will not be paid, nor the stone delivered until the managers of the institution shall produce to the Comptroller, satisfactory evidence that they have procured and deposited to their credit in some bank in the city of New York the sum of seven thousand dollars, to be applied to the erection and completion of the wing, and on such evidence being produced, the Comptroller shall give his certificate of the fact to the agent of the State Prison at Mount Pleasant, and shall draw his warrant on the treasurer for the moneys appropriated, in favor of the treasurer of said institution.—N. Y. Express.

Children's Department.

Written for the Youth's Cabinet.

JUVENILE TEMPERANCE CELEBRATION IN BOSTON.

BROTHER SOUTHARD,—I send you the following imperfect account of a meeting which deeply interested those who participated in it. Should you deem it worthy a place in your interesting juvenile paper, you are at liberty to insert it.

The Belknap Street Sabbath School agreed to have a Temperance Celebration on Fast-day, the 8th inst. An invitation to unite with us, was extended to the other colored Sabbath Schools in the city. At the appointed time, half past one o'clock, the large school room was filled to overflowing with scholars, teachers and friends.

After uniting in singing and prayer, a selection from the Scriptures was read, showing them to be profitable for instruction in temperance—a lamp to our feet and a light to our path—to guide us safely through the temptations to this vice to which we are exposed.

Mr. J. F. Bumstead, the former superintendent of the school, was then introduced to the meeting, and addressed it in his peculiarly happy manner, as follows:

"Why are we here? A room crowded with people—men, women, boys and girls. Why are we here? It seems to me that this is a sort of political meeting. Political, you know, means something about our government—something about our rulers. Still I do not mean that we have met with reference to the election of a Mayor, a Governor, a Representative, or even a President, No. Our subject is more important. We have met with reference to the choice of a KING—a higher than a governor, or a president, because he will rule over them, as well as those under them.

"There are in this country, two great parties on the subject of having a king. Each party has picked out one whom it esteems and loves, and placed him at its head. So you see there are now in this great country, two great parties, each having a great king at its head. Each party and each king are doing all they can to overcome the other, and get the whole sway, so that there may be only one party and one king.

"Would you like to know the names of these kings? ['Yes, sir,' the scholars replied.] The name of one begins with T; can you guess the rest? [One said, 'Temperance.'] TEMPERANCE; yes, that is the name—king Temperance is one of the kings. Can you guess the name of the other? His name, too, begins with T. [None replied.] Hearken now, and you shall have the name of the other. It is TIPSY—king Tipsy. Now you have the names of the two kings; king, Temperance, and king Tipsy.

"Before telling you anything more about these kings, and with your knowing only their names, I would like to have you tell me, which strikes you most favorably. Which does it seem to you would make the better king? [They all replied, 'King Temperance.']

"It is customary for every king to have a seal, with which he marks what belongs to him. It is called the king's seal. It usually has a motto on it.

"Just so it is with king Temperance. He has a beautiful seal. There are two letters on it, which stand for two words, which words are his motto. Perhaps it would take you some time to guess what the two letters are, so I will tell you, and then you may think and guess if you can what the words are which the letters stand for. The letters are—O. K. Now what do you think these letters stand for? ['All correct, all correct,' came from several voices.] ALL CORRECT; yes, that is it; king Temperance's seal has on it O. K., which means ALL CORRECT.

"Now what does king Temperance do with his seal? Where does he place his marks? I will tell you. On every thing that belongs to him,—every house, every store, every ship, every work-shop, and every thing that they contain. No matter what it is, or where it is, wherever there is anything belongs to king Temperance, there you will see his bright, beautiful seal upon it. I need not go beyond this room to find numerous impressions of this seal. These bright eyes before me—I see on every one the mark, O. K. These healthy, good looking faces; these intelligent countenances; these strong limbs; these neat, tidy and comfortable garments; I see on them quite distinctly the good O. K.

"Although king Temperance's O. K. always stands for all correct, it frequently, in addition, stands for other words, thus: O. K., all clean; O. K., always careful; O. K., orderly character; O. K., all complete; O. K., always calm; O. K., open and candid; O. K., always consistent; O. K., always quiet; O. K., all like clock-work, &c.

"Now about king Tipsy. He has a seal too. What do you think the letters are on his seal? Would you not be surprised if I should tell you that the letters on his seal are precisely the same as those on the seal of king Temperance? Yes in order to deceive he has taken the same letters, O. K., and pretends that they stand for all correct; and even tries to make people believe that his O. K. is much more all correct than that of king Temperance. And what is still more surprising, he has found very many who are fools enough to believe him. Yes, many a man and many a woman, having a thirsty tongue, and refused to take an O. K. tumbler of fresh and clear cold water from the hand of Temperance, and accepted in preference, from the hand of Tipsy, a tumbler of ear-wigs, believing that because it looked red and lively, it must be the true O. K. Oh, what infatuation!

"He left off the O. K. all correct of king Temperance, and began with O. K. one cup of Tipsy's O. K., and then K. O. keep on. His O. K. own constitution and O. K. own character, were soon changed. From O. K. one cup of Tipsy's O. K., he went on to O. K., all kinds of O. K., awful conduct.

"From head to foot he is now marked O. K., overcome with evil. His back-bone marked O. K., all corned. His head marked O. K., all confused, His eyes marked K. K., crimson colored. His sight marked O. K., all clouded. His tongue marked O. K., all clack. His lips marked O. K., awful crabbed. His mouth marked O. K., always complaining. His hands marked O. K., all a quiver. His hat marked O. K., all quashed. His actions marked O. K., awkward and clumsy.

"His pockets are marked O. K., out of cash, and O. K., out of credit. His back and legs are marked O. K., out of clothes. His house is marked O. K., out of comfort. His stove marked O. K., out of coal. His bread-basket marked O. K., out of a crumb. His cupboard marked O. K., out of crockery.

"His breast is marked O. K., out of compassion. His heart is marked O. K., out of kindness. His children are marked O. K., orphans caused. His wife is marked O. K., all but killed,

"He is in every way in an O. K., odious condition. He is O. K., all consigned to destruction and death.

"It is then O. K., altogether clear, that O. K., all kinds of intoxicating drinks are ruinous. Let not this O. K., awful calamity be ours.

"Let us be O. K., all correct, and O. K., always continue so.

"Let it be O. K. our custom to be O. K., always careful to drink the genuine king Temperance's O. K., only kind of good drink. Never put the mouth to an O. K., open condition to receive any other. Let it be O. K. K., always kept closed against any drink which comes from O. K., out of any casks.

Let us O. K., oppose all we can that O. K., alcohol king. Resolve never to be brought down into his O. K., awful capacity. Let us tear his O. K., odious crown from his head. Let us K. O., keep out of the way of his O. K., odious catch-traps. Let us follow the advice of our true friends, and O. K., our counsellors, such as O. K., our Cushing.*

"Let us on this O. K., occasion, go for king Temperance, O. K., all correct. King Temperance now, and king Temperance FOREVER!!"

Rev. Mr. Howe next addressed the meeting. He drew an ingenious comparison between rat-traps and grog-shops, warning the children of the baits which were thrown out to entice them to enter. Though the ingress was easy, they would find the egress difficult, and their destruction almost sure.

Deacon Grant then reminded the children of the great traps at South Boston, such as House of Correction, &c., which were filled with the miserable victims who had been caught by king Tipsy's delusive baits.

Aftar distribution of temperance publications, the meeting closed by singing the appropriate hymn, beginning with

"Our youthful hearts with temperance burn."

Yours respectfully,
A. CUSHING.

---

*Name of the Superintendent.

Temperance Department.

Written for the Youth's Cabinet.

THE BALTIMORE MOVEMENT.

The Temperance reformation in Baltimore is a moral wonder of the age, second only to Father Mathew's Temperance Revolution in Ireland.

In the Spring of 1840, seven drunkards were in a rum-tavern in Baltimore, when one of them, moved, we trust by the Spirit of God, proposed that they should all promise never again to touch, taste or handle strong drink. They all agreed to this wise proposal, and the Washington Temperance Society was formed. Its date should never be forgotten. It was April 5th, 1840. They received none but those who had been habitual drunkards. Of rum-sellers, they merely required that they should cease drinking, trusting that when they thought soberly upon their business, they would abandon it. Two or three rum-sellers who had joined them, soon gave up their ruinous trade.

Their success in winning drunkards from their cups to the Society, was beyond their expectations. Like Paul, they preached the faith they once destroyed, and like him they were abundantly blessed.

They held frequent experience meetings, in which they were not ashamed to tell an unvarnished tale of their former degradation. This was more than a voice from the dead; for they had been regarded as dead to hope, while they were alive to misery and shame. Their eloquence came warm from the heart, with a power which few hearts were hard enough to withstand. Thus they rapidly conquered their former allies, not by killing, but by making alive. At one of their meetings, last winter says the Baltimore Sun, the President said, failure was a word that had ceased to have any meaning when applied to them. They had made a second declaration of independence, and on it they had pledged their lives and sacred honor—fortune they had none to pledge, for it had been wasted. He pictured the drunkad as a crazy man. One drunken man, he said, could not trust another; if two had a dispute, and sought an umpire, they would refuse one like unto themselves, and choose a sober man. Thus they were self-convicted of insanity.

The self experience of the secretary was given with much feeling. He alluded to the iron bondage in which he had been held for years, and from which he had vainly endeavored, time and again, to break. Often, he said, when he would look in the glass at his disfigured face, bloated up from the effects of drinking, had he felt like hiding himself away from the light of heaven. In the street, he was ashamed to meet a friend, for he was ever conscious of his loathsome appearance. With the fairest prospects before him, when he started in the world, of becoming rich, he had squandered his earnings, and neglected his business, until ruin stared him in the face.

Those who had known him for years, said the Baltimore paper, for he had been in public business and was well known, could not help remarking with pleasure his changed and healthy appearance. He was externally and internally, a new man. He was obliged to have all his clothes altered, and to buy a new hat in a few weeks after he quit drinking, so swelled up and bloated had he been from the liquor!

Many touching allusions were made by several of the members, to the changed condition of their families. A few months ago, one man who spoke, said that he was over one hundred dollars in debt, his wife and children in suffering want of disgrace, and even his own brothers ashamed to speak to him in the street. He was persuaded to join the Temperance Society, and finally yielded to the persuasion. So soon as he became perfectly sober, he began to feel a new and painful concern for his family; but had no employment, and knew not where to find any. Finally a man, who was a drinking man, offered to sell him a horse on a few months' credit, if he could give him security. He offered a friend, who was also a drinking man, but the owner of the horse would not take any man for security who drank, although he drank himself. At last the man obtained the security and got the horse. And now, said he, from working with my horse and cart, I have got my family comfortaby clothed; have a barrel of flour in my house, good beds to sleep on, a good fire to sit by, and am nearly out of debt!

One member spoke of the horrors of delirium tremens, from which he had suffered. I had rather, he said, lie in Baltimore county jail for twenty years, than have mania a potu, [madness from drunkenness] for five minutes.

Another who had been a drunkard for fifteen years, said that one need not wait until he died, to experience the torments of hell. Let him become a drunkard and get mania a potu, and he will prove its worst horrors. This man once, after having drank a quart of brandy, felt symptoms of the approach of this terrible disease; I will never suffer from it again, he said, shuddering at the recollections of former paroxysms of the drunkard's madness; and going to his drawer, he took out a pistol, loaded it, and after having deliberately fixed a percussion cap, placed the weapon to his ear, and with desperate determination, pulled the trigger! The cap did not explode, and the pistol dropped from his hand to the floor! He was sobered at once. On the next day he took his pistol, unloaded it, and then tried every percussion cap in his box. There was no one that did not explode on the first trial!

Other, and many interesting statements were made by the members, of their personal experience. There was one man who was laying up for a crippled and helpless daughter, regularly, sums about equal to what he used to spend for liquor. He has now a fund for her of something like two hundred dollars.

"We could not but remark," says the Baltimore editor, the wonderful changes which had taken place in the countenaces of these men. Every face had a calm, contented look, and every eye had a human expression—how unlike the drunkard's we need not say."

We will tell our readers more about this heart-cheering Baltimore movement, next week.

"Rochester Hibernian Total Abstinence Society."—This interesting association held its regular weekly meeting on Tuesday evening last. The room was crowded to the last inch, and the zeal of those present apparently not a whit abated. Twenty-five persons, mostly quite young men, and of a class to exert a strong influence upon society, received the tee-total pledge from Father O'Reilly. Eight hundred in all, or thereabouts, have now taken the pledge, and they are determined, by every reasonable effort to swell their roll to one thousand, by or before the 4th of July next! Who will do as well, or better? Not one of all the pledges has yet been disgraced by the Police Court! Indeed, it is said the worthy Reporter for that august tribunal, is actually forced to trump up old stories three or six months gone by, to keep the merry-market in anything like a decent supply of Irish fun and wit.

"There is a word of congratulation in certain quarters, that the Irish Catholics are coming up to this work of reform so nobly. We should like to be informed, whether there are not Yankee Presbyterians, Baptists, and Methodists enough with whom champaign, old madeira, and occasionally a glass of pure, old cider, or a brisk bottle of ale or porter, are still great favorites? Good friends of the Protestant "order," may there not remain some small amount of "unfinished business" on your hands? Up—dispatch it for your life!—American Citizen.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

New-York Cash Store.

H. J. WILLIAMS,

WOULD respectfully inform the inhabitants of De Ruyter, and vicinity, that he is receiving from New-York, at the Store in De Ruyter next door to Geo. W. Sutton's Shoe Store, on Utica Street, an extensive assortment of

Spring and Summer Goods,

Among which are French, English, and American Prints, of almost every variety of style and quality to be found in New-York Market: Bl'k, Blue-bl'k, Sinchew, Bonnet and Florence Silks, Printed and Plain Lawns, Book, Swiss, Jaconet, Cambrick and Mull Muslins; Bleached and unbleached Table Cloths, Crapes, Broad Cloths, Cassimeres, Satinetts, Vestings, Hosiery, Bonnet Trimmings, and almost every other article usually kept in a country Store. Also, an assortment of Groceries, Crockery, Glass and Hardware.

H. J. W. would say that his system of business will be

One Price, and Ready Pay,

And he flatters himself, from his advantages in purchasing Goods, and system of selling, that he can afford Goods at as LOW PRICES as any establishment west of the City of New-York.

All who wish to purchase Goods on favorable terms, are respectfully invited to call and examine his Goods, and judge for themselves as to price and quality. 64tf

De Ruyter, May 17, 1841.

P. S. The Store will be closed on the seventh day of the week. H. J. W.

WANTED, an Apprentice to the Blacksmith Business. Apply to the subscriber.
HIRAM BABCOCK.
Scott, Cortland Co., May 11, 1841. 63w3

SHERIFFS SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Supreme Court of Judicature of the State of New York, and to me delivered, I have levied upon the right, title and interest of Stephen G. Sears in and to a certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being, in the Village of De Ruyter, county of Madison, and bounded as follows: on the north by the turnpike road, on the east by lands owned by Noah B. Foote, on the south by lands owned, or in possession of, John Starr, on the west by lands owned by Marvin M. Hamilton, which I shall expose to sale at public Vendue, as the Law directs, at the house of Wm C. Gage, on Saturday, the 22d day of May next, at 1 o'clock, P. M.

Dated, De Ruyter, April 10, 1841. 59w6
ISAAC BROWN, SHERIFF.
BY T. ORVILLE ELMORE, Deputy.

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 20 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street joining the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village. JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

Head Quarters for BOOTS & SHOES.

Wholesale and retail. As cheap as the cheapest and good as the best.

THE Public are invited to call and examine for themselves. He keeps on hand Fine and Coarse Boots and Shoes, of every description. Ladies French Buskins and single sole Slips. White and Black satin slips, made to order. The Ladies are invited to call and examine the latest New York fashions. ☞Utica St. Sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.
De Ruyter, April 26, 1841. 61tf

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
GEO. W. SUTTON.
De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c. ☞A certain cure in all cases ☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place.
47m6
S. D. DELLAY.

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail. He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.
ELISHA STILLMAN.
De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 14.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 66.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, JUNE 4, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Religious Discussion.

For the Register.

Reasons for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity.

NO. V.

MR. EDITOR.—As it is thought best for me to present all my arguments in connection, before Br. Johnson replies, I shall proceed in this number to sustain my fourth reason for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity which was briefly sketched in my last, viz. "that the texts, which are commonly adduced in its support, do not appear to me, upon a fair construction and comparison with the general scope of the Bible, to contain it."

I shall examine some of the principle texts commonly offered by Trinitarians.—Were I to notice every text which has been cited by different writers and preachers, it would protract this discussion too far. Suffice it to say, that I purpose to meet the most formidable proofs which are offered. Agreeably to my plan, sketched in No. 4., I will commence with the three principal texts which are supposed to present the doctrine of the Trinity at one view, viz: Matt. xxviii. 19. "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Here, indeed, there are three names associated, or mentioned in connection; but it does not necessarily follow that they are three co-equal persons in one God. It is not uncommon for the name of God to be mentioned in connection with other names. We read, for instance, that the children of Israel "feared the Lord, and believed the Lord, and his servant Moses:" and at another time that "they spake against God, and against Moses." Mention is made, in a striking connection, of "the sword of the Lord, and of Gideon." And Paul "charges Timothy before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels." The association, therefore, of the Father, Son and Spirit in this passage, will not prove the doctrine in question, even if the form of expression, as in the common version, be understood to imply simply the authority of baptism. For this authority is from the Father as "the only true God"—from the Son as Mediator associated with him in the work of redemption—and from the Holy Spirit, not as a distinct person from the Father; but because God ordinarily communicates his will, and carries on his purposes by his Spirit, and not by a visible display of his personal glory. But the translation should evidently be amended. It is generally, if not universally conceded, that the Greek phrase, "eis to onoma," should be translated, "into, or unto the name" &c., i. e., we are baptized into the profession of the Father, Son and Spirit;—into that of the Father as the Supreme God—that of the Son as Mediator—and that of the Spirit, as the Spirit of the Father, and which is essential to his person, as truly as the spirit of a man is essential to the person of a man. There is a special reason for a distinct mention of the Holy Spirit, viz: that God is wont to teach and operate, ordinarily, by his Spirit, and not by a visible manifestation of himself, and an audible voice. Moreover; if we regard this form of baptism as an act of worship, it will not necessarily imply the ascription of Supreme homage to the Son; but only the subordinate homage due to him as Mediator. In every view, therefore, of this commission, it fails of sustaining the doctrine of the Trinity.

2 Cor. xiii. 14. "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all." Each of these clauses may be taken in its full sense without implying three co-equal persons in God.

A devout wish that the grace of Christ might be with the Corinthians, does not necessarily elevate him to an equal standing with the Father. Neither does the same wish that the communion or fellowship of the Holy Spirit might be with them, necessarily imply his distinct personality. It simply teaches that God dwells in his people by his Spirit, and thereby brings them into union with himself, and makes them happy in himself. There is but one in this benediction who is called God. Paul wished or prayed, as well he might, that "the love of God" might be with his Corinthian brethren, and the communion of his Spirit, together with the grace of Christ, in whom "it pleased the Father that all fulness should dwell." There is no declaration, therefore, here, of the Trinity. 1 John v. 7. "For there are three that bear record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one."—This, it is well known, is a disputed passage. If, however, we allow its genuineness, it furnishes no proof that the three heavenly witnesses are one God; but merely that they are one in their testimony concerning Christ, viz: that he is the Son of God. The Greek adjective, "en," rendered one, is in the neuter gender, and, therefore, it would not do to supply the word God after it, which is in the masculine. But if we should supply a name, it must be the word, thing, or testimony. The three witnesses testify directly to the same point. But, in truth, this passage should be regarded as spurious. It is so regarded by many of the ablest Trinitarians—yea, by a majority of the best critics. For it is not found in any Greek manuscript of this epistle written before the tenth century; and it is wanting in one hundred and twelve of the one hundred and thirteen manuscripts of it which are yet extant. It is also wanting in all the ancient versions of the New Testament; and it was never quoted in the Arian controversy. It was also omitted in the two first editions of the English Testament. These, and other reasons which are fully detailed by Doctor Clarke, and other eminent authors, are abundantly sufficient to show that this text was not contained in the original inspired copy, and hence ought not to be regarded as authority in the present case. It is not a little extraordinary, that the only passage, which can with any plausible reason be urged as presenting, at one view, the doctrine in question, (the belief of which is considered by many as essential to salvation,) is found, upon candid investigation, to be spurious.

The argument founded on the ascription of Divine titles to Jesus Christ will now be considered.

First, the supposed ascription to him of the title, Jehovah. One of the principal passages relied on in support of this argument, is founded upon a fact stated in Exo. iii. 2, viz: that "the angel of the Lord appeared unto Moses, in a flame of fire, out of the midst of a bush;" who is supposed to claim this title and others which are expressive of Supreme Deity. But, upon a careful examination of the chapter, it will be found that it was the Lord who spake in this divine majesty, and not the angel. He spake either immediately, or by the angel. By comparing the chapter with Acts vii. 35, it will appear most probable, that he spake by the angel. But in whatever manner the declarations recorded were made, they were the declarations of God, and not of the angel. Thus it is said in verse 3, "and when the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the midst of the bush." Here, therefore, is no ascription of the title in question to Christ.

Another of this class of passages is in Jer. xxiii. 6. "And this is his name whereby he shall be called, the Lord our righteousness." The title, Lord, here is in the Hebrew, Jehovah. But it is compounded with another term, signifying "our righteousness." The compound title is "Jehovah-tsidkenu," which is applied to Christ in conformity to a prevailing custom among the Hebrews of applying significant names to persons and things. But it no more proves his Supreme Deity than the name Elijah, which signified "God, the Lord," proves that the prophet who was thus called was the Supreme God; or that Jacob's altar, called "el elohe—Israel" signifying "God, the God of Israel," was God himself; or that the city described in Ezekiel's vision, and called "Jehovah-shammah," translated, "the Lord is there," ch. xlviii. 35, was actually God, or that Jerusalem which Jeremiah calls, ch. xxxiii. 16. "Jehovah-tsidkenu,"—the very title under consideration, was the Supreme God. In translating Jehovah-shammah, the Translators have very properly supplied the verb, is, which is often omitted in the Hebrew idiom. And if they had followed the same rule in translating Jehovah-tsidkenu, they would have rendered it "the Lord is our righteousness," which was the true import of the title given to Christ, and which important sentiment was thereby intended to be inculcated and impressed, and not that Christ was verily Jehovah. This is not an ascription of the simple title, Jehovah, to Christ, nor is it, as compounded, applied to him in any other sense than it is applied to other persons and things. Many candid Trinitarians begin to see that this argument is of no force.

Again, Mal. iii. 1. "Behold I will send my messenger before my face, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant whom ye delight in; behold he shall come saith the Lord of hosts." The argument to be met here is that "the Lord" and "the messenger of the covenant," i. e., Christ, denote one and the same person; and hence, that the title Jehovah is applied to him. But this argument is overthrown in one or the other of two ways.

First, the word, Lord, though written in capitals, is not Jehovah in the Hebrew, but Adonai, which is not an exclusive title of the Supreme God; but is frequently applied to magistrates, husbands and masters. If, therefore, it be here used to designate the same person with the messenger of the covenant, which the English version denotes; then it may be taken in the subordinate sense, and be applicable to Christ, who was made, or constituted Lord by the Father. It is beyond all controversy often applied to him in a subordinate sense. Or,

Secondly, if it appear necessary to understand it as referring to God himself, who promised to come suddenly to his temple by the outpouring of his Spirit, as on the day of Pentecost, and other occasions; then the word, "even," before messenger, should be translated and, which is the sense that the original term generally bears: and then the messenger of the covenant must denote another person or being, and not the Lord—one who is connected with the Lord by this copulative conjunction. This is, indeed, the first and most obvious construction of the passage. Here, then, the Lord and his Christ are both engaged to come to the temple. If the other construction be preferred, it must be because it appears better to comport with the general scope of the writers. But in either case, there is no ascription of the divine title, Jehovah, to Jesus Christ. It may be well in this place to observe that much confusion and error result from not duly observing the difference in the sense and use of the Hebrew titles, Jehovah and Adonai, both of which are rendered by a single term both in Greek and English: in the former, by Kurios, or with the article 'o Kurios, and in the latter by Lord. When the title 'o Kurios occurs in Greek, or Lord in English, it is of great importance to ascertain whether it is translated from Jehovah, or from Adonai. A reference to a single passage will evince this importance, viz: Matt. xxii. 44. "The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool." Here, the word, Lord, in the first instance, is translated from the Hebrew term, Jehovah, and in the second, from Adonai. "Jehovah said to my Adonai," &c. Jehovah is not here represented as speaking to another person or being, claiming the former title; but to one called Adonai, which title often denotes, if not generally, a Lord in the subordinate sense. This distinction which is perfectly obvious and real, will be of vast use if carefully followed out, in the right interpretation of the word of truth. It does not follow from Christ's being often called Lord, that he is called Jehovah, or that he is possessed of Supreme Deity.—The title Jehovah-Jesus, which we often hear, is not to be found in the Scriptures.

Another of the class of passages under consideration, is Luke i. 16, 17. "And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him in the Spirit and power of Elias."

The argument founded on this text is that John, who was the harbinger of Christ, or the one who went before him, is here said to go before the Lord God of Israel to prepare his way; and hence, that Christ was the Lord God of Israel. But this argument is manifestly unsound. John did, indeed, precede Christ; but he was not his messenger; but the Father's. It was the special object of his ministry to prepare a people for Jehovah, and subordinately for Christ. He is said to go before Jehovah, or from before his face, because he was immediately commissioned by him, and was to prepare the way for his gracious visitation in the coming of Christ, and the effusion of the Spirit. Hence, Zacharias, the father of John, is represented as saying, verses 68, 69, of this chapter, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people; and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David." This text fully explains the other. God visited or came to the people by raising up an horn of salvation, which was Christ, without doubt: Christ was not the God who raised up this horn; but the horn itself. The Lord God, who is the Father, raised him up, and thereby visited Israel and the world in mercy. And John went before him by a special message to prepare his way. This is all perfectly plain. There is not the least proof here that the Lord God means Christ; but positive evidence to the contrary.

Again, John xii. 41. "These things said Esaias, when he saw his glory, and spake of him."

The pronoun, "his," here is supposed to refer to Christ, and hence it is argued that the being whose glory Isaiah saw, and whom he called Jehovah, was Christ. But this is by no means a necessary or natural conclusion. The nearest and most natural antecedent of this word is the Lord in the 38th verse, and not Christ in the 34th.—The evangelist says that Isaiah saw his glory, i. e., the Lord's glory, not Christ's; and that he also spake of him, which any one may see by referring to the 6th chapter of his prophecy. Awarding to the common reading, therefore, there is no application of the title, Jehovah, to Christ. But there is good reason for adopting a different reading from the common one. Some of the best MSS. have "the glory of the Lord," instead of "his glory." Griesbach has adopted this. In either case, however, this celebrated passage fails of proving that Christ is called Jehovah.

Again, 1 Cor. x. 9. "Neither let us tempt Christ as some of them also tempted."

By comparing this text with Deut. vi. 16. when the people are said to have tempted the Lord, i. e., Jehovah, it is inferred that Christ is called Jehovah. But it should be remembered that Christ, in his pre-existent state, was called the "angel of God's presence," and sent to lead Israel in their way to Canaan; and of course, he was tempted, or provoked as well as God himself. So that this declaration, that the people tempted Christ, fails of proving that he is called Jehovah. Besides, some of the best Greek MSS. have "ton Kurion," instead of "ton Christon," i. e., the Lord instead of Christ. This reading is preferred by many Trinitarians of the first abilities. The proof, at any rate, of the position in question, is not here. It will not be necessary to pursue this part of the examination any farther.—If the preceding passages fail of proving that the title Jehovah is applied to Christ, it is presumed that it will not be pretended that it is so applied in any other. I am well convinced—yea, confident, that it is never applied to him by any inspired writer. This, I am sensible, is taking broad and bold ground, and the importance of maintaining it, if correct, must be my apology for the length of this article.

I trust the candid will have patience with me, seeing the great question at issue involves a correct knowledge of "the only true God," and of Jesus Christ his Son, our Savior. Yours, as ever,

JABEZ CHADWICK.

Weedsport, May, 1841.

Religious Department.

From the New York Observer.

THE MAN WHO WANTS NOTHING.

When Callias, a friend of Aristides, offered him a share in his estate, he declined it, saying: "He only can be said to want, who permits his appetite to transgress the bounds of his income; and he who can dispense with a few things, thus renders himself more like the gods, who want for nothing." Somewhat to this effect is also the observation of Edmund Burke: "A man who has no wants has attained great freedom and firmness, and even dignity."

There are some now a days, who would hardly object to the possession of the advantages attributed to superior beings; some who aim at "freedom" from the ordinary straightness of human life, who desire "firmness" of standing in the world, and perhaps have a special liking for "dignity" of place among men, but who scarcely think of gaining their ends by the means here recommended. Great is the contrast between the wisdom of the Grecian or English sage, and the practice of modern aspirants for office and wealth. So irreconcilable in fact, that we are obliged to suppose that the former were madmen, or the latter fools. I know this last is a harsh term, and without high authority should hardly dare apply it to so many respected men as, according to the maxims of Aristides and Burke, it may seem to fit. But inspired wisdom demands its use for all who fail to attain the chief ends of their being; and if the names here quoted deserve their reputation, the most of us moderns will fail exactly at this point.

But how are we to convince men, that the way to wealth is not the increase of the means of gratification, while the desires to be catered for will always grow by indulgence more rapidly than the facilities for their contentment? To produce this conviction in his own mind, one must reflect, must learn from observation upon himself, that the common methods of obtaining satisfaction are wholly ineffectual; and then, what is perhaps still more difficult, must make trial of a better way.—Here, in fact, is the main difficulty. He that has once known the sweet peace, that may be found in wanting nothing beyond the supply of his absolute necessities, once felt the "freedom and firmness" thus obtained, can hardly be tempted to seek riches or power elsewhere.

But, obviously, no such experiment is possible, while the affections are strongly set upon the common objects of human desire. We cannot, by a mere volition cease to love what we are accustomed to or cease to want the objects that gratify existing affections. One may deem it highly probable, that the shortest method of getting rich, is not by increasing his estate, but by moderating his desires: but how to moderate them—there's the question. He would gladly make the experiment of regarding wealth as did Aristides, but how to make himself a new creature? There is but one method of effecting this: call in, if possible, the assistance of the Power that first gives us life—there is the only ground of hope.

O, that men could know some things that they do not, and that the multitude never will! Truths I refer to just as practical, just as really matter of every day concernment, as our necessary food and raiment. The reader may smile if he will: "but let him laugh that wins." The sun will not stop shining because I shut my eyes, or put them out, and then say there is no light. We shall know the results after a while: whether the rich and powerful amongst men shall boast, or not, over the poor in human estimate, who have found treasure, notwithstanding, in something never made the subject of traffic on 'change, and never sought by ambitious statesmen or conquerors.

C. S. A.

Gulf Mills, Penn., April 15, 1841.

From the New York Observer.

BULWER'S WORKS.

The popularity of the above works, and their dangerous tendencies, demand of every lover of good morals, and especially of every Christian, an effort to guard the public mind against their corrupting influence. If you will allow one in whose vicinity these works have recently been offered for sale by a professing Christian, to make a few extracts from an able review of these works for insertion in the Observer, it may be doing something to remove the evil.—These extracts are taken from the Literary and Theological Review, published in your city. The Review states that "a glaring and most wicked fault of Bulwer is his predilection for elegant impurities. In fact he sometimes descends to grossness; but this is not usual. He values his popularity too highly to risk it against such manifest odds. But he is often willing to sacrifice delicacy by giving utterance to a sentiment, or point to an incident which must inevitably put true modesty to the blush, and he can plead no apology save that the language is refined."

The Review also states, "There is but one of his novels free from a series of studied efforts to cast virtue into the shade, and to embellish vice with all the charms of approval and success. Throughout the most of Bulwer's works there is a scattering train of immorality, (already referred to,) the train being thick or thin according to circumstances." Of one of his works it is remarked that it "falls but little short of infamy," and adds, "It is impossible, and it is unnecessary to be coolly argumentative on such a work. That work, to the shame of its publishers—and its purchasers, too, if they keep it after knowing its vileness—is before the public in every bookstore, in every circulating library, and little can be said of it beyond an expression of unmingled detestation. It is so essentially evil in every particular that no words can match it. Such an unmingled cup of abomination is it, except Mr. Bulwer's elegance of composition, that criticism cannot descend to it."

Another writer, speaking of Bulwer's writings, says: "Bulwer's works, in character and sentiment, are slightly elevated above those of the French school; while their moral or rather immoral tendency is far more deleterious. Notwithstanding the infidel, licentious principles avowed on almost every page, the gloss, and finish, and fascination of the author's style ensure them a popularity, a circulation far exceeding that of the former class." These extracts show conclusively, to my mind, that the alarm is not premature, when the dear youth of our country are warned against their destructive influence, and no person can furnish facilities without giving up all claim to the character of a philanthropist, a patriot, or a Christian.

R. D.

From the New York Observer.

INFIDEL AND LICENTIOUS BOOKS.

The following Preamble and Resolution of the Niagara Presbytery is worthy the attention and prayerful consideration of all who profess to love the religion of Jesus, the principles of which, alone, are calculated to make men happy in this life, or that which is to come—[Ed. Reg.

Whereas members of the church of Christ have been engaged, and are now engaged in making and vending books of an infidel and licentious character and tendency such as Paine's Age of Reason, Volney's Ruins, Byron's Don Juan, Bulwer's Novels, &c., thereby strengthening the kingdom of darkness in our world, and counteracting all the gracious and reforming influence of the church and of the Christian ministry; therefore,

Resolved, That we regard the making and vending of books of the kind set forth in the above preamble, contrary to the gospel of Christ, and that no justifiable reasons can be assigned for any member of the church of Christ continuing this practice so poisonous to the minds of youth, and so subversive of sound morals and serious piety in the church and in the world.

FRIENDSHIP IN HEAVEN.

Man is constituted to be happy in society. Place him in solitude, and however exciting and felicitous are his circumstances in other respects, he will wither and pine away. But above, we shall be with the many that shall come forth from the east, and west, and north, and south, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The entire heaven of angels, and the whole host of the redeemed, we shall have sweet and improving fellowship with for ever.—The wise and the good, the great and the pure, the benevolent and active from every region, will be our companions and associates, with whom we shall live, and love, and know, and obey, through one eternally enduring day. Of all the affliction to which we are liable, there is none so painful as the death of our friends. And oh! what a consoling balm is the doctrine that we shall, in the realms above, be restored to their fellowship. This doctrine is involved in many passages of Scripture; in the account of the last judgment—in the language of David on the death of his infant child by Bathsheba—in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus—in the consolation which our Savior gives to the penitent sinner on the cross—in the assurance administered by the apostle St. Paul to the Thessalonian believers, that they should be his joy and crown of rejoicing in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming—and in the same apostle forbidding them to sorrow for such as had fallen asleep, as though they had no hope of being united with them, and of being together with the Lord—and in the general use which the sacred writers make of the word sleep for death—a simile which would be flagrantly incorrect if our recollections, our friendships, and affections, were not renewed in a future state. And, in general, the same doctrine is taught also through the whole book of the Revelation of St. John. Happy prospect, that exalts friendship into religion! What blest society there will be above!—Rev. T. Lessey.

From the Puritan.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

"Her children arise up and call her blessed, her husband also, and he praiseth her." Prov. xxxi. 28

We were forcibly reminded of this passage, in reading from the New York Evangelist the speech of Rev. Mr. Jay, of Bath, England, at a festival held with his people, on the fiftieth anniversary of his ministry in that place. His people and other friends had made up a purse of £650, together with a salver of solid silver, and presented to him as a testimonial of their regard. In the speech to which he responded to their address, after having acknowledged the kindness of his friends, he turned and addressed his wife as follows:

"I take this purse and present it to you, Madam, [loud applause continued for some minutes.]—to you Madam, who have always kept my purse, and therefore it has been so well kept. Consider it entirely sacred—for your pleasure, your use, your service, your comfort. I feel this is not unexpected by you, but it is perfectly deserved by you. Mr. Chairman and Christian friends—I am sure there is no one here but would acquiesce in this, if he knew the value of this female as a wife, for more than fifty years. I must mention the obligations the public are under to her, (if I have been enabled to serve my generation;) and how much she has raised her sex in my estimation; how much my church and congregation owe to her watchings over its pastor's health, whom she has cheered under all his trials, and reminded of his duties, while she animated him in their performance—how often has she wiped the evening dews from his forehead, and freed him from interruptions and embarrassments, that he might be free for his work. How much also do my family owe to her; and what reason have they to call her blessed! She is, too, the mother of another mother in America, who has reared thirteen children, all of whom are walking with her in the way everlasting."

REV. MR. ROGERS.—Mr. Rogers, one of the Puritan ministers, was remarkable for seriousness and gravity in every society to which he was introduced. A gentleman was once in company with him and some other persons, and addressed him, "Mr. Rogers, I like you and your company very well, only you are too precise."—"Oh, sir," replied the good man, "I serve a precise God."

DR. DONNE, a clergyman of great talents and learning, when on his death-bed, and taking his solemn farewell of his friends, said, "I repent of all my life but that part of it which I spent in communion with God, and in doing good."

THE WORST OF THE TWO.—Lukewarmness and indifference in a church is worse to a minister than opposition from the ungodly.—Morning Star.

Benevolence is the light and joy of a good mind: 'it is better to give than to receive.'

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, June 4, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

Eastern Association.

The Minutes of the 5th Anniversary of this Association have come to hand. The Westerly Church was added to the Association during its session. We take the liberty of publishing the Report on the State of Religion, and Circular and Corresponding Letters.

Report of the Committee on the State of Religion.

PISCATAWAY—"A state of union, with apparent increase of zeal and encouraging prospects; yet, additions the past year have been small, and an unusual number of sudden removals by Death."

2d. HOPKINTON—"In union, steadfast in the commands of God, and the faith of Jesus—with pleasing additions and encouraging prospects."

1ST. HOPKINTON—"In rather a state of supineness, but some circumstances that give encouragement to be more fervent in prayer."

SALEM—"A good degree of union, pleasing additions, blessed with the leadings of the Spirit, and an increasing interest for the prosperity of Zion."

WESTERLY—"But few additions—in an infant state—sensible of their weakness—yet in union, deprecating the idea of withholding their aid, though feeble, for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom."

After examining the communications from the churches, we feel to rejoice, yet with trembling, while there is pleasing intelligence from some churches, still we mourn the apathy that prevails and have much cause to humble ourselves before God, earnestly imploring his mercy and the influence of his grace to heal our backslidings, and consummate that union and concert of action which is so important for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

CIRCULAR LETTER.

The Delegates of the Churches composing the Seventh-day Baptist Eastern Association, convened with the Church in Salem county, N. J., to the churches which they represent, and those of the same faith in this vicinity, send greeting:

DEAR BRETHREN—Being permitted by the favor of God to enjoy another annual consultation upon the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom among us, we present you the following suggestions for your prayerful consideration. And first in order, and perhaps in importance also, you will see by the statistics from the Churches given in our Minutes, that while Death has claimed and taken his yearly draft of the soldiers of the cross composing our corps, and others have been removed for disorderly conduct, few have volunteered from the army of Satan to fill their posts, and the enemy presses hard upon us. Let us buckle on the whole armor of God, grasp the weapons of our warfare—listen to and obey the voice of our Captain, and the victory will yet be ours.

Secondly, we consider that the inefficiency of our Benevolent Institutions calls for particular attention. Here two important questions arise.

1. What is the cause of this inefficiency?
2. How can that cause be removed or overcome?

In answer to the first, we are constrained to say, that covetousness is the great first cause of the evil we complain of; for this is the known great enemy of benevolence and pervades almost every heart to a greater or less extent. But while we with shame and sorrow make the foregoing confession, we are of opinion that there are other causes co-operating with the one named, which go to augment the consequences naturally growing out of it. We will name a few of them as they occur to us. We are, as a people, (for we speak with reference to our denomination at large) so widely scattered, and living under such a variety of local influences, that it is almost certain, if not necessary, that brethren will differ in their views of what is expedient as to the modes, measures, and forms of transacting business, even while they may be agreed as to the importance of what should be done. Now while compromise in such things, strictly speaking, requires no violence to the conscience, they often have the effect to prevent or destroy that general interest and united action which the success of every benevolent enterprise among us must depend.

More or less connected with what has just been noticed, we find some difference of opinion touching what should be done—what can be done, &c., all which goes to make the fight feeble. Some way therefore must be found to remove or overcome these difficulties, or our missionary, education and publishing interests will (if they continue in any way to live) but poorly pay the expense of nursing them, and become rather dishonorable than an ornament and blessing to the denomination, by which and the object for which they were originated and undertaken. Hence, the importance of our second question, namely,

How can the cause or causes of the evil complained of be overcome? This is the labor! This is the work! And we remark, in answer, that we know of no complete remedy for covetousness but to have the spirit of Christ. But where that is in a degree wanting, the course to be taken, is to present the motives, hold to view the examples, and enforce the precepts of the Bible by its solemn sanctions. The first of the co-operating causes, with covetousness, must be overcome by the exercise of more confidence among individual brethren, and different Churches and Associations; to do which, requires that great simplicity, truth, and faithfulness, should always mark and make up our intercourse. There must, also, be more moderation, forbearance, and patience, in the conducting of plans, and settling the modes, &c., of business. It is difficult to put in practice these graces, and particularly where the necessary knowledge of things may be wanting, as it often happens, among those who are remote from the sources of information. No pains should be spared, therefore, to keep up as great familiarity with each other, and the things that concern us, as possible, and in this way we shall be able to concentrate our efforts and energies with our hearts and prayers, in whatever pious works our hands find to do.

We are unwilling to close our letter without expressing the great solicitude that we feel for the prosperity of Sabbath Schools, and Bible Classes, where they are in operation in our churches, and for their establishment wherever it is practicable. And may God send great grace and spiritual prosperity upon you all, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

CORRESPONDING LETTER.

The Eastern S. D. B. Association to her sister Associations, sends Christian salutations:

BELOVED BRETHREN IN CHRIST—By the indulgence of our Heavenly Parent, we are again privileged to meet in an associated capacity. During the time that has elapsed between this and our last anniversary, we have been preserved by the great head of the Church, and we are happy in stating to those of our brethren with whom we correspond, that our present interview has been pleasing and harmonious. The additions to our churches, during the past year, have not been so numerous as could be wished by the pious heart, and there seems to be a want of concert of action with regard to the association plan with the churches, within our bounds; yet we feel to rejoice that the churches which have united with us, express a great pleasure in the ancient practice of the Saints, as "they that feared the Lord spoke often one to another." Brethren, we feel to regret that our Missionary operations have so far ceased that the Macedonian cry cannot be complied with as in former times. May the Lord revive a Missionary spirit in all our churches. Brethren, we earnestly solicit a continuation of correspondence, (although not privileged with any communication from you at this session,) yet we may speak to each other by messengers and ministers, after which, at the close of our correspondence on earth, may we be brought to join the general assembly and church of the first born in glory.

Wake up!

We mean those who so far lose sight of the proper object of the worship of God as to doze in the congregation of worshipers. God's worship is holy, and all that attend it ought to feel that all listlessness, or drowsiness, and inattention should never enter there. Holiness becometh God's house, and they that worship God in it, must worship in spirit and in truth. Could any one coming into the immediate presence of the great Jehovah feel so little concerned as to sleep during the interview? All holy beings around the throne are continually reverencing and praising God. God's spiritual presence is in every place where his children are met to worship him, and you who sleep in the holy convocation are sleeping in the presence of God, where nothing but the most profound reverence should be exhibited.

Let men be careful how they mock God by such presumption. Let the Christian exercise care, lest he deprive himself of sweet communion with God by sleeping in his presence in his sanctuary.

Sleepy hearers complain most of poor preaching, and sleepy congregations will be almost sure to have such preaching.—The minister of Jesus has but few tasks harder than to preach when his congregation is locked in the embrace of Somnus. If his soul overflowed with zeal and love for souls when he entered the sacred desk, he will find it almost impossible to retain these feelings when his congregation care so little for the services of the sanctuary, and have so little respect for God, and his minister, as to sleep when he should be attending to the interests of his soul. Wakeful congregations have but little occasion to complain of dullness in their minister.

President's Message.

This number will go to press a day or two before we shall receive the message. We shall, probably, give it to our readers next week.

☞The sickness of our Foreman has prevented us from issuing our paper at our usual time this week.

For the Register.

DE RUYTER, Tuesday, June 1st, 1841.

THE FOURTH OF JULY will soon greet us. We must make that a glad and instructive day to all classes in the community. Special attention should be rendered to our thousands of children, and our few remaining Revolutionary Soldiers. Our arrangements should now be made. Do not let us make 'the Fourth' a tedious day for the children. Let us so treat them that their gladsome hearts will prompt the inquiry at the close of the day—"When will the Fourth of July come again"?

These hints are from one who wishes to maintain the character of

A CHRISTIAN PATRIOT.

For the Register.

Enmity of the Carnal Mind.

Suppose a child, as soon as reason dawns,
Should basely disregard his parents' love;
His parents love him yet, and warmly too,
And justly crave affection from their child;
For this, they study much, invent new plans
By which to win his unrelenting heart.
But still the child his parents disregards,
And loves as much the stones beneath his feet;
Their presence shuns—would banish every thought
That these kind parents live. Would not this child,
Ungrateful still, deserve to lose their love,
And never, never more their kindness share?
Suppose him now in utter ruin plung'd,
(The frequent fruits of filial disregard,)
Their long forbearing kindness not to change,
But for their child new sacrifices make,
Until they lavish on him all their store,
In hopes that now he'll turn to wisdom's way,
Submit his heart, and yield his will to theirs.
Yet, even now, no gratitude he feels,
But more and more contemns their tender love.
Oh! would not such a monster merit hell?
Or would the case be better were the child,
Except his parents, kind to every one,
Affectionate to all around but those!
Would not this still augment his dark account!
O stubborn sinner! this is all for thee.
Come, wilt thou now the application make,
And see if such be not thy case with God! A.

For the Register.

Morning Music.

An ancient association of Nature's musicians, propose to unite in song every morning this season, between the hours of 3 and 5 o'clock. They have recently returned to this country, having spent a few months in foreign parts; and they trust that they have not been altogether unsuccessful, while absent, in their efforts to improve their voices, and to add fresh interest to some favorite old tunes, by a more finished performance, and also to acquire some new tunes of no inconsiderable merit. The community are cautioned against spending too many of their morning hours with MR. SOMNUS, who is a personage of extensive influence, and has often prevented persons from enjoying the morning aerial concert.

The musicians propose spending but a short time in this section of the world, for as soon as the cold weather begins to renew its approach, they will again seek a climate more congenial to themselves.

Mr. Robin will usually officiate as chorister. Mrs. Robin will occasionally sing a solo.

If certain men and boys, who have been accustomed to persecute these songsters, will listen to the early morning notes with which they praise the CREATOR, it is expected that they will cease to shoot and stone them, and demolish their houses, and kill or imprison their chirping offspring.

This notice and these suggestions are officially given by

THE SECRETARY OF THE AERIAL CHOIR.

From the New York Evangelist.

THE LIBERATED AFRICANS.

A meeting in behalf of the liberated Africans of the Amistad was held at the Tabernacle on Wednesday afternoon. Although tickets of admission were required, the spacious house was filled with an interesting audience. On motion, JAMES G. BIRNEY was called to preside. Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Rush, a colored minister.

Mr. Lewis Tappan then rose and stated the objects of the meeting. It was expected, he remarked, that John Quincy Adams would have been present and address the audience, but was now at his residence in Quincy, writing out the plea for publication. He then held up a most magnificent Bible which Cinque and his companions had procured, and intended to have presented. It would now be sent with their warmest expressions of gratitude. Their object in this public exhibition was:

First: To show the improvements made since last October, and also to help raise funds to defray the current expenses, and send them back to their own country with teachers and missionaries sufficient to establish a station at Mendi. This would be done as soon as information respecting the country could be obtained.

Mr. Booth called the Africans severally by their names, to which they responded by rising in view of the audience. When Cinquez showed his fine, manly person, he was greeted with a warm and cordial applause. The appearance of the Africans was certainly interesting. They are perfectly black—but not without pleasing and striking expression.

Mr. Booth remarked that it had been his pleasure to be engaged in the instruction of these captives ever since they were stationed at New Haven. Until October last, he was unable to devote more than three hours a day to them, and having three miles to walk to perform his labors, he could accomplish but little. Since that period his time has been engrossed with them. He could state only a few of the many interesting facts relating to them. From the first they have all been anxious to learn the English language; especially the Bible. He was told by them when he spent but little time with them, that he ought to stay longer. "When you come," said they, "the sun is there, (pointing to the meridian,) and when you go he is there, (pointing to a place at 30 degrees below,) but you ought to come when he is there, (pointing to the eastern horizon,) and stay till he is there" (pointing to the western.) Their eagerness to learn had been extraordinary. After having been seated two or three hours with them, he had been asked, on rising, if he was tired? There are not many classes who would express regret at a discharge after so long confinement.

The progress of the Africans has been different, as might have been expected—being of different ages and countries. Some can as yet read only with difficulty; others quite fluently. Some can readily spell almost any word; with others it is yet a task. The girls have had as yet very little instruction. While at Westville, their moral and intellectual improvement seems to have been greatly neglected. They said, after their arrival at Farmington, that they had had plenty of work, but a very little read. They also have manifested a great degree of curiosity—inquiring the meaning of words, the uses of objects—the causes of events. One gave a particular description of a meteoric stone, and inquired its name in this country.

The natives they represent to be very hospitable, and generous. No use of money is made in their ordinary transactions; none required for entertainment. Their ideas, in this respect, have undergone considerable change by their residence in this country.

As to their veracity, Mr. B. said, he had never known them to utter a falsehood. Opportunities for falsification had occurred, but they had never swerved. So, too, they had always exhibited a remarkable honesty. They exhibit, also, a great attachment to one another—their friends and country. It forms the chief burden of their request to be returned to their native land; that they desire to see their friends, their wives and children. They apprehend no danger, if once placed upon the shore, in reaching their home. They are eager to secure religious knowledge. They promise great attention and care to any missionary that may be sent to them. They express a great sense of obligation to those Americans who have kindly sympathized with them.

The Africans were then requested to read. Some of them read with great fluency, others in so broken a manner as not to be understood. They also spelled much to the amusement of the auditory. They also sung the hymn, "When I can read my title clear," and appeared to have sweet voices, and engaged in it with apparent devotion.

A number of specimens of cloth in the shape of napkins, were exhibited, which the Africans had cut out and fringed after the African style, and it was mentioned that cotton was raised and cloth was manufactured in the Mendi country.

Cinquez then addressed the audience, in his own language, giving, (as was said by a getleman on the platform,) a history of their capture, and the circumstances which had occurred respecting them, up to the present time. His manner was impassioned, evincing deep emotion, and admirably adapted to express the feelings which we might suppose they would exercise during the various stages of their history. His gestures were natural, easy and graceful; and so far as we could judge, without understanding his langnage, we should think him a natural and powerful orator. Indeed, we could not resist the impression, that no ordinary mind was addressing us, though we were unable to sympathise fully with the sentiments expressed.

Mr. Tappan held up before him a Bible handsomely gilt, which he intended to present to Mr. Adams in their name, and asked him what he should say to him. Cinquez replied, in his own language, and his answer was interpreted; but we could only understand that he said Mr. Adams was a great man, and expressed their gratitude to him, which he did in an impassioned manner. A collection was then taken, and the Africans then sung the Missionary Hymn, with great propriety, and the assembly was dismissed with benediction, by Rev. Theodore S. Wright.

The exercises were repeated on Thursday. Dr. Cox was present and put several important questions on religion which they answered very satisfactorily. In order to explain themselves fully when they said that the Mendi nation had no knowledge of the soul and the hereafter, they said they are all Sadducees, they believe no resurrection. In order to satisfy the inquirer that they now had the true idea of eternity, they said, the soul will live "ever, ever, everlastingly eternal."

The occasion was perfectly unique.—There was Cinque, distinguished as their deliverer, and now retaining a strong control over them. There was a group of children, separated from their native home and friends. The mind now rested on their original condition, then on their forcible capture and violent self-emancipation; on their mistaken navigation: their perils in America; their escape; their progress in Christian knowledge, and their prospect of return. The Providence of God speaks loudly in all these circumstances as they stand blended together.

News of the Day.

Female Convicts.—By an act which passed the Legislature yesterday and took effect immediately, it is provided that, "Hereafter, all female convicts sentenced in any county of this State to imprisonment in a State Prison, shall be sentenced to and imprisoned in the female convict prison at Mount Pleasant."

As this provision may affect the validity of sentences, it is important that it should be promptly known throughout the State and we would therefore request Editors of papers to republish this notice.—Alb. Eve. Journal.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer of Saturday.

A FRIGHTFUL COLLISION AT SEA.

The packet ship Susquehannah, Capt. J. W. Miercken, arrived at this port yesterday from Liverpool, but in a disabled condition. It appears that on the 8th inst. during a strong gale from the N. W. and while she was going at the rate of eight knots an hour under reefed topsails, a vessel was observed immediately on the larboard bow. The helm was brought up in order to avoid a collision, and by this act the Susquehannah was brought immediately in contact with another vessel on the other bow. One was discovered too late to avoid a crash, which took place under circumstances truly alarming. The stranger vessel, after the first shock, slewed round, passed immediately by the side of the Susquehannah, and Captain M. states that he was unable to discover any person on board. He cannot say whether she went down or not. One of the hands says he saw her masts fall. The Susquehannah was considerably injured. Capt. M. reports having seen several islands of ice, and having passed between two at the distance of about three hundred yards.

Report of the brig Odessa, Gallagher, arrived yesterday from Lisbon, and last from Madeira:—

April 17, lat 35. 50, long 61. 2½, at 5 A. M. wind strong from W., passed leeward of the wreck of a vessel of about 120 tons, floating high out of water with a bowsprit and jury mast standing, rudder gone, and a spar rigged out horizontally from the starboard gangway and well secured with guys—could see no person on board with the spy glass from aloft.

Report of Captain Flanders, of the Silas Richards, arrived yesterday from Liverpool. On the 20 of April, lat. 39, 32, long 70, saw the wreck of a large vessel, with jib-boom and bowspirt standing.

Capt. Ferris, of the Westchester, arrived this morning, reports that on the 15th inst. when in lat. 41, lon. 61, passed the wreck of a vessel, from 500 to 600 tons, full of water—all her masts gone—had a poop deck. It being dark at the time did not board her.

Correspondence of the Savannah Georgian.

FLORIDA, May 15, 1841.

Dear Sir—On the 26 ult about 26 miles from Tampa Bay, the mail rider and horse was killed. A friendly Indian gave the news at Tampa soon after the deed was done. The Commanding General ordered out a Company of Dragoons, under Capt. B. Beal, 2d Dragoons, who as soon as possible, proceeded to the place of the murder, buried the express rider, and pursued on the track made by the murderer. After several hours pursuit, he came upon a camp regularly fixed and comfortably situated, occupied by one Indian, who was leisurely opening the mail and burning the letters. Capt. Beal shot him in his occupation, but saved but one entire letter of the mail. This Indian proved to be Maxy Hajo, of famous memory in those parts. Capt. Beal has been complimented in orders for his long and arduous pursuit after this savage murderer, and for bringing him to condign punishment.

Yours, truly.

The Indians.—We learn by the Indian Queen which arrived in this place on Friday evening last, (says the Burlington, Iowa, Hawk-eye,) that a party of Chippewas, who are hostile towards the Sioux, recently came near an encampment of the Sioux, not far from Fort Snelling, and fired into one of the lodges, killing a chief and his son. The Chippewas retreated, and had by our last accounts, evaded the pursuit of the Sioux. The Chippewas made another attempt, by firing into a Sioux encampment below, without doing any damage. There will probably be warm work between these two warlike tribes before the summer is out, if we have been correctly informed on the subject.—St. Louis Rep.

The Schools.—It will be seen that the Senate by a vote of eleven to ten, has indefinitely postponed the consideration of the bill extending the System of Public Instruction in the City of New-York. We deeply regret this result. It is a denial of the blessings of Education to the children of indigence and ignorance—a denial like unworthy of the age in which we live and of the great State which ought to bring into its Schools all the children of its People.

We are aware that on this question we entertain opinions in conflict with those entertained by many valued friends. To them we accord the utmost purity of motive. And in return we claim for ourselves the privilege of expressing an equally honest opinion. This whole question is misapprehended—There are in the City of New-York at least 10,000 children who come not through the doors and within the walls of its Schools.

So far its System of Insurance is defective. For that defect the bill defeated in the Senate to-day, furnishes a remedy. And it does nothing more. It preserves all that is valuable in the Public Schools, and provides District Schools for those who are not gathered into existing Institutions.

The question has been put off, but it will return. It is founded in justice and wisdom. There is, in our Government and its Institutions, an undying sentiment of political, social and religious equality. The "School-Master will yet go abroad" among the outcast and down-trodden Children of our Commercial Metropolis. The public mind is darkened now. But light will break upon it by degrees, and when it beams full-orbed upon this question, men will wonder how they could have been induced to oppse a measure which seeks the universal diffusion of the blessings of Common School Education!—Alb Eve. Journal.

Convict Labor.—The bill which passed the Senate, providing for the employment of State Prison Convicts in the manufacture of Silk, has been defeated in the Assembly. This is much to be regretted. It was far more important to the State, as the question of political economy, than to the Mechanics. We hope that the friends of the bill will make another strenuous effort to carry it through the Assembly.—Ibid.

From the Albany Evening Journal

MR. WEED.—Much has been published in relation to the state of the Common Schools in the city of New-York. The necessity of a change in that city has been strongly urged, from the fact that of the 60,000 children between the ages of five and sixteen, not more than 30,000, or one-half, are educated by the Common School Society and other charitable associations.

On looking into the reports of the Superintendents of Common Schools for the year 1840 (Doc. 120,) and for 1841, (Doc. 100,) the following appear to be the condition of the Common Schools in the other cities in this State—showing a difference nearly if not quite as great as the city of New-York; and that if there is any fault it is rather in the cities than the system:

Cities.	Years.	No. of children from 5 to 16.	Not taught.
Albany,	1840	6558	3634
do.	1841	6493	4565
Brooklyn,	1840	6206	2120
do.	1841	7936	2274
Hudson,	1840	1182	530
do.	1841	1192	590
Troy,	1840	3596	1614
do.	1841	3828	1816
Utica,	1840	2646	700
do.	1841	2646	800
Schenectady,	1840	241	92
do.	1841	161	162
Rochester,	1840	4274	2245
do.	1841	4159	2538
Buffalo,	1840	2622	1147
do.	1841	3463	2450

By publishing the above you will oblige.

A FRIEND TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

From the Auburn Journal

SILK IN STATE PRISON.

Since our last we have received a specimen of the Silk manufactured in the Auburn Prison, which for evenness, strength and general appearance is pronounced by those best acquainted with the article, to be of a very superior quality. Every friend of his country will be gratified at seeing this experiment going on—and still more so, when he witnesses this branch of manufacture firmly established, as we have little doubt it soon will be, in at least one of the penitentiaries of the State. For in the first place, it will serve, in a degree at least to check the inroads which have for years past been making by these institutions upon the legitimate province of our intelligent, worthy and industrious mechanics forming a just complaint. And in the next, it will have the effect of calling the attention of our farmers to a most important branch of industry in the raising of the mulberry, and the preparation of the cocoons.

This is a branch in which thousands of dollars may be made by those who are now in a degree unprovided with suitable employment. We allude to the aged and infirm, as well as to the great body of children. Let their attention be at once turned to this subject,—let our farmers occupy what are now considered as the waste places of their farms in the culture of the mulberry, and thus give employment to the hands depending upon them, that are now unproductive, and the effect cannot fail to be most salutary. Individual prosperity will be secured, while the nation will be enriched by retailing at home thousands, and ultimately millions of dollars which are now lavished upon foreign nations for this article alone this is no exaggeration—for by recent reports, it appears that during the last ten years this country has imported silks to the enormous amount of $150,000,000!! In connexion with these remarks, the reader is referred to the following, by the Agent of the Prison:

TO FARMERS AND OTHERS.

STATE PRISON, Auburn, N. Y.
May 15th, 1841.

The subscriber as agent of said Prison, having commenced the manufacture of SEWING SILK, will pay three dollars per bushel for all the Cocoons of a good quality that may be offered at this Prison hereafter. Any communications upon this subject, addressed to the subscriber, (post paid) from any part of the United States, will receive immediate attention.

Having become thoroughly satisfied of the fact, that the Morus Multicaulis Mulberry will endure the frosts of winter in this latitude, without care or attention, nearly if not quite as well as the common apple tree, the subscriber has determined upon extending the business of manufacturing Silk at this prison to any amount that the procurement of the material will allow; and hopes ultimately to make it the principal employment of the convicts here confined. Under this determination, he will be prepared at all times to purchase for cash, at the above price, all the cocoons of a good quality that may be offered from any part of the United States.

The immense amount of foreign Silks annually imported into the United States demonstrates the policy, if not the necessity, of a combined effort on the part of the citizens of this country, generally, for the production of American Silk, which, when properly fabricated, it is believed far excels in quality that produced in any other part of the world; hence every individual in the community, from motives of patriotism, as well as interest, should feel a deep solicitude for its culture and success.

It is believed that most farmers will, to a certain extent, find it profitable, so far at least, as the necessary labor in feeding the worms, etc., can be performed by the juvenile members of the families.

The trees may be planted by the fence side and in other productive portions of their grounds, to an extent sufficient, after a very few years' growth, to produce a large amount of Silk—nor it is necessary (as has been supposed) to incur any expense in preparing buildings or fitting up apartments for the feeding of worms—a common barn, or out houses of any description will answer all the purposes; barns in particular may be used to great advantage durng the early part of the season, previous to the ingathering of crops.

Being aware that very erroneous opinions are entertained by many in regard to the process of producing the Cocoon, to obviate which any person desirous of correct information upon this subject, will be furnished the same gratuitously on application to Mr. John Morrison, at this prison, who has a thorough knowledge of the business in all its parts, having for many years had the entire charge and superintendence of an extensive silk manufactory in Europe.

HENRY POLHEMUS, Agent.

P. S. Editors of Newspapers in this State who are friendly to a change in the mechanical branches now carried on in our State prisons, are requested to give the above a gratuitous insertion. H. P., Ag't.

Great Natural Curiosity.—We find in one of the latest numbers of the Louisville Journal the following very curious account of what is, in one sense at least, the greatest natural curiosity ever known to man:

The Missourium.—This gigantic wonder of the animal creation has at length arrived in our city, and will be exhibited at the Washington Hall as soon as the bones, which are now contained in fourteen large boxes, can be put together. In the mean time we will endeavor from data furnished us in a printed description of the skeleton, to give our readers some idea of this mighty wonder of creation; as such it may well be regarded, for, in comparison with the Missourium, mammoths, mastodons, and all other hitherto discovered monsters are but small affairs.

The skeleton measures thirty-two feet in length and fifteen in height. The head measures from the tip of the nose to the spine of the neck, 6 feet. From the edge of the upper lip, measuring along the roof of the mouth, to the socket of the eye, is 3 feet; from the lower edge of the upper lip to the first edge of the front tooth, 20 inches. Each jaw has 4 teeth, and the upper jaw has beside two enormous tusks. The teeth are each 4 inches broad.—The nose projects 15 inches over the lower jaw.—The tusks are ten feet long, exclusive of 1 foot and 3 inches, which forms the root, and is buried in the skull. The right tusk was found firm in the head, and remained fixed in its socket during the excavation and transportation of St. Louis, which fortunate circumstance enables us to know the exact position and situation which the tusks occupied in the head of the animal during its life. They were carried by him almost horizontally, bending somewhat down, and then coming with their points up again, making a sweep from extremity to extremity, in a straight line across the head, of 15 feet. The longest rib measures 5 feet 6 1-2 inches in length, the shortest 2 feet 3 inches. The scapula, or shoulder-blade, is 3 feet one inch in length, and 2 feet 7 inches in breadth. The length of the humerus, or fore-arm is 3 feet 5 1-2 inches and its greatest cirrcumference 3 feet 3 inches. The femur or thigh-bone, is 4 feet and a half long, and 7 3-4 inches in diameter. The feet of the animal appear to have been webbed.—The fore feet have four toes and a thumb. The longest toe measures 1 foot 8 inches, the shortest one foot, and the thumb 7 inches. All the bones of the animal are firm, and contain no marrow. The cavity of the brain is quite large.

The propriotor, Mr. Kotch, in his printed description of the animal, makes the following remarks on the supposed habits and nature:

"The animal has been without doubt, an inhabitant of water-courses, such as large rivers and lakes, which is proved by the formation of the bones: 1st, his feet were webbed; 2nd, all his bones were solid and without marrow as the aquatic animals of the present day; 3d, his ribs were too small and slender to resist the many pressures and bruises they would be subject to on land; 4th his legs are short and thick; 5th his tail is flat and broad; 6th, and last, his tusks are so situated in the head that it would be utterly impossible for him to exist in a timbered country. His food consisted as much of vegetables as flesh, although he undoubtedly consumed a great abundance of the latter, and was capable of feeding himself with his fore foot, after the manner of the beaver or otter, and possessed, also, like the hippoptamus, the faculty of walking on the bottom of waters, and rose occasionally to take air."

"The singular position of the tusks has been very wisely adapted by the Creator for the protection of the body from the many injures to which it would be exposed while swimming or walking under water, and in addition to this it appears that the animal has been covered with the same armor as the alligator, or perhaps the megatherium."

From Oregon.—The National Intelligencer contains a letter from Francis Fletcher and four others contradicting sundry statements of Obadiah Oakley, one of the party who went to or towards Oregon, a year or two since, under Capt. Farnham. It is dated Wallamet (O. T.) Sept. 3, 1840. The concluding paragraphs are as follows:

It may be expected that the undersigned should give some account of the country on the Columbia and Wallamet rivers; but our residence in it has been too short to enable us to speak with confidence. It is our opinion, however that as a grain growing country it is inferior to the Western States of the Union, but superior as a stock-raising country owing to the mildness of the climate.

The settlement on the Wallamet consists of sixty or seventy families made up of French Canadians Yankees, Trappers from the Rocky mountains, Missionaries, and a few Europeans and Sandwich islanders. The principal production of agriculture is wheat of which the average product is about twenty bushels per acre. The quality is equal to the best wheat of the United States. Oats thrive well; corn and potatoes but indifferently. Beans and peas produce a fair crop. Other productions are unimportant.

Those who wish to know more of the country are referred to Capt. Wyeth's letter to Mr. Cushing.

Robert F. Curry.—At the Court of General Sessions, held in Ithaca village last week, the following conviction was read and sentence passed:—Robert F. Curry, for forgery in the second degee, plead guilty: sentenced to five years imprisonment at hard labor in the state prison. This is the individual who imposed a note with forged endorsements on the Merchants & Farmers' Bank of this village, from which he procured $2,500 was arrested in Virginia; demanded by Gov. Seward; the demand at first refused, but after causing a change in the executive magistracy of Virginia, finally complied with.

At a meeting of the Regents of the University of the State of New-York, held at the Capitol in the city of Albany, May 25, 1841, On motion of Dr. PETER WENDELL, the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

Whereas it is understood that VALENTINE MOTT, M. D., late a Professor of the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the city of New-York, has, after an absence of several years in Europe, returned to that city, and intends again to make it his permanent residence:

That the Regents of the University, duly appreciating his former services, and his justly distinguished rank among American Surgeons, and sincerely desirous of again securing the benefits of his knowledge and experience to the students of the only medical institution now under their immediate care, do resolve, that due notice be given to the Trustees and Faculty of the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the city of New-York, that it is the desire of the Regents of the University, in proper season, after the expiration of the period required by the charter, to appoint Dr. MOTT to a Professorship in said College, and that the said Trustees and Faculty be requested to lay before the Board such a plan for the re-organization of the Professorships as will enable this Board to accomplish the object.

S. GROESBEECK, Sec'y pro-tem.

National Institution.—Our "National institution for the Promotion of Science is raipdly "going ahead." At the last meeting, letters were read from various parts of the world, promising collections, books and communications, and announcing such as were already on their way.

It is well known that Mr. Secretary Webster, upon his accession to the Department of state, allowed the Institution to use the spacious unoccupied apartment and rooms in the basement story of the new patent Office, where the collection already in the possession of the Institution is now being arranged; and Mr. Secretary Badger has entrusted to the care of the Institution the extensive and interesting collection of specimens in all branches of Natural History lately recieved from the Exploring Squadron, in the preparing and arranging of which accomplished naturalists are now engaged. Animated by equal zeal for whatever will advance the history and science of his country, Mr. Bell, Secretary at War, has entrusted to the Institution the whole interesting collection of Indian portraits, which has heretofore hung on the walls of the War Office passage. We understand, also, that with the Portraits will be sent a fine collection of Indian curiosities.—Nat. Int.

General Harrison's Remains.—The family of General Harrison have yielded to the request of the citizens of Cincinnati, and permitted them to take order for removing his remains to North Bend for interment. The Committe of removal is to leave Cincinnati for Washington, in the performance of their solemn office of duty and affection, about the 10th of June.

Silk Map.—We have just seen a specimen of Map Printing in a style which we believe is entirely new. It is a map of the United States printed on a handsome pongee silk, in the form of a pocket handkerchief, and it may be used at pleasure either for the ordinary purposes of that necessary implement, or for the sole purpose of reference for the accurate geographical information which it contains, or it may be made to serve both purposes at the same time. It is printed and published by Mr. Joseph W. Tuttle. The engraving is by George W Boyton, from a new, and we believe accurate drawing made for the purpose, containing the usual details of a map of the size, with scales of the heights of mountains, length of rivers, &c.—Boston Daily Adv.

A Magnificent Sight.—The Ellen Kirkman steamer left our wharf yesterday, with twenty-seven hundred and seventy one bales of cotton; two hundred and 30 hogsheads tobacco; four hundred and fifty pieces Tennessee bagging, twenty hogsheads bacon and sundry other loading to trim, bound for New Orleans.—Nashville Whig, May 11th.

Twenty-Seventh Congress.—As the extra session commences in the ensuing week, a statement of the political complexion which it will have may be useful.

The Senate is full, with the exception of one member from Tennessee, and one from Kentucky; and the House with the exception of two members from Pennsylvania, and three from Illinois. As the election in the last mentioned State does not take place till August, she will, of course, be unrepresented at the special session.

The Senate is composed of fifty-two members, two from each State. Ten States—Vt. Mass., R. I., N. J. Del., Md., Va., N. C., Ia. and Mich. are wholly represented by Whig senators. Eight States—N. H., Pa., Ala., Ohio, Tenn., Ill. Missouri, and Ark. are wholly represented by opposition senators. Six States—Me., Ct., N. Y., S. C., Ga., Miss., and La., are represented by one Whig, and one opposition—making in all 29 Whigs, and 22 opposition. Whig majority 7.

The House, when full, comprises 242 members. Of these, 137 have been elected. The following is the table of them:

	W.	V. B.	W. gain.	V. B. gain.	vac.
Louisiana,	2	1		1
Missouri,		2
Vermont,	5		2
Maine,	4	4	2
Georgia,	9
Pennsylvania,	12	14	3	1	2
Ohio,	12	7	4
New York,	19	21	5	7
New Jersey,	6		5
South Carolina,	1	8
Delaware,	1		1
Michigan,	1		1
Massachusetts,	11	1	1
Arkansas,		1
New-Hampshire,		5
Connecticut,	6
Rhode Island,	2
Virginia,	11	10	4	2
Kentucky,	11	2
Indiana,	6	1	4
Maryland,	6	2	3
Tennessee,	7	6
N. Carolina,	8	5	3
Alabama,		5		2
Mississippi,	2		2
Illinois,					3
	142	95	39	13	5
	95		13
W. maj. in the H.	47		26 W. gain.
Do. in the Senate,	7
On joint ballot,	54

The Vacancies.—It is probable that one of the two vacancies in Pa. will be filled by a Whig, and the other by an opposition member; that the three in Illinois will be filled by two whigs, and one opposition.

A Strong Hint.—A Chicago paper, in commenting upon the conduct of the members of the late Legislature of Illinois, hazards an opinion, "that men who drink and gamble all night, are not fit to legislate by day!"

Connecticut State Prison.—The annual report of the Directors of this institution, shows the number of convicts to have been 205. The income during the year has been $22,561 20; the expenses during the same time $14,278 30; leaving the profits $8,282 90. From 1827 to 1841 the large sum of $72,203 had been earned; of which $20,651 have been paid into the State Treasury, and $14,627 expended on the prison buildings. During the past year $1,000 has been paid to the Prison Discipline Society, and the appropriation of $8,000 ($1,000 to each county) to aid in erecting new county prisons has been paid. The property which is on hand amounts to $16,131, and there is due on notes and book account about $14,500. The Warden recommends that the surplus earnings of the Prison be appropriated to the erection and support of a Hospital for the Insane Poor of the State.

The Leading Measures of the Extra Session.—The National Intelligencer has announced the following to be the leading measures which will probably engage the attention of the extra session of Congress:

1. The distribution of the proceeds of the sales of Public Lands among the several States.

2. A revision and augmentation of the duties on imports, for the purpose of securing from that source a revenue adequate to the wants of the Government.

3. The repeal of the Sub-Treasury law.

4. The establishment of a fiscal agent, central or other, to aid the Government in collecting and disbursing the revenue, and equalizing the currency.

5. A temporary loan, if necessary, to supply the immediate necessities of the Treasury.

The Age of Lectures.—Rev. Mr. Wilson, pastor of a Baptist church in England, remarks in a recent letter to the Editor of the Protestant Vindicator, that "Theatres are closing, and Lyceums are on the increase. The curtain is falling upon the licentious exhibition of the stage, and the crowds who thronged and applauded them, are seen clustering around the theological, historical, and scientific lecturer. With us, as with you in America, courses of lectures are constantly multiplying. In addition to the important course against Puseyism, Dr. Bennet opens another on the 12th inst. His subject is, "The Theology of the First Three Centuries." A course of lectures on "The Reality of Spiritual Christianity," is about commencing by Isaac Taylor, Esq., author of "Natural History of Enthusiasm." The separate topics embraced in his programme, are "Spiritual Christianity" shown to be "from heaven," by a comparison with the several species of "Natural Religion"—"The Truth peculiar to Spiritual Christianity"—"The Ethical Characteristics of Spiritual Christianity"—and "Christianity the hope of the world at the present time." There is no question but these lectures will bear the stamp of the author's powerful mind.

The Connecticut House of Representatives refused to grant the use of its hall to O. A. Brownson, for the purpose of lecturing in.

Dean Swift says—"It is with little souled people as it is with narrow-necked bottles; the less they have in them the more noise they make in pouring it out."

There were slain by sea and land, during the last war between England and France, 2,100,000 men. The cost to England was £1,058,000,000—the greater part of which is still unpaid in the national debt.

A Mrs. Stevens died recently in Clearfield Co., Pa., at the advanced age of 108 years. She left her third husband a widower—and her posterity extends down to the sixth generation.

The valuation of real and personal property in the State of Massachusetts, is $300,000,000. The valuation of Boston is $109,000,000.

The amount of tolls received on the Erie canal at Lockport up to May 16th, was last year $1,403; this year it was $11,358.

At the late election for County Commissioners in Massachusetts, three tickets were run in Essex county—whig, temperance, and liberal. The temperance prevailed by a large majority.

In the Connecticut Legislature, on the 18th inst., a communication from the Governor was read, containing a return and statement of the receipts and expenditures of Yale College for the last year. The whole expenses, as given in this, are $30,000, and the receipts $31,000.

Notices.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the Stockholders of De Ruyter Institute will be held on Monday, the 21st day of June next, at 2 o'clock, P. M., at the Institute. At which time four Trustees are to be elected in the place of Alexander Campbell, Perry Burdick, Benjamin Enos, and Wm. Maxson, and to transact such other business as shall be deemed necessary.

N. B. Stockholders are entitled to vote by proxy.

B. G. STILLMAN, Sec'y.
De Ruyter, May 26th, 1841.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Central Association will hold its next annual session with the Church in Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the 2nd Sabbath in June next, at 10 o'clock. Introductory discourse by E. S. BAILEY, or S. B. CRANDALL alternate. A full delegation and punctual attendance is requested.

JAMES BAILEY, Sec'y.

MARRIED,

In Brookfield, on the 10th of May, by Eld. S. B. Crandall, Mr. FRANKLIN COON, and Mrs. ALICE GREEN, all of the same place.

LIST OF LETTERS.

A. Babcock, (the work is done.) S. S. Streeter, 3. Thomas B. Brown, (we are anxious to have you come)

LIST OF RECEIPTS

S S Streeter, $8, cr. Charles Saunders, Betsey Saunders, John Whitford, Davis Potter, $2 each, Vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ROAD WARRANTS.

A quantity of Road Warrants just printed and for sale at this office.

MILLINERY.

MISS SOWTER

RESPECTFULLY informs the inhabitants of De Ruyter and vicinity, that she has recently opened a shop two doors east of H. A & F. C. Dellay's Store, where she will be happy to receive the calls of customers. She will constantly keep on hand ready made Bonnets and Caps, or make to order, and hopes to merit a liberal share of public patronage.

N. B. Leghorn and Straw Bonnets cleaned and repaired in the neatest and most fashionable style.

.JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISH MENT

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.
De Ruyter, April 22, 1841.

Head Quarters for BOOTS & SHOES.
Wholesale and retail. As cheap as the cheapest and good as the best.

THE Public are invited to call and examine for themselves. He keeps on hand Fine and Coarse Boots and Shoes, of every description, Ladies French Buskins and single sole Slips, White and Black satin slips, made to order. The Ladies are invited to call and examine the latest New York fashions. 11 Utica St. Sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.
De Ruyter, April 26, 1841. 61tf

DE RUYTER, MAY 27, 1841.

ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, are receiving their supply of

Spring and Summer Goods,

Comprising an unusual variety, which they offer for Cash, Barter, or Approved Credit, on as favorable terms as can be purchased in this place. This place having been celebrated as the cheapest in the world, they think the above statement sufficiently comprehensive. Old and new customers are solicited to call and examine.

TO BUILDERS.

ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER are sole Agents in this place for the sale of Bliss' SASH AND WINDOW BLINDS, at Factory prices. Other sizes Sash and Blinds procured to order.

They have also on hand,
Pine Lumber and Shingles,
30 Kegs Swedes Iron Nails.
60 Boxes Window Glass, 7X9 to 12X18,
A large stock of Building Hardware,
Paints, Oil, Putty, &c.

10,000 Tin Pans,

Together with a large assortment of Tin Ware, at wholesale or retail, at as low prices as can be purchased in the State. Also,

Stoves, Pipe and Furniture,

For sale by ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER.
May 27.

Physicians and Families

Will find an extensive assortment of Medicines of the best quality, and at the lowest prices at the May 27. STONE STORE.

Elmore, Annas & Ayer,

Are Agents for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines.

Winslow's Balsam of Horehound.

For particular recommendations of the above article, please refer to the advertisement of the Sole Ag't.

Rev. J. Covert's Balm of Life,
Moffatt's Life Pills & Phenix Bitters,
Dr. Phinney's Family Pills,
Dr. Phelp's Compound Tomato Pills,
Miles' Compound Extract of Tomato Pills

With others too numerous to mention.
May 27. 65tf

LOOK TO YOUR INTEREST!

EXAMINE & BE CONVINCED!

S. D. DELLAY,

IS now opening his Spring Stock of Goods, among which may be found,

8,000 yds.	Calicoes,	from 4	to 25	cts.	per yd.
6,000 "	Sheeting,	" 7	" 12 1-2	"
1,000 "	Ticking,	" 12 1-2	" 25	"
1,000 "	French Mull,	" 20	" 50	"

Together with cords and piles of other Plain, Domestic and Fancy GOODS, consisting of too great a variety to be enumerated in a paper advertisement, which have been purchased for Cash at the present low state of the Market, and which he proposes

SELLING LOWER

than they can be bought elsewhere in Town, County, or State! He has also a complete assortment of Millinery Goods, such as

Leghorn, Straw, Silk, & Lawn Bonnets,

with every possible variety of Trimming. He would say to PHYSICIANS, that he has the largest and best selected assortment of MEDICINES ever before offered in this County, which he pledges himself to sell from 25 to 50 per cent Cheaper than they have ever before been offered.

TO FAMILIES,—He would likewise call the attention of Families to a choice selection of GROCERIES, which he will sell as LOW or LOWER than they can be bought elsewhere—HAMILTON not excepted. Also, Crockery, Hardware, &c. &c.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,
Too well known to need comment.

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s

MOTHER'S RELIEF.

A Pamphlet describing the merits of this highly popular and beneficial Medicine, will be given any one wishing to become acquainted with its qualities. The uniform success of this Medicine has rendered it the "Ne Plus Ultra" of the day. Medical gentlemen have had to acknowledge its benefits and yield to its sway.

DR. WATERMAN'S

RHEUMATIC AND STRENGTHENING PLASTER.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbants to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases; such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, and several other vegetable substances Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.

Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,
10,000 Bags,
10,000 pr. Socks,
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey,

☞For which the highest price will be paid ☜
De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63y1

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

New-York Cash Store.

H. J. WILLIAMS,

WOULD respectfully inform the inhabitants of De Ruyter, and vicinity, that he is receiving from New-York, at the Store in De Ruyter next door to Geo. W. Sutton's Shoe Store, on Utica Street, an extensive assortment of

Spring and Summer Goods,

Among which are French, English, and American Prints, of almost every variety of style and quality to be found in New-York Market; Bl'k, Blue-bl'k, Sinchew, Bonnet and Florence Silks, Printed and Plain Lawns, Book, Swiss, Jaconet, Cambrick and Mull Muslins; Bleached and unbleached Table Cloths, Crapes Broad Cloths, Cassimeres, Satinetts, Vestings, Hosiery, Bonnet Trimmings, and almost every other article usually kept in a country Store. Also, an assortment of Groceries, Crockery, Glass and Hardware.

H. J. W. would say that his system of business will be

One Price, and Ready Pay,

And he flatters himself, from his advantages in purchasing Goods, and system of selling, that he can afford Goods at as LOW PRICES as any establishment west of the City of New-York.

All who wish to purchase Goods on favorable terms, are respectfully invited to call and examine his Goods, and judge for themselves as to price and quality. 64tf

De Ruyter, May 17, 1841.

P. S. The Store will be closed on the seventh day of the week. H. J. W.

200

PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATIONS

OF THE

HOLY BIBLE,

CONSISTING OF

VIEWS IN THE HOLY LAND.

BY ROBERT SEARS.

THE Fifth Edition of the first volume of the above work is issued from the press of ROBERT SEARS, 122 Nassau Street, New York.

It is a book of 400 large octavo pages, and is done up in the neatest typographical manner, bound in muslin, and lettered in a superior style; containing over 200 engravings of an interesting and beneficial character.

Those wishing to subscribe for the above valuable work can be accommodated by applying to the subscriber, who has the agency for this town and vicinity. A specimen of the Book can be seen at this Office. The price is extremely low, for a book of the size, so well stored with interesting and useful matter, and reflects much credit, in every respect, upon its enterprising publisher. Subscriptions are respectfully solicited, and the work will be ordered immediately for as many hundred as may wish to avail themselves of this opportunity of making so rich an addition to their Family Libraries, at so small an expense. Price only TWO DOLLARS.

A. H. BURDICK, Agent.
Register Office, De Ruyter, April 30, 1841.

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 29 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street joining the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village. JAMES BAILEY.
De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

WANTED, an Apprentice to the Blacksmith Business. Apply to the subscriber.
HIRAM BABCOCK.
Scott, Cortland Co., May 11, 1841. 63w3

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.
GEO. W. SUTTON.
De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman.
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin, H. S. Crandall.
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick.
Scott—Joel Greene, Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
[illegible]—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Hopkinton.—Joseph Spicer, jun., P. M.
Westerly.—Jonathan Maxson.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh.—Isaac D. Titsworth
Salem.— David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport.—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield.—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis.
Jackson.—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

POETRY.

From the New Yorker.

Psalm xciii—3.

The floods lift up their voice!
Deep from all old Ocean's caves
Breaks the thunder of the waves—
Hark! how they rejoice!
Low 'mong Ocean's volleys creeping,
High into the heavens leaping;
Now they mirror forth the skies,
Now they shed the rainbow's dyes;
Rearing, bounding, laughing, glancing,
Foaming curling, marching, dancing;
Still they lift their voice on high,
Still they thunder to the sky;
And for ever is the theme,
The glory of the Great Supreme.

Their voice in joy doth burst:
The song which through their caverns rang,
When the young stars of morning sang—
They heard it at the first;
And though that tune was changed to wo
By dark rebellion, long ago,
Its first tones faintly echo now.
As when, among a thousand strings,
Which breathe in harmony each tone,
One only jars, and wildly flings
Forth on the air notes all its own;
Yet notes so sweet, they seem to be
Tones of some long-lost minstrelsy:
Such notes of joy do rise
From Ocean to the skies.

The dark floods speak in wrath!
Down on their face the thunders spring,
And o'er them with its scorching wing
The lightning makes his path.
The strong winds leap upon the deep,
The wild tornadoes madly sweep,
And the proud billows heed the nod,
To do the vengeful work of God.
Far down upon their floor of stone
The fragments of their wrath lie strown;
While ever, o'er their peaceful sleep,
The roaring, chafing waters sweep,
And wrathfully deep calls to deep.

The waters speak in love;
While on their breast the winds lie sighing,
Faint, as is the breath of dying:
How wantonly they move!
So sweet and quiet is their rest,
The stars are pillowed in their breast;
The ship across their surface flies,
Bearing unnumbered destinies;
And fins of speckled monsters shine,
Glancing through the laughing brine;
Many a bird like some sea-blossom,
Skims it quietly o'er its bosom;
All is peaceful, gentle motion,
Boundless, glorious, sleeping Ocean!
To man thou givest stores of wealth;
To him thy breath gives joy and health.
Ay, yes, in love
Thy voice doth move!
And yet, when tempests make their path,
Across thy face, thou hast a voice for wrath;
But still, whate'er thy tones may be, [Thee!
They ever thunder forth, Great God! the praise of Pecatonic, Ill., April, 1841. J. A. W.

Miscellaneous Department.

From Green's Miscellanies.

EDUCATION.

Human character is especially formed and developed in the exertions which men in general are constrained to make, to provide for necessities which they can not neglect or throw off. Here a thousand trials in a thousand forms arise. Here temptation lurks. Here enterprize, benevolence, integrity are sure to find the touch-stone. Whoever refuses to become familiar with these exertions, stands aloof from the scenes where human character is often developed in its most attractive or repulsive forms. Into these scenes, as an actor, let the student enter. To provide for daily wants, let him seek opportunities, form plans, put forth efforts. He will obtain a thousand just and striking views of the human heart. His own will sometimes meet him under aspects which he had never dreamed of. While he finds, in the most substantial forms, the relaxations which studious habits need, he will be cultivating some of the best attributes of Christian character He will learn to sympathize, moreover, deeply with his brethren in humble life, who of all men have the strongest claims on his affectionate regard. He will be happily prepared, whenever he may enter on his official course, to estimate their character, trials, various necessities. He will gain, moreover, at an early point in his career, a strong hold upon their sympathies. There is nothing common people hate more heartily than the lofty airs and imposing strut of the self-complacent student. They can not bear the sight of him. If he approaches them, their blood flows back upon their hearts, just as if with naked feet they had trodden on a serpent. But how soon they give their confidence to the man of letters, who when he has shut his book or thrown aside his pen, can cheerfully join with them in their humble labors. The axe, or spade, or scythe he wields, has all the magic virtues of a key to unlock the fountain of good feeling in their bosoms. Of all their brothers, they know not a dearer one than he. And when he would impress instruction, admonition, or reproof upon them, they will give him their naked hearts. He may freely lay his hand upon the very cords which shrunk from the touch of the stately scholar.

Besides, it should not be forgotten, that our independence depends as much upon the fewness of our wants, as upon the largeness of our resources. What a pitiable case, to be oppressed with the dead weight of a factitious helplessness!—Even honest crutches are better than foreign muscles. The student who depends upon the providence and labor of a score of servants—who glories in the baby whiteness, and plumpness, and softness of his frame—may, for aught I know, be preparing himself for some useful place. The milliner can tell. But the conversion of the world demands sterner stuff than he is made of. What could he do when brought into rough contact with the rank pride and gross selfishness which the reformer must encounter? Look upon John the Baptist. What burning truths he pours upon the hearts of wicked men around him! How plainly he instructs! How pointedly he warns! How sternly he rebukes! With what an iron grasp he fastens his hand upon the conscience! With what a strong arm he forces bad men to look into the mouth of hell! A thousand hearts quiver with emotion! A thousand bosoms burn with passion! A thousand faces flash with rage! Amidst the elements which war around him, the reformer stands like a rock amongst the waves. And for his position, the labors of the wilderness, with his locusts to eat, and his camel's hair to wear, had eminently fitted him.

The study of foreign tongues is eminently friendly to habits of attention. In intellectual discipline, one of the first things to be attempted, often, is to rouse the mind from indulged listlessness. It needs to be recalled from fruitless reveries, idle musings, vagrant flights. Among sights and sounds to which, from its earliest consciousness, it had been in some sort familiar, it feels no deep and stirring interest in any thing. The things it has to do with, it seems to know without effort or inquiry. Their forms float along before the eye like old acquaintance, without leaving behind any accurate and definite impression.—Nothing is carefully examined, distinctly seen clearly apprehended. Even the words and sentences of books glide along beneath the eye, without coming home to the soul as the intelligible representatives of substantial, living thoughts. I have seen men who would devour whole libraries, without attending to any thing they read. If by chance it came in their way, to Baley's dictionary they would give a regular perusal. What is better for such a state of mind than the study of a foreign language? Here every form and sound are new and strange: Nothing can be got by guessing. No materials are here for idle reveries. The things which come to view must be looked at, handled, weighed. Every form, under every aspect and relation, must come home to the busy thoughts. It will not do to leave the least turn or slightest shade unnoticed. Such neglect, where so much depends on little things, may work in explicable confusion. The things thus marked must be steadily contemplated. Nothing can be done by transient glances. Their forms must be engraven on the soul. They must be held fast, that they may be arranged side by side in such order as their relative significance and respective offices require. To perform such a task, the mind must give up its listlessness. It must renounce its vagrant habits. It must wake up its energies. It must gird itself to action. It must collect its forces and hold them long engaged. It can hardly fail to secure what Robert Hall justly regards as one of the most valuable of mental acquisitions, the habit of attention.

The doctrine seems to be extensively admitted, that both those who are imparting and those who are receiving the influence of a liberal education, ought to stand aloof from those great questions which may agitate the spirit and involve the happiness of nations. Especially should they beware of trying in any way to turn the stream of public sentiment into a new channel.—They ought to know that the sovereign people will not bear to see them touch such matters. Rank prejudice, gross deception, crushing violence, may prevail around them. The strong may trample on the weak. Iron-handed tyranny may throttle new victims every day, and while shedding human blood, may bid defiance to earth and Heaven. But they must not say a word. They may offend somebody.—Among their patrons may be found apologists for sin. And these men will not consent to see either the instructor or the student examining positions, carrying on discussions, admitting convictions, which may expose and condemn popular error and prevalent crimes. Tinkers, cobblers, and ditchers, may think freely and speak boldly. But they must learn to suppress their thoughts and tie up their tongues, unless they can join in the shout of the multitude around them!

Where such doctrine came from I shall not undertake to show. This I am certain of, that many of its advocates would see, if they would examine it, that it is drenched in absurdity and sin. What! Those who are devoted to intellectual labor; who are raised to a higher point of observation than their fellows; whose views of human relations, and duties, and prospects, are clearer, wider, more comprehensive; who are expected to take a leading part in the conversion of the world; these men must consent as teachers and pupils; to pass like rotton wood, or dead fish, down the stream of public sentiment! On, on they must go, straight or crooked, swiftly or slowly, now buried in the mud, and now whirled in the eddy, according to the pleasure of the element they float in! The rags which hang upon the beggar's limbs, and the ditch he sleeps in are better than such bondage!

What is the end of education? Is it not to wake up the soul, open the eyes on surrounding scenes, and train it happily to act its allotted part? And what can better rouse it than those stirring things which agitate the world? Let it now, in its appropriate place, mingle freely in the scenes where it must ere long expand its energies. Here let it try its powers, and prepare itself for action. Never fear that by so doing it will be less able to see into the sublimities, unravel the perplexities, and grapple with the difficulties of literature and science. The spirit girt for action, will accomplish any kind of intellectual labor with such ease and effect as the torpid mind never dreams of. Let those who are engaged in the work of education look upon themselves as an integral part of the busy world; let them take a deep interest in human weal and woe; let them, in their proper place, and to the full extent of their resources, exert themselves to bless mankind. Thus amidst the transactions of real life, let them seek the developement and ripening of their powers.

THE ATHENIANS.—The Athenians were a lively, polished and imaginative people. It is hardly exaggeration to say that they excelled in every thing. They touched nothing which they did not adorn. Posterity has been so lost in admiration of the monuments of their taste and genius; the works of their poets, orators, historians, painters, sculptors and architects, so far surpassed those of all other nations; that since the revival of letters, man has folded his arms in conscious inferiority, and been content to imitate what he could not hope to equal. If such has been his astonishment at what has been saved from the wreck what would have been his sensations, had the entire treasures of Grecian art and Grecian learning reached him in safety! The moral influence of this singular people has been more lasting than their political power. Its effects are visible in every portion of the civilized world at the present time: and if it has sometimes damped the ardor of invention and repressed the wings of genius, by presenting models which could not be excelled, it has upon the whole been productive of the most important and beneficial results. They were so superior to the rest of mankind, that many have not hesitated to attribute greater influence to soil, climate and geographical position in the formation of their character than they ever exerted. The same country inhabited by their descendants, so far from having been prolific in great men, sunk first into a Roman province, and in a latter age, the Moslem stalked without resistance over the consecrated gardens of Cimon and Miltiades.

Temperance Department.

The following is a full and accurate report of the speech of Mr. Hawkins, one of the "reformed drunkards" from Baltimore, at the great temperance meeting in Faneuil Hall, Boston:—

MR. HAWKINS' ADDRESS.

When I compare the past with the present—my days of intemperance with my present peace and sobriety—my past degradation with my present position in this Hall—the Cradle of Liberty—I am overwhelmed. It seems to me holy ground. I never expected to see this Hall. I had heard of it in boyhood. 'Twas here here that Otis and the elder Adams argued the principles of Independence, and we now meet here to declare ourselves free and independent; to make a second Declaration—not quite so lengthy as the old one, but it promises life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Our forefathers pledged their lives and fortunes and sacred honor; we, too, will pledge our honor, our life, but our fortunes have gone for rum! Poor though drunkards are, and miserable, even in the gutter, we will pledge our lives to maintain sobriety.

The cause of temperance! what is it, but the cause of humanity? I need not talk long to show its connection with humanity. I have suffered from every description of drunkenness—have borne the heat and burden of the day in rum-mills (grog-shops,) and know all about it—and I rejoice to say, in this Cradle of Liberty, that whereas I was once a drunkard I am now a sober man, and always mean to be.

I represent 2000 reformed drunkards, saved in one year, and now connected with the Washington Temperance Society of Baltimore and its auxiliaries. Our Society originated in a rum-mill where twenty of us, all drunkards, resorted. Our Pledge was drawn up, and first signed by six persons, who now stand firm in the cause—the President, Mr. Mitchell, is a host in himself. Our meetings are held every night in a week, and we find it as pleasant and good a way to spend our time as it ever was at a tavern; aye more pleasant, and in better company than in those little hells upon earth. At our meeting we don't sit and look at each other, and say nothing.—No! you can't keep us from talking. One said, "I feel better, though I am growing smaller and look pale: my ideas are clearer; I eat better, and feel happy." Another, "My wife is so happy, and every thing goes so nice at home; children rejoiced;" and so we went over the ground, telling our experiences, and we had none too much time, I assure you. We found enough to tell about ourselves, our homes and our old grog-shops, to make a long evening short. We would have no sectarianism, no politics or arguments. Whoever ventured on either was made to take his seat; he must tell his experience, and not another's—"Tell us how often you have been drunk, and what rum has done to you and your family; and how you now feel, and what cold water is doing for you."

Total abstinance is the basis—no proscription of men, ONLY THE LIQUOR. Men who sell rum may take our pledge and join us; and we would like well to have the man who sells 20 hogsheads a week come and attend our meetings, and if we did not give him enough I am mistaken.—He knows when the mechanic earns only twelve dollars a week and spends five of it at his tavern bar; he knows that he has taken his money and given no equivalent; and it is wrong to vend out an article that will send millions to a drunkard's grave. We cover all under rum and rum-mills.—You may talk of your gin and wine—it is no matter what you call it—we know there is no difference; you may as well drink one as another. Thirty years ago we drank every where, on all occasions, and the question we asked was, "does he keep a good bottle?" and when we could not get a good one, a bad one would do.

I was born of respectable parents, and was educated by a minister, and then bound out to the hatting business, in as perfect a grog shop as ever existed. A few days before I left Baltimore I found the old books of my master there were the names of sixty men upon it, and we could recollect but one that did not go to a drunkard's grave. Another hatter says it was just so on his books. At one time there were twelve of us apprentices; eight of the twelve have died drunkards, one is now in the alms-house in Cincinnati, one in the alms-house of Baltimore, one keeping tavern in Baltimore, and here am I.

For a while I was prosperous, notwithstanding I drank on; I did not expect the appetite to conquer me. Well, when 22 years old, in 1818, I went to the West.—As soon as away from parental care, I gave way, all went by the board, and my sufferings commenced. For six months I had no shoes, and only one shirt and one pair of pantaloons. Then I was a vagabond indeed. But I returned, ragged and bloated, to my mother's home. When I got to the edge of the town, I was ashamed even to walk on the ground of my nativity. In the dusk of evening I crept along to my mother's and was soon dressed up decently. My mother only said, "John, I am afraid you are bloated." I then drank nothing for a while; but it was so hard to do without, that at length I took a glass of ale, and all was over with me again; my appetite rushed on like a flood and carried all before it. And for fifteen years, time after time, I rose and fell; was up and down; would quit all, and then take a little glass. I would earn $15 a week, be happy and well, and with my money in hand start for home, and in some unaccountable way, imperceptibly and irresistibly, fall into a tavern, and think one glass only would do me good.—But I found a single glass of ale would conquer all my resolution. I appeal to all my fellow drunkards if it is not exactly so—if the one glass of any intoxicating drink does not annihilate, by revival of the appetite, all resolutions to resist drinking on. I am satisfied this appetite is rooted in me, and I never expect to get rid of it. It is like mercury in the thermometer—keep heat from it and it will rise at once.

June 13th last, I drank and suffered awfully—can't tell how much I suffered in mind—in body every thing, but in mind more. I drank dreadfully the two first weeks in June—bought by the gallon, and drank, and drank, and was about taking my life—drunk all the time. On the 14th, I was a wonder to myself; astonished I had any mind left, and yet it seemed in the goodness of God uncommonly dear. I laid in bed long after my wife and daughter were up, and my conscience drove me to madness. I hated the darkness of the night, and when light came I hated the light. I hated myself—my existence. I asked myself, "Can I refrain;" "is it possible."—Not a being to take my hand, and lead or help me along and say "YOU CAN." I was friendless; without help, or light; an outcast. My wife came up stairs and knew I was suffering, and asked me to go down to breakfast. I had a pint of whiskey, and thought I would drink; and yet I knew it was life or death with me as I decided.—Moderate drinkers, beware! Well, I told my wife I would come down presently.—Then my daughter came up and asked me down. I always loved her. More because she was the drunkard's friend—my only friend. And then she said, "Father, don't send me after whiskey to-day." I was tormented before, but this was an unexpected torture. I told her to leave the chamber, and she went down crying, and said to her mother, father is angry with me. Wife came up and asked me to take some coffee; I told her I did not want anything of her, and covered myself in bed. I soon heard some one enter the room, and I peeped out and saw it was my daughter. I then thought of past life; my degradation; misery of my friends; and felt bad enough. So I called her and said, "Hannah, I am not angry with you, and I shall not drink any more." She cried, and so did I. I got up and went to the cupboard and looked at the enemy, my whiskey bottle, and thought, "Is it possible I can be restored," and then turned my back upon it. Several times while dressing, I looked at the bottle but thought I should be lost if I yielded. Poor drunkard! there is hope for you.—You cannot be worse off than I was; not more degraded, or more of a slave to appetite. You can reform if you will. Try it—try it. I felt badly, I tell you. There are some here to-night, who know how I felt. I know you feel bad enough. I have talked to some of you. Some say we feel bad. Some, we feel better, and some say we feel FIRST RATE. Well, Monday next I went to the Society of Drunkards, and there I found all my old bottle companions. I did not tell any body I was going, not even my wife. I had got out of difficulty, but did not know how long I would keep out.—The six pounders of the society were there. We had fished together; got drunk together. You could not break us up when drunk. We stuck like brothers, and so we now we are sober One said here is Hawkin, the "regulator," the old brusier; and they clapped and laughed, as you do now. But there was no laugh or clapping in me. I was too sober and solemn for that. The pledge was read for my accommodation.—They did not say so, and yet I knew. They all looked over my shoulders, to see me write my name. I never had such feelings before. It was a great battle. I once fought the battle at North Point, and helped to run away too, but now there is no running away. I found the Society had a large pitcher of water—drank toasts and told experiences. There laid my plan; I did not intend to be a drone. Alcohol promised me every thing, but I found him a great deceiver, and now I mean to do him all the harm I can.

At eleven I went home. Because, when I staid out late, I always went home drunk. Wife had given me up again, and thought I would be home drunk again, and she began to think about breaking up and going home to mother's. My yard is covered with brick, and as I went over the brick my wife listened as she told me, to determine whether the gate-door opened drunk or sober, for she could tell, and it opened sober and shut sober; and when I entered, my wife was standing in the middle of the room to see me as I came in. She was astonished, but I smiled, as I caught her keen black eye. I told her quick; I could not keep it back. "I have put my name to the temperance pledge never to drink as long as I live." It was a happy time. I cried and she cried; we could not hush it, and our crying waked up our daughter, and she cried too. I tell you this that you may know how happy the reformation of a drunkard makes his family. I slept none that night, my thoughts were better than sleep. Next morning I went to see my mother, old as I was. I must go to see her and tell her of our joy. She had been praying twenty years for her drunken son. Now she said, "It is enough I am ready to die." It made all my connections happy.

The next thing was to determine what was to be done. My mind was to be blanted—character gone—was bloated, and I was getting old; but men who had slighted me came to my help again and took me by the hand, held me up, encouraged and comforted me. I'll never slight a drunkard as long as I live; he needs sympathy and is worthy of it, poor and miserable as he is. [illegible] not design to become a drunkard, [illegible] ple have too long told him [illegible] form; it is no use; he must [illegible] But now we assure him he can [illegible] need not live or die so, and [illegible] selves, 2000 in one year, [illegible] the fact. The poor wretch [illegible] med into the poor-house or prison, [illegible] he comes out meets temptation at every step—he begs you to succor him; but he is led by appetite and neglect, straight to the grog-shop. Drunkard! come up here, you can reform—take the pledge in this Cradle of Liberty, and be ever free! Delay not. I met a gentleman this morning, who reformed four weeks ago, rejoicing in his reformation. He bro't a man with him who took the pledge, and this man has already brought two others. This is the way we do the business up in Baltimore; we reform drunkards are a Committee of the whole on the State of the Union!! are all missionaries—don't slight the drunkard, but love him. No! we nurse him as the mother does her infant learning to walk. We go right up to him and say how do you do; and he remembers our kindness. I tell you be kind to him, and he never will forget you. He has peculiar feelings when the boys run after him and hoot at him;—take his part and he'll never forget it. He has better feeling than the moderate drinker don't lay a stumbling block in his way. One man—poor, miserable, wretched, ragged—a real wharf-rat—(I expect you have such here, we had plenty of them in Baltimore, but much lessened now,) he was a buster, about a year ago, his clothes not fit for paper rags, his family had nothing to eat, no fuel, not even clothes,—I'd give you his name, but won't trouble you, as he and his were not worth a "fip-ny-bit;"—well he told his brother he was going to quit and wanted him to go his security for a horse and cart, but he would not. Our members then went to his brother, and he was persuaded. He has paid for his horse and cart, his family and himself are well clothed, cellar full of wood, a barrel of flour; and he has become a gentleman and a Christian. All this in one short year.

Just let me tell you about one of our reformed men. We all of us changed a great deal in our appearance—some grew fleshy—some pale—but a dark complexioned man grew yellow, and the grog-seller, noticing the change in others, and seeing his old customer not becoming white, said he did not believe he had quit it altogether. The man heard of it, and prepared himself for an interview—so happened in his way.

These tavern keepers are apt to complain, say we do the man injury because we shared our money for the support of our families—quite villainous to be sure! And so they charge us with drinking a little; but I tell you that we keep close watch of each other, we are very loving, and we take care to get along side the mouth and know pretty well what has been going on then.

As I was going to tell you the taverner said to the member, "it appears to me you don't altar quite so much as some of the rest." "Don't I," said he, "well, why don't I," "Why, you don't look pale, you grow yallar. "I grow yallar you think?" "Yes." "Well," said the man, drawing out a handful of gold pieces from his pantaloons pocket, "these look yallar, too, but you don't get any more of them, they belong here, here," returning them to his pocket—"and my wife will have them—you'll get no more of them—that is the trouble with you."

These grog sellers know how to fix the drunkards—they understand their business—they keep a big platter of salt-fish—cheese herring and crackers to fix the appetite—all free—don't ask any thing, of course, for them; but when they see a man take hold and eat a little, they think they have him, he'll want to wash it down—he'll get started and he'll do well enough yet." Well, the stuff is very apt to stick in the throat, so it is washed down—and then the breath must be changed, and a little more fish or cheese is taken, and that must be washed out of the throat and so it goes. But if a man eats and don't drink, he is pretty sure to be told that that will not do.

This drinking has killed more men, women and children, than war, pestilence, and all other evils together. You cannot bring upon man so awful a curse as alcohol; it cannot be done; no machinery, or invention of death can work like it. Is there a moderate drinker who says he can use "a little," or "much," and "quit when he pleases?" I tell him from experience he can't do it. Well, he can, if he will, but HE WONT WILL that is the difficulty and there is the fatal mistake. Does he want to know whether he can? I ask him to go without his accustomed morning bitters or his 11 o'clock to-morrow, and he will find how he loves it! We have come up out of the gutter to tell him how he loves it, and how he may escape. It is the moderate use—the little, the pretty drink, the genteel and fashionable, that does the mischief—the moderate drinkers is training to take the place of the drunkard.

Go to Baltimore and see now our happy wives and families. Only look at our procession on the 5th of April, when we celebrated our anniversary. Six thousand men nearly half of them reformed within a year, followed by 2000 boys of all ages to give assurance to the world that the next generation shall all be sober. But where were our wives on the occasion? at home, shut up with hungry children in rags as a year ago? No, No! but in carriages, riding round the streets to see their sober husbands!

My family were in a hack and I carried apples, cakes, &c., to them, and my wife said, "how happy all look, why husband there is —— all dressed up—and only think, I saw old —— in the procession as happy and smart as any of them," and so she went on telling me who she had seen. And where do you think the grog seller's wives were? were they out? Not they! Some of them peeped out from behind their curtains! We cut down the rum tree that day in Baltimore, under ground: not on top of the ground, leaving a stump, but under the ground, roots and all!

We have not seen six drunkards staggering in the streets since we have been in Boston; and we have been all round, even [illegible] street. They must hide themselves. [illegible] are put into the House of Correction, [illegible] don't wonder that they hide. I said [illegible] I talked to them on the Sabbath over [illegible] that I wished I had a distiller at my right hand, and a rum-seller at my left, and let them answer the question, what brought all these here? and we would have the answer, now. This making the drunkard by a thousand temptations and inducements, and then shutting him up in a prison, is a cruel and horrible business. You make the drunkard, and then let him come into your house and you turn him out; let him come to the church and you turn him out; friends cast him off; the grog-seller turns him out when his money is gone, or midnight comes. When he serves his time out in the prison, he is turned out with the threat of a flogging if he is ever caught again; and yet you keep open the place where he is entangled and destroyed. You are bound to turn the whole tide of public opinion against the traffic. The seller will pour down your son's throat a tide of liquor, and you do so [illegible] and he would cut your throat. Ask him if he is willing you should make his daughter a drunkard? and why should he make your son one?

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. [illegible], as a Drugist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

De Ruyter, April 22, 1841.

Head Quarters for BOOTS & SHOES.

Wholesale and retail. As cheap as the cheapest and good as the best.

THE Public are invited to call and examine for themselves. He keeps on hand Fine and Coarse Boots and Shoes, of every description. Ladies French Baskins and single sole Slips, White and Black satin slips, made to order. The Ladies are invited to call and examine the latest New York fashions. ☞Utica St Sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.

De Ruyter, April 26, 1841. 51tf

ROOF'S SPECIFIC.

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c.☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT.

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cracked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.

ELISHA STILLMAN.

De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

FRESH GARDEN SEEDS.

A GOOD assortment of FRESH GARDEN SEEDS, just received, and for sale at this office. Register Office, Feb. 19, 1841.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,

BY

JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

VOL. II.—NO. 15.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. [WHOLE NO. 67.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, JUNE 11, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Religious Discussion.

For the Register.

Reasons for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity.

NO. VI.

MR. EDITOR.—In this number I shall examine the application of the title, God, to our Lord Jesus Christ. It is admitted that this is, in a few instances, applied to him; but in a subordinate sense. In several of the passages adduced as examples of its application to him, the meaning is misapprehended as I purpose to show.

The most prominent of the passages claimed as containing this ascription, is John 1, 2. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God." It is evident that by the Word here is meant Christ in his pre-existent state; and it is also evident that he is called God. But I contend that he is so called in a subordinate sense. Trinitarians will not deny that this title, as well as Lord, is often applied in this sense. Therefore, to sustain their opinion of Christ, it must be shown that it is given him in its highest or supreme meaning. It is sufficient for my purpose to show that it may be here applied in the subordinate sense; but it is necessary for them to show that it must be applied in the supreme sense. This is required by the nature of the position which they assume. In favor of the modified or subordinate sense of this title as applied to the Word, I would observe,

1. That it is often used in this sense, being applied to magistrates and angels, and hence, may be so applied here; unless there be something in the nature of the subject, or in the connection, which necessarily forbids, which it is conceived there is not.

2. It must be here applied in the subordinate sense; else the Evangelist affirms the existence of two Supreme Gods, which is absurd and impossible; for here is one God with another. The Word, who is said to be God, was in the beginning with God. If, therefore, he is called God in the supreme sense, he was God supreme with another who was God in the same sense; from which the inference would be that there are two supreme Gods. Besides; one and the same being cannot be with himself. The supposition is a glaring absurdity. It is not said that one person in the Godhead was with another person; but that one who is called God was with another who is likewise so called. So that the passage speaks of two distinct Gods, one of which alone can be supreme, and the other must be subordinate. And this statement is just as consistent as that of two Lords; one original and absolute, and the other made, or constituted, crucified, raised and exalted, which is certainly the doctrine of the Bible. Moreover, the title God, is no more restricted to the Supreme Being in the Greek and Hebrew languages than the title, Lord. It is unreasonable, therefore, to deny, or ridicule the mention of two distinct beings, both called God, in this passage, when "there are gods many, and lords many," although there is but one God in the supreme sense. If magistrates and angels are called gods, with much more propriety may the Word be so called, though he be but "the Beginning of the creation of God," seeing that God hath "set him over the works of his hands."

3. The current, unequivocal doctrine of the scriptures, that the Father of Jesus Christ is, "the only true God," requires us to take the application of this title to the Word in the subordinate sense.

4. All the proofs of Christ's inferiority to the Father, with which the scriptures abound, as we have seen in former numbers, require the modified sense of this title, on which I insist.

5. This sense is very clearly sustained by the omission of the Greek article before the title, Theos, (God,) when applied to the Word, whereas it is placed before this title in both the instances in which it is applied to the Father. The title, God, is mentioned three times in these two verses —in the first and last of which, the article is prefixed—in the second it is omitted. And this peculiarity, which is not observable in the common version, evidently has an important bearing upon this subject: especially when the facts concerning the Greek article are duly considered, viz: that there is but one article in that language, whereas we have two in the English: that the Greek article answers the same purpose, or nearly the same as the definite article the, in the English; and that where the article in Greek is omitted, the substantive may be rendered in English without an article, or with the indefinite article, a, as the nature of the subject requires. Accordingly the word, Theos, without the article, is sometimes rendered simply "God," and sometimes "a God." As specimens of the latter rendering, I will refer the reader to Acts xii. 22. When the people said concerning Herod's oration that it was the voice of "a god": and ch. xxviii. 6, where the inhabitants of Melita, having changed their opinion concerning Paul, said that he was "a god." In both cases, the article in Greek is omitted, and the indefinite in English very properly supplied. Whereas, when the article is prefixed to this title, as 'o Theos, it is frequently rendered "the God"; but not uniformly, as the English idiom and the construction of sentences will not always admit of it; though it should have been rendered with the article much oftener than it is. Moreover, the modern restriction of the title, God, to the Supreme Being, renders the phrase, "the God," rather awkward, and unnatural, while the phrase, "the Lord," is retained as correct and proper: but anciently, the phrase, the God, was as familiar to a Greek ear, denoting the Supreme Being, as the phrase, the Lord, is to an English ear now. To this illustration of the use of the Greek article, and which the principles of interpretation elsewhere adopted will clearly warrant, I will subjoin the following translation of these verses, which will give the full sense of the Greek, viz: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with the God, and a God was the Word. The same was in the beginning with the God." I have inserted the indefinite article before God, as the title given to the Word, because the sense obviously requires it. Without the article, the clause would read, "and God was the Word," or transposed as in the common version, "and the Word was God"; but not "the God," as in the other two instances in which this title is employed. This use, therefore, of the article in the same connection in two instances, when the title in question is applied to the Supreme God, and its omission when it is applied to the Word, most clearly evince, (if the article has any significancy,) a modified sense of the title when referred to the Word.

6. This construction is not affected by the subjoined declaration, "that all things were made by him," their creation being attributed to him only as God's agent, which will be shown in a future number.

I will next examine John xx. 28. "And Thomas answered and said unto him, my Lord and my God." It is by no means certain that either of these titles is here applied to Christ. The passage may be; yea, probably is, nothing more than the language of grateful surprise addressed to the Father. This reference is not prohibited by the words, "Thomas said unto him"; for a similar mode of expression was used by Jonathan in addressing David, 1 Sam. xx. 12. "And Jonathan said unto David, O Lord God of Israel." But it is evident that he did not apply this title to David. It was an address to God, though he is said to have spoken thus to David. So, Thomas, though he said thus to Christ, might have presented the address in grateful surprise to the God and Father of Christ, who had, (as he now saw,) raised him from the dead. Or we may suppose, without any violation of the rule of interpretation, that the first title, Lord, was given to Christ, and the second to his Father. As, "O my Lord," and "O my God," referring to different persons, or beings, and not to one and the same. It would not be strange for him to rise from addressing the Master whom he now saw alive, to address that God who had interposed and raised him up. Or, if it be necessary to understand both these titles as applied to Christ, there is nothing which absolutely forbids both being understood, in a modified or subordinate sense. I see nothing, however, which makes this necessary, and hence, prefer one of the other interpretations.

Again, Rom. ix. 5. "Whose are the fathers, and of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ came, who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen." It is strenuously contended that the title, God, is here applied to Christ, and that in the supreme sense. Its application to him, however, is very questionable: but if it be applied to him, it will not necessarily follow that it is applied in the supreme sense. If he be represented as "God over all," it is by the Father's gift and appointment, and therefore the declaration must be made in a modified sense. This dominion over all is uniformly represented as derived. And there is one being that he is not set over, viz: God, the Father, "who put all things under him." It is very obvious to me, however, that this passage should be differently punctuated, so as to make a full stop after the words, "over all"; and that the remainder of the verse was intended as a new sentence, and a doxology to the Father. The verb, be, being supplied, which, according to the Greek idiom, was often omitted, it will read, "God be blessed forever. Amen." The word, Amen, shows that it is a doxology. And if so, all difficulty is removed. The strain of thought also naturally inspired a doxology, as it did 1 Tim. i. 17. As to the punctuation, every man of literature knows that it is of recent origin, and therefore may be amended, if necessary, to the sense.

Again, 1 Tim. iii. 16. "And without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, believed on in the world, received up into glory." It is often incorrectly said, in reference to this text, that Christ is called "God manifest in the flesh"; for he is not here so called. Admitting the common reading to be the true one, all which is affirmed is that "God was manifest (or rather manifested, as in the Greek,) in the flesh," which statement conveys a very different idea from the other. And it necessarily means no more than that God was revealed, declared or made known in or by him; not that he was God himself. This, therefore, is far from being a plain ascription of the title to him. But what renders this passage peculiarly unavailing as proof of the Supreme Deity of Christ, is that it is very questionable whether we have the true reading. Doctor Clarke and others assure us that there are three different readings in the original MSS. Some have the reading adopted by the translators: some have which instead of God, viz: "which was manifested," referring to the mystery: others have "who," or "he who," &c. Griesback and others have adopted the last as having a claim to the highest authority. The claims to each of these readings are detailed at length in Doct. Clark's Commentary. It is highly probable to me that the inspired copy read either which or who, and not that God was manifested in the flesh. But if the last is the true reading, it fails of proving the point for which it is adduced.

It is contended, also, that Christ is called "the great God," Titus ii. 13. "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." The argument here is based upon the omission of the Greek article before Savior; and hence it is plead that he is identified with the great God. The rule referred to is this, that when two names are coupled together in Greek by the conjunction, kai, i. e., and; and the article is placed before the first, and omitted before the second, both refer to the same person, or thing. But proper names, and things which are manifestly dissimilar, are acknowledged exceptions to this rule. It needs only to be said, therefore, that the instance before us is an exception to this rule. It is so upon both of the grounds mentioned. Besides, the Greek phrase, rendered, "the glorious appearing of the great God," strictly means, "the appearing of the glory of the great God." This corrected rendering, serves to corroborate the distinction between the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. The rule referred to cannot be made, in any view, to sustain the opinion that Christ is identified here with the great God: whereas this rule, in its ordinary operation, would give a Unitarian charter to many passages, the meaning of which is obscured by the want of a proper regard to it in translating. Thus, for instance, the phrase, "God and the Father," which frequently occurs, if translated according to this rule, would be "the God and Father," identifying the Father with God, and not making the one any more or less than the other.

I pass to the consideration of Heb. i. 8. "But unto the Son he saith, thy throne, O God, is forever and ever." If this be a correct translation, the title, God, is obviously here applied to Christ; but it is equally obvious from the succeeding verse, that it is applied to him in the subordinate sense. "Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity: therefore, God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." Here the being addressed as God, is represented as having a God, and hence, cannot be called God in the supreme sense. The whole passage explains itself. But there is good reason for adopting another rendering of this passage, viz: "God is thy throne forever and ever," i. e., the author and supporter of Christ's throne, in the same sense that he is said to be, "our life," i. e., the source and fountain of it. But neither translation gives it any force as a Trinitarian argument.

Again, it is often affirmed that Christ is called "the true God," 1 John v. 20. "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding that we may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life." In meeting this argument, I reject, in the first place, the supplied word, "even," before the clause, "in his Son," as of no authority, and then it will read, "and we are in him that is true, in his Son Jesus Christ";—in other words, we are in the Father in or through the Son, which is the common sentiment of the Bible. By "him that is true," (or "the true one," as it might be rendered,) we are most certainly to understand the Father of Christ; and not Christ himself. The declaration, therefore, that "this is the true God and eternal life," is plainly predicated of the Father, called "him that is true," and not of Christ. The plea for referring the pronoun, "this," to Jesus Christ, rests simply upon the fact that he is the nearest antecedent: whereas it is a known principle that the nearest is not always the true antecedent. If we should invariably apply a pronoun or a relative to the nearest antecedent, we should make dreadful work with the scriptures, and with the works of all authors. The sense must determine whether the nearest, or the more remote antecedent is the true one. Here it determines that the more remote is the true antecedent. This reference is required by the character given to the Father in the previous clause, viz: "Him that is true;" and by Christ's own express testimony, John xvii. 3, that the Father is "the only true God"—yea, by the current language of the Bible.

There are several other passages which I can only glance at, viz: Acts xx. 28. Some of the most approved MSS. have "church of the Lord" instead "of God." This I have no doubt is the true reading; and if so, it removes all difficulty; for the Lord, Christ, was killed and raised again. But allowing the present reading to be correct, the pronoun, "he," may be naturally referred to the Lord Jesus in the 24th verse as the true antecedent. This reference is indispensable; for God had no blood to shed. There is, therefore, no application of the title God, here, to Christ. The charge of the Jews, John x. 33, that Jesus "made himself God," rested wholly on a misconstruction of his words, which the connection clearly shows. And their declaration, ch. v. 18, that "he made himself equal with God," was as unfounded as the one that "he had broken the Sabbath." He had done neither.

Isa. ix. 6, in which it is said he should be called "the mighty God, the everlasting Father," may be explained on the same principle with other significant Hebrew names already noticed Besides, the Hebrew article or prefix is wanting. Hence, instead of "the mighty God," we should simply have "mighty God," or "a mighty God," which does not necessarily denote Supreme Deity; for a similar title is applied to Abraham, Gen. xxiii. 6, and translated "a mighty prince." The other title signifies no more than that he should be a perpetual father of his people. The title, Immanuel, Matt. i. 23, is also explained on the principle of significant names as above. And Phil. ii. 6, in which it is said in the common version that Christ "thought it not robbery to be equal with God," there is such an evident mistranslation, as requires a particular exposure, although in certain respects he might be said to be equal with God, though not in all. The Greek word signifying equal is isos, whereas the word employed is isa, which means like or as. This simple correction takes away its force as an argument for the real Deity of Christ, for he might have existed on, "in the form of God," without taking upon him "the form of a man." But there is, in reality, another correction required. The Greek phrase, "ouch arphagmou eegeesato," rendered, "thought it not robbery," properly means, "did not think of the robbery." There is nothing answerable to the pronoun, it, in the Greek. The whole passage, correctly rendered, would read, "who being in the form of God, did not think of the robbery to be like or as God; but emptied, or divested himself" &c., which is a beautiful illustration of his benevolence and humility. Thus, the proof of Christ's Supreme Deity from the application of the title, God, to him, and also from his supposed claim of equality with God, utterly fails.

I close this number with a full conviction that Christ is seldom called God in the scriptures, and never in a sense which implies Supreme Divinity.

Very respectfully yours.
JABEZ CHADWICK.
Weedsport, May, 1841.

Moral Reform Department.

From the New York Evangelist.

AMERICAN FEMALE MORAL REFORM SOCIETY.

SECOND ANNIVERSARY.

Abstract of the Secretary's Report.

The Press.—The Advocate of Moral Reform has been continued as the organ of the Society, edited, as heretofore, exclusively by a lady. The average issue per month for the year, has been 33,000 papers, equal to 264,000 quarto pages. Besides the Advocate, 10,000 copies of the last annual report, in a tract form, have been printed, making 120,000 duodecimo pages. These added to about 600,000 pages of tracts published during the year, make a total amount of printed matter issued by the Society since the last annual meeting of 13,392,000 duodecimo pages, equal to 44,300 duodecimo volumes of 300 pages each.

Auxiliary Societies.—The number of societies organized during the year is 36; making in all 555; and comprising between 40 and 50,000 members. 56 life members have been added to the list during the year. Whole number 282. About 40,000 petitions have been placed on the files of the Legislature of this State, (the majority collected during the year,) praying the Assembly to enact a law for the effectual suppression of houses of death, and like violations of the Decalogue. Many highly respectable gentlemen, who exert a wide influence both in Church and State, have aided in this work by signing a memorial addressed to the Legislature, in behalf of the same object.

Office of Direction.—This department has been sustained through the year as usual, and many of the deserving, who are orphans and fatherless, have been aided through this channel.

Visiting Committee.—Two efficient female missionaries have been employed during the year, who have visited over 5000 different families, had personal conversation and given tracts and papers to more than 20,000 individuals, obtained several hundred temperance pledges, and between 2 and 3000 names to the petitions to our State Legislature. The labors of our missionaries are confined to no particular district, consequently the results cannot be definitely known on earth. Those at all acquainted with the statistics of this great city—the temporal and spiritual wants of the poor, the ignorant, the sick, the degraded and the dying, scattered everywhere among its population of 300,000 souls, will not need to be told that notwithstanding the monthly labors of the tract visiter, there remains neglected ground on every hand, sufficient not only to employ the energies of two missionaries, but of hundreds. 22 hopeful conversions have been reported as the result of these labors during the year, making 84 since the commencement of the work. Of some of these it may be truly said, had not their steps been thus arrested, they would now have been in all probability either swelling the ranks of infamy on earth, or joining in the endless wailings of the lost.

Bethel Department.—Mr. S. B. Halliday in the prosecution of his labors as Bethel missionary of the Society, has visited 971 vessels, held personal conversation with the officers and crews, when practicable, has distributed 78,000 pages of tracts, and 5,783 numbers of the Advocate. He has also placed a religious library of some 300 volumes, on board the U. S. steamship Fulton.

[For further statements from this report, the reader is referred to the columns of the periodical published by the Society.]

After the reading of the report, Rev. S. S. Smith, of Newton, Mass., was introduced to the audience, and in an interesting speech vindicated the principles of the Society. He poured merited rebuke on the inconsistency of those who associate with profligate men, while they turn with loathing from the society of abandoned women, and made the audience feel, that the seducer was more to be dreaded and abhorred than the gambler, the thief, or the midnight assassin.

He was succeeded by the Rev. E. S. Taylor, of the Mariner's church, Boston. Those who had the privilege of listening to his truly eloquent appeal in behalf of seamen, can never forget their claims, or the causes which have operated to make them what they are, a proverb and a byword among all classes of the community. No report can do justice to the sparkling, glowing, burning eloquence of Mr. Taylor; it can be only understood and appreciated by those who have listened to him in the moments of his power, and felt the magic effect of those "thoughts that breathe, and words that burn."

The influence of mothers and of women generally, was most thrillingly alluded to by the speaker, who had himself never known a father's counsel, or a mother's tenderness and care. At the close of his address, when all hearts were moved, Mr. T. made an appeal to the purses of those present, after which a collection was taken, amounting to $60 92.

Rev. Elon Galusha, of Western New York, whose name had been announced as one of the speakers on this occasion, rose after the collection was taken, and in a few admirably chosen words, excused himself on account of the lateness of the hour, and the high state of feeling produced by Mr. Taylor's address, from detaining the audience longer. His apology was such as to induce all present to wish for the privilege of listening to a speaker so deservedly popular, as a champion of truth and holiness.

The doxology was then sung, after which the meeting was adjourned, with the benediction of Elder Galusha, pronounced in a most solemn and touching manner.

Religious Department.

From the Watchman of the Valley.

THE PRAYER MEETING.

THE SCENE.

"No! I will not read that article. The prayer meeting! Give me a topic of interest and importance."

Sayest thou so, reader! If thou art a Christian, thou hast communion with Jesus. If thou hast communion with Jesus, thou lovest the prayer meeting. Attend then.

It was in Jerusalem. Sacred city! my heart bounds at thy memory. Blessed thou hast been, accursed thou art, praise to Jehovah, glorious thou shalt be.

The shades of the third evening, since the awful tragedy approach. Calvary is yet crimsoned with His blood, who came from heaven. He spake, to create a world. Highest of wonders—He died to redeem.

"Crucify him! crucify him!" This was the infuriated cry, but its echoes have died away among the distant hills. The frenzy is over. Deep thoughts and now fearful, occupy that multitude. What meant those strange portents? Those throes of nature? That mid-day gloom? That riven veil? And now, that mysteriously vacated sepulchre? The guards were all there: sixty Romans inured to watching. Swords were drawn, and lances poised.—Each one of those sixty, if he slept, slept on penalty of death. Yet, the great seal is broken. The massive rock is rolled away. The body is gone. Where? How? "Ah, perhaps"—the people begin to reason—but hush! the Rulers will hear it. Even the steel-hearted Pharisees have some misgivings.

In a retired street lives a disciple. No chronicle of earth transmits his name. Sufficient, that it is known in heaven. Thither resort the desponding ten. Mary had indeed told them that she had seen the Lord. But can they believe impossibilities? "Seen the Lord! And so have we seen him—pale, ghastly, a corpse. We have buried him." Yet, a common woe unites their heart. They mingle their tears, and bow down to pray. Oh, what a relief to pour out our sorrows before God.

Methinks that tremulous voice is Peter's. It seems as one coming from a heart of grief. Or so subdued, and yet so earnest, is it his, who reclined upon the sacred bosom, when Iscariot coldly asked, "is it I?"

Remember, the Church prayer meeting is no novelty. It is not beneath thy notice. It ought to have thy presence. Apostles gave it theirs.
S. D.

THE APOSTLES NOT IMPOSED UPON.—That the Apostles could not be imposed upon themselves, is evident from what has been already said concerning the nature, and number and publicness of our Saviour's miracles. They conversed from the beginning with our Saviour himself; they heard with their ears, and saw with their eyes; they looked upon and they handled with their hands of the Word of Life, as St. John expresses it, 1 John i. 1. They saw all the prophecies of the Old Testament precisely fulfilled in his life and doctrine, his sufferings and death. They saw him confirm what he taught, with such mighty and evident miracles, as his bitterest and most malicious enemies could not but confess to be supernatural, even at the same time that they obstinately blasphemed the Holy Spirit that worked them. They saw him alive after his Passion, by many infallible proofs, he appearing, not only to one or two, but to all the eleven, several times, and once to about five hundred together. And this, not merely in a transient manner; but they conversed with him familiarly for no less than forty days; and at last they beheld him ascend visibly into heaven; and soon after, they received the Spirit, according to his promise. These were such sensible demonstrations of his being a teacher sent from heaven, and consequently, that his doctrine was an immediate and express revelation of the will of God; that if the Apostles, even though they had been men of the weakest judgments and strongest imaginations that can be supposed, could be all and every one of them deceived in these several instances, —men can have no use of their senses, nor any possible proof of any facts whatsoever, nor any means to distinguish the best attested truths in the world from enthusiastic imaginations.—Dr. Samuel Clarke.

Pride is a vice, which, pride itself, inclines every man to find in others, and to overlook in himself.

If we hide our talent in the earth, we shall lose our treasure in heaven.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, June 11, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

Removal.

Eld. STILLMAN COON has removed to Milton, Rock Co., Wiskonsan. His correspondents will address him accordingly.

Education.

Much is said at the present time about Education. We hear of a genteel Education; of a finished Education; of a liberal Education; a religious Education; a legal Education; a medical Education; a ministerial Education; a common Education, etc., etc., etc. But, after all these, there is, in our opinion, but one kind of Education that merits attention and cultivation, which may eventually assume any of the channels above-mentioned; and this is a useful Education.

To know in what Education consists, let us look for a moment at the definition of it; as a Dictionary is, when properly used, a valuable book. Webster tells us that Education signifies, "to bring up as a child; to instruct; to INFORM and ENLIGHTEN the UNDERSTANDING; to instil into the mind principles of arts, sciences, morals, religion and behavior."

We infer from this that Education does not consist in having spent a certain time at infant school; at grammar school; at an Academy; at College; at the dancing school, and in foreign countries; but that actual acquired knowledge of a certain character is requisite to fulfil what Dr. Webster had in view when he penned the above definition. Neither is a long catalogue of words or books committed to memory an Education; because, to inform and enlighten the understanding, is a prominent point in the definition already given.

To acquire a useful Education, it seems necessary to store the mind with facts and principles, so arranged and laid away in the store-house of memory, as to be readily called forth when required for use. The mind, burthened with the memory of all the words which conveys to it notions of things, is disabled from correct action when the principles are required; inasmuch as it has labored to preserve the signs rather than the substance; thus, this knowledge is rendered useless, and the person so educated is liable to be led astray by those who arrange their sentences in the best order; hence he is little better than the one who relies entirely on the report of others, because it is too much trouble to look into it himself. Neither can he lay claim to a useful Education.

We believe a right kind of Education to consist in so informing and enlightening the mind as to enable it to judge correctly on all subjects brought before it. To this end, a knowledge of many things is indispensable, which can be obtained of a useful kind only by particular attention to the principles on which the different subjects are based, rather than a memory of the opinions and dates of all the authors who have written on the same.

To learn to think and examine for ourselves, is the most important part of an Education; and while we are striving to attain this end, it does not follow that we should show ourselves sceptical on all subjects; but examine thoroughly, and judge from the principles of things; thus we shall arrive at just conclusions, and seldom be carried away by the vain fantasies of those who, to investigate a subject, would shrink from it as from the task of removing a mountain.—Might it not be well for all to ask themselves the question, can I render a substantial reason for all the opinions to which I give assent? And if all should answer in the light of truth, should we not see less thoughtless ones, particularly on religious subjects? Do they not show by this thoughtlessness that they have not been thoroughly Educated? To us the religion of the Bible seems to be reasonable—to be a natural religion—which all the works of creation go to prove. For, who cannot read the hand of a God in the works of nature, as also his wisdom and goodness? Surely, he who cannot, must be deficient in Education. His parents and teachers may not have learned him to reason for himself; they have not expanded his mind by boughs from the tree of knowledge; and he grovels in ignorance, though he may have gone through all the ceremonies of the Schools.

Yes, the perfect harmony of Creation in all its parts, from the unwieldly Elephant to the most tiny insect—from the loftiest tree to the most tender plant—from the immense orbs that wheel in space, to the most minute particle of Earth's constituent atoms, all teach us a lesson of reason in their harmonious constructions. And when we turn to the Bible, we find here the same harmony existing; and the rules and precepts here laid down are of the most reasonable kind, and all calculated to make us lead peaceable and happy lives, if we would but follow their teachings.

Let us turn, then, and seek an Education—one that shall do us good—one from which we may learn the end for which we were made, and one which will help us to attain that end.

Temperance.

The cause of Temperance seems to have received a new impulse within the last few months, in every section of the country, and truly cheering is the intelligence that each week brings of the onward progress of this benevolent and redeeming enterprise. Much, very much, of the health and happiness of man in this life may be attributed to the benefits arising from total abstinence from all that can intoxicate; and surely the moral and religious character cannot be injured by that which tends to make men peaceable and good citizens, but fits them to fill their places here, and does not hinder them from passing to the joys of the blest in a world of spirits.

May we not be permitted to see the car again begin to move in De Ruyter and vicinity?

At a meeting of the citizens of this village, on Tuesday evening last, to consider the propriety of holding a celebration of the fourth of July, it was unanimously "Resolved, that we do celebrate." A committee of arrangements was chosen, who will probably soon announce the plan of operations, when an opportunity will be offered to all who feel an interest in giving an entertainment of the kind to contribute; as a very small sum from all the heads of families will enable the committee to provide a collation that will be truly pleasant.

We hope all will feel an interest in procuring such a treat as shall do honor to the citizens of this town and vicinity.

For the Register.

I-ism.

I is clearly the most important character of whom men speak, or for whom they act, or with whom they have to do; yet, in the estimation of nearly all men, none bear so high a reputation as I. The opinions of I are correct; the conduct of I is praiseworthy; and I is the moving spring to all that is good or great: And, in fine, I is all, and in all. Now, who will contradict what I have said? or who will dare say that I have mistaken the character of I? I am confident that I have a correct understanding of I, and I's views and feelings; and I am ready to affirm that what I have said cannot be controverted.

I has a variety of ways to exhibit I to advantage; but I is seen to do it in one way if not in another; and in the end I takes the palm. One thing, however, is unfortunate with I, that takes away much of the praise that I would otherwise have, viz: that I is frequently i-solated, and obliged to contend alone. And I is not a little perplexed that men do not appreciate his talents or opinions, and sometimes almost wishes to be out of the world because others are so stupid as not to see, and think, and act as I do.

I-ism is contemptible in a man, however much praise is otherwise due to him. If it is not endurable in a man who makes no pretensions to any thing better, how much more so must it be in one who has declared that Jesus is worthy to be all in all? Such a thing as egotism, or pride of opinion, should never be so much as known among christians. Let Christ have the noblest place in every heart.

EGO.

Missionary Department.

For the Register.

The Home Missionary Society.

BR. BAILEY.—In your paper of the 14th inst., I observe an article relative to the Home Mission Society, in which the Executive Committee of said Society are unceremoniously held up to public odium, and which it becomes me, as Chairman of that Committee, to answer. Believing you unwilling to allow any of your brethren to be condemned, (in the Register,) UNHEARD; I trust you will give this a place in your columns.

Your correspondent seems to have been unhappy in his choice of a fictitious title; for his lines seem rather the traces of an armed assailant, than the witness of an unbiased "SPECTATOR."

In making our defense to such insinuations and charges, details and explanations will be required to satisfy minds aroused to indignation by the article referred to.

As a Committee, we were ignorant of our appointment until some time in December, and equally ignorant of the Society's affairs until called together by Br. COCHRAN on the 11th of January. In calling us together, Br. C. said he did not hold himself responsible to the Executive; but for the interest of the cause, he wished to lay before us his knowledge of the Society's affairs, no less than to secure the counsel of the Committee in his own case.

To this end he gave a brief summary of the Society's deliberations at its last session, and the OBJECT of his appointment. He said it was expressly understood that he should not consider himself an AGENT TO COLLECT, but a MISSIONARY TO LABOR. This he was quite sure was done without a knowledge of the Society's liabilities, or the state of the Treasury. His reasons for this, in part, were, that no report was made to the Society from its Executive, or Treasurer. And, he subsequently learned that Br. D. Clawson had an order on the Society for some $80; Br.'s J. Greene and J. Bailey for about $400. The church at Persia, $25, besides claims of Br.'s N. V. Hull and S. Coon for labors performed more than 2 years since; and he thought there were some others not here enumerated, amounting in all to a debt of near $600, with no funds in the Treasury.

Thus circumstanced, he asked the OPINION of the Committee, whether it would be prudent to proceed on his appointment under so many embarrassments in addition to those mentioned in his letter published on the 23d ult. He further stated that he was advised by brethren at the East, not to make that part of his tour till the latter part of his Missionary year, as they should then hope to be better able to meet his necessities.

Again, he said so much of the time had already passed away, that if he undertook to go through the field marked out for him, he must be principally occupied in traveling from one station to another, and he thought the Society had already spent too much in traveling expenses, and paying Missionaries for time spent in traveling.

Another consideration was found in a pressing call for Br. C.'s labors in an afflicted church, near at hand, where such labors promised as much for the good of Zion as if he were under the Society's patronage. Moreover, it was evident that his own mind was adverse to prosecuting the Mission, thereby more deeply involving the Society, already sufficiently weighed down with debt.

With these facts, and others too numerous to detail, crowding upon our attention, it appeared to us, the good of the cause might as effectually be secured by addressing the Society through the Register, with the co-operation of the local agents, supposing that elsewhere, as here, nearly as much "might be collected in the ordinary way" as by a traveling agent, and at a saving of his expenses, which would be likely to eat up a great share of the amount collected.

Hence, individually, by the members of the Committee, the OPINION was expressed to Br. C., (for it was only an OPINION that he asked,) with a full understanding "that it did NOT come within the range of their duties to countermand any orders of the Society," "AND FOR SUCH A COURSE," the Executive must be drawn out before the public, charged with thwarting the Society in its labors of love, and to seal their condemnation and consign them to infamy. The minutes of the Society must be copied, with an INSINUATION that the Committee's abuse of power was instigated by motives too repulsive to find a place in the bosom of a political demagogue who had any regard to honor. I here refer to the insinuation that the Executive "countermanded the orders of the Society," BECAUSE THE SOCIETY WOULD NOT BEND TO THEIR IPSE DIXIT IN THE ARTICLES OF THE CONSTITUTION. I will not affirm that the writer intended to insinuate so much, but thus it appears to me, and thus I think it would appear to every reflecting reader.

Before I close, permit me to show the injustice of such an insinuation.

1. Br. C. does not charge this objection on the COMMITTEE, nor is it the only objection urged by other brethren.

2. From my positive knowledge, he could not bring this objection against a majority of the Committee; for, until the date of that meeting, not more than one of the Committee, beside myself, had ever advanced an opinion averse to the standing fund system, nor even then, & I believe, with members of their respective families, are ALL Life-members of the Society.

3. If such had been the feelings of the Committee, no more suitable person could have been selected to disseminate our views than Br. C., and no more favorable opportunity than the Society's field for his mission.

Finally, I am persuaded that if the "SPECTATOR" had taken "a sober second thought," his age and experience, his wisdom and sense of christian decorum, would have taught him that the interests of the cause, and the confidence of the people in our benevolent institutions, as well as the individual character of the committee, required a treatment more gentle, had our ignorance or duplicity led us, even to the extent of the insinuations, ESPECIALLY WHEN THERE WAS SO MUCH UNCERTAINTY in the case. And now should he be convinced of the injustice done the committee, and the cause, I trust the accustomed frankness that has hitherto marked his course, in the renunciation of errors, will lead him to such measures as he would expect from others desirous to heal a grievous sore.

JAS. R. IRISH, Ch'n Ex. Com.

Alfred, May 23d, 1841.

News of the Day.

From the National Intelligencer, Extra.

The President's Message.

WASHINGTON, JUNE 1, 1841.

This day the President of the United States transmitted to both Houses of Congress the following Message:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

FELLOW CITIZENS:—You have been assembled in your representative halls of legislation under a proclamation bearing the signature of the illustrious citizen, who was so lately called by the direct suffrages of the people, to the discharge of the important functions of their chief Executive office—upon the expiration of a single month from the day of his installation, he has paid the great debt of nature, leaving behind him a name associated with the recollection of numerous benefits conferred upon the country, during a long life of patriotic devotion. With this public bereavement are connected other considerations which will not escape the attention of Congress. The preparations necessary for his removal to the seat of Government, in view of a residence of four years, must have devolved upon the late President heavy expenditures, which, if permitted to burthen the limited resources of his private fortune, may tend to the serious embarrassments of his surviving family; and it is therefore respectfully submitted to Congress whether the ordinary principles of justice would not dictate the propriety of its legislative interposition. By the provisions of the fundamental law, the powers and duties of the high station to which he was elected, have devolved upon me: and in the dispositions of the representatives of the States and of the people, will be found, to a great extent, a solution of the problem to which our institutions are, for the first time, subjected.

In entering upon the duties of this office, I did not feel that it would be becoming in me to disturb what had been ordered by my lamented predecessor. Whatever, therefore, may have been my opinion originally as to the propriety of convening Congress at so early a day from that of its late adjournment, I found a new and controlling inducement not to interfere with the patriotic desires of the late President, in the novelty of the situation in which I was so unexpectedly placed. My first wish, under such circumstances, would necessarily have been to have called to my aid, in the administration of public affairs, the combined wisdom of the two Houses of Congress, in order to take their counsel and advice as to the best mode of extricating the Government and the country from the embarrassments weighing heavily on both. I am then most happy in finding myself so soon, after my accession to the Presidency, surrounded by the immediate representatives of the States and people.

No important changes having taken place in our foreign relations since the last session of Congress, it is not deemed necessary, on this occasion, to go into a detailed statement in regard to them. I am happy to say that I see nothing to destroy the hope of being able to preserve peace.

The ratification of the treaty with Portugal has been duly exchanged between the two Governments. This Government has not been inattentive to the interests of those of our citizens who have claims on the Government of Spain, founded on express treaty stipulations; and a hope is indulged that the representations which have been made to that Government on this subject, may lead, ere long, to beneficial results.

A correspondence has taken place between the Secretary of State, and the Minister of Her Britannic Majesty, accredited to this Government on the subject of Alexander McLeod's indictment and imprisonment, copies of which are herewith communicated to Congress.

In addition to what appears from these papers, it may be proper to state, that Alexander McLeod has been heard, by the Supreme Court of the State of New York, on his motion to be discharged from imprisonment, and that the decision of that court has not yet been pronounced.

The Secretary of State has addressed to me a paper upon two subjects, interesting to the commerce of the country, which will receive my consideration, and which I have the honor to communicate to Congress.

So far as it depends on the course of this Government, our relations of good will and friendship will be sedulously cultivated with all nations. The true American policy will be found to consist in the exercise of a spirit of justice to be manifested in the discharge of all our international obligations to the weakest of the family of nations as well as to the most powerful. Occasional conflicts of opinion may arise, but when the discussions incident to them are conducted in the language of truth, and with a strict regard to justice, the scourge of war will for the most part be avoided. The time ought to be regarded as having gone by when a resort to arms is to be esteemed as the only proper arbiter of national differences.

The census recently taken shows a regularly progressive increase in our population. Upon the breaking out of the war of the revolution our numbers scarcely equalled 3,000,000 of souls; they already exceed 17,000,000, and will continue to progress in a ratio which duplicates in a period of about 23 years. The old States contain a territory sufficient in itself to maintain a population of additional millions, and the most populous of the new States may even yet be regarded as but partially settled, while of the new lands on this side of the Rocky Mountains, to say nothing of the immense region which stretches from the base of those mountains to the mouth of the Columbia river, about 270,000,000 of acres, ceded and unceded, still remain to be brought into market. We hold out to the people of other countries an invitation to come and settle among us as members of our rapidly growing family; and for the blessings which we offer them, we require of them to look upon our country as their country, and to unite with us in the great task of preserving our institutions and thereby perpetuating our liberties. No motive exists for foreign conquests—we desire but to reclaim our almost illimitable wilderness, and to introduce into their depth the lights of civilization. While we shall at all times be prepared to vindicate the national honor, our most earnest desire will be to maintain an unbroken peace.

In presenting the foregoing views, I cannot withhold the expression of the opinion, that there exists nothing in the extension of our empire, over our acknowledged possessions to excite the alarm of the patriot for the safety of our institutions. The Federative system, leaving to each State the care of its domestic concerns, and devolving on the Federal Government those of general import, admits in safety of the greatest expansion; but, at the same time, I deem it proper to add, that there will be found to exist, at all times, an imperious necessity for restraining all the functionaries of this Government within the range of their respective powers, thereby preserving a just balance between the powers granted to this Government and those reserved to the States and to the People.

From the report of the Secretary of the Treasury you will perceive that the fiscal means, present and accruing, are insufficient to supply the wants of the Government for the current year. The balance in the Treasury on the 4th day of March last, not covered by outstanding drafts, and exclusive of trust funds, is estimated at $850,000. This includes the sum of $215,000 deposited in the mint and its branches to procure metal for coining and in the process of coinage, and which could not be withdrawn without inconvenience—thus leaving subject to draft, in the various depositories, the sum of $645,000. By virtue of two several acts of Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to issue, on and after the fourth day of March last, Treasury notes to the amount of $5,413,000, making an aggregate available fund on hand of $6,058,000.

But this fund was chargeable with outstanding Treasury notes redeemable in the current year, and interest thereon to the estimated amount of $5,280,000. There is also thrown upon the Treasury the payment of a large amount of demands accrued in whole, or in part, in former years, which will exhaust the available means of the Treasury and leave the accruing revenue, reduced as it is in amount, burthened with debt, and charged with the current expenses of the Government.

The aggregate amount of outstanding appropriations, on the 4th day of March last, was $33,429,616 50, of which $24,-210,300, will be required during the current year, and there will also be required for the use of the War Department, additional appropriations to the amount of $2,-511,132 98, the special objects of which will be seen by reference to the Report of the Secretary of War. The anticipated means of the Treasury are greatly inadequate to this demand. The receipts from customs for the last three quarters of the last year and the first quarter of the present year, amounted to $12,100,000. The receipts for lands for the same time to $2,-742,430 60, showing an average revenue from both sources of $1,236,870 per month. A gradual expansion of trade, growing out of a restoration of confidence, together with a reduction in the expenses of collecting and punctuality on the part of collecting officers, may cause an addition to the monthly receipts from the customs—they are estimated for the residue of the year, from the 4th of March, at $12,000,000.—The receipts from the public lands, for the same time, are estimated at $2,500,000, and from miscellaneous sources at $170,000 making an aggregate of available funds within the year of $15,315,000, which will leave a probable deficit of $11,406,132 98. To meet this, some temporary provision is necessary until the amount can be absorbed by the excess of revenues which are anticipated to accrue at no distant day.

There will fall due within the next three months, Treasury notes of the issues of 1840, including interest, about $2,850,000. There is chargeable in the same period for arrearages for taking the 6th census, $294,000, and the estimated expenditures for the current service are about $8,100,-000, making the aggregate demand upon the Treasury, prior to the first of September next, about $11,340,000.

The ways and means in the Treasury, and estimated to accrue within the above named period, consist of about $691,000, of funds available on the 28th ultimo, an unissued balance of Treasury notes authorized by the act of 1841, amounting to $1,-955,000, and estimated receipts of all sources, of $3,800,000, making an aggregate of about $6,450,000, and leaving a probable deficit on the 1st of September next, of $4,845,000.

In order to supply the wants of the Government, an intelligent constituency in view of their best interest, will, without hesitation, submit to all necessary burthens. But it is, nevertheless, important so to impose them as to avoid defeating the just expectations of the country growing out of pre-existing laws. The act of the 2d of March, 1833, commonly called the Compromise act, should not be altered, except under urgent necessities, which are not believed at this time to exist. One year only remains to complete the series of reductions provided for by that law, at which time provisions made by the same law, and which then will be brought actively in aid of the manufacturing interests of the Union, will not fail to produce the most beneficial results. Under a system of discriminating duties, imposed for purposes of revenue, in union with the provisions of existing laws, it is to be hoped that our policy will in the future be fixed and permanent—so as to avoid those constant fluctuations which defeat the very objects they have in view. We shall thus best maintain a position, which, while it will enable us the more readily to meet the advances of other countries calculated to promote our trade and commerce, will at the same time leave in our own hands the means of retaliating, with greater effect, unjust regulations.

In intimate connection with the question of revenue, is that which makes provision for a suitable fiscal agent, capable of adding increased facilities in the collection and disbursement of the public revenues, rendering more secure their custody, and consulting a true economy in the great multiplied and delicate operations of the Treasury Department. Upon such an agent depends, in an eminent degree, the establishment of a currency of uniform value, which is of so great importance to all the essential interests of society, and on the wisdom to be manifested in its creation much depends. So intimately interwoven are its operations, not only with the interests of individuals, but of States, that it may be regarded, to a great degree, as controlling both. If paper be used as the chief medium of circulation, and the power be vested in the Government of issuing it at pleasure, either in the form of Treasury drafts or any other; or, if Banks be used as the public depositaries, with liberty to regard all surpluses from day to day, as so much added to their active capital, prices are exposed to constant fluctuations, and industry to severe suffering.

In the one case, political considerations directed to party purposes may prevail, while excessive cupidity may prevail in the other. The public is thus constantly liable to imposition. Expansions and contractions may follow each other in rapid successions—the one engendering a reckless spirit of adventure and speculation, which embraces States as well as individuals—the other causing a fall in prices, and accomplishing an entire change in the aspect of affairs. Stocks of all sort rapidly decline, individuals are ruined, and States embarrassed—even in their efforts to meet with punctuality the interest on their debts. Such unhappily is the condition of things now existing in the United States. These effects may readily be traced to the causes above referred to. The public revenues being removed from the then bank of the United States, under an order of a late President, were placed in selected State Banks, which, actuated by the double motive of conciliating the Government and augmenting their profits to the greatest possible extent, enlarged extravagantly their discounts, thus enabling all other existing banks to do the same. Large dividends were declared, which stimulating the cupidity of capitalists, caused a rush to be made to the Legislatures of the respective States for similar acts of incorporation, which by many of the States, under a temporary infatuation, were readily granted—and thus the augmentation of the circulating medium, consisting almost exclusively of paper, produced a most fatal delusion. An illustration derived from the land sales of the period alluded to, will serve best to show the effect of the whole system. The average sales of the public lands for a period of ten years prior to 1834 had not much exceeded 2,000,000 per annum. In 1834, they attained in round numbers to the amount of $6,000,000, in the succeeding year of 1835, they reached $16,000,000, and the next year, of 1836, they amounted to the enormous sum of $25,000,000—thus crowding into the short space of three years, upwards of seventy three years purchase of the public domain. So apparent had become the necessity of arresting this course of things, that the Executive Department assumed the highly questionable power of discriminating in the funds to be used in payment, by different classes of public debtors. A discrimination which was doubtlessly designed to correct this most ruinous state of things, by the exaction of specie in all payments for the public lands, but which could not at once arrest the tide which had so strongly set in. Hence the demands for specie became unceasing, and corresponding prostration rapidly ensued under the necessities created with the banks, to curtail their discounts, and thereby to reduce their circulation. I recur to these things with no disposition to censure pre-existing Administrations of the Government, but simply in exemplification of the truth of the position which I have assumed. If, then, any fiscal agent which may be created, shall be placed without due restrictions, either in the hands of the administrators of the Government, or those of private individuals, the temptation to abuse will prove to be resistless. Objects of political aggrandizement may seduce the first, and the promptings of a boundless cupidity will assail the last. Aided by the experience of the past, it will be the pleasure of Congress so to guard and fortify the public interests, in the creation of any new agent, as to place them, so far as human wisdom can accomplish it, on a footing of perfect security.

Within a few years past, three different schemes have been before the country.—The charter of the Bank of the United States expired by its own limitations in 1836; an effort was made to renew it which received the sanction of the two Houses of Congress, but the then President of the United States exercised his veto power, and the measure was defeated. A regard to the truth, requires me to say, that the President was fully sustained in the course he had taken, by the popular voice. His successor to the Chair of State unqualifiedly pronounced his opposition to any new charter of a similar institution; and not only the popular election which brought him into power, but the elections through much of his term, seemed clearly to indicate a concurrence with him in sentiment on the part of the people. After the public moneys were withdrawn from the United States Bank, they were placed in deposite with the State Banks, and the result of that policy has been before the country. To say nothing as to the question whether that experiment was made under propitious or adverse circumstances, it may safely be asserted that it did receive the unqualified condemnation of most of its early advocates, and it is believed was also condemned by the popular sentiment. The existing Sub-Treasury system does not seem to stand in higher favor with the people, but has recently been condemned in a manner too plainly indicated to admit of a doubt.

Thus, in the short space of eight years, the popular voice may be regarded as having successively condemned each of the three schemes of finance to which I have adverted. As to the first, it was introduced at a time (1816,) when the State Banks, then comparatively few in number, had been forced to suspend specie payments by reason of the war which had previously prevailed with Great Britain. Whether, if the United States Bank charter which expired in 1811, had been renewed in due season, it would have been enabled to continue specie payments, during the war, and the disastrous period to the commerce of the country which immediately succeeded, is, to say, the least, problematical; and, whether the U. S. Bank of 1816 produced a restoration of specie payments, or the same was accomplished through the instrumentality of other means, was a matter of some difficulty at that time to determine,——certain it is, that for the first years of the operation of that bank, its course was as disastrous as, for the greater part of its subsequent career, it became eminently successful. As to the second, the experiment was tried with a redundant Treasury, which continued to increase until it seemed to be the part of wisdom to distribute the surplus revenue among the States—which, operating at the same time with the specie circular, and the causes before adverted to, caused them to suspend specie payments, and involved the country in the greatest embarrassment. And as to the third, if carried through all the stages of its transmution, from paper and specie, to nothing but the precious metals, to say nothing of the insecurity of the public moneys, its injurious effects have been anticipated by the country, in its unqualified condemnation. What is now to be regarded as the judgment of the American people on this whole subject, I have no accurate means of determining but by appealing to their more immediate representatives.

The late contest, which terminated in the election of General Harrison to the Presidency was decided on principles well known and openly advocated; and while the Sub-Treasury received in the result the most decided condemnation, yet no other scheme of finance seemed to have been concurred in.

To you then who have come more directly from the body of our common constituents, I submit the entire question as best qualified to give a full exposition of their wishes and opinions. I shall be ready to concur with you in the adoption of such system as you may propose, reserving to myself the ultimate power of rejecting any measure which may, in my view of it, conflict with the Constitution, or otherwise jeopardize the power of the country—a power which I could not part with even if I would, but which I will not believe any act of yours will call into requisition.

I beg leave particularly to call your attention to the accompanying report from the Secretary of War. Besides the present state of the war which has so long afflicted the Territory of Florida, and the various other matters of interest therein referred to, you will learn from it that the Secretary has instituted an inquiry into abuses, which promises to develop gross enormities in connection with Indian treaties which have been negotiated, as well as in the expenditures for the removal and subsistence of the Indians. He represents also other irregularities of a serious nature that have grown up in the practice of the Indian Department, will require the appropriation of upwards of $200,000 to correct, and which claim the immediate attention of Congress.

In reflecting on the proper means of defending the country, we cannot shut our eyes to the consequences, which the introduction and use of the power of steam upon the ocean are likely to produce in wars between maritime states. We cannot yet see the extent to which this power may be applied in belligerent operations, connecting itself as it does with recent improvements in the science of gunnery and projectiles; but we need have no fear of being left, in regard to these things, behind the most active and skilful of other nations, if the genius and enterprise of our fellow-citizens receive proper encouragement and direction from Government.

The wisdom would nevertheless seem to dictate the necessity of placing in perfect condition those fortifications which are designed for the protection of our principal cities and road-steads. For the defence of our extensive maratime coast, our chief reliance should be placed on our Navy, aided by those inventions which are destined to recommend themselves to public adoption—but no time should be lost in placing our principal cities on the sea-board, and the lakes, in a state of entire security from foreign assault. Separated as we are from the countries of the Old World, and in much unaffected by their policy, we are happily relieved from the necessity of maintaining large standing armies in time of peace. The policy which was adopted by Mr. Monroe, shortly after the conclusion of the latter war with Great Britain, of preserving a regularly organized staff, sufficient for the command of a large military force, should the necessity of one arise, is founded as well in economy as in true wisdom. Provision is thus made, upon filling up the rank and file which can readily be done on any emergency, for the introduction of a system of discipline, both promptly and efficiently. All that is required in time of peace is to maintain a sufficient number of men to guard our fortification, to meet any sudden contingency, and to encounter the first shock of war. Our chief reliance must be placed on the militia; they constitute the great body of national guards, and inspired by an ardent love of country, will be ready at all times, and at all seasons, to repair with alacrity to its defence. It will be regarded by Congress, I have no doubt, at a suitable time, as one of its highest duties to attend to their complete organization and discipline.

I cannot avoid recurring in connection with this subject, to the necessity which exists for adopting some suitable measure, whereby the unlimited creation of Banks by the States may be corrected in future. Such result can be most readily achieved by the consent of the States, to be expressed in the form of a compact among themselves, which they can only enter into with the consent and approbation of this Government. A consent which might, in the present emergency of the public demands, justifiably be given by Congress in advance of any action by the States as an inducement to such action upon terms well defined by the act of tender. Such a measure addressing itself to the calm reflection of the States would find in the experience of the past, and the condition of the present, much to sustain it—and it is generally to be doubted whether any scheme of finance can prove for any length of time sucessful, while the States shall continue in the unrestrained power of creating banking corporation. This power can only be limited by their consent.

With the adoption of a financial agency of a satisfactory character, the hope can be indulged that the country may once more return to a state of prosperity—measures auxiliary thereto, and in some measure inseparably connected with its success, will doubtless claim the attention of Congress. Among such a distribution of the proceeds of the sales of public lands, provided such distribution does not force upon Congress the necessity of imposing upon commerce heavier burthens than those contemplated by the act of 1833, would act as an efficient remedial by being brought directly in aid of the States. As one sincerely devoted to the task of preserving a just balance in our system of Government by the maintainance of the States in a condition the most free and respectable, and in the full possession of all their power, I can no otherwise than feel desirous for their emancipation from the situation to which the pressure on their finance now subjects them. And while I must repudiate, as a measure founded in error, and wanting constitutional sanction, the slightest approach to an assumption by this Government of the debts of the States, yet I can see in the distribution adverted to, much to recommend it.

The compacts between the proprietor-states and this Government expressly guarantee to the States all the benefits which may arise from the sales. The mode by which this is to be effected addresses itself to the discretion of Congress as the trustees for the States, and its exercise, after the most beneficial manner, is restrained by nothing in the grants or in the Constitution so long as Congress shall consult that equality in the distribution which the compacts require. In the present condition of some of the States the question of distribution may be regarded as substantially a question between direct and indirect taxation. If the distribution be not made in some form or other, the necessity will daily become more urgent with the debtor-states for a resort to an oppressive system of direct taxation, or their credit, and necessarily their power and influence, will be greatly diminished. The payment of taxes often the most inconvenient and oppressive mode, will be exacted in place of contributions for the most part voluntarily made, and therefore comparatively unoppressive. The States are emphatically the constituents of this Government, and we should be entirely regardless of the objects held in view by them, in the creation of this Government, if we could be indifferent to their good. The happy effects of such a measure upon all the States, would be immediately manifested. With the debtor States it would effect the relief, to a great extent, of the citizens from the heavy burthen of direct taxation, which presses severely on the laboring classes, and eminently assist in restoring the general prosperity. An immediate advance would take place in the price of the State securities, and the attitude of the States would become once more as it should ever be, lofty and erect. With States laboring under no extreme pressure from debt, the fund which they would derive from this source would enable them to improve their condition in an eminent degree. So far as this Government is concerned, appropriations to domestic objects approaching in amount the revenue derived from the land sales might be abandoned, and thus a system of unequal and therefore unjust legislation would be substituted by one dispensing equality to all the members of this confederacy. Whether such distribution should be made directly to the States in the proceeds of the sales, or in the form of profits by virtue of the operations of any fiscal agency having those proceeds as its basis, should such measure be contemplated by Congress, would well deserve its consideration. Nor would such disposition of the proceeds of the sales, in any manner, prevent Congress from time to time from passing all necessary pre-emption laws for the benefit of the actual settlers—or from making any new arrangement as to the price of the public lands which might in future be esteemed desirable.

The state of the Navy pension fund requires the immediate attention of Congress. By the operation of the act of the 3d of March, 1837, entitled "an act for the more equitable administration of the Navy Pension Fund"—that fund has been exhausted. It will be seen from the accompanying report of the Commissioner of Pensions, that there will be required, for the payment of Navy pensions, on the first of July next, $84,006 06 1-3, and on the first of January, 1842, the sum of $60,000. In addition to these sums, about $6,000 will be required to pay the arrears of pensions which will probably be allowed between the first of July & the first of January, 1842, making in the whole $150,006 06 1-3. To meet these payments, there is, within the control of the Department, the sum of $28,040, leaving a deficiency of $121,966 06 1-3. The public faith requires that immediate provision should be made for the payment of these sums.

In order to introduce into the Navy a desirable efficiency a new system of accountability may be found to be indispensably necessary. To mature a plan having for its object the accomplishment of an end so important, and to meet the just expectations of the country, require more time than has yet been allowed to the Secretary at the head of the Department. The hope is indulged that, by the time of your next regular session, measures of importance, in connection with the branch of the public service may be matured for your consideration.

Although the laws regulating the Post-Office Department only require from the officer charged with its direction to report at the usual annual session of Congress, the Postmaster General has presented to me some facts connected with the financial condition of the Department, which are deemed worthy the attention of Congress. By the accompanying report of that officer, it appears the existing liabilities of that Department, beyond the means of payment at their command, cannot be less than $500,000. As the laws organizing that branch of the public service confine the expenditure to its own revenues, deficiencies therein cannot be presented under the usual estimates for the expenses of Government. It must, therefore, be left to Congress to determine whether the moneys now due the contractors shall be paid from the public Treasury, or whether that Department shall continue under the present embarrassments. It will be seen by the report of the Postmaster General, that the recent lettings of contracts in several of the States, have been made at such reduced rates of compensation, as to encourage the belief that if the Department was relieved from existing difficulties, its future operations might be conducted without any further call upon the general Treasury.

The power of appointing to office is one of a character the most delicate and responsible. The appointing power is even more exposed to be led into error; with anxious solicitude to select the most trustworthy for official station, I cannot be supposed to possess a personal knowledge of the qualifications of every applicant. I deem it therefore proper in this most public manner, to invite on the part of the Senate a just scrutiny into the character and pretensions of every person I may bring to their notice in the regular form of a nomination for office. Unless persons every way trustworthy are employed in the public service, corruption and irregularity will inevitably follow. I shall with the greatest cheerfulness acquiesce in the decision of that body, and regarding it as wisely constituted to aid the Executive Department in the performance of this delicate duty, I shall look to its "consent and advice" as given only in furtherance of the best interests of the country. I shall also, at the earliest proper occasion, invite the attention of Congress to such measures as, in my judgment, will be best calculated to regulate and control the Executive Power in reference to this vitally important subject.

I shall also at the proper season, invite your attention to the statutory enactments for the suppression of the slave trade, which may require to be rendered more efficient in their provisions. There is reason to believe that the traffic is on the increase. Whether such increase is to be ascribed to the abolition of slave labor in the British possessions in our vicinity, and an attendant diminution in the supply of those articles which enter into the general consumption of the world, thereby augmenting the demand from other quarters, and thus calling for additional labor, it were needless to inquire. The highest consideration of public honor, as well as the strongest promptings of humanity, require a resort to the most vigorous efforts to suppress the trade.

In conclusion, I beg to invite your particular attention to the interest of this District; nor do I doubt but that in a liberal spirit of legislation you will seek to advance its commercial as well as its local interests. Should Congress deem it to be its duty to repeal the existing Sub-Treasury law, the necessity of providing a suitable place of deposit for the public moneys which may be required within the District, must be apparent to all.

I have felt it due to the country to present the foregoing topics for your consideration and reflection. Others with which it might not seem proper to trouble you at an extraordinary session, will be laid before you at a future day. I am happy in committing the important affairs of the country into your hands. The tendency of public sentiment I am pleased to believe, is toward the adoption, in a spirit of union and harmony, of such measures as will fortify the public interests. To cherish such a tendency of public opinion is the task of an elevated patriotism. That differences of opinion, as to the means of accomplishing these desirable objects should exist, is reasonably to be expected. Nor can all be satisfied with any system of measures; but I flatter myself with the hope that the great body of the people will readily unite in support of those whose efforts spring from a disinterested desire to promote their happiness—to preserve the Federal and State Governments within their respective orbits—to cultivate peace with all the nations of the earth on just and honorable grounds—to exact obedience to the laws—to entrench liberty and property in full security—and, consulting the most rigid economy, to abolish all useless expenses.

JOHN TYLER.

WASHINGTON, June 1, 1841.

Foreclosing of Mortgages.—By a law of the last Legislature in all cases of foreclosure of mortgages where the number of defendants shall not exceed two, the solicitor for the complainant shall be entitled to receive therefor thirty dollars and no more; and for every addtional defendant above the number of two, such solicitor shall be entitled to receive the additional sum of two dollars and fifty cents.

The sergeant at arms of the court of chancery instead of the fees, now allowed by law, shall be entitled to receive the same compensation for each day's attendance upon the court of chancery, as is now allowed by law to the criers of the supreme court, and to be paid in the same manner out of the general fund.

TWENTY SEVENTH CONGRESS---EXTRA SESSION

In the House. John P. White, of Ky., was elected speaker on the first ballot. Mr. M. St. Clair Clarke, was elected clerk. Francis O. J. Smith, was the nominee of the Whig caucus; but was defeated by the union of a portion of the opposition, with a portion of the Whigs, on Mr. Clarke.

When the motion to appoint a committee to wait on the President, &c. was made, Mr. McKeon, of N. Y. moved that President be struck out, and acting President be inserted. This was rejected by a large majority.

Mr. Wise moved the readoption of the rules of the last session. Mr. Adams moved the rescinding of the gag rule, which prosribes petitions on the subject of slavery.

We learn from the Bunker Hill Aurora, that it is the intention of Mr. Savage, the contractor, to have the monument completed before the next winter.

A British journal thinks that the introduction of the root culture in England, will effect as great a change in the prosperity of the landed interest, as the application of steam has produced in the results of mechanical ingenuity.

A man named Joseph Longshore, in Newton, Bucks co. Pa. on the 21st ult. in a fit of delirium tremens cut open his body and mangled himself in a most horrible manner with a large knife. He died almost immediately.

William L. Stone, of the city of New-York, and Nicholas Deveraux, Chas. B. Coventry, Willett H. Shearman and Theodore S. Faxton, of the city of Utica, have been appointed Trustees of the State Lunatic Asylum.

The Lake Boat Goth, of Ithica, belonging to Mr. C. P. Williams Ithica Line, arrived yesterday morning (says the Albany Evening Journal) with a cargo of produce from Cayuga Lake, weighing, with the boat, 194,000 lbs. This, as is stated on the clearance, is the heaviest boat and cargo ever weighed on the Erie canal.

Mrs. Polly Chapin, wife of Zebulon Chapin, of Simsbury, Conn. was instantly killed by lightning on the 25th ult. She was alone in the house at the time.—Her age was about 37 years

James Egan and Andrew Duffy had a drinking match at Juliett, Ill. on the 4th ult. He who got drunk first to pay the bill. Egan soon after went to bed, and only left it a corpse.

The St. Petersburgh journals state that the quantity of gold obtained during last year by private companies, in Siberia and the steppes of the Kirgis, amounts to upwards of 8600 lbs. nett.

According to the census returns, Michigan, in 1839, produced five hundred and fifty thousand more bushels of wheat than the five States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New-Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont together.

The Salem Banner complains that in West Jersey 'the earth has become so hard, in consequence of the almost total absence of rain, that vegetation can scarcely force its way through, and fear is expressed by many that if the drought should continue it will prove injurious to the crops.'

Too Young to be Free!—The Baltimore Sun says that a Mrs. Trumball of Dorchester co. Md., some time since deceased, manumitted, by her will, all her negroes—the will to take effect on the death of the testator's sister. The sister recently died and the negroes are therefore free. During the testator's lifetime, Wm. Evens, a free mulatto, married one of the female slaves, by whom he has three children, who has been living in freedom by virtue of the will. Some weeks since one of the heirs of Mrs. Trumbull, Capt. Vickers, attended by a constable, visited Evens' house and carried off the boy and girl to sell them as slaves, and had actually effected a negotiation for that purpose, when further proceedings were arrested by legal interposition. The plea set upon justifying these proceedings is, that the children are to young too be free! The case is to be investigated.

Robert F. Curry, whose arrest in Virginia led to Gov. Gilmer's resignation, has been convicted of forgery at Ithica, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment at Auburn State prison.

The Washington correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser says John M. Clayton will speedily be appointed Minister to England, in place of Mr. Stevenson.

A man in New-Orleans has recently recovered $2000 from the owners of the steamboat Gen. Brown, the value of some horses lost by the explosion of that boat at Helena, in the year 1838.

Notices.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the Stockholders of De Ruyter Institute will be held on Monday, the 21st day of June next, at 2 o'clock, P. M., at the Institute. At which time four Trustees are to be elected in the place of Alexander Campbell, Perry Burdick, Benjamin Enos, and Wm. Maxson, and to transact such other business as shall be deemed necessary.

N. B. Stockholders are entitled to vote by proxy.

B. G. STILLMAN, Sec'y.

De Ruyter, May 26th, 1841.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the S. D. B. South Western Association, will take place at Northampton, Clark co., O., on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in October. A general attendance is desired, and brethren from foreign churches are invited.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Western Association will hold its annual session with the church in Friendship, on the fourth day of the week before the last Sabbath in June, at ten o'clock, A. M. Delegates and brethren from sister Associations and churches are cordially invited to attend with us.

J. R. IRISH, Cor. Sec'y.

—ALSO—

The ministers and deacons of the Association are requested to meet at the house of said church on the day previous at 1 o'clock P. M. to organize and agree on some regulations for the Presbytery.

J. R. IRISH, Clerk.

MARRIED,

In Manlius, on the 30th ult., by the Rev. Wm. M'Carthy, Mr OREN P. CHEESEBRO, and Miss ELVIRA TIBBETT; both of that place.

In Fabius, on the 1st inst., by the Rev. Walter Hare, Mr. S. L. JAMES of Tully, and Miss MARIETTE, eldest daughter of John More of the former place.

Also, in the same place, on the 3d inst., by the Rev. H. W. Jones, Mr. C. JENKENS HAYDEN of Pompey, and Miss ESTHER, eldest daughter of Mrs. Lucy Daniels of the former place.

Also, on the same day, by the same, Mr MARCUS WINEGAR, and Miss AURELIA, daughter of Orsemas Wells, both of Fabius.

In Sullivan, on the 3d inst., by the Rev. O. Farrell, Mr. VONEK BOARDMAN and Miss LAVENIA LOWER; both of that place.

In Fabius on the 6th inst., by the Rev. Mr. JONES, Mr. ELIAS GOODWIN, and Miss AMANDA BENEDICT; both of that place.

LIST OF LETTERS.

H. H. Babcock, John Swinney, John Utter (your proposal accepted) C. M. Lewis, L. H. Bond, (we will write you soon and make all right) Wm. Alvord P. M. J. R. Irish, J. P. Livermore P. M. H. Francis, P. M. T. E Babcock.

LIST OF RECEIPTS

Hazard Sheldon, $2,25 vol. 1, Lodema Coats, $2 vol, 2, Joshua S. Vincent $21 cr. E. Potter, David Rose, Oran Vincent, Freeborn Hamilton, Amos Burdick 3d Paul M. Vincent, David Davis, Samuel Hamilton, $2, each vol. 2, John B. Collins, $2,25 vol. 1, Lewis Clark jr. $2, 75 vol. 1 & 2, Adin Rogers, $2 vol. 2. H. H Babcock $2 cr. J. D. Mills, vol. 2 John Swinney, $11 cr. Reece Ayres, John T. Davis, Jane Davis, Susannah B. Bowen, Clayton Ayres, & self, each $2 vol 2. C. M. Lewis, $5 cr. A. Hazard, C. Grant, each $2 Martin Gates, $1 all vol. 2. L. H. Bond, $10 cr. self, $1,50 retained also $4,25 vol. 1 & 2, Wm. Kennedy, $2,25 vol. 1 A. Batten, $2 vol. 2. Jas. R. Irish, $8,25 cr. Gideon Green, $2,25 vol. 1 Luke Stillman, David Stillman, Wd. S. Coon, each $2 vol. 2. H. Francis $1 cr Miss D. Kingman. T. E. Babcock, $6 cr. Abel Maxson, J. L. Thursten, & David Potter each $2 vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready to execute all kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

DE RUYTER, MAY 27, 1841.

ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, are receiving their supply of

Spring and Summer Goods,

Comprising an unusual variety, which they offer for Cash, Barter, or Approved Credit, on as favorable terms as can be purchased in this place. This place having been celebrated as the cheapest in the world, they think the above statement sufficiently comprehensive. Old and new customers are solicited to call and examine.

TO BUILDERS.

ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER are sole Agents in this place for the sale of Bliss' SASH AND WINDOW BLINDS, at Factory prices. 7X9 SASH on hand. Blinds, and other sizes Sash procured to order.

They have also on hand,

Pine Lumber and Shingles,
30 Kegs Swedes Iron Nails,
60 Boxes Window Glass, 7X9 to 12X18,
A large stock of Building Hardware,
Paints, Oil, Putty, &c.

May 27.

Elmore, Annas & Ayer,

Are Agents for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Winslow's Balsam of Horehound.

For particular recommendations of the above article, please refer to the advertisement of the Sole Ag't.

Rev. J. Covert's Balm of Life,
Moffatt's Life Pills & Phœnix Bitters,
Dr. Phinney's Family Pills,
Dr. Phelp's Compound Tomato Pills,
Miles' Compound Extract of Tomato Pills

With others too numerous to mention.

May 27. 65tf

10,000 Tin Pans,

Together with a large assortment of Tin Ware, at wholesale or retail, at as low prices as can be purchased in the State. Also,

Stoves, Pipe and Furniture,

For sale by ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER.

May 27.

MILLINERY.

MISS SOWTER

RESPECTFULLY informs the inhabitants of De Ruyter and vicinity, that she has recently opened a shop two doors east of H. A & F. C. Dellay's Store, where she will be happy to receive the calls of customers. She will constantly keep on hand ready made Bonnets and Caps, or make to order, and hopes to merit a liberal share of public patronage.

N. B. Leghorn and Straw Bonnets cleaned and repaired in the neatest and most fashionable style.

De Ruyter, June 4, 1841. 14tf

New-York Cash Store.

H. J. WILLIAMS,

WOULD respectfully inform the inhabitants of De Ruyter, and vicinity, that he is receiving from New-York, at the Store in De Ruyter next door to Geo. W. Sutton's Shoe Store, on Utica Street, an extensive assortment of

Spring and Summer Goods,

Among which are French, English, and American Prints, of almost every variety of style and quality to be found in New-York Market; Bl'k, Blue-bl'k, Sinchew, Bonnet and Florence Silks, Printed and Plain Lawns, Book, Swiss, Jaconet, Cambrick and Mull Muslins; Bleached and unbleached Table Cloths, Crapes, Broad Cloths, Cassimeres, Satinetts, Vestings, Hosiery, Bonnet Trimmings, and almost every other article usually kept in a country Store. Also, an assortment of Groceries, Crockery, Glass and Hardware.

H. J. W. would say that his system of business will be

One Price, and Ready Pay,

And he flatters himself, from his advantages in purchasing Goods, and system of selling, that he can afford Goods at as LOW PRICES as any establishment west of the City of New-York.

All who wish to purchase Goods on favorable terms, are respectfully invited to call and examine his Goods, and judge for themselves as to price and quality. 64tf

De Ruyter, May 17, 1841.

P. S. The Store will be closed on the seventh day of the week. H. J. W.

LOOK TO YOUR INTEREST!

EXAMINE & BE CONVINCED!

S. D. DELLAY,

IS now opening his Spring Stock of Goods, among which may be found,

8,000 yds. Calicoes, from 4 to 25 cts. per yd.
6,000 " Sheeting, " 7 " 12 1-2 "
1,000 " Ticking, " 12 1-2 " 25 "
1,000 " French Mull, " 20 " 50 "

Together with cords and piles of other Plain, Domestic and Fancy GOODS, consisting of too great a variety to be enumerated in a paper advertisement, which have been purchased for Cash at the present low state of the Market, and which he proposes

SELLING LOWER

than they can be bought elsewhere in Town, County, or State! He has also a complete assortment of Millinery Goods, such as

Leghorn, Straw, Silk, & Lawn Bonnets,

with every possible variety of Trimming. He would say to PHYSICIANS, that he has the largest and best selected assortment of MEDICINES ever before offered in this County, which he pledges himself to sell from 25 to 50 per cent Cheaper than they have ever before been offered.

TO FAMILIES.—He would likewise call the attention of Families to a choice selection of GROCERIES, which he will sell as LOW or LOWER than they can be bought elsewhere—HAMILTON not excepted. Also, Crockery, Hardware, &c. &c.

He is also sole Agent in this place for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines:

Jayne's Invaluable Indian Expectorant,

Too well known to need comment.

G. A. BARTHOLICK & Co.'s

MOTHER'S RELIEF.

A Pamphlet describing the merits of this highly popular and beneficial Medicine, will be given any one wishing to become acquainted with its qualities. The uniform success of this Medicine has rendered it the "Ne Plus Ultra" of the day. Medical gentlemen have had to acknowledge its benefits and yield to its sway.

DR. WATERMAN'S

RHEUMATIC AND STRENGTHENING PLASTER.

The peculiarities of this compound are owing to the immediate effects produced on the animal fibre, it being carried by the absorbants to the seat of disease or pain, without producing disagreeable sensations. As an external application it is a powerful auxiliary, and will cure, in all curable cases; such as acute and chronic Rheumatisms, Scrofulous Affections, weakness of back, pain in the side, head and limbs, affections of the Spine, &c. &c. &c.

This Plaster is warranted to be by far the best ever offered to the public—much superior to "Jew David, or Hebrew Plaster," and at less than half the price.

WINSLOW'S

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND.

An unparalleled remedy for common Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption; composed of the concentrated virtues of Horehound, Boneset, Blood Root, Liverwort, and several other vegetable substances. Prepared only by J. M. WINSLOW, Rochester, N. Y.

The innocence and universally admitted pectoral virtues of the Herbs from which the BALSAM OF HOREHOUND is made, are too generally known to require recommendation; it is therefore only necessary to observe that the Medicine contains the whole of their Medicinal properties, highly concentrated, and so happily combined with several other vegetable substances, as to render it the most speedy, mild, and certain remedy, now in use, for the complaints above mentioned.'

'Thousands of testimonials will be shown, if wanted, at any time, placing the above medicines beyond reproach.

In conclusion he would only say, that he will not be under-sold on any article which he offers for sale.

WANTED,

10,000 Bags,
10,000 pr. Socks,
10,000 yds. Tow Cloth,
10,000 " Kersey,

☞For which the highest price will be paid.☜

De Ruyter, May 13, 1841. 63y1

Physicians and Families

Will find an extensive assortment of Medicines of the best quality, and at the lowest prices at the STONE STORE.

May 27.

POETRY.

Thoughts of a Young Man in Prospect of Death.

BY H. KIRK WHITE.

Sad, solitary Thought, who keep'st thy vigils,
Thy solemn vigils, in the sick man's mind,
Communing lonely with his sinking soul,
And musing on the dubious glooms that lie
In dim obscurity before him—thee,
Wrapped in thy dark magnificence I call
At this still, midnight hour, this awful season,
When, on my bed, in wakeful restlessness,
I turn me, wearisome. While all around,
All, all, save me, sink in forgetfulness,
I only wake to watch the sickly taper
Which lights me to my tomb. Yes, 'tis the hand
Of death I feel press heavy on my vitals,
Slow—supping the warm current of existence,
My moments now are few. The sand of life
Ebbs fastly to its finish. Yet a little,
And the last fleeting particle will fall,
Silent, unseen, unnoticed, unlamented.
Come then, sad Thought, and let us meditate,
While meditate we may. There's left us now
But a small portion of what men call time.
To hold communion: for even now the knife,
The seperating knife, I feel divide
The tender bond that binds my soul on earth.
Yes, I must die—I feel that I must die,
And though, for me, life has been dark and dreary
Though hope, has smiled but to deceive,
And disappointment marked me as her victim,
Yet do I feel my soul recoil within me,
As I contemplate the dim gulf of death,
The shuddering void, the awful blank—futurity.
Ay, I had planned full many a sanguine scheme
Of earthly happiness—romantic schemes,
And fraught with loveliness,—and it is hard
To feel the hand of death arrest one's steps,
Throw a chill blight o'er all one's boding hopes,
And hurl one's soul untimely to the shades,
Lost in the gaping gulf of blank oblivion.
Fifty years hence, and who will hear of Henry!
O, none:—an other busy brood of beings
Will shoot up in the interim, and none
Will hold him in remembrance. I shall sink
As sinks a stranger in the crowded streets
Of busy London.—some short bustle's caused,
A few inquiries, and the crowds close in,
And all's forgotten. On my grassy grave
The men of future time will careless tread,
And read my name upon the sculptored stone;
Nor will the sound, familiar to their ears,
Recall my vanished memory. I did hope
For better things,—I hoped I should not leave
The earth without a vestige. Fate decrees
It shall be otherwise—and I submit.
Henceforth, O world, no more of thy desires
No more of hope!—the wanton vagrant!
I abjure all.—Now other cares engross me,
And my tired soul, with emulative haste,
Looks to its god, and plumes its wings for heaven.

Miscellaneous Department.

GENIUS.

Close observation seems to be one of the strongest characteristics of Genius. The most careful inquirer into natural history is often astonished to find that an author of Genius, making no pretensions to science, has been before him in discovery; and the physiologist quotes the great master of the human heart in proof of the phenomena, for which he endeavors to account. Byron, in one of his letters, confesses that he was detected in an error, as to the habits of an eagle, by a painter, who illustrated the passage; but he does so, with a degree of shame that proves how great a defect he considered such inaccuracy to be. This truth to nature is one of the great charms of Genius over us. We recognise the power of the delineation without knowing, perhaps, how it is produced. There hangs in the cabinet of Baroccio, at Florence, a Madonna in grief, by Sassoferrato. There are no tears, there is no distortion of the countenance, nor any of the ordinary signs of grief by which it is usually presented to us; and yet nothing can exceed the touching expression of the mild blue eye and pale unwrinkled brow. Her soul, pierced through with many sorrows, seems to look out to you for sympathy with a grief too deep for tears. The effect is doubtleess produced by those minute lines, which escape the eye of the ordinary observer, and which none but a master's hand could transfer to the canvass. For the same reason, every attempt to copy the Beatrice di Cenci of Guido, or Venus de Medicis, has failed. No hand can follow the great master in the one, and the delicacy of the lines is lost in the casts of the other. We see this effect in a good portrait of one we know and love. It is not in the mere shape of the features, or the general contour, that the resemblance lies, but in the almost invisibly delicate lines which mark the characters; and precisely in proportion as we are intimate with the individual, we are difficult to satisfy. This is true of Genius in all its forms. It is upon nice accuracy of observation, that the orator, the poet, the metaphysician, and the natural philosopher, depend for success. Their attention is so fixed, and the perception so keen, that nothing escapes them; whether, from their peculiar tastes, the attention be directed to the investigation of evidence, the beauty of a landscape, the workings of human passion, the actings of their own minds, or the facts which are brought to light by their experiments. If we read a speech of Erskine, we will see how he brings into his argument, as it were, rivulet after rivulet, small in themselves, but all contributing to swell the mighty river of proof, which bursts upon us in the cataract of his conclusion. If we study an essay of the unpretending but matchless metaphysician Reid, we find him laying open to our view the workings of our own minds, and making our consciousness bear witness to his truth. "The chords within our hearts vibrate in unison with those that are touched by the Ploughman of Ayr. Newton would never have discovered the law of gravitation, that first step of his walk with the God of nature, but for the closeness of that observation, which permitted not an a crown to fall from the bough, without remarking the force of its descent. There are some men who will walk from Dan to Beersheba, and complain that they have seen nothing;" but they are not men of Genius, and can never be men of sense. He who would be rich in knowledge and original thought, will not allow a dew-drop to glisten in the morning sun, or a flower to bloom in the meadow; much less the more mysterious phenomena of nature within and without him to occur, and not acquire instruction by severe yet delightful scrutiny.

A BEAUTIFUL EXTRACT.

Rev. Mr. Cheever has published a book since his return from Europe entitled "The Hand of God in America." The following beautiful and impressive extract is well calculated to lead the mind to a serious reflection on our present exalted position as a nation. Although favored and highly distinguished, there is a fearful responsibility resting upon us. The fate of other nations should point to us our danger and be a warning against that sinful indulgence which will call down the displeasure of God, on our land, and we be numbered among the fallen empires of former ages. But to the extract:

"A nation dies when the spirit of every thing good and noble dies in it. The name may live when the elements of life and beauty have departed. God may suffer the sins which a nation is cherishing to consume its energies, till the gangrene become incurable, and then the abused mercies work out their own revenge. How solemn in such a case, are the records and the proofs of the divine indignation—the predictions and the fulfilment seen and read together.

I have stood beneath the walls of the Coliseum in Rome, the parthenon in Athens, and the temple ol Karnak in Egypt; each of them a mighty relic of majestic empires, and the symbol of the spirit of the most remarkable ages in the world. The last bringing you back as in a dream over the waste of four thousand years, might be supposed to owe its superior impressiveness to its vast antiquity; but that is not the secret of the strange and solemn thoughts that crowd into the mind; it is the demonstration of God's wrath, fulfilled according to the letter of the Scriptures. No ruins of antiquity are so overwhelming in their interest, as the gigantic remains of that empire, once the proudest in in the world, and now according to the very letter of divine prediction, "the basest of the kingdom." View the deep and grim repose of those sphinxes, obelisks and columns, those idols broken at the presence of God. As the mind wanders back to the four hundred years of Israel's bondage in Egypt, methinks you may hear the wail of that old and awful prophecy, with the lingering of every successive prediction. "The nation whom they shall serve will I judge"—Who would have believed it possible, four thousend years ago, amidst the vigor and greatness of the Egyptian kingdom, and after the vast lapse of time, travelers should come from the world then as new, unpeopled, and undiscerned, as the precincts of another planet—to send the proofs of God's varacity in the vestiges at once of such a stupendous overthrow. And now, if any man contemplating the youthful vigor, the energy, the almost indestructible life of our own country, finds it difficult to believe that the indulgence of the same national sin, under infinitely clearer light may be followed with a similar overthrow, let him wander on tthe banks of the Nile, and think down hours to moments in the silent sanctuaries of its broken temples."

We find in a number of the Canton Register, the following advice to married folks in China. The advice is good and may answer for other places, besides China:—

CHINESE RULES OF CONDUCT.—Let a woman who discovers her husband's blind side, make use of it to render herself his mistress, and to govern him; let her contest every point, and upon the least contradiction come to an open rupture; let the husband on his part submit to the yoke and not dare to breathe; both the one and the other will soon become the talk and laughter of the public. If you let your reputation be tarnished on this side, the evil is almost incurable. The water once spilt cannot be gathered up again into the vessel.

If your husband neglect the duties either by his charge or station, endeavor to reclaim him; but let it be by soft and insinuating methods, by tender exhortation, and by the recital of certain examples capable of striking him. Behave to him with all the decorum you would to a guests; with that respectful confidence you would to a friend.

You are under a necessity of living always with your husband, and cosequently of acquiring patience. Learn then to bridle your natural dispositions and lay a restraint upon your inclinations.—You make both but one family, have then both of you but one heart. If you are united only from the teeth outwards, only in appearance and grimace, while in the bottom of the soul you nourish a secret discontent; it is to fret yourself to no purpose, and to render your life truly miserable.

Yet I would not have you become insensible or motionless, like a statue; there is an activity and attention necessary to regulate the current business of your house. Your children which are of tender age demand in particular, much of your care. Suffer them not to follow their appetites, nor to take more nourishment than their stomachs can well digest, shelter them from the great heats of the season, remove them out of the reach of any thing which may hurt them; such are, for instance, water, fire, knives, elevated places whence they may fall down, any thing hard against which they may bruise themselves; but above all, forbid them the use of ill-dressed victuals, and green and unripe fruit. These are for tender infants two sorts of deadly poison.

Your domestics ought to have a share of your attention; let them find no want of food and raiment. If they are stupid, negligent, or awkward sometimes take no notice of their feelings and seem as if you did not perceive them: pardon them many lesser faults, especially when they mean well. Instruct them with gentleness; and consider that if they had great abilities, they would not be reduced to serve you.

THE TRIBES OF LEBANON.—The Maronites, who, with the Druses and other tribes of Lebanon, are now exciting so much interest, as the opponents of Ibrahim Pacha in Syria are, according to De la Martine, brave and like all mountaineers, warriors of nature. They could muster in 1832, at the bidding of Emir Beschir, their head to the number of 30 or 40 hundred men, either to defend the passes of their mountains, or rush upon the plain and make Damascus, or the towns of Syria tremble. Their population is upwards of 200,000, and increasing daily by their attention to agriculture, which has covered the sides of Lebanon with traces of mulberry, fig, olive, and plum trees, almost up to the highest crags. Their villages exceed 200, each having its well-built monastry, occupied by about 100 monks, who are, besides, all laborious peasants, raising silk, corn, &c., and are models of piety and industry. Though rigid Catholics, they have extorted from the Pope permission for the clergy to marry, and no where are this body so pure, so venerable and so truly pious, so that crime is almost unknown throughout the country.

In short, De la Martine observes, that should he ever be obliged to expatiate himself he should make choice of one of the peaceful villages of these Maronites, at the foot or on the descent bosom of a simple, religion, and benevolent population, under the palm and orange trees of one of the gardens of their mountains, within view of the sea. 'I may deceive myself,' says he, 'but I imagine great destinies may be received for the Maronite people—a virgin nation, primitive in its morals, religion and courage, possessed of the traditional virtue of the Patriarchs, of property, a portion of liberty, and much patriotism; and who by similarity of religion and other relations of faith and commerce, are every day more and more impregnated with western civilization.' Should a man of talent spring up among them, capable of estimating the future, and dispose to allay himself with European power, he would have no difficulty in reenacting the wonders of Mehemet Ali, Pacha of Egypt, and would leave behind him the veritable germ of Arabian empire.—Pilgrimage of the Holy Land.

THE MECHANIC.—We have more than once had our indignation aroused against a certain class of our community, who affect to despise that worthy portion of their neighbors who obtain an honest livelihood in mechanical employments.—When the mechanic is mentioned by the self-conceited fop, who perchance, owes his livelihood to some industrious mechanic, he is spoken of as 'only a mechanic.' We have known many worthy young men mortified and pained to the heart, by the unceremonious and purse-proud haughtiness of their superiors in wealth and impudence only,—crowded into the back ground to give place to idlers, and gentlemen at large, merely because they happened to be 'vulgar enough' to choose industry rather than idleness and independence. But let not the mechanic relax his praiseworthy exertions. He can return the sneer of the conceited fop with interest. He can stand up in the strength of an independent spirit—in the superiority of real worth, over tinsel and borrowed ornament. He fills an honorable place in society—'a place' said the celebrated Dr. Franklin, 'more honorable than to be a ruler of nations,' and it is time the real merit of his services were appreciated. It is time for Republican America to cast off prejudice, forged by the aristocracy of the old world, and to awake to her peculiar legitimate interests. The industrious mechanic may be ranked among her firmest supporters, and the 'period is not far distant,' says a celebrated writer, 'when he shall be placed upon his just station in the scale of society.'

THE OLDEST REPUBLIC ON EARTH.—The American Quarterly Review contains a letter from G. W. Irving, Esq., giving a sketch of his visit to San Marino, a small Republic in Italy, between the Appenines, the Po, and the Adriatic. The territory of this State is only 40 miles in circumference, and its population about 70,000. The Republic was founded more than 1400 years ago on moral principles, industry and equality, and has preserved its liberty and independence amidst all the mars and discords which have raged around it. Bonaparte respected it, and sent an embassy to express his sentiments of friendship and fraternity. It is governed by a captain Regent, chosen every six months by the representatives of the people, 66 in number, who are chosen every six months by the people. The taxes are light, the farm houses neat, the fields well cultivated, and on all sides are seen comfort and peace; the happy effects of morality, simplicity, liberty and justice. Mr. Erving was recieved by some intelligent citizens in a hospitable and affectionate manner; they were delighted with him because he was an American. They professed an attachment to our country, and look to it as the preserver of their own pure principles; they were intimately acquainted with our institutions and affairs, and had a library well furnished with books and pamphlets relating to America.

BE A TRUE MAN.—It is no easy matter to be a true man. The true man is true to himself; true to his country; true to his fellow man; true to his God. And yet how many might approach nearer the standard of a true man, if they were disposed to make trial? And how few even aim to be true. Trueness of thought spirit, conduct, in character and life—these alone can make a man really and truly great. Who yet, search the whole catalogue of human greatness, has come up to the full stature of a perfect man? Not one.—Because none have succeeded, should none try? Because the aim is a high one, and the height difficult of attainment, should no one attempt the ascent—no one make advances? In proportion to the difficulty of the task, will be the glory of accomplishment of the work, to him who attains. I can't. never accomplish any thing of importance; I can, has bridged one ocean, and brought the lightnings from the clouds. By this magic word, Art and Science have advanced; Agriculture and Manufactures and Commerce flourished, and Civilization spread its elevating influence among the abodes of men.

Every man, then, should strive to be a true man; true to duty; true to conscience; true to principle; true to truth.—If he would approximate toward this elevated standard, he should commence the work immediately, without delay. He must be true in small things—nothing, rightly considered, is small, if he will but be faithful over a few things, he may become lord over many things; step by step will he rise, and each such succeeding step will be more easy and rapid till at length he will have reached a sublime intellectual and moral elevation, which time cannot lessen not eternity destroy.

GENIUS WORKING FOR HIRE.—It is perhaps impossible for great genius to work expressly and avowedly for hire without being haunted or injured by that unhappy consciousness. A book-seller offered the Rev. Robert Hall a thousand guineas for ten sermons, and after his first refusal, strenulously and repeatedly urged him to accept the offer. Mr. Hall replied, that if it were no other obstacle in the way of his accepting the proposals, the mere business like character of the transaction, the bare naked form in which pecuniary remuneration was mixed up with it, would form an objection quite insuperable, and transform an occupation which ought to be spontaneous, and therefore delightful, into intolerable drudgery. "A thousand guineas, sir!" said Robert Hall, "I should soon begin to calculate how much it was for each sermon; then I should get down to a page, and from pages to paragraphs and sentences, and at last to words and syllables; should think every word clear gain and become impatient of erasure and correction!—Sir, it is impossible that I could do it."

CHAMPIONS OF FREEDOM.—Let it not diminish your admiration that Cicero was proscribed and put to death. They who live for their country must be prepared to die for it. For the same reason, and in the same cause, his great predecessor, Demosthenes, shared a similar fate. But both died in their country's service—and their memories shall endure forever, long after the loftiest structures of the proudest sovreigns. There were kings in Egypt who piled up enormous monuments with the vain hope of immortality. Their follies have survived their history. No man can tell who built the pyramids. But the names of these great martyrs of human liberty have been in all succeeding time the trumpet call to freedom. Each word which they have spoken has been echoed back from all free bosoms in after ages, and served to rally nations against their oppressors.

IMPROVEMENT IN EDUCATION.—It is a matter which may well be questioned, whether any radical improvement has been made in the system of education since the period of the immortal Bacon. To his inventive and philosophic mind we are indebted for the entire change which took place in the prosecution of physical and mental science. The principle of induction, which he carried into the region of matter and mind, has laid a foundation from which we cannot depart without being lost in the uncertainties of profitless speculation. He has taught us to substitute facts for fancy, and by the gradual development of the various phenomena of matter and mind, to arrive at general conclusions which are incontrovertable.

PRINTING PRESS.—A Mr. Leormand, a French Mechanic, has lately discovered the means of printing on one cylinder, both sides of the same sheet, which enables his mechanical press to act with a quickness double any hitherto known, and can produce 4,000 copies an hour.

Children's Department.

WHAT IS EDUCATION.

Extract from the "Means and Ends, or Self-Training," by Miss Sedgwick.

"What is education?" asked a teacher of a class of girls. Young persons, when asked such general questions, do not reply promptly. They have no thoughts on the subject, and therefore have nothing to say; or, their thoughts not being arranged, they are not ready to answer; or, they may be too diffident to answer at all. On this occasion, half the girls were silent, and the rest replied, "I don't know, sir."

"Oblige me, girls, by saying something," urged the teacher. "The word is not Greek—surely you have some ideas about it. What is your notion of education, Mary Bliss?"

"Does it not mean, sir, learning to read and write?" Mary Bliss paused, and the girl next her added "and cyphering, sir, and grammar, and geography?"

"Yes it means this and something more. What is your idea of education, Sarah Johnson?"

"I did not suppose education meant much more than the girls have mentioned, sir. Mr. Smith said, at the Lyceum Lecture, that the great mass of people received their education at the common schools."

"Does not education mean," asked Maria Jarvis, "the learning young men get at colleges? I often hear people say of a man that he has 'had an education,' when they mean merely that he has been through college."

"You are right, Maria, in believing this to be a commonly received meaning of the term, 'education;'—but it means more, and as it is important to you to have right and fixed ideas on this subject I earnestly beg you all to give me your attention, while I attempt to explain to you its full meaning.

"A great man, Mr. Locke, said that the difference to be found in the manners and abilities of men, is owing more to their education than any thing else.' Now, as you are acquainted with men who have never seen the inside of a college, and yet who are superior in 'manners and abilities' to some others who have passed four of the best years of their lives there, you must conclude that education is not confined to college walls.

"You are born with certain faculties. Whatever tends to develope and improve these is education. Whatever trains your mental powers, your affections, manners, and habits, is education. Your education is not limited to any period of your life, but is going on as long as you live. Whatever prepares you to be a profitable servant of God, and a faithful disciple of Christ—whatever increases your reverence and love of your Maker—all that in the Scripture is called the 'nurture and admonition of the Lord,' is a part of your religious education.

"Whatever you do to promote your health, to develope and improve the strength and powers of your body, is part of your physical education."

"What, Sir!" interrupted Mary Lewis, "do you mean running, and jumping rope, and trundling hoops, and clambering over rocks, is that a part of education?"

"I certainly do—but why do you laugh, my dear child?"

"Because, sir, I never knew that education meant anything so pleasant as that; I wish my mother could hear you, sir; she would let me play more, instead of studying all the time, if she only knew that driving hoop was called education."

The teacher smiled and proceeded—"Whatever calls forth your affections and strengthens them, whatever directs and subdues your passions, whatever cultivates your virtues, and whatever improves your manners, is a part of your moral education."

"Then," said the same lovely little girl, "that is what my mother means when she says, 'there is a lesson for you, Anne!' every time any of the family does any good thing. It seems to me I am educating all the time."

"You are, Anne—the world is your school, and good examples are your very best lessons. Whatever unfolds the faculties of your mind, improves your talents augments your stores of knowledge, is a part of your intellectual education.

"Whatever improves your capacity for domestic affairs, or for business of any sort, is a part of your economical education. Now you will perceive, from what I have said, that education is not confined to schools and colleges, but that as Anne has very well remarked, we are 'educating all the time.' Nor is the conduct of education confined to professed teachers; we are educating one another.

"While I am teaching you geography and arithmetic, you are perhaps trying my patience, or by your own patience calling forth my gratitude. If I make progress in these virtues, you are helping on my moral education.

"The knowledge you impart to one another, the kindness you receive, the love you exchange, are all a part of your education. When you learn to sweep a room, to make a bed, or a cup of tea, a shirt, or a loaf of bread, you are getting on in your education.

"Everything around us, my children, may help forward this great work. The sun, the moon, and the stars teach their sublime lessons. 'Day until day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge.' The seasons make their revolutions. The rain and snow, dews and frosts, the trees and rocks, fruits and flowers, plants, herbs, the very stones and grass we tread upon, are full of instructions to those who study them.

"All the events and circumstances of your lives are contributing to your education. Your classmate, Lucy Davis, has been absent from school the last two months. Reflect on what I have been saying to you, and then tell me whether Lucy, during this time, though she has not looked into a school book has made any progress in her education."

The girls were silent and thoughtful for a few moments. Maria Jarvis spoke first.

"Lucy's 'economical education,' as you call it, sir," she said, "has been going on, for she has had the care of the family, and every thing to do all through her mother's illness."

"And I guess she has been going on in her 'moral education," interposed little Mary Lewis, "for I never saw any body so patient as she was with her mother's cross baby."

"And she has not lost this opportunity for improving in her religious education," resumed the teacher. "You all saw her yesterday at her mother's funeral, subduing the grief of her little sisters by her quiet resignation and affectionate devotion to them. Ah, she has been taking lessons in more important branches of education than are taught in schools.

"So you see, my dear children, that life is a school—a primary school; and that we are all preparing for a day of examination, when the infallible Judge will decide how we have profited by our means of education."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ROAD WARRANTS.

A quantity of Road Warrants just printed and for sale at this office.

JOB PRINTING.

BOOKS, Pamphlets, Hand-Bills, Cards, Way Bills, &c. &c., neatly executed at this office.

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail. He particulaaly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.

ELISHA STILLMAN.

De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

200
PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATIONS
OF THE
HOLY BIBLE,
CONSISTING OF VIEWS IN THE HOLY LAND.

BY ROBERT SEARS.

THE FIFTH EDITION of the first volume of the above work is issued from the press of ROBERT SEARS, 122 Nassau Street, New York.

It is a book of 400 large octavo pages, and is done up in the neatest typographical manner, bound in muslin, and lettered in a superior style; containing over 200 engravings of an interesting and beneficial character.

Those wishing to subscribe for the above valuable work can be accommodated by applying to the subscriber, who has the agency for this town and vicinity. A specimen of the Book can be seen at this Office The price is extremely low, for a book of the size, so well stored with interesting and useful matter, and reflects much credit, in every respect, upon its enterprising publisher. Subscriptions are respectfully solicited, and the work will be ordered immediately for as many hundred as may wish to avail themselves of this opportunity of making so rich an addition to their Family Libraries, at so small an expense. Price only TWO DOLLARS.

A. H. BURDICK, Agent.

Register Office, De Ruyter, April 30, 1841.

VILLAGE LOTS.

The subscriber, as Agent of the Trustees of De Ruyter Institute, offers 29 building lots for sale on the most reasonable terms. The lots are situated on both sides of a street running west by the Institute, and on a cross street joining the above named street with the Turnpike in the west part of the village.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, April 16, 1841.

BOOT AND SHOE STORE.

ANY quantity of BOOTS AND SHOES for sale cheap at the sign of the Mammoth Boot.

GEO. W. SUTTON.

De Ruyter, March 10, 1840.

AGENTS FOR THE REGISTER.

NEW-YORK.

Adams—H. H. Baker, Eli S. Bailey.
Alfred—James R. Irish, Maxson Greene, Samuel Russel, P. M., Orsin Vincent.
Berlin—S. S. Streeter, P. M.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock, Silas Bailey, Adin Burdick.
Bolivar—Lewis G. Baldwin, Dr. Wm. M. Truman.
Clarence—Nathan V. Hull.
Clear Creek—Charles Saunders.
Durhamville—Dea. Joseph Potter.
East Homer—A. Parker, P. M.
Edmeston—Dea. Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—Zuriel Campbell, Samuel E. Lanphear.
Genesee—Asa A. Langworthy, H. Willson, P. M. Daniel S. Truman.
Hounsfield—William Greene.
Independence—John P. Livermore, P. M., Stillman Coon.
Leonardsville—Dennis Hardin, H. S. Crandall
New York City—Paul Stillman.
Newport—Daniel Truman.
New London—Charles Lewis.
Petersburgh—George Crandall.
Preston—Dea. Clark Rogers.
Persia—Dea. Hosea Whitford.
Pitcairn, St. Lawrence Co.—Geo. P. Burdick
Scott—Joel Greene, Ezekiel G. Potter, James Hubbard, Hiram Babcock.
Schenectady—Abel Ward.
Skaneateles—W. M. Beauchamp.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Welcome Stillman.
Verona—Oscar Williams.
Watson—Wells K. Greene.
Phillipsburgh.—Schuyler Saunders.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Hopkinton.—Joseph Spicer, jun., P. M.
Westerly.—Jonathan Maxson.

CONNECTICUT.

Waterford—Lester T. Rogers.
Mystic Bridge—T. S. Greenman.

NEW-JERSEY.

Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Shiloh.—Isaac D. Titsworth
Salem.—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Hayfield—Thos. B. Brown, Lewis Dunham.
New Geneva—B. F. Bond.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydron, P. M.

VIRGINIA.

Lost Creek—Levi H. Bond.
Elk Creek—Thos. B. Bond.
New Salem—Jepthah F. Randolph.
Lewisport—Joseph Jeffrey, P. M.
Solus—Elias Lowther, Esq.

OHIO.

Newport.—Paul Crandall.
Bloomfield—Charles Clarke.
Northampton.—Simeon Babcock.
Port Jefferson.—Lewis A. Davis
Jackson.—Davis Loofbourrow.

MICHIGAN.

Oporto.—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge.—Bethuel Church, P. M.

WISKONSAN.

Milton, Rock Co.—Joseph Goodrich, P. M.

The Seventh-day Baptist Register
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
AT DE RUYTER, MADISON CO., N. Y.,
BY
JAMES BAILEY.

TERMS.—To village subscribers who have the paper left at their doors, $2 25, in advance, or $2 50, at the expiration of the year.

To office and mail subscribers, $2 if paid in advance, or $2 25 if payment is delayed six months, $2 50 at the end of the year. Subscriptions paid to the publisher or to any authorised Agents within three months from the receipt of the first number, will be considered in advance.

Each communication, involving facts and intended for insertion in the paper, must be accompanied by a responsible name.

☞ No subscription received for a less term than six months.

☞ All subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, will be considered as wishing to continue their subscription, and their paper will be sent to them accordingly. No paper will be discontinued till all arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Advertisements inserted on the most reasonable terms.

☞ All letters and communications to ensure attention should be addressed to the publisher free of postage

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST REGISTER.

[WHOLE NO. 68.

VOL. II.—NO. 16.] JAMES BAILEY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TERMS.—TWO DOLLARS IN ADVANCE.] DE RUYTER, N. Y., SIXTH-DAY, JUNE 18, 1841. [$2,50 AT THE END OF THE YEAR.

Original Papers.

For the Register.

Adversity.

We are all very apt to esteem adversity, as a great and insupportable evil: something, that in order to secure our happiness, it is necessary to avoid. I am apprehensive, however, that when the subject is fully understood, and appreciated as it should be, our opinions will be changed. It is true, adversity causes us to grieve when we experience it; and we shrink from it, as from some dread being that has the power to annihilate us. Indeed, from the superficial observations which we are apt to make, we conclude, that the world is rendered miserable by this almost monster. This is far from the truth. Weak mortals we are, to be frightened by this spectre. Though severe its stroke, and painful its endurance; yet, its ultimate consequence is blessed. This is inferred from the two propositions.

1. That whatever tends to bring man down in the valley of humiliation, and show him his own littleness, exerts a happy influence on him.

2. That adversity does it the most effectually.

With regard to the first proposition, man is absolutely dependent on one great Being for every good; to whom, also, he owes, in all things, humble submission and heartfelt adoration. No one will deny that it is the nature of man to aspire after pre-eminence over every rival power; and whenever those seeds, sown in the human heart by the enemy of all righteousness, are suffered to spring up and come to maturity, he will blindly exalt himself above the Almighty, or essay to drag the Ruler of the Universe down below his own level. Now, since it is impossible for him to succeed, it must render him miserable. It places him in a state of rebellion against an omnipotent Being, on whom he is dependent for every desirable object. From this it follows, that humility and submission are necessary to procure access to the store-house of God's bounties; and that these undeniably create in man a most happy frame of spirit.

With regard to the second, the experience of all ages goes to support it; and every one, who has felt adversity, can testify to its humiliating and subduing power; just as those who receive it, as the merited and merciful chastisement of an indulgent parent, can bear witness to its happy influence. Here, the effect of adversity on the prodigal son, as narrated by our Savior, may be referred to, as it affords a most striking illustration of its capability, when rightly received, to reclaim from folly and wickedness, and, consequently, of its power to bless. While he was surrounded by an abundance of the luxuries of life, he persevered in his rebellion against his father, and spent his living riotously; nor once thought of returning to his allegiance, nor of abandoning his sins. But, sorely pressed by the hand of adversity, clad in rags, and starving in a strange land, he comes to himself. His real condition, which, in his prosperity, was hidden from his mental vision, now bursts upon him with overwhelming force. He says, even the hired servants of my father have bread enough and to spare; while no man will give unto me; even of the husks which are fed to the swine. Goaded by shame for his foolish conduct, and impelled by galling adversity, he determines to return to his father, to renounce his rebellion, and is even willing to become as one of his hired servants. Most happy determination this! as the sequel clearly shows.

Says St Paul, in an epistle to the Corinthians, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Says David, Ps. cxix. 67, "Before I was afflicted, I went astray; but now have I kept thy word"; and again, 71, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes." In addition to this, there are thousands living at the present day, whom if they could be brought forward and permitted to testify, would declare to the same effect. Some would say, we were haughty sinners, and wasted our days unconscious of our obligations to God, and ignorant of the dangers to which we were exposed; but adversity came, and taught us humility and dependence on Him; and therefore are we blest. Others, with tears of gratitude, would say, we had known God's love, and said to yield obedience to him; but in prosperity, we were uplifted with pride, forgot the source of our blessings, and vainly trusting in our own might, turned again to pursue the toys and vanities of the world. Adversity awaked us from the delusion, pointed to the yawning gulf before us, and humbled us by its scourge, till we drew nearer the throne of grace than ever. Therefore, it is good for us that we have been afflicted. Thus, like the bitter medicine of the physician, or the painful operations of the surgeon, its effect is beneficial and healing. Come, then, dread power, with all thy terror; for rather than be blinded by rash confidence in our own strength, and rush madly upon our own ruin, we will welcome thy chastisements.

P. M. V.

Religious Department.

THE COST OF THE CHRISTIAN PROFESSION.

We are to consider the cost of the Christian profession. The cost attending (this profession,) relates, either to what it requires us to renounce, or we are to expect, the term and duration of the engagement.

1. In order to be the disciples of Christ, there is much that we instantly renounce. It is a profession of holiness: it therefore demands the immediate renunciation of criminal and forbidden pleasures. The moment we become Christ's disciples, we commence a warfare with the flesh, engaging for its crucifixion, with all its sinful lusts and appetites. "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts." To the severity of monastic discipline, in which the body is torn by scourges, and emaciated by abstaining from the nourishment required to sustain it in health and vigor, the religion of Christ is a stranger. "For every creature of God is good, if it be received with thanksgiving." But a soft, voluptuous, and sensual life is repugnant, not only to the example of Christ, but to the whole genius and spirit of his institutes. By his Gospel and by his Son, God has "called us, not to uncleanness, but to holiness;" so that he that despiseth the precepts of purity despiseth not man but God: "This is the will of God, even our sanctification, but every man should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honor; not in the lust of concupiscence, as the Gentiles which knew not God." However painful the sacrifice of forbidden gratifications may be, however deep and inveterate the habit of indulgence, though it may seem as necessary to us, and as much a part of ourselves, as the right hand, or the right eye, —relinquished it must be, or we cannot be Christ's disciples. A life of sinful pleasure is not the life of a man, much less is it the life of a Christian: "He that liveth in pleasure" (it is the language of inspiration) "is dead while he liveth." Let me urge every one present to count the cost in this particular, and if he is not firmly determined, in the strength of divine grace, "to abstain from those fleshly lusts which war against the soul," let him not pollute the name of the holy and immaculate Lamb of God by associating it with his own. Such an association is his abhorrence, which he will testify in a future day; and he will vindicate his insulted purity by a final renunciation and disclaimer, saying, "Depart from me ye that work iniquity: I never knew you."

2. The Christian profession is spiritual, and therefore requires the renunciation of the world. The words of our Lord in this particular are decisive: "So, likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, cannot be my disciple." In the interpretation of these words, we must undoubtedly distinguish between the spirit and the letter. In the ordinary circumstances of the Christian profession, a little compliance with this requirement would lead to pernicious consequences; to a relinquishment of the duties proper to our station, and a disorganization of society: but still they have an important meaning. They present the relation of a disciple to the present state and world, as that of "a stranger and pilgrim;" that the relation in which it stands to him is that of an entire and absolute subordination to the glory of Christ and the interests of eternity. At the first opening of the gospel dispensation the sacrifice of all secular advantages, the disruption of the tender ties which connect parents and children, husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, and the dearest friends, was not unfrequently the inevitable consequence of an adherence to Christ. The necessity of literally forsaking all was an usual appendage of the Christian profession. There was, therefore, a great propriety in placing the engagements of a disciple in this strong and forcible light, which, however, prescribe nothing more than what is irrevocably binding on us under similar circumstances. To regard every worldly interest, at all times, with an attachment subordinate to the love of Christ, to treasure up our chief happiness in him, and to be willing to "forsake all," whenever the following him renders it necessary, are absolutely essential to the becoming his disciples.

On this ground, my Christian brethren, let each of us try our religious pretensions. If you wish to carry into the Christian profession the weight of worldly encumbrance, a heart corroded by its passions, and agitated with its cares; if you are desirous of uniting the service of God and of Mammon, and think of presenting to Christ a few small relics of your time, occupied in the cold formalities of a dead and heartless religion, you cannot be his disciples. The world must be displaced from the throne, or Christ will not, cannot enter; since he will never condescend to occupy a subordinate place. Alas! what multitudes are there (there is reason to fear,) who are fatally deceived in this particular; and who, while they form a high estimate of their character as Christians, have not "the Spirit of Christ," and are, therefore, "none of his!"

3. In order to be a disciple, it is necessary, in the concerns of conscience, to renounce every authority but that of Christ. The connection of a Christian with the Savior is not merely that of a disciple with his teacher; it is the relation of a subject to his prince. "One is your Master, even Christ." "My sheep hear my voice, and they follow me." In the whole course of our lives, if we are indeed his disciples, we shall evince our allegiance by a conscientious observance of his laws, by an implicit submission to his will, together with a sincere desire of ascertaining more and more of his mind and purpose. "We shall call no man master upon earth," nor dare to trifle with the least of his injunctions; and while we plead the merits of his death, and the perfection of his righteousness as the alone ground of hope, we shall reverence him as a Sovereign, who is entitled to that spiritual, that interior obedience of the heart, which is suited to the character of him who searches it. He who trusts in him as his Savior, must obey him as his Lord; nor shall any be washed in his blood who will not submit to his sceptre.

The moment Paul was brought to a saving acquaintance with Christ, he wrought in him a most profound sense of his majesty; a most humble and reverential submission to his will. His proud, intractable heart melted like wax before the sun, till, passive and subdued under the hand of Christ, he exclaims, "Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do?" While you prefer submission to any other yoke, while the dictates of any other authority have more power over you than the precepts of Christ, dream not of being his disciples: it is absolutely impossible.—Robert Hall.

PERSEVERANCE.

This is another estimable privilege of believers. Christ has engaged to keep them unto the end; and having begun a good work in them, he has promised never to leave it until it be finished. What a strengthening is this to their faith, and what a glory does it put upon the whole of faith, that it is a life which cannot perish? Believers have in them the immortal seed of eternal life. This is the crown of all: for how will this bear them up under crosses, support them in troubles, carry them on in their warfare against the flesh, the devil and the world, and make them defy all dangers, yea death itself, since they are assured, from the mouth of God their Savior, that none shall pluck them out of his hands. They do not trust themselves, or have any dependence upon grace received, but they rely upon the faithfulness and power of Jesus, who has given them abundant evidence that he will water them with his grace every moment, and hold them up by his strength, and they shall be safe. How confident were believers in this in the Old Testament? One of them who had attained this assurance of faith, says, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life;" and he, with many others who had obtained like precious faith with him declare, —"This is our God forever, he will be our guide even unto death." They were sure he would be their God, and would follow them with mercy, and guide them, and do them good in life and death. To the same purpose our Lord hath promised believers, "my sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand." How confidently did he trust in Christ for the fulfilling of this blessed promise, who said, "I am fully persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Oh! sweet words of comfort: how happy was Paul in this assurance of faith? It is thy privilege, believer, as well as his.—Thou hast the same promises that he had, the same God to fulfil them, and thy faith ought to be growing until thou be assured that no creature, not all the powers on earth, not the gates of hell, can separate thee from Christ. They may as soon get into heaven, and cut off Christ's right hand, which is impossible, as to cut off one of the members of Christ's mystical body.

If thou art ready to say, I see clearly how I should glorify my dear Lord, and how happy I should be, if my faith was but like Paul's in this point, but I am so weak and liable to fall, and mine enemies so numerous and mighty, that I sometimes fear I shall never be able to hold out unto the end. Because thou art such, therefore the Lord has given thee his promise, that he will hold thee up, and thou shalt be safe. And this promise is part of the covenant which is ordered in all things, and sure. Look at that, and not at thyself.—Consider the Messenger of the covenant, in whom it is all ordered, and by whom it is sure. When thy unfaithfulness would discourage thee, think of his faithfulness: Let thy weakness remind thee of his strength. If indeed he leave thee a single moment, thou wilt fall, but he has promised, I will never leave thee. If the number and strength of thine enemies make thee fear lest thou shouldest one day perish by the hand of Saul, he says to thee, thou shalt be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation. But if thou art tempted to doubt, finding thy revolting heart apt to turn from the Lord, "I will put my fear," says he, "into thy heart, that thou shalt not depart from." Observe, it is his faithfulness and power, and not thine, which is to keep thee, and he has covenanted to do it, and he has all power in heaven and earth, and he has given thee promise upon promise for the establishment of thy faith, that thou mightest be certain he will love thee, and keep thee unto the end. And when he has brought thee to a certainty of it, then thy comfort will be full. Christ will be magnified in thee, now he has made thee one of those fathers, who have known him, that is, from the beginning. He has taught thee so to know him, as to trust him for all things, and in all times. This is his crown and glory. He has enthroned himself in thy heart, as thy perfect Savior, and his kingdom is within thee, even righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Now thy calling and thy election is sure. Thou knowest that he is faithful who has promised to keep thee, who also will do it. And having this assurance of faith, attended with the rejoicing of hope, and being sealed by the blessed spirit to the day of redemption, surely thou art a happy man, thrice happy, whom the Lord has thus highly favored.—How infinitely indebted art thou to his grace! Oh! what thanks and praises dost thou owe, more than thou canst ever pay, for what he has already done for thee! And yet this only the dawning of the perfect day. His present favors are only earnests and pledges of what he will hereafter give thee. Therefore, still trust in him, and he will enlighten thee more by his Word and Spirit, he will enliven, strengthen, and establish thee more. Thy faith will daily rest more assuredly upon him, the joy of thy hope will increase, thy love will yet more abound. He will guide thee by his counsel in an even course, and will receive thee into glory.—Romaine.

An Indian's View of the Way of Salvation.—A North American Indian, and a white man, being at worship together, were both impressed so deeply under the same sermon as to commence seeking their salvation. The Indian soon rejoiced in the hope of divine forgiveness. The white man remained in deep distress of mind, until, after sinking almost in despair, he also, at length, found peace in believing. Sometime afterwards, meeting his red brother he thus addressed him:—"How is it that I should be so long under conviction, when you found comfort so soon?" "O, brother," replied the Indian, "me tell you; there came along a rich prince, he propose to give you a new coat; you look at your coat, and say, "I don't know, my coat pretty good; I believe it will do a little longer." He then offer me a new coat; I look on my old blanket; I say, this good for nothing; I fling it right away, and accept the new coat. Just so brother, you try to make your old righteousness do for some time, you loath to give it up; but I, poor Indian, had none, therefore I glad at once to receive the righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ."—Burder's Missionary Anecdotes.

THE TONGUE GUARD.

There are coach guards, and night guards, and watch guards, and fire guards, and other guards; but none of these are of so great importance as the tongue guard; the nature, necessity, utility and principle of which I desire to illustrate in the following paragraphs:

Seeing that the power of the tongue is so great, and that therefore the tongue guard is so necessary, I will proceed to give a few directions how to use it.

1. Do not speak profanely. "Fear an oath," and be careful to abstain from taking the name of God in vain, lightly and carelessly to express surprise: in common conversation, mention not that name but with reverence.

2. Speak not falsely. He who has levity enough to speak falsely to gratify vanity, or to cause mirth, is a fool. He who violates truth, in order to gratify malice or obtain revenge, is a villain. He who deviates from truth, in order to avoid danger, is a coward. And I wish to caution you not only against downright lying, but also against every species of duplicity, promise-breaking, prevarication, and dissimulation of every kind.

3. Speak not unkindly, particularly of absent persons, who have not the opportunity of defending themselves. The law says, "Thou shalt not curse the deaf." (Lev. xix. 14.) But remember that absent persons are deaf to what you say; therefore speak not ill of them. "Be very cautious," said a wise observer, "of speaking or believing any ill of your neighbor; but be much more cautious of making hasty reports of them to their disadvantage." I have known some persons indulge in slander, and then, by way of excuse, say they cannot help but speak what they think; but "he, whose honest freedom makes it his virtue to speak what he thinks, makes it his necessity to think what is good."

4. Do not speak foolishly or unchastely. Foolish, frothy conversation is unbecoming the dignity of a rational being, and especially of a Christian.

5. Do not join too freely in general conversation of common-place, gossiping chitchat. Remember that wise proverb, "In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin; but he that refraineth his lips is wise." (Prov. x. 19.) We seldom talk freely but we grieve our fellow-creatures, or ourselves, or God, and have therefore to repent of it afterwards. This caution is by no means unnecessary, nor is it new. It has been considered of high importance by the wisest and best of men.

"I could wish," says Thomas A'Kempis, "that I had oftentimes held my peace, and that I had not been in company."

"Why are we so fond of conversation, when notwithstanding we seldom return to silence without hurt of conscience?"

"One said, as often as I have been among men, I return like a man; and this we often find true when we have been in company."

"It is easier not to speak at all, than not to speak more than we should."

"It is easier to keep at home, than to be sufficiently on our guard when we are abroad."

"No man safely goes abroad, but he who is willing to stay at home. No man can speak safely, but he who is willing to hold his peace."

LOVE OF MANKIND.

With regard to our love of mankind, were we to recall every argument for our mutual affection that the gospel supplies us with, we must transcribe the gospel. It will be sufficient to urge the force of that general conclusion of the Apostle, "if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." Here we see the Apostle brings the whole weight of those considerations which arise from the divine love displayed in redemption, directly to enforce our love of each other, and makes all that hath been advanced in support of the love of God, an argument for our love of man. They are indeed kindred affections which open into and communicate with each other; and that love of God which springs up continually, and overflows in the heart of the true Christian, feeds and maintains to an equal height the fountain of human love. For if we love our Redeemer, we must for our Redeemer's sake love mankind. It was not for some select few alone, it was not for some favorite sect or party, it was not for some peculiar people that our Lord died, but for the whole race of sinful men. He gave his life a ransom for many, and nothing less than a world was a fit object of his redeeming love. To every individual therefore amongst mankind the force of the Apostle's general conclusion is clearly applicable. Beloved, if God so loved him as to send his only begotten Son into the world, to be the propitiation of his sins, surely then we are bound by the strongest obligations to love him likewise. For if there be any one man, how mean, how miserable, how contemptible soever he may seem; if there be any one whom we dare to think unworthy of our love, we thereby have the presumption to oppose our opinion to that of our Saviour, who hath declared him not unworthy of his. Oh you then, who harbour in your breasts any dark and unfriendly passion; you who listening only to the dictates of resentment, are preparing for your brother the whole weight of your revenge; look up before you execute your fatal purpose; look through those mists of passion with which you are now blinded, and behold him whom you were about to strike encircled in the arms of your Redeemer!

So powerfully doth redemption strengthen all the bonds of mutual affection between us, exalted benevolence into charity and brotherly love.—Rotheram.

From the Western Episcopal Recorder.

Every thing for Eternity.

"I paint for eternity." The ancient artist who thus replied, when asked why so cautious in drawing his lines, so slow in using his pencil, unwittingly uttered a truth which is applicable to all the thoughts, words, and actions of all men. All are registered in a book which all ages will not make old, and in characters which eternity will not efface. Every motion of the mind is written on a tablet more durable than if engraven with an iron pen upon the rock. Every utterance of the tongue is borne with wings, and flies direct into eternity. Every deed of the life is more durable than adamant. There is no power to annihilate that which has been once said, or done, or thought. The heavens may pass away; the earth, and all things that are therein, may be burnt up; but the conduct of accountable creatures can never be obliterated.

The preacher preaches [illegible] it will then be seen wh[illegible] word of God deceitful[illegible] the word of truth; [illegible] gain the applause of [illegible] whether he chose [illegible] presented them in th[illegible] ing to his ability, an[illegible] end, or whether h[illegible] up at random and th[illegible] than aimed at his he[illegible] his Master's work. [illegible] all this to the preacher, [illegible] and all his sermons are [illegible] membrance, and made to pa[illegible] view before his mind.

Hearers hear for eternity; not intentionally, we grant, but of necessity. They have not done with the summons they hear, when the speaker's voice has ceased to vibrate. His words have passed away, indeed; but the recording angel has put it down whether they have affected the heart or not. The truth rejected, the promise slighted, the warning despised, the precept forgotten, will all re-appear, and show the thoughtless and the sceptical hearer to be without excuse.

Merchants buy and sell for eternity. They lay up goods only for a few years; but the motives and moral character of their business transactions will survive when life is immeasured by the flight of years. Though riches make to themselves wings and fly away, they heap treasures together for eternity—treasures either of indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish; or treasures of glory, honor, and peace, according as they have bought and sold "as unto the Lord, or unto man."

They who live in indolence or pleasure, sow for eternity; and they will reap a rich harvest of thorns and briers that will teach them that their lives were madness. Eternity will be a retrospect of time, and it will then be seen whether there is satisfaction in reviewing the past. It will be seen whether our pursuits here sprung from and engendered appetites that eternity can gratify. The predominant desire and relish here will be the predominant passion there; but there will be no revel, no song, no dance, no stage, no sumptuous living there: no, not a drop of pleasure, so called, will there be found to cool the parched tongue.

The lawyer pleads and the judge decides for eternity. Arguments, and opinions, and decisions are rejected in the court of appeals above. It will there be seen whether counsellors have pleaded when guilt is proved; whether opinions have been given from interest or honest convictions; whether they have argued from false premises to a desired conclusion, or from true premises to a false conclusion. And the judge will see, when he is before the Judge of the stranger, the fatherless and the widow, whether he has decided uprightly, or from prejudice, passion, or partiality.

The same truth is applicable to every calling, condition, station, and action of life. "Life is a passage to eternity, and ought to be a meditation of eternity, and a preparation for eternity."

"Love God, love truth, love virtue, and be happy:
——The terms on which
True peace was given to man, unchanged as God,
Who, in his own essential nature, binds
Eternally to virtue happiness,
Nor lets them part through all his universe."

From the Northern Advocate.

"LET ME DIE THE DEATH OF THE RIGHTEOUS."

We are now to speak of his happy death. But as it has never yet been fully penciled, it were vain to hope clearly to display its peacefulness—its triumph—its glory. The pious bard says truly on this wise—"The death bed of the just is yet unknown by mortal hand, it merits a divine." We may expect only to trace the outskirts of this delightful scene, and explore the surface of this mysterious bliss while the distant regions and the deep interior are covered from our view by the veil of eternity.

The death of the righteous is a desirable event, because.

1. It is Peaceful. His guilt having been removed and his offences pardoned, no longer pain his eyes; no longer harrow up his conscience; but at peace with God, with his own conscience and with all men, he gathers up his feet and dies with his father's God to meet. He dies peacefully, and why should it be otherwise? What can there be to disturb his quiet? Indeed, what is there, what can there be wanting to render his end emphatically peaceful?

2. It is HOPEFUL. And his hope is not a false, uncertain, fleeting hope like that of the hypocrite, which shall perish; but it is the good hope, because it is scriptural. It is said that "light is sown for the upright;" and may he not hope therefore to reap an eternal harvest of glory? Again, "the Lord will not suffer the righteous to perish." These and many similar promises of God, render the hope of the Christian as steadfast as the pillars of God's throne, and the attributes that make his character. His hope is well founded—not indeed upon his morality, for we have seen that he was righteous at heart—nor upon his good works alone, for after he had done all he could, he was an unprofitable servant; nor yet upon his professions; for though they described the state of his mind, they had no moral effect upon his heart, they changed not the doom of eternity; but his hope was in God; and is not such foundation sure? Are they not blessed whose hope the Lord is? That hope was through the merits of our Redeemer—hence St. Paul prayed that God would reveal to his brethren "the riches of his glory, which was Christ in them the hope of glory." And the Christian's hope is good because its objects are important. It pierces the gloom of [illegible]uturity and fastens on Paradise, where are [illegible]arus, the thief who repented on the cross, [illegible] saints who have died, for the testi[illegible]f God; also on the resurrection of [illegible] and on eternal life in heaven, where [illegible]ed up, glory, honor and a blissful [illegible]

[illegible] STINGLESS. The Great High [illegible]an's profession having undertaken [illegible], and conquered his enemy, he now [illegible] in the hour of his trial, "O death, [illegible] thy sting!" The venom of the [illegible]row has been counteracted by the [illegible] of salvation. Feeling the love of [illegible]ist within the holy man now, dares the [illegible]emy's darts, and joys to enter upon the journey through the dark valley of death's deepening shades.

4. It is TRIUMPHANT. The dominion of the greedy grave has been overthrown—his iron arm paralyzed—his power crushed, and now with his foot upon the neck of his last enemy, he exults crying in death, "O grave where is thy victory?" O may I sing the death song of the pious—be it mine to achieve his triumph, and share his victory, and it is enough.

5. Finally brethren the death of the righteous is desirable because it is glorious. His last earthly scene has a glory all its own. Not, indeed, the fading laurels of the earthly conquerer after the successful strife, nor the tinsel of worldly splendor; but the beaming forth of that effulgence of glory which fills all heaven. You know it is said "the chamber where the good man meets his fate, is quite in the verge of heaven;" and so it appears by the scattering rays of celestial falling upon the hallowed spot and brightening the otherwise gloomy scene. Then who will not say, "Let me die the death of the righteous"? H.

April. 1841.

THE REGISTER.

De Ruyter, June 18, 1841.

THOMAS E. BABCOCK is a traveling agent for this paper.

A Proposition from the West.

The following we cut from the Banner and Pioneer, a Baptist paper, published at Louisville, Ky.

Seventh Day Baptists.

"This sect, according to Allen's Register, numbered in 1836, forty-two churches, thirty ministers, and four thousand five hundred and three members, in the United States, but we have no data from which to estimate their increase since, or present number.—They no doubt are conscientious in their adherence to the seventh day, as the appropriate day to be observed by christians for the public worship of God, and we are not disposed to interfere with their privilege of worshiping God according to the dictates of conscience.

"Our object in mentioning this denomination is to suggest a plan by which they can all be made first day Baptists, without sacrificing their conscientious scruples. Let them embark at any of our eastern seaports on a voyage around the world; sailing around Cape Horn, across the Pacific, Indian, and Atlantic Oceans, to the port of embarkation, and if they have worshiped regularly on the seventh day during their voyage, they will find on their return, that the day on which they worship is the first day of the week or christian Sabbath. Thus enabling them to unite with other christian churches in observing the first, instead of the seventh day, without feeling that they have departed from the original command.

"This will result simply from the fact that each day with the ship, was a little longer than the day at any fixed point on the globe, and consequently she will have fewer of them than the inhabitants of the port she left. Whether the object to be accomplished by this project is of sufficient moment to warrant the expense, we leave others to determine; but the plan itself shows the futility of urging the observance of the Seventh DAY as holy time to the exclusion of all other days. A. R. H."

Brother Hinkley admits there is 'no doubt that they are conscientious in the observance of the seventh-day, and frankly declares that he is not disposed to interfere with our privilege of worshiping God according to the dictates of conscience'; but this religious patriotism is, in our opinion, somewhat dampened by the want of adherence to the admitted rule of faith, and practice of Protestants, by his permitting common custom to supersede a "thus saith the Lord."

This is manifest from his kindness in mentioning the "denomination," that he may "suggest a plan by which they may all be made first-day Baptists without sacrificing their conscientious scruples," that they may "unite with other christian churches without feeling that they have departed from the original command."

We trust that we appreciate the SUGGESTION, but must confess that our mental acumen will not enable us to see why it should have any more bearing on the seventh than the first-day Sabbath. But if Br. H. takes Brownson or no Sabbath doctrine, or holds the perpetuity of the Sabbath from common consent of other christian churches, only, the futility of urging any Sabbath, will, in his mind, be as manifest as he supposes that of the seventh-day. We hope better things. But whether it will warrant the expense he leaves for others to determine. We frankly say that we think it will not.

1. A trip from east to west around the globe would no more satisfy us that the first-day was the Sabbath, than a trip from west to east would satisfy us that the Mahometans were right, and that the sixth-day was the Sabbath commanded; neither do we think that either of the above trips would satisfy Br. H. that Monday was the Sabbath, or that we now keep the right day: thus no satisfaction would be obtained by the pecuniary "expense."

2. We have an additional expense incurred by disobeying the express command of God to keep the Sabbath. This expense of disobedience we will leave for Br. H. to determine, as our minds are fully made up on this subject, inasmuch as we find no authority whatever for the keeping of any other than the seventh-day, that is sustained by what is indispensable to a Protestant—a "thus saith the Lord"; and the "expense" of a contrary course we are not willing to forego.

We propose, therefore, to Br. H., to save us the "expense" of a trip round the globe, as also of the violation of the law of God, by showing us a "thus saith the Lord" for becoming a first-day Baptist, and we assure our brother that we will gladly embrace the day. But short of this, a trip round the globe, even at HIS expense, would not convince us that the command for the seventh-day Sabbath has ever been abrogated.

The Baptist Library.

We have received the first No. vol. 2d, of the "Baptist Library," containing a re-publication of standard Baptist Works. The Library is published semi-monthly at Lexington, Greene co., N. Y., "in a pleasant valley among the Cattskill Mountains."—It is done up with a good degree of typographical skill, while its contents appear to abound with practical and doctrinal disquisitions. L. L. & R. H. HILL, Publishers; Rev. C. G. SOMMERS, and Rev. W. R. WILLIAMS, Editors. Terms, 1,50 per annum.

THE MONTHLY SERMON, for June, is unavoidably deferred, for the purpose of making room for Mr. Chadwick's discussion; which, by the way, we are advertised will soon close.

For the Register.

Doctrine vs. Practice.

MR. EDITOR—I observe in a recent publication, entitled "The Baptist Library," the following motto: "Teaching them to observe ALL THINGS WHATSOEVER I HAVE COMMANDED YOU," borne by a 'herald,' represented with a book in the opposite hand, which I suppose is intended to represent the Bible.

Query—If they 'teach ALL things' that are commanded, why not practice their own precepts? SABBATARIAN.

Religious Discussion.

For the Register.

Reasons for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity.

NO. VII.

MR. EDITOR;—I shall proceed in this number further to sustain my fourth reason for not embracing the doctrine of the Trinity; viz: "that the texts which are commonly adduced in its support, do not appear to me to contain it."

The argument from those texts which are supposed to contain the ascription of Divine attributes to Jesus Christ, will appear, I think, to be founded in mistake. For his power is uniformly represented to be derived from the Father, or to be given to him; and, therefore, cannot be absolutely omnipotent. "All power," said he, "is given unto him in heaven and in earth." Matt. xxviii. 18. This is a fair specimen of the representations of scripture upon this point. The passage in Rev. i. 8, in which it is claimed that he is called "the Almighty," is most certainly applicable to the Father, and not to him: which appears, first, from the style of the speaker, viz: "saith the Lord," which was the usual style in which God was wont to speak by the prophets; and, secondly, from the following characteristic words, viz: "which is, and which was, and which is to come," which are the very words whereby God is distinguished from Jesus Christ in the connection, see verses 4th and 5th of this chapter, and ch. iv. 8, compared with ch. v. 6, 7. Omnipotence, therefore, is not here ascribed to Jesus Christ; but to the Father.

In all other places, his power, as before observed, is represented as derived. "All things are delivered unto him of the Father." It is "God who hath put all things under him," (himself excepted,) and such power does not constitute absolute omnipotence. Neither does God's giving him this power and dominion, imply that he has parted with his own Almightiness, or that Christ has become essentially possessed of this attribute. In reality, it is God who operates in and through him, although, in a sense, he is said to do the works; just as Moses, Joshua and the Apostles are said to do the miracles which are attributed to them. They did not become omnipotent, because those things were done through their agency which omnipotence alone could effect. Neither did Jesus Christ. Omnipotent power wrought eminently through him; but not as an essential attribute of his nature; but as the attribute of his Father, displayed through him as the medium. "God did the things by him"—Nor is absolute omniscience ascribed to our Lord Jesus Christ in the texts commonly cited under that head. He is indeed said to "know all things": but this phrase is evidently to be understood in a modified or restricted sense, as a similar phraseology is applied to Christians, 1 John ii. 20: and as his knowledge is elsewhere spoken of as limited. See Mark xiii. 32. Matt. xxiv. 36, and Acts i. 7, and also as derived, or given to him. See John v. 20, and Rev. i. 1, and v. 5.

Nor does it appear that absolute eternity is ascribed to him in any of the texts adduced for that purpose. His being "in the beginning with God," means no more than he existed prior to the creation of the heavens and the earth. The phrase, "in the beginning," is confessed by some able Trinitarians to denote simply the commencement of the heavens and the earth. His being in existence, therefore, at this commencement does not prove him to be without beginning. His saying, John viii. 58, "before Abraham was, I am," or "I am before Abraham was," proves merely that he was older than that patriarch. The declaration, Micah v. 2, that his "goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting," do not prove absolute eternity; for everlasting is confessedly often used in a limited sense, and may be so used here. It is perfectly consonant to this sense which this term frequently bears to understand it here to mean a remote, indefinite, and unknown period before the creation of the heavens and the earth. Moreover, the sense of this term, in this case, is limited by the parallel expression, "from of old." Also by the important fact noted verse 5th, that "Jehovah was the Lord his God" As to his being called "alpha and omega," which appears to be the case in two instances, viz: Rev, i. 17, and ch. ii. 8, I would observe that a modified sense of the phrase may be intended. He was "the beginning of the creation of God," and all things were created for him in subordination to the Father. Moreover; he was the first in authority under the Father, and will be the last to resign his authority. He is also the great subject of revelation from beginning to end. These things may account for the modified application of this phraseology to him. The declaration, Rev. i. 8, I have shown to be the language of the Father. The clause, "I am alpha and omega, the first and the last," in the 11th verse is probably an interpolation, as it is wanting in many of the best Greek MSS, and in ch. xxii. 13, the similar phraseology may be referred to the Father, there being an abrupt change of the speaker, as is frequently the case in the scriptures. The passages adduced in support of Christ's omnipresence are also insufficient to prove his possession absolutely of that attribute. His engagement to be with his ministers "always," and with his disciples, "when two or three are met together in his name," may only mean that he would be virtually with them, or with them in Spirit, as Paul was with the Corinthians and Galatians, in spirit, though absent in body. Or, it may mean that he would be present with them by his advocate, the Holy Spirit, which proceedeth from the Father, and which was promised him to aid him in his mediatorial work. Or, if neither of these method's of explanation is sufficient to meet the case, we may conceive of his being possessed of such an extent of mind, or largeness of mental capacity, through a derived being, as to enable him to be present in all places, where his people exist and require his aid without implying absolute omnipresence. The passage in John iii. 13, which spake of his being in heaven while here on earth, it is believed, will admit of a different rendering, so that the last clause will read, "which was," instead of "which is in heaven." Or, if not, it may mean that he was mutually in heaven, while bodily on earth. Or the passage may be considered as eliptical, and the elipsis being supplied, be rendered, "even the Son of man which being in heaven, came down," which comports with the facts abundantly taught elsewhere.

His immutability also fails of being established. For the passage in Heb. i. 10—12, may be understood as an apostrophe to the Father. There is no necessary application of it to Christ. The reference of it to the Father is the most natural, and is warranted by the nature of the case, and the analogy of scripture. It is evident to me that it is God the Father, of whom it is said, "thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail." Addresses to God by apostrophe or doxology are not unfrequent in the midst of a train of reasoning, history or declamation. And Heb. xiii. 8, when we meet with the words, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day and forever," does not imply that he is in all respects the same; but merely that he is the same Savior always, as at the first, having an unchangeable priesthood, and ever living to make intercession for us, and also reigning over the house of Jacob forever. These passages, which are the ones ordinarily adduced, fail of establishing his absolute immutability. Hence, the whole argument from the ascription of Divine attributes to him, is shown to be unfounded. There is no adequate proof, that either of the attributes of Deity belongs essentially to him.

Neither will it appear, on careful examination, that Divine works or actions are ascribed to him in such a sense as implies Supreme Deity. That certain works are ascribed to him which God alone can do, is clear and certain; but it does not follow that they are ascribed to him as the original and efficient operator; but only as the agent or instrument by or through which God displays his omnipotent power. I have already explained this matter in some degree; and to avoid repetition as much as practical, I will confine my present remarks to a few particulars.

The most prominent of the works in question, is the creation of the world. But this does not prove his absolute Deity any more than the miracles which were performed by the prophets and Apostles prove them to be truly divine. There is no material difference in the two cases, except in the largeness of the miracles. Every miracle required the interposition of Omnipotent Power. Christ only operated on a larger scale when he was employed in creating the world, than when he raised Lazarus, or opened the eyes of blind Bartimeus. But his performance of the latter did not prove his Supreme Godhead; for his Apostles wrought similar miracles. If it could be proved that, in either case, Christ was the original and efficient operator, his Supreme Deity would be thereby evinced: but this cannot be proved. The original and efficient operator was God.—Thus, "all things" are said to have been "created by the Word," not of him. John i. 3. "God created all things by Jesus Christ." Eph. iii. 9. "By whom, also, he (God,) made the worlds." Heb. i. 3. Christ is not called the Creator absolutely; but God created by him, "just as he wrought miracles, and wonders, and signs by him in the midst of the people of Israel," Acts ii. 22, which passage solves the whole difficulty. The phraseology used concerning the creation, does not exclude the employment of an under agency any more than in the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage, or in the staying of the sun and moon in their courses in the days of Joshua. "God's own right arm" saved the people, as truly as "his hands" made the earth and heavens, although he did it by Moses as his agent or minister. And the efficient cause of miracles in general was solely the power of God, though performed instrumentally by men. I have already answered the objection that if all things were created by Christ, he must have created himself, allowing him to be a created being, by showing that from the nature of the case, where it is said, "all things were created by him," it is manifest that he is excepted, just as it is that God the Father is excepted when it is said that "all things are put under Christ's feet." The one case is perfectly illustrated by the other.

The action of forgiving sins presents nothing more formidable than the performance of miracles. Christ considered the former quite as easy as the latter. It is doubtless God's original and supreme right alone to forgive sins; but he could employ his Son, or his Apostles to do it declaratively. There is nothing in the declaration of Christ, "Thy sins are forgiven thee," which at all teaches that he acted otherwise than as the Father's agent.

Besides, its being said that "he was exalted by the right hand of God to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins," Acts v. 31, clearly evinces that his power to forgive sins was not original; but derived. The same may be said concerning his work of judging the world. It is a work committed to him; and for the very reason that "he is the Son of man." The acting Judge is the man Christ Jesus. But here, as in the case of the creation, it is, in reality, God who will judge the world by him. God has appointed him to the office; settled the principle on which the judgment is to be rendered; will instruct him by his Spirit how to judge, and give him such a full and perfect knowledge of every character, as will enable him to do perfect justice; will superintend the whole process; and will give it his Supreme sanction: so that it will be done in righteousness. Hence, when we all stand before the Judgment-seat of Christ, we shall strictly and properly give an account of ourselves to God. God is verily Judge himself, though he employs his Son as his authorized agent.—"He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that name whom he hath ordained." Acts xvii. 31. There is no difficulty in all this.

Neither is there any thing in the record of miracles, as performed in the name, or by the authority of Christ, which implies the existence of Omnipotent power originally and essentially in him. He communicated the power to his Apostles as he received it of the Father. It was given to him and through him as God's exalted "King and Zion" to them. If miraculous power could be conveyed from Paul by an "apron" or an "handkerchief," sent to the sick at a distance, (which was the fact,) surely the same power could be communicated from Christ, through his authorized agents, to the intended subjects, though, in both cases, it emanated originally and efficiently from God.

Thus, the whole subject of Christ's mighty works, (allowing him to be distinct from, and inferior to God,) is relieved of all difficulty. Respectfully yours,

JABEZ CHADWICK.

Weedsport, June, 1841.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Acadia at Boston we have news from Europe to the 19th ult.

The Steam Ship President.

The schooner Corsair, Capt. Morsey, has arrived at Halifax, from Fortune Bay, N. F., in seven days. The Corsair reports that six days before sailing, a boat belonging to Fortune Bay arrived there from St. Pierre, the Skipper of which reported that a vessel from France arrived at the Island, which had picked up the Captain and sixteen seamen of an American Steamer, and had reported that fifty-six other persons, who had been in the Steamer, were lost; the said vessel had foundered in consequence of running foul of an iceberg; the skipper stated that he had seen the captain of the Steamer at St. Pierre.

The following reports have been received:

"Cove of Cork, May 12.

The Columbia Packet, Capt. Garrett from Monte Video, which place she left on the 27th of January, for Antwerp, has come in here, and Captain Garret reports that 10 days since (2d instant) in long. 18, he saw at some distance a large steamer bound for the eastward, and which appeared to him to be disabled, as she was going very slowly and could hardly keep way with his vessel. As night came on he lost sight of her, and two days afterwards experienced a heavy gale to the eastward. The apparently disabled ship was so far from him that he cannot describe her appearance further than she was a large steamer" Captain Garrett had not heard that the President was missing until asked by the gentleman (George Wright, Esq.) surveyor to Lloyd's who was good enough to favor us with these particulars.

GREAT BRITAIN.—THE CORN LAWS.—The principal subject of excitement was the proposed repeal of the corn laws; but no definite action was had on the subject of Parliament. Lord John Russel has announced his scale of corn duties to be substituted for the present protecting law. It is as follows: On wheat 8s. per quarter. On rye 6s. On barley 4s. 6d. On oats 3s. 4d.

Great as is the enthusiasm against the Corn laws in England, it is much surpassed by the feeling which exists in Scotland. There is scarcely a town or district of the least importance that has not petitioned, prepared to petition, or taken some other measures, to accomplish the overthrow of the landlord's monopoly.

FRANCE.—The Court of Peers, closed on Tuesday its secret deliberation on the affair relative to the attempt against the King's life on the 15th of October. Darmes, as the principal author of the attempt, and Duclos and Consider, as his accomplices, are to be tried by the Court of Peers. The eight other accused were acquitted of the charge of having been accomplices; but seven are to be tried by the Court of Correctional Police, for being affiliated to illegal associations, and having in their possession warlike stores and arms. One only, Borel, who became an informer, was set at liberty.—The decree was signed by 146 peers, and last of all by the son of Marshal Ney. The debates are to commence on the 24th inst.

SPAIN.—Some serious disturbances had taken place in Zamora in consequence of the resistance of the population to the collection of the municipal taxes. Brigadier General Zurbano, an ex-smuggler, and formerly a Brigand of the Ebro, had marched from Valladolid to put down the insurrection.

ALGIERS.—The Toulonnais of the 9th ult. brings intelligence of fresh massacres committed by the Arabs in the environs of Algiers. On the 1st, about 20 native horsemen appeared in advance of Dely Ibrahim, and exchanged some shots with the garrison. Captain Muller, who commanded the redoubt in which were stationed 110 men of the foreign legion sailed out with 43 soldiers, and having pursued the Arabs for some distance, fell into the ambuscade prepared by 600 of the enemy's cavalry, who put every one of them to the sword. 39 decapitate corpses were found on the spot: the five others could not be discovered. In the meantime the farm of Baron Viallar, which had escaped destruction during the administration of Marshal Valtee, was sat on fire by another party of Arabs.

CHINA.—An express in anticipation of the overland mail, arrived in London on the 6th ult., from which we learn that the China difficulty is still unsettled. Capt. Eliot is severely censured by the English opposition papers for his dilatory conduct.

The trade had not been re-opened on the 2d of February, as agreed upon and every thing was still in uncertainty. Hong Kong had been proclaimed a British settlement. The smuggling of teas was active and easy, the article bad and dear. Two ships for London were nearly laden with them. On the other hand gentlemen from China say that there is plenty of tea in Canton, and they are confident in their opinion that tea will be exported this year as usual, the probabillty being that Captain Elliot will make any sacrifice to obtain that object. The troops in Chusan were still sickly.

News of the Day.

From the New-Yorker.

Washington Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, June 3.

The Joint Committee to express the sense of Congress on the death of President Harrison consists of 5 Senators and 26 Representatives. The Opposition in the Senate are beginning to move resolutions inquiring into the causes of removals from office. Mr. CLAY to-day moved a resolution to instruct the Committee on Finance to bring in a bill, stating his disposition as favorable to the immediate repeal of the Sub-Treasuy, and the establishment of a National Bank.

Mr. Wright and Mr. Calhoun opposed the latter wishing the new measures brought forward before the Sub-Treasury was repealed, and declaring that there was no alternative between the Sub-Treasury and a National Bank. Mr. Clay welcomed the confession cordially, and hoped the time for action had come.

Mr. Rives expressed his dissent from views of Messrs. Calhoun and Clay, and referred to the Message as indicating other alternatives besides those mentioned by those Senators, but agreed that all might meet on the common ground of a Repeal for the Sub-Treasury. Mr. Woodbury took a slight part in the debate; but the resolution passed. The District banks have applied for a recharter. The several Committees were appointed as follows:

On Foreign Relations—Messrs Rives, Preston, Buchanan, Tallmadge and Choate.

On Finance—Messrs. Clay of Ky., Evans, Woodbury, Mangum and Bayard.

On Commerce—Messrs. Huntington, Merrick, King, Barrow and Wright.

On Manufactures—Messrs. Evans, Archer, Miller Buchanan, and Simmons.

On Agriculture—Messrs. Linn, Woodbridge, Smith of Ct., White and Simmons.

On Military Affairs—Messrs. Preston, Merrick, Benton, Archer and Pierce.

On the Militia—Messrs. Phelps, Kerr, Clay of Ala., Barrow and Fulton.

On Naval Affairs—Messrs. Mangum, Archer, Smith of Ind., and Choate.

On Public Lands—Messrs. Smith of Ind., Tallmadge, Walker, Bates and Prentiss.

On Private Land Claims—Messrs Bayard, Huntington, Linn, Sevier and Henderson.

On Indian Affairs—Messrs. Morehead, White, Sevier, Phelps and Benton.

On Claims—Messrs. Graham, Bates, Wright, Woodbury and Woodbridge.

On Revolutionary Claims—Messrs. Dixon, Morehead, Smith of Ct. Sturgeon, and Graham.

On Judiciary.—Messrs. Berrien, Clayton, Prentiss Walker and Kerr.

On the Post Office—Messrs Henderson, Simmons, McRoberts, Berrien and Mouton.

On Roads and Canals—Messrs. Porter, White, Young, Cuthbert and King.

On Pensions—Messrs. Bates, Pierce, Allen, Dixon and Nicholson.

For the District of Columbia—Messrs. Merrick, Clayton, King, Mangum and Young.

On Patents—Messrs. Printiss, Porter, Sturgeon, Tappan and Henderson.

On Public Buildings—Messrs. Barrow, Fulton and Kerr.

On the Contingent Expenses—Messrs. White, Tappan and Porter.

On Engrossed Bills—Messrs McRoberts, Miller and Nicholson.

Mr. Clay of Ky., introduced a bill to repeal the Sub-Treasury. It is as follows:

A BILL.

To repeal the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection, safe-keeping, ransfer and disbursement of the public revenue," and to provide for the punishment of embezzlers of public money

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer and disbursement of the public revenue," approved on the 4th day of July, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and forty, be and the same is hereby repealed, provided always that for any offences which may have been committed against the provisions of the seventeenth section of the said act, the offenders may be prosecuted and punished according to those provision, any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That if any officer charged with the safe-keeping, transfer or disbursement of public moneys, or connected with the Post-Office Department, shall convert to his own use in any way whatever, or shall use by way of investment in any kind of property or merchandise, or shall loan with or without interest any portion of the public moneys entrusted to him for safe-keeping, transfer disbursement, or for any other purpose, every such act shall be deemed and adjudged to an embezzlement of so much of the said moneys as shall be thus taken, converted invested used or loaned, which is hereby declared to be a felony; and the refusal to pay over on demand any public moneys in his hands, upon the presentation of a warrant drawn upon him and signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be prima facie evidence of such conversion to his own use, of so much of the public moneys as may be in his hands. Any officer or agent of the United States, and all persons advising, or knowingly and wilfully participating in such embezzlement, upon being convicted thereof before any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, shall, for every such offence, forfeit and pay to the United States a fine equal to the amount embezzled, and shall suffer imprisonment for a term not less than six months, nor more than five years.

The bill having been read once, Mr. Clay asked that it be now read a second time Mr. Wright objected; so it could not be done. After some conversation between Messrs. Clay, Wright and Calhoun, the bill was made the special order for 12 o'clock on Monday following.

WASHINGTON, June 7, 1841.

The Senate Committee reported resolutions of condolence to be sent to the family of Gen. Harrison, the house to be hung in mourning, and the Members to wear Crape thirty days in honor of the memory of the deceased President.

An interesting debate sprung up on the Resolution of Mr. Clay calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for his plan of a "United States Bank," in connection with the subject of repealing the Sub-Treasury. Several prominent gentlemen 'defined their position.' "Bank or a Fiscal Agent" was substituted for "United States Bank" in the resolution—"Fiscal Agent" on the motion of Mr. Rives, after a considrable discussion.

Mr. Clay introduced an amendment to his Repeal Bill, proposing to repeal also the Deposite Act of 1836. This again drew out Mr. Rives in opposition, who was joined, in part, by Messrs. Preston, Berrien and Barrow. Mr. Mangum came to the rescue of Mr. Clay, but the latter finally expressed a willingness to withdraw his amendment.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, June 8.

The Senate is doing the work—the House is scarcely yet complete in its organization. Both Mr. Calhoun's and Mr. Clay's admendments to the Sub-Treasury Repeal bill were negatived to-day. The original Repeal bill of Mr. Clay passed to a third reading, with some modification.—Mr. Benton stuck hard for the specie clause.

The Repeal will now soon pass the Senate. Mr. Sevier, in a warm speech, denounced the removal of Gen. Arbuckle from Fort Gibson to Baton Rouge, as a movement to please John Ross. His resolutions of enquiry in the case were postponed.

Mr. Tallmadge presented the resolutions of your Legislature in behalf of a Distribution of the proceeds of the Public Lands. Lots of Memorials are pouring in on this subject, and in favor of a U. S. Bank, and a Bankrupt Law.

The Speaker of the House has made rather a popular composition of the Committees. Two sons of your State are honored with responsible appointments; Mr. Fillmore, being chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means; and Mr. Barnard, chairman of the Judiciary. Mr. Cushing is at the head of the Foreign Relations, and Mr. Adams, of Indian Affairs. With Webster, Rives and Cushing, a noble trio, our "Foreign Relations" cannot go wrong.

Albany City Temperance Society.—At a meeting of the Albany City Temperance Society, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to meet the committees of other Temperance Societies relative to a celebration on the 4th of July next.

Resolved, That the proceedings of the Young Men's National Temperance Convention contained in the "Olive Leaf" of May 22d, 1841, be read, together with the proceedings of the Executive Committee of said society.

Resolved, That this Society highly approve of the proceedings aforesaid, (as read,) and that immediate action in conformity thereto, be recommended to the young men throughout the State.

Resolved, That the Executive Committee invite some of the speakers of the Washington Temperance Society of Baltimore to this city.

Resolved, That the above resolutions be published in the political and temperance papers of this city.—Albany Evening Journal.

A Worthy Example.—The Board of Excise, of the town of Smithfield, Madison Co., N. Y., acting like reasonable men—as belonging to, and being citizens of a civilized, enlightened, christian nation, have excluded tippling houses from their town. Even their taverns are now free from the poison, and left to rise up to their original purity. We hope that under such bright auspices, higher principles will actuate the inhabitants of this town, than will let them stoop to "The Striped Pig."—Olive Leaf.

MASSACHUSETTS TEMPERANCE UNION.

The first meeting of the Massachusetts Temperance Union, was held at the Odeon, at ten o'clock, A. M., Tuesday. John Tappan, President, Nathan Crosby, Secretary. The house was not very well filled in the early part of the day, but the number of leading and influential persons present, from different parts of New England, was unusually great, and the deepest interest was manifested in the operations of this important branch of the great moral movements of the day.

The President, after some remarks, introduced to the meeting Mr. Delevan of New York, the fearless and successful advocate of Temperance, whose name is known "over three portions of the growing globe." He appeared to be in fine health and spirits, and addressed the meeting in a very feeling and interesting manner. He possesses much quiet humor, and always infuses into his remarks a free, generous and liberal spirit, which is exceedingly agreeable. He presented many new, entertaining facts, in relation to the progress of the cause, and related many amusing anecdotes collected during his recent travels. His remarks will probably be published at length.

Mr. Crosby, the Secretary, then read an abstract of the Annual Report, which is full of the most exciting encouragement. No former period, in the history of the Union has been so full of high hopes; at no time have the efforts of its friends been crowned with such abundant success. Our readers have already been made so familiar with the Temperance movements, by recent publications, that we forbear in this place, to repeat the details.

Another meeting was held in the afternoon, which was addressed by the Rev. Mr. Baird, who gave an interesting account of the progress of temperance in foreign countries.

At the evening session, addresses were delivered by Rev. Mr. May, and several of the reformed drunkards, and much interest was excited.—Zion's Herald.

From the Wiskonsan Temperance Journal.

Temperance in Wiskonsan.—The cause is rapidly progressing in our Territory. The public mind is aroused from its lethargy. Intemperance is seen to be an evil, dire, though enchanting. The spell is broken. Fortunate, thrice fortunate are we, that thus early in our political existence, we are enabled to see, in all its deformity, a monster which has so blighted the fairest prospects of many older communities, and inflicted upon them untold misery. Since the new year, our Territorial society held its annual meeting, and by the information there communicated, our friends were aroused to greater exertions. The same week, a society was formed at Madison, called also a Territorial Society. These societies and their auxiliaries, are established on the principle of entire abstinence from all intoxicating drinks. The feeling thus aroused, seemed to have pervaded the ranks of those who had formerly withheld their support, or openly opposed the cause. Not a few of these classes, thus led to reflection and examination, have come out boldly in favor of total abstinence. Temperance Societies are being formed in almost every neighborhood in the eastern portion of the Territory, and we hope that our friends at the west will rally around the standard they erected at Madison, and vie with their eastern fellow-citizens in zeal and devotion in the great work. When we consider the progress our cause has made during the past six months in our Territory, we cannot but rejoice and be thankful to Him who has guided the hearts of men into all truth.

FROM FLORIDA.—We learn from an officer who came passenger in the U. States General Taylor, Captain Peck, arrived yesterday from Florida, that since our last advices from that quarter, Haleck Tustenuggee, whose camp is at Fort Fowle, on the Ocklawaha, had sent in four of his warriors to Colonel Riley, commanding at Fort King, asking for rations, which were refused. Four other warriors were sent in by the same chief two days afterwards, requesting rations, which were in like manner refused; whereupon the messengers stated that the chief would march for Tampa, and halt at a certain creek between that post and Fort King, from whence he would send for provisions and an escort to take him to Tampa for the purpose of emigrating.

Coacoochee (Wild Cat) had again been in at Fort Pierce. He stated that Sam Jones and Hospitaka were forthwith to hold a council with himself, when would be determined their course for the future. Coacoochee of course expressed his determination to emigrate, and stated that Sam Jones would do whatever Hospitaka recommended.

Haleck Tustenuggee's warriors brought in 115 sticks, indicating the number of people for whom rations were wanted. It will be remembered that in our last advices it was stated that eight days more would test the sincerity of Haleck: those eight days more have passed, and he has not surrendered. It will not fail to strike our readers with surprise, that orders have not been issued by the Commanding General, ere this, to seize these chiefs and warriors whenever opportunity offers. The time has passed for negotiation with these savages, or rather, to use a legal phrase, it has expired by the statute of limitations. It is to be regretted that the gallant Col. Riley had not orders to catch and hold on to these fellows; and it is perhaps still more to be regretted that Caocoochee and twenty-six of his warriors, who were with him at Fort Pierce, were not detained and furnished with quarters at that post.

The upshot of all this will be, that the Indians will take the field again, although they are evidently so tired of fighting that, if they had any encouragement to act in good, by the application of a severe rule on our part, they would be more punctilious in the performance of their promises. Our troops will doubtless have another summer campaign. They are now so well acquainted with the country, that they will burn up all the crops of the Indians, and distress them exceedingly; which will lead, in all probability, to their surrender in the ensuing autumn.

Our informant states that of 165 men at Fort King, 106 were sick. In addition to the above items of intelligence, we may add, that several rumors have reached us from our correspondents, that the command in Florida will soon be confided to the gallant Colonel Worth. We give the rumor as we have heard it. If it be true, we are prepared to say that a better selection could not have been made.—Savannah Republican of May 29.

APPREHENDED MURDER.—A highly respectable man, named George A. Furst, who resided in Seventeenth-street, between the Third and Fourth Avenues, and who held some lucrative situation on the Croton Water Works, was yesterday morning on a vacant lot near his house, speechless and almost in a dying state. He was conveyed to his residence, where Doctor Rawson and others attended him, and where he died at twelve o'clock (noon.) He was in the city on Thursday, and received a large sum of money—dined, as it was said, at Stoneall's in Ann-street, and went home. He went out again after dark, as was stated, with his money about him, and called while out at a porter-house in Nineteenth-street, between the Third and Second Avenues, kept by an Irish widow, named Wood, where a number of her countrymen had assembled to drink, frolic, dance, &c., and left there; after which, no trace of him could be obtained until found in the lot. When he left, he was well clad and had on a new hat; and, when found, his upper clothing had been changed for older garments, and an old broken and patched-up hat was on his head. All his money, except a $3 bill, twisted up in one corner of his wallet, was missing. He was supposed to have been robbed and murdered. The coroner was last night engaged in investing the affair.—N. Y. Express.

DEDICATION OF A SYNAGOGUE.—The Jewish congregation of Beth Jacob, recently constituted in this city, having provided a house (No. 8, Rose-street) for a synagogue, the dedication was duly performed after the Jewish ritual, on Tuesday afternoon, (the eve of Pentecost,) by Lyon Levy, Esq., of New York, assisted by the trustees and other honorary officers of the congregation.—Alb. Eve. Jour.

MARINE INSURANCE.—An article on the Profits of Marine Insurance, by Joseph Balch, Esq., President of the Merchants' Insurance Company in Boston, in the Merchant's Magazine, presents the results of the business by fifteen of the principal offices in Boston, during a period of nine years from 1830 to 1839 inclusive; showing that, instead of a profit, there has been a loss of $76,706, without including the loss of the most unfortunate companies, of which five have been obliged to wind up with the loss of a large part of their capitals.

KEOKUK KILLED!—By a passenger in the steam-boat Sarah Ann, we learn that the Chief of the Sauks and Fox Indians, Keokuk, was killed by Nashie-koek, Black Hawk's son, a few days since. The difficulty originated relative to the distribution of the monies paid the Indians by the General Government. There has been a deadly feud existing in that tribe for some time, and a great jealousy of Keokuk.—Western Gazette, Galena.

Death of Hon. Bates Cooke.—We have the painful duty of announcing the death of the Hon. Bates Cooke, he suffered from ill health for many months, and last winter, in consequence of continued indisposition, which rendered relaxation from his arduous duties absolutely necessary, he resigned the office of Comptroller of the State. It was too late. The hopes and expectations of his friends, who trusted that a return to his home and the absence of official cares would restore him to health and usefulness, have been painfully disappointed. He literally fell a martyr in the service of the State. Mr. Cooke was a good upright man in all the relations of life, whether public or private, and his death will be sincerely lamented troughout the State.—Buffalo Com. Adv.

A Rocky Mountain Tour.—The St. Louis papers announce that a party was about to leave that city for the Rocky mountains and the mouth of the Columbia river. Some go as traders and trappers, and some for a pleasure excursion. Among the latter is Mr. Romain, a young gentleman from England, who has crossed the Atlantic for the sole object of making this interesting tour.

Thomaston.—On the question of withholding licenses for the retailing of spirituous liquors in Thomaston, Me., the vote stood 350 in the affirmative, against 15 in the negative. Not less than 400 voters were present—of course some did not vote at all. But the result is most animating. Thomaston is the first town in the State, in point of population. It cannot be long before all towns will see it to be their interest to "do likewise."—Zion's Herald

The Gag Resolution Rescinded.—We rejoice to see a vote in Congress which rescinds the rule denying to the People the RIGHT OF PETITION. The following is the Ayes and Noes upon that question. The names of the New-York Delegation are in italics:—

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, S. J. Andrews, Averigg, Babcock, Baker, Barnard, Beeson, Birdseye, Blair, Boardman, Borden, Botts, Bowne, Breuster, Briggs, Brockway, Bronson, Chas. Brown, J. Brown, Burnell, Calhoun, Childs, Chittenden, J. C. Clark, Stanley, N. Clarke, Clinton, Cown, Cranston, Cravens, Cushing, R. D. Davis, Dimock, Doig, Egbert, Everett, Ferris, Fessenden, Fillmore, J. G. Floyd, C. A. Floyd, Fornance, A. L. Foster Gates, Giddings, Patric G. Goode, Gordon, Greig, Gustine, Hall, Halsted, William S. Hastings, Henry, Howard, Hudson, Hunt, Ingersoll, James Irving, James, Andrew Kennedy, Lane, Lawrence, Linn, Littlefield, Lowell Robert McClellen, McKeon, Marchand, A. Marshall, Mathiot, Mattocks, Maxwell, Maynard, Morgan, Morrow, Osborne, Parmenter, Partridge, Pendleton, Plumer, Ramsey, Benj. Randall, Randolph, Ridgeway, Rosevelt, Russell, Salstonstall, Sanford, Sergeant, Simonton, Slade, Smith, Snyder, Stokeley, Stratton, Stuart, R. W. Thompson, Tillinghast, Toland, Tomlinson, Trumbull, Underwood, Van Buren, Van Rensselaer, Wallace, Thomas W. Williams, Winthrop, Yorke, Augusta Young, John Young.—112.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alford, L. W. Andrews, Arnold, Arrington, Atherton, Barton, Bidlock, Boyd, Aaron V. Brown, Milton Brown, Burke, William Butler, William O. Butler, Green W. Caldwell, P. C. Caldwell, John Campbell, William B. Campbell, Thomas J. Campbell, Caruthers, Cary, Chapman, Clifford, Coles, Daniel G. Davis, Wm. C. Dawson, John B. Dawson, Dean, Deberry, Eastman, J. C. Edwards, Thomas A. Foster, Gamble, Gentry, Gerry, Gilmer, Goggin, Wm. O. Goode, Graham, Green, Habersham, Harris, Houck, Hays, Holmes, Hopkins, Hubbard, Hunter, Jack, Wm. C. Johnson, John W. Jones, Isaac B. Jones, Keim, J. P. Kennedy, King, A. McCellan, McKay, Mallory, T. F. Marshall Samson Mason, J. T. Mason, Medill, Meriwether, Miller, Moore, Newhard, Nisbet, Oliver, Owsley, Pearce, Pickens, Pope, Powell, Proffit, Rayner, Reading, Rencher, Rhett, Riggs, Rodney, Rogers, Saunders, Shaw, Sheppard, Sollers, Stanley, Steenro, Summers, Sumter, Taliaferro, John B. Thompson. Triplett, Turney, Ward, Warren, Washington, Watterson, Westbrook, James W. Williams, Lewis Williams, Christopher H. Williams, Joseph L. Williams, Wise, Wood—104.

The Ill-Fated President.—On the investigation at the office of the British Consul as to the truth of Certain rumors, that this ship was out of trim, overloaded, &c., when she took her departure—all which were disproved conclusively—the following statement was given, which seems to us to furnish altogether the most probable solution of that vessel's fate.

Captain Cole, of the ship Orpheus, stated that he sailed in company with the President from New-York on the 11th March last—that he was in sight of her till the evening of the next day; when he last saw her she was rising on a tremendous sea, and appeared to be laboring and pitching very heavily. The Orpheus, at the same time was also laboring very much, and shipped large quantities of water on deck. Captain Cole thinks that the President must have been at the same time also shipping heavy seas—that the fires were probably extinguished, rendering the vessel comparatively helpless. The storm was dreadful during the whole night; the wind shifted the next morning from N. E. to S. E., causing a still more tremendous sea, and the gale continued with unabated fury until midnight on the 13th. Captan Cole also stated that it was his further belief that the President did not survive the gale, but foundered, with all on board, before sundown on the 13th, or in less than twenty-four hours after he last saw her; and most probably in the terrific night of the 12th of March. In which opinion the other nautical gentlemen present seemed fully to concide!

New-York Canals.—The tolls collected on our State Canals during the last week in May amounted to $97,556 54; do. last year, $81,260. The whole amount collected this year up to June 1st is $444,993 78; do. last year, (when the navigation opened six days earlier) $349,093 96; showing an increase thus far upon last year of $95899 86.

It will take some time at this rate to bankrupt the State! The Canal business at Buffalo the last week in May was as follows:

Boats.	Bbls. Flour.	Bush. Wheat.	Bbls. Pork.	Tolls.
1030	43,452	34,045	11,075	$23,872 83

The Canal Tolls collected at Buffalo and Black Rock to June 1st were $102,286 67; last year (Canal opened six days earlier) $74,040 77; increase $2,245 90

National Institution.—The National Institution for the promotion of Science," lately established at Washington, is, we are pleased to learn, fast gaining ground and perfecting its arrangements for future usefulness. The National Intelligencer says, that "at the last meeting, letters from various parts of the world were read, promising collections, books and communications, and announcing such as were already on the way." Mr. Webster has tendered to the society a spacious, unoccupied room in the basement of the new patent office, in which to collect and arrange the specimens. Mr. Badger has also entrusted to the institution "the extensive and interesting specimens in all branches of Natural History, lately received from the Exploring Squadron, in the preparing and arranging of which, accomplished naturalists are now engaged.—Mr. Bell has placed in the possession of the Society the fine collection of Indian portraits which have heretofore adorned the walls of the passage of the War Office, and purposes adding a splendid collection of Indian curiosities.

It is pleasing to note the growth and progress of this and similar institutions throughout the country—more particularly this one, as it is the first successful effort to enlist the national feeling in an enterprise so well calculated to aid in the dissemination of scientific knowledge. We shall, in a few years, have accumulated a most splendid and valuable collection of minerals and geological specimens, choice paintings, statues, with useful inventions and philosophical instruments—a collection which will do honor to our country, and send forth through every channel of intelligence, as from an exhaustless fountain, a constant supply of the richest and most valuable information.

According to the last census of London there were 107,000 female servants in that city; and of this number 12 to 15,000 are supposed to be always out of place, or changing places.

In France, out of a population of thirty-two millions, twenty-two millions have but six cents a day to defray all expenses—food, lodging, raiment, and education.—England and Ireland are in no better condition.

A very young lad named Libbey, was sentenced in the United States Court at Boston, by Judge Story, to two years imprisonment for stealing a check for $24 from a box at that post office.

There is a street in the city of Alleghany, opposite Pittsburgh, known by the name of Widow street, from the fact of there being twenty-eight widows residing in it.

The Boston Seaman's Friend Society has raised $5000 the past year.

It has been proved, beyond the possibilty of a doubt, that not less than fifty-five millions sterling are anually expended in Great Britain for intoxicating liquor.

The Hon. Roger B. Taney, is proposed in a Philadelphia paper, as a candidate for the Presidency.

The New-York and Erie Railroad will be in operation from Piermont to Ramapo on the 20th inst.

Notices.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the Stockholders of De Ruyter Institute will be held on Monday, the 21st day of June next, at 2 o'clock, P. M., at the Institute. At which time four Trustees are to be elected in the place of Alexander Campbell, Perry Burdick, Benjamin Enos, and Wm. Maxson, and to transact such other business as shall be deemed necessary.

N. B. Stockholders are entitled to vote by proxy.

B. G. STILLMAN, Sec'y.

De Ruyter, May 26th, 1841.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the S. D. B. South Western Association, will take place at Northampton, Clark co., O., on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in October. A general attendance is desired, and brethren from foreign churches are invited.

NOTICE.

The S. D. B. Western Association will hold its annual session with the church in Friendship, on the fourth day of the week before the last Sabbath in June, at ten o'clock, A. M. Delegates and brethren from sister Associations and churches are cordially invited to attend with us.

J. R. IRISH, Cor. Sec'y.

—ALSO—

The ministers and deacons of the Association are requested to meet at the house of said church on the day previous at 1 o'clock P. M. to organize and agree on some regulations for the Presbytery

J. R. IRISH, Clerk.

DIED,

In Udina Kane Co. Ill. May 17, of a disease of the Liver and Spine, Miss PHEBE, daughter of Kenyon and Margaret Cardner, formerly of Truxton N. Y. aged 19 years. She died in strong hope of enjoying a better world.

Also, at the same place, on the 21st, PARLEY H. son of the above named, K. and M. Cardner, aged 5 years.

LIST OF LETTERS

E. C. Lyon P. M. 2 A. Babcock P. M. S. S. Streeter P. M. W. B. Gillett. Wm. Hager & Co.

LIST OF RECEIPTS

S. S. Streeter. 4,25 cr. S. Carpenter 2d, $2,25 vol. 1, S. Carpenter, $2, vol. 2, W. B. Gillett, $20, cr. D. Dunn, Asa Dunn, I. Clawson, L. Titsworth, J. Dunn, J. R. Dunham, J. Pope, J. Dunham, P. F. Randolph, E. Dunham, each $2, vol. 2.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOUND, on the 2d inst. one and a half miles south of this village, a purse, containing five dollars in money. The owner can have said purse of money, by identifying the property, and paying for this advertisement.

De Ruyter, June 14 1841 16w3

RICHARD TRIPP.

BOOK BINDING.

THE subscriber having connected a BINDERY with his printing establishment, is now ready to execute all kinds of Binding in a neat and durable manner, on as reasonable terms as at any other establishment in this section of country.

JAMES BAILEY.

De Ruyter, June 8th 1841.

DE RUYTER, MAY 27, 1841.

ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER, are receiving their supply of

Spring and Summer Goods,

Comprising an unusual variety, which they offer for Cash, Barter, or Approved Credit, on as favorable terms as can be purchased in this place. This place having been celebrated as the cheapest in the world, they think the above statement sufficiently comprehensive. Old and new customers are solicited to call and examine.

TO BUILDERS.

ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER are sole Agents in this place for the sale of Bliss' SASH AND WINDOW BLINDS, at Factory prices. 7X9 SASH on hand. Blinds, and other sizes Sash procured to order.

They have also on hand,

Pine Lumber and Shingles,
30 Kegs Swedes Iron Nails.
60 Boxes Window Glass, 7X9 to 12X18,
A large stock of Building Hardware,
Paints, Oil, Putty, &c.

May 27.

Elmore, Annas & Ayer,

Are Agents for the sale of the following Valuable Medicines.

Winslow's Balsam of Horehound.

For particular recommendations of the above article, please refer to the advertisement of the Sole Ag't.

Rev. J. Covert's Balm of Life,
Moffatt's Life Pills & Phœnix Bitters,
Dr. Phinney's Family Pills,
Dr. Phelp's Compound Tomato Pills,
Miles' Compound Extract of Tomato Pills

With others too numerous to mention.

May 27 65tf

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT.

J. M. LETTS,

WOULD return thanks for the patronage he has received from his numerous friends and customers. He would say to them that he has taken the room on the first floor, (recently occupied by Dr. Ira Spencer, as a Druggist Store,) together with those he occupied before, where he will be happy to wait on all those who will favor him with a call.—He will, as heretofore, WARRANT his work to be done in a superior manner.

N. B. Spring and Summer Fashions just received. No. 1 Farmers' Exchange.

De Ruyter, April 22, 1841.

Head Quarters for BOOTS & SHOES.

Wholesale and retail. As cheap as the cheapest and good as the best.

THE Public are invited to call and examine for themselves. He keeps on hand Fine and Coarse Boots and Shoes, of every description, Ladies French Buskins and single sole Slips, White and Black satin slips, made to order. The Ladies are invited to call and examine the latest New York fashions. ☞Utica St. Sign of the MAMMOTH BOOT.

De Ruyter, April 26, 1841. 61tf.

ROOF'S SPECIFIC,

FOR the cure of RING BONE, SPAVIN, WIND GALLS, &c. &c.☞A certain cure in all cases.☜ Many certificates can be shown, and will be if wished, to place this inestimable specific as a perfect cure, beyond a doubt. Also,

ROOF'S FOUNDER OINTMENT,

For the cure of foundered horses, split-hoofs, or hoof-bound horses; also, all wounds or bruises in the flesh, galled backs, cradked heals occasioned by overreach, or tread of another horse, Scratches, &c.

For which the subscriber has been appointed sole agent for this place. 47m6

S. D. DELLAY.

FRICTION MATCHES.

THE Subscriber is now making Friction Matches of the best quality, which he offers for sale on the most reasonable terms, wholesale or retail. He particularly requests the patronage of his friends. Orders from a distance will be attended to.

ELISHA STILLMAN.

De Ruyter Apr. 13 1841.

10,000 Tin Pans,

Together with a large assortment of Tin Ware, at wholesale or retail, at as low prices as can be purchased in the State. Also,

Stoves, Pipe and Furniture,

For sale by ELMORE, ANNAS & AYER.

May 27.

MILLINERY.

MISS SOWTER

RESPECTFULLY informs the inhabitants of De Ruyter and vicinity, that she has recently opened a shop two doors east of H. A. & F. C. Dellay's Store, where she will be happy to receive the calls of customers. She will constantly keep on hand ready made Bonnets and Caps, or make to order, and hopes to merit a liberal share of public patronage.

N. B. Leghorn and Straw Bonnets cleaned and repaired in the neatest and most fashionable style.

De Ruyter, June 4, 1841. 14tf

New-York Cash Store.

H. J. WILLIAMS,

WOULD respectfully inform the inhabitants of De Ruyter, and vicinity, that he is receiving from New-York, at the Store in De Ruyter next door to Geo. W. Sutton's Shoe Store, on Utica Street, an extensive assortment of

Spring and Summer Goods,

Among which are French, English, and American Prints, of almost every variety of style and quality to be found in New-York Market; Bl'k. Blue-bl'k, Sinchew, Bonnet and Florence Silks, Printed and Plain Lawns, Book, Swiss, Jaconet, Cambrick and Mull Muslins; Bleached and unbleached Table Cloths, Crapes, Broad Cloths, Cassimeres, Satinetts, Vestings, Hosiery, Bonnet Trimmings, and almost every other article usually kept in a country Store. Also, an assortment of Groceries, Crockery, Glass and Hardware.

H. J. W. would say that his system of business will be

One Price, and Ready Pay,

